A CONFVTATION OF THE RHEMISTS TRANSLATION, GLOSSES AND ANNOTATIONS ON THE NEVV TESTAMENT.

SO FARRE AS THEY CONTAINE MANIFEST IMPIETIES, HERESIES, Idolatries, Superstitions, Prophanesse, Treasons, Slanders, Absurdities, Falsehoods and other evills.

BY OCCASION WHEREOF THE TRVE SENCE, SCOPE, Drift and Doctrine of the Scriptures, and humane Authors, by them abused, is now given.

VVRITTEN LONG SINCE BY ORDER FROM THE CHIEFE INstruments of the late Queene and State, and at the speciall request and encouragement of many godly-learned Preachers of England, as the ensuing Epistles shew.

By that Reverend, Learned, and Iudicious Divine,
THOMAS CARTVVRIGHT,
sometime Divinitie Reader of Cambridge.

Printed in the yeare 1618.

THE PVBLISHER TO THE STVDIOVS READER.

THere be three things appertaining to this work of which the diligent reader, may desire to be informed what the ground was upon which it came to be undertaken, in what maner it was performed, and with what reason it is now so late made publick.

For the first undertaking, though the necessitie of the thing it selfe by some or other to be done, and the approved sufficiencie wherewith this author was furnished of God, together with the great bond which tied him to all readinesse in his service of Christ, might iustly haue rowsed up such a man to stand forth in this cause, yet humilitie and modestie made him stay, untill he was in some sort enforced unto the labour. For to this purpose, there was neither ciuill authority, nor religious mens earnest intreaty, and encouragement from the most learned of our land that wanted. The first remarkable motiue as it seemeth came from S. Francis Walsingham a man of eminent place and power, who herein as in other affaires, was accounted the mouth and hand of the late Queen and state, by whom M. Cartwright was not onely incited to begin this busines, but assured also of such aid as should be necessarie for the finishing thereof, to which purpose he sent him an hundred pounds towards the charges, which buying of books & procuring of writers was like to bring upon him, this was about the yeare 1583. as appeareth by the date of M. Cartwrights letters in answer of the foresaid motion which testifie also of the receit of that hundred pound. The same yeare also he was solicited very earnestly to the same purpose by the most learned men of the Vniversitie of Cambridge as appeareth by a solemne Epistle with ioynt consent written unto him from thence in the Latin tongue, a copie of which for speciall reason is here presented unto the Readers view, with the translation of the same. The reuerend ministers also of Suffolke, and of London did by their severall letters earnestly exhort him in like manner unto this worke. All which letters for some personall yet speciall reasons we haue not herewith caused to be printed, yet shall they on iust occasion be ready to be shewen. By all which united forces if M. Cartwright was drawen at length unto this worke, as in deed he was, no man can think but it was the voyce of God that called him, which promised also assistance and fruit unto his endevours.

Now in the performance of this taske, which with such good warrant, he had undertaken, though no diligence or constancie was wanting in him, yet thorough the envious opposition of some potent adversaries, he met with so great discouragements and hinderances, that he was moved oft-times to lay pen aside, as appeareth by the letters of 1586. to an Earle and privie Councellor of great note in answer of his Letter to encourage him in the work and to understand the forwardnes thereof: and by an other of 1590 wherein he certifieth the said Earle, that aboue 4. yeares before, he had receiued cõmandement from the Archbishop that then was, to deale no further in it: and yet upon speciall solicitations and encouragements both by him and some other honorable personages he had at last taken pen in hand againe. But yet receiving new discouragements from his great Adversaries, together with his continual imployment in the ministery, and other special & necessited labors and suffrings, but especially his being prevented by death, he did not wholy finish it according to his first purpose, nor survey so accurately as otherwise he would, all the quotatiõs of ancient writers which he had occasion to mentiõ. For what heart could he haue to spend his labor in that which was so unlike to be made useful by the presse If therefore any defect shal be noted by the learned in any of these respects, they must refer it uuto these accidents, which quenched somthing that vigor that otherwise would haue satisfied every aprt of their expectation. As for the publishing of the book, there needs no great apologie, the known desires & longings wherewith a multitude of godly men haue expected it, will speake sufficiently to that point. The labors of M. Doctor Fulke about the same argument, can be no præiudice unto this. For as he was one of them which requested M. Cartwright for to undertake it, so also after he himselfe (upon that unexpected stay of M. Cartwrights endeuours through the might of his adversaries) had written in the same kind, he was carefull to signifie in his præface, that his writing was onely by way of prouision, until the labor of such as had undertaken the matter might come to light, his words » are these, Especially because it was rported, that by other men of very good gifts, it » was already even at the first undertaken, &c. I haue attempted to set forth by my » selfe that which I haue long looked for, and rather desired to be performed by others:
» Not meaning thereby to prejudice the more learned labours, and longer studied cõmen» taries of them that had taken the matter in hand before me, if they purpose at length
» to bring them to light: but to prouide in the meane time, that by a short and sufficient
» reply, the weak might be confirmed, the doubtfull satisfied, and especially the insolency
» of the aduersaries might be represſed, &c. The onely griefe is, that the copy is not perfected, further then the 15. of the Reuelation. Beside the small defects by Mice, through 30. yeares neglect, which we haue supplied out of D. Fulk. But this the Reader must be intreated to beare with, and to take in good part this care of mine, whereby this work which lay so long hid and fruitles, is preserued and now made publick for thy benefit that it should not utterly perish. Make speciall use therefore of what is com- as it were through the fire unto thee for that end. Farewell.

A COPIE OF A LETTER VVRITTEN BY SVNDRY LEARNED MEN VNTO Mr. CARTVVRIGHT, TO PROVOKE AND ENCOVRAGE HIM TO THE ANSVVERING OF THE RHEMISTS.

NVNQVAM àte (Venerande CARTVVRIGHTE) plus operæ exigeremus, quam quod in ministerio publico consumitur; nisi Ecclesiæ nostræ rationes & frequentes hostium incursiones vehementer flagitarent. Cum vero Templum domini extruere jam nobis satis non sit, sed altera etiam pugnandum manu contra frequentes hæreticorum exercitus; non ægrè feres, si te Ecclesiæ nostræ alumnum ad certaminis hujus societatem provocemus. Non te fugit quanto cum impetu, & quàm furenter Papistarum cohortes, & Iesuitarum examina involarint in nostras Ecclesias. Quicquid apertæ impressiones, occultæ insidiæ, clandestina Consilia efficere potuerunt, experti sumus: nullum defuit acerbitatis virus, quo vel religionis dignitas obfuscari poterat, vel optimi cujusque fama violari. Atque cum hactenùs semper in religionis certamine illorum vires acritèr satis repulerimus, verbi divini præsidijs communiti: novam illi nuper rationem iniverunt, quò à suis partibus stare divinas voces, & cœlestia oracula, hominibus imperitis persuaderent. Quid enim aliud student novi fœderis translatione, & putidis (quas adiunxerunt) annotatiunculis, (quibus quasi circumforanei præstigiatores rebus clarissimis tenebras offundunt) quàm ut hominum mentibus opinio inhæreat, sacras scripturas turpitèr à nobis contaminari, & quicquid est in eis verè solideque expressum, id illorum sententias firmissimè corroborare, nostras penitùs convellere? Quanta hinc malorum nascatur Ilias, tibi facile est conjecturâ assequi. Nam licèt pauci quidam è doctioribus videant, omnia cœcis tenebris & densa caligine ab eis obrui; tamen infirmorum mentibus multiplices intenduntur insidiæ, & hominum in religione nutantium animi varijs dubitationum fluctibus concutiuntur. A te igitùr contendimus (Venerande CARTVVRIGHTE) ut sceleratorum hominum impuris hisconatibus velis obsistere, vel integrum librum refutando, vel ejus partem aliquam. Non cujusvis est è vulgo artificis affabrè conficere Tabernaculum Dei, sed Bezalielis & Aholiabi. Nec quivis in bella Domini temerè intrudendus, sed è fortibus Davidis diligendi duces. Qualem cum te agnoscimus ex superioribus prælijs pro civitatis nostræ, i. Ecclesiæ muris ſuſceptis;non dubitamus, ſi hoc certamen inire velis (debes certè pro ea, quæ es in patriam & religionem pietate) quin pro aris, & focis, pro ipſo Templi intimo ſacrario dimicaturus, Iebuſæorum vires, qui in arcem Davidis convolare ſtudent, poſſis peſſundare. Accedit hùc (quod mirificè facit ad animum exacuendum) quòd non tibi jam cum fratre aliquo & ejuſdem religionis ſocio dimicandum ſit, (quod languidius ſolet certamen efficere) ſed cum Eccleſiæ Chriſti infenſiſſimis hoſtibus, Philiſtæis quibuſque, & Ammonitis, multò dirioribus. Non dubitamus quin Madianitarum inſtar tandem ſe mutuis perfodiant vulneribus: cum noſtræ προσευχὰς vel ſtrepitum inaudiverint. Vides ad quam honorificam te invitamus contentionem, Chriſti negotium ſuſcipietur, contra Satanæ ſatellites. Excitamus ad bella Domini, ubi certa victoria, quam triumphus & applauſus Angelorum conſequetur. Noſtræ preces tibi nunquam deerunt: aderit (procul dubio) Chriſtus, cujus cauſa defenditur. Dominus Ieſus tibi animum & vires adaugeat, & incolumem ad Eccleſiæ bonum diutiſſimè cuſtodiat. Vale.

The ſame in Engliſh.

WEE never would require of you (highly reverend Cartwright) any further endevour then that which is ſpent in the publicke miniſtery, except the reſpects of our Church ſtate, and the oft incurſions of our enemies did vehemently urge us. But ſince it is not now ſufficient for us to build up the Temple of the Lord: but wee muſt alſo with the other hand fight againſt the frequent armies of heretickes: you would not take it ill if we provoke you as a foſter child of our Church unto the fellowſhip of this conflict, you are not ignorant with how great force and furie the bandes of Papiſts, and ſwarmes of Ieſuites haue flowne upon our Churches. We haue felt whatſoever open hoſtility, ſecret ſtratagems, and privy plottings could effect. There hath wanted no poyſon of bitterneſſe, whereby either the dignitie of religion might haue been darkened, or the fame of every excellent one ſtained. And whereas hitherto (we being every way fortified by the power of the diuine Word) haue alwayes in the conflicts for Religion, ſtoutly enough repelled their forces; they haue of late enterpriſed a new courſe, whereby they might perſwade unskilfull men, that the diuine Scriptures and heauenly Oracles ſtand on their ſide. For what elſe doe they proiect by the tranſlation of the New Teſtament, and their adioyned unſauoury ſilly Annotations; (whereby like Runnagate Iugglers, they caſt miſts on moſt cleere things) then that a conceit might ſticke in mens mindes, that the holy Scriptures are fouly by us ſtained, and that whatſoeuer is in them truely and ſoundly expreſſed, the ſame moſt firmely ſtrengtheneth their opinions, and utterly teareth up ours. What a maſſe of euils may hence breed, is eaſie for you to coniecture. For though a few of the learneder ſort ſee that all things are by them ouer-whelmed with blinde darkneſſe and thicke miſts: yet are there manifold ſnares laid for weake mindes, and the wauering in religion beaten upon by diuers waues of doubtings. With you therefore are we earneſt (moſt reuerend Cartwright) that you would ſet your ſelfe againſt the unhallowed endeuours of miſchieuous men, either by refuting the whole book, or at leaſt ſome part thereof. It is not for every man workmanlike to frame Gods Tabernacle, but for Bazaleel and Aholiab: neither is every one to be rashly thruſt forth into the Lords battels; but ſuch Captaines are to be choſen from amongſt Dauids Worthies. Of which as we acknowledge you to be, by the former battels undergone for the walles of our Citty the Church, we doubt not, if you will enter into this warre, which truely you ought according to the zeale and pietie you beare to your Countrey and Religion, but that you (fighting for Conſcience and Countrey, yea euen for the very inmoſt holy place of the Temple) will be able to tread under foot the forces of the Iebuſites, which ſet themſelues to aſſault the Tower of Dauid. Moreouer (which marueilouſly serueth to the sharpening of your courage) you are not now to fight with any brother or fellow of the ſame religion (which maketh the conflict more faint) but with the moſt inueterate enemies of the Church of Chriſt, farre more cruell then euer was any Philiſtim or Ammonite. Wee doubt not but Madianite-like they will at length deadlily wound each other, ſo ſoone as they heare but the ratling of our compleat armature. You ſee to what an honourable fight we inuite you. Chriſts buſineſſe ſhall be undertaken againſt Sathans Champions; we ſtirre you up to fight the battels of our Lord, where the victory is certaine, which the triumph and applauſe of the Angels will enſue. Our prayers ſhall never be wanting to you; Chriſt (without doubt) whoſe cauſe is defended, will be preſent with you. The Lord Ieſus much encreaſe your courage and ſtrength, and keepe you very long in ſafety for his Churches good. Farewell.

Your moſt loving brethren in Chriſt

THE PREFACE TO THE READER, TREATING OF THESE THREE POINTS: OF THE TRANSLATION OF HOLY SCRIPTVRES INTO THE vulgar Tongues, and namely into Engliſh: Of the cauſes why this new Tranſlation is tranſlated according to the ancient vulgar Latine Text: And of the manner of tranſlating the ſame.

RHEMISTS. Sect. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6.

THE holy Bible long ſince tranſlated by vs into Engliſh, and the Old Teſtament lying by vs for lacke of good meanes to publiſh the whole in ſuch ſort, as a worke of ſo great charge and importance requireth: we haue yet through Gods goodneſſe at length fully finiſhed for the (moſt Chriſtian Reader) all the new Teſtament, which is the principall, moſt profitable and comfortable peece of holy writ: and as well for all other inſtitution of life and doctrine, as ſpecially for deciding the doubts of theſe dayes, more proper and pregnant, then the other part not yet printed.

RHEM. 2. Which tranſlation we do not for all that publiſh, vpon erroneous opinion of neceſſity, that the Holy Scriptures ſhould alwayes bee in our mother tongue or that they ought, or were ordeined by God, to be read indifferently of all, or could be eaſily vnderſtood of euery one that readeth or heareth them in a known language: or that they were not often through mans malice or infirmitie, pernicious & much hurtfull to many: or that we generally and abſolutely deemed it more conuenient in it ſelfe, and more agreeable to Gods word and honour or edification of the faithfull, to haue them turned into vulgar tongues, then to bee kept and ſtudied onely in the Eccleſiaſticall learned languages: Not for theſe, nor any ſuch like cauſes doe wee tranſlate this ſacred booke, but vpon ſpeciall conſideration of the preſent time, ſtate, and condition of our Countrey, vnto which diuers things are either neceſſarie, or profitable and medicinable now, that otherwiſe in the peace of the Church were neither much requiſite, nor perchance wholly tollerable.

Tranſlation of of the ſcriptures into the vulgar tongues, not abſolutely neceſſary or profitable, but according to the times.

RHEM. 3 In this matter, to mark onely the wiſedom and moderation of holy Church, and the gouernours thereof on the one ſide and the indiſcreet zeale of the popular, and their factious leaders, on the other, is a high point of prudence. Theſe latter, partly of ſimplicitie, partly of curioſitie, and ſpecially of pride and diſobediente, haue made claime in this caſe for the common people, with plauſible pretences many, but good reaſons none at all. The other to whom Chriſt hath giuen charge of our ſoules, the diſpenſing of Gods myſteries and treaſures (among which holy Scripture is no ſmall ſtore) and the feeding his familie in ſeaſon with food fit for euery ſort, haue neither of olde, nor of late euer wholy condemned all vulgar verſions of Scripture, nor haue at any time generally forbidden the faithfull to reade the ſame: yet they haue not by publike authority preſcribed, commanded, or authentically euer recommended, any ſuch interpretation to be indifferently vſed of all men.

The Churches wiſedom and moderation concerning vulgar tranſlations.

RHEM. 4 The Armenians ſay they haue the Pſalter and ſome other peeces tranſlated by S. Chryſoſtom into their languages, when he was baniſhed among them: and Gregorie the Patriarch, in writing his life, ſignifieth no leſſe. The Slauonians affirme they haue the Scriptures in their vulgar tongue, turned by S. Hierom, and ſome would gather ſo much by his own words in his Epiſtle to Sophronius, but the place indeed proueth it not. Vulpilas ſurely gaue the Scriptures to the Gothes in their own tongue, and that before he was an Arian. It is almoſt three hundred yeeres, ſince Iames Archbiſhop of Genua, is ſaid to haue tranſlated the Bible into Italian. More then two hundred yeeres agoe, in the dayes of Charles the fifth, the French King, was it put fooith faithfully in French, the ſooner to ſhake out of the deceiued peoples hands, the falſe hereticall tranſlations of a ſect called VValdenſes. In our countrey, notwithſtanding the the Latine tongue was euer (to vse Venerable Bedes words) common to all the Prouinces of the same for meditation or study of Scriptures, and no vulgar translation commonly vsed or occupied of the multitude, yet they were extant in English euen before the troubles that VVickleffe and his followers rayſed in our Church, as appeareth, as well by ſome peeces yet remayning, as by a prouinciall Conſtitution of Thomas Arundell Archbiſhop of Canturbury, in a Councell holden at Oxford, where ſtraite prouiſion was made, that no hereticall verſion ſet foorth by VVickleffe, or his adherents, ſhould be ſuffered, nor any other in or after his time be publiſhed or permitted to be read, being not approued & allowed by the Dioceſan before: alleadging S. Hierome for the difficultie and danger of interpreting the holy Scripture out of one tongue into another, though by learned and Catholike men. So alſo it is there inſinuated, that neither the Tranſlations ſet foorth before that heretickes time, nor other afterward being approued by the lawfull Ordinaries, were euer in our Countrey wholy forbidden, though they were not (to ſay the trueth) in quiet and better times (much leſſe when the people were prone to alteration, hereſie, or nouelrie) either haſtily admitted, or ordinarily read of the vulgar, but vſed onely or ſpecially, of ſome deuout religious & contemplatiue perſons, in reuerence, ſecrecie, and ſilence, for their ſpirituall comfort.

See Linwood lib. 5. tit. de Magiſtris.

The like Catholik & vulgar translations in many countries ſince Luthers time.

RHEM. 5. Now ſince Luthers reuolt alſo, diuers learned Catholiks, for the more ſpeedy aboliſhing of a number of falſe and impious tranſlations put forth by ſundry ſectes, and for the better preſeruation or reclaime of many good ſoules endangered thereby, haue publiſhed the Bible in the ſeuerall languages of almoſt all the principall prouinces of the Latine Church no other bookes in the world being ſo pernitious as heretical tranſlations of the Scriptures, poyſoning the people vnder colour of diuine authority, and not many other remedies, being more ſoueraigne againſt the ſame (if it be vſed in order, diſcretion, and humilitie) then the true, faithfull, and ſincere interpretation oppoſed thereunto.

The Churches order & determination concerning the reading of Catholike tranſlations of the Bible in the vulgar tongues.

RREM. 6. Which cauſeth the holy Church not to forbid vtterly any Catholike tranſlation, though ſhe allow not the publiſhing or reading of any abſolutely & without exception, or limitation: knowing by her diuine and moſt ſincere wiſedom, how, where, when, and to whom theſe her Maſters and Spouſes gifts are to bebeſtowed to the moſt good of the faithful: and therfore neither generally permitteth that which muſt needes doe hurt to the vnworthy, nor abſolutely condemneth that which may doe much good to the worthy. Whereupon, the order which many a wiſe man wiſhed for before, was taken by the Deputies of the late famous Councell of * Trent in this behalfe, and confirmed by ſupreme authoritie, that the holy Scriptures, though truly and Catholikely tranſlated into vulgar tonges, yet may not be indifferently read of all men, nor of any other then of ſuch as haue expreſſe licence thereunto of their lawfull Ordinaries, with good teſtimony from their Curates or Confeſſors, that they be humble, diſcreet and deuout perſons, and like to take much good, and no harme thereby. Which preſcript, though in theſe dayes of ours it cannot be ſo preciſely obſerued, as in other times and places, where there is more due reſpect of the Churches authoritie, rule, and diſcipline: yet we truſt all wiſe and godly perſons will vſe the matter in the meane while, with ſuch moderation, meekeneſſe, and ſubiection of heart, as the handling of ſo ſacred a booke, the ſincere ſenſes of Gods trueth therein, and the holy Canons, Councels, reaſon and religion do require.

CARTVVRIGHT.

THE true religion being like the heauenly bodies which neuer change: the Popiſh religion reſembleth the earth, which as the potters clay is readie to receaue any forme, according as the wind and weather, times and ſeaſons of the yeare, winter and ſommer, ſpring or fall will ſet vpon it. Hereof it is that they which ſometime did ſo deadly hate the inſtruction of their youth, in the groundes and principles of religion; that they could not heare the worde of Cathechiſme with patient eares: nowe in feare of a generall falling from them through opinion either of their blockiſh ignorance or ſluggiſh negligence: are conſtrayned both to write and teach their Catechiſmes. Out of the ſame feare it riſeth, that they which hitherto could not indure the holie ſcriptures to be read of the people, in their mother tongue: now leſt they ſhould vtterlie fall from the hope of their gaine through, a vehement ſuſpition of jugling and playing vnder the board with the people, and conſtrayned to profeſſe a print of that, which they ſometimes burned, and pretend allowance of that, which in times paſt they condemned. Howbeit the euidence of the trueth hauing the Church-robbers vpon the rack: ſee notwithſtanding how hardlie they are gotten to confeſſe the trueth, & how they lyſp it, rather then ſpeake it out. For heere they confeſſe that the Armenians, Gothes, Italians, French and Engliſhmen, had either ſome part or the whole of the ſcriptures tranſlated into their own tongues. But they wil not grant it of the Slauoies; which notwithſtanding is moſt euident, not onely by the words of Ierome, who affirmeth that hee gaue to his owne nation a tranſlation moſt diligently amended: but by certaine of their owne Doctors, from whom the euidence of Ieromes words doth wring foorth the confeſſion of the trueth in this behalfe. But what needeth all this niceneſſe; when it is euident that in the elder and purer times, the ſcriptures were tranſlated into innumerable, yea to all tongues vſuall amongſt men. In the latter times of poperie, it is not ſhewed, that there were ſuch tranſlations eſpecially in England: where the Ieſuits doe fooliſhly conclude, that there was a tranſlation in our tongue allowed, becauſe the counſell prouideth that none ſhould be permitted, but that which was allowed by the Dioceſane. And if there were any; yet it being kept cloſe priſoner, that it could neither come to the people, nor the people to it: it is all one in this queſtion, whether there were none, or no vſe of them. And if they both were, and were vſed: yet for ſo much as by their owne confeſſion, they were permitted to wring out of the peoples hands, the tranſlation whereby the Popiſh Church was beſieged: it is euident, that you permit it not either in reuerence to the holy ſcriptures, or loue to the people; but rather as deſperat enemies, which had rather kill with it, then, that the head of your gainefull errors ſhould be ſtriken of by it. And it fareth altogether gether with you in this poynt, as with men which hauing a naturall hatred of cheese, or some such foode, in such sorte as the verie sight or touch of it doth offend them: yet being effamished, are content for the safetie of their liues euen to eate it. For abhorring from the scriptures in time of your peace: when it commeth that you and your state is plunged by such as you call heretickes; you are glade to bite or nibble vpon the scriptures, if happelie you can get any thing to serue the present neede. But tell vs (good sirs) is the reading of the scriptures by the people, like vnto Strawberies, that are good onely in some season of the yeare? is it physick when men are sick and not meat when they be whole? is it triacle to driue out poyson, and not preseruatiue to keepe from it? hath it strength to put the enemie to flight, and hath it none to hinder his approch? finally is it good to weede, and not to plant? The contrary whereof is rather true. For if it bee able to heale a sicke man, it is much more able to keepe him whole which is alreadie in health: and if it be meete to giue light to the simple, when the heauens are ouercast with the mist and cloud of heresie; it is much more forcible to shew the way, when they are not so clouded. It is therefore a sottish distinction which the Iesuites vse, in making the peoples reading of the Scripture dangerous in tyme of peace, and profitable when the enemie (by heresie) hath made a broyle. Howbeit admitting that the peoples haruest of reading the Scripture, is onely in foule weather: how cometh it to passe, that you haue not welnigh fortie yeares long, wherein the gospell after a dead winter hath been green and flourished againe in our country, and wherein the Heretical translations (as you call them) haue filled the land: procured that this sickle of your translation, might be in the hands of the people; thereby to get them so much grain, as might haue fed them in this dearth of Masses, and other such swill and swaddes as you were wont to fill them with? Wherefore the people may well see that as vnto Vitellius, the dead citizen was alwayes of good sauour; so vnto you, the dead and carcased soules are of pleasant smell. But let vs come vnto the groundes of this difference of the peoples reading of scriptures, which they haue set in the forefront of the preface. The first is, that it is not absolutely necessary for all manner of men to reade them. It is absolutely necessary that all men should vse all good meanes and helpes, whereby to know Christ more perfectly: but reading of the scriptures (which all do testifie of him) is a good meane and helpe thereunto: wherefore it is absolutely necessary. And to this stayre of clyming vp to the knowledge of Christ by reading, doth our S. Christ lift vp his hearers, when he willeth them to search the scriptures. For he doeth not will them onely to heare the word preached, but to vse all manner of instruments, whereby they might digge out the hid treasure of the knowledge of himselfe. And the circumstance of that place, doth argue, that hee had in that particular exhortation, a more speciall regard to the reading of them, then to the other more excellent exercise of hauing them preached. For when of the one side, they beleeued not the Sermons of our Sauiour Christ, and of the other side, it was dangerous to refer them ouer to the Sermons of the Scribes and Pharises malitiously blinde in that mysterie: there remained onely that with inuocation of the name of God, they should read the scriptures; to the end that by conference of them with the Sermons of our Sauiour Christ, they might finde and feele the trueth of them. And as this place proueth that the peoples reading of the scripture, is a good helpe to those that beleeue not after they haue hard the preaching: so the example of the men of Beroa, declareth that it is also necessary for those that beleeue; that they should be able by conference of the scripture, to confirme themselues in the faith whereinto they are entered: whereof let the reader further looke, what is both obiected & answered in that place. And if it were a safe and a sure thing for the Iewes, not beleeuing in our Sauiour Christ, to search and reade the scriptures: how can it be dangerous for Christians, that haue already beleeued in him to read the scriptures, which beare testimonie of him? And if it be commendable, that those that were novices in Christianitie & plantes of a day olde, should search & read the scripture: how much more ought the reading of the scriptures be committed vnto their trust, which (through the couenant of grace) were from their mothers wombe borne Christians.

Ioh. 5. 39.

Act. 17. 11.

Gal. 3. 15.

Secondly it is absolutely necessary for all men, to vse all those aides whereby they should the more perfectly know what is the will of God; thereby to frame themselues to the obedience of the same. Heereof the law commandeth, that euery one should not onely haue the law sounding like a trumpet in his eares: but also that it should be as a ring vpon his finger, as a bracelet vpon his hand, as a frontlet before his eies: that is to say, alwaies in sight. For which cause he commanded further, that the law should be written vpon the frontiers of the land, vpon the gates of the Cittie and Towne, and vpon the postes of euery mans priuate house. Now if it were then thought good to the wisdom of God, that the people should in passing by, reade the lawe grauen, or painted vpon pillers, gates & dores, where they could not consider of it so grauely & stayedly: how much more was it his good pleasure, they should read the same sitting in their houses: where hauing the booke before them they might more ripelie and deliberately conceaue the sense, and receaue the fruit thereof. Further the Apostle commanding that the word of Christ, should dwell plentifully or richly amongst those that are of the Church; doth thereby giue commandement, that they should vse all lawfull meanes of familiar acquaintance with it. Vnlesse therefore it bee denyed (which cannot bee of them that grant it sometimes expedient) that the reading of the Scriptures, is a lawfull exercise in the word of God, for the obtayning of greater wealth in the same: it is manifest, that it is commanded of the Apostle. If commanded, then also absolutely necessary. Moreouer it is commanded to tuye the Spirits, whether they be of God or no: But that can not be without some further knowledge of the word then we receaue of the spirits themselues, that is to say, the ministers speaking either in the spirit of error or trueth: wherefore it followeth, that the whole knowledge that a faithfull man ought to haue, hangeth not of the mouth of the minister, but ought to haue a supplie of priuate reading and meditation of the law at home. Againe the King, who of all other for the multitude and weight of his busines, in the affayres of the common wealth, might seeme to be freed from this exercise of priuate reading, and to content himselfe with the sermons in the temple, is commanded to reade the booke of the law diligently: where other men that are neither so full of busines, nor haue so many whose welfare dependeth of them, can not be exempted from this exercise of pietie. And if it be necessary for the King to reade in the word, that hee may rule well; it is necessary that the subjects should doe the same, that they may obey well. And if it be needfull for him to read, that he command not through the pride of his hart things that are vnlawfull: there is the ſame neceſſity for them, leſt in too great baſenes of mind, they ſhall obey man rather then God. Laſt of all, reading of the ſcriptures publikly in the Church, being not only a laudable cuſtom of the Church vnder the law, but alſo commanded in the Goſpel: doth declare that that which was continually profitable vnto the whole Church together, can not but edifie euery one a part in his houſe. As for their reaſon to proue it not neceſſarie, for that through mans malice or infirmitie, the ſcriptures are pernitious and much hurtfull to many: It is very childiſh. For by the ſame boalt they may ſhut out preaching as well as reading conſidering that through eyther infirmitie or malice, many and the moſt part oftentimes of thoſe that heare, get a greater condemnation vnto themſelues. So alſo the Sacraments ſhall be baniſhed, which by many are receiued to iudgement. Finally, ſo it ſhould be dangerous for the people to meddle with Chriſt himſelfe: as one that is ſet for the riſing and fall of manie.

And to this manifeſt and ſounding voice in the Scriptures, doth the eccho of the elder Churches anſwer: which teach that the people ſhould learn the Scriptures without book: that they ſhould not only hearken to the reading of the Scriptures at the Church; but alſo take the Bible when they come home, and that reading, of the Scriptures performeth that to the ſoule, that meate doth to the ſtrength of the bodie: that all men ought, by daylie reading the Scripture get wiſedom: that they ſhould read the Scriptures, for that they were written to the end wee ſhould be comforted. Wherefore it is not the Churches diuine wiſedom, but the Popiſh Synagogues deuiliſh craft, to forbid that at any time, which both the Scriptures, and purer Churches haue not only permitted the vſe of to the people, but ſtreightly charged them therewith. that as the authoritie of Gods word is in no account with them: So neither the Councill of Trent (otherwhere matched with the authoritie of the Evangeliſts) nor the ſupreame authoritie of the Pope is ſo ſacred amongſt them, but that for lucre they are bold with both of them. For in ſteed that they preciſely comand that none may read any tranſlation whatſoeuer, without the Curates teſtimonie of his abilitie thereunto: they haue without repeale of Councill, or Popes decree, put their tranſlation in mens hands with no note of diſcretion which we vnderſtand: but who will giue moſt. You may not think much therefore if we for Truths ſake make light of your Trent Councell, when you for gain infringe it.

RHEM. 7. Wherein, though for due preſeruation of this diuine worke from abuſe and prophanation, and for the better brideling of the intollerable inſolencie of proud, curious, and contentious wits, the Gouernours of the Church guided by Gods Spirit as euer before, ſo alſo vpon more experience of the maladie of this time then before, haue taken more exact order both for the readers & tranſlatours of theſe later ages, then of olde: yet we muſt not imagine that in the Primitiue Church, either euery one that vnderſtood the learned tongues, wherein the Scriptures were written, or other languages into which they were tranſlated, might without reprehenſion, reade, reaſon, diſpute, turne and toſſe the Scriptures: or that our forefathers ſuffered euery Schoole-maſter, Scholler or Grammarian that had a little Greek or Latine, ſtraight to take in hand the holy Teſtament: or that the tranſlated Bibles into the vulgar tongues, were in the hands of euery Husband man, Artificer, Prentice, Boyes, Girles, Miſtreſſe, Mayde, Man: that they were ſung, played, alleadged, of euery tinker, tauerner, rimer, minſtrell: that they were for table-talke, for alebenches, for boates and barges, and for euery prophane perſon and company. No, in thoſe better times men were neither ſo ill, nor ſo curious of themſelues, ſo to abuſe the bleſſed booke of Chriſt: neither was there any ſuch eaſie meanes before Printing was inuented, to diſperſe the copies into the hands of euery man, as now there is.

Where, and in whoſe hands the Scriptures were in the Primitiue Church.

RHEM. 8. They were then in Libraries, Monaſteries, Colledges, Churches, in Biſhops, Prieſts, and ſome other deuout principall Laye mens houſes and hands: who vſed them with feare and reuerence, and ſpecially ſuch parts as perteyned to good life and manners, not medling, but in pulpit and ſchooles (and that moderately too) with the hard and high miſteries and places of greater difficultie. The poore plowman, could then in labouring the ground, ſing the Hymnes & Pſalms either in known or vnknown languages, as thy heard them in the holy Church, though they could neither reade nor know the ſenſe, meaning, and myſteries of the ſame. Such holy perſons of both ſexes, to whom Saint Hierom in diuerſe Epiſtles to them, commendeth the reading and meditation of holy Scriptures, were diligent to ſearch all the godly hiſtories and imitable examples of chaſtitie, humilitie, obedience, clemencie, pouertie, pennance, renouncing the world: they noted ſpecially the places that did breede the hatred of ſin, feare of Gods iudgement, delight in ſpirituall cogitations: they referred themſelues in all hard places, to the iudgement of the auncient Fathers and their maſters in religion, neuer preſuming to contend, controule, teach or talke of their own ſence and phantaſie, in deepe queſtions of diuinitie. Then the Virgins did meditate vpon the places and examples of chaſtitie, modeſtie, and demureneſſe: the married, on coniugall faith and continencie: the parents, how to bring vp their children in the faith and feare of God: the Prince, how to rule: the ſubject, how to obey: the Prieſt, how to teach, the people how to learne.

How the laitie of thoſe daies did read them, with what humilitie and religion, and enformation of life and manners.

RHEM. 9. Then the ſcholler taught not his maſter, the ſheepe controuled not the Paſtor, the young ſtudent ſet not the Doctor to ſchoole, nor reproued their fathers of error and ignorance. Or if any were in thoſe better dayes (as in all times of hereſie ſuch muſt needes be) that had itching eares, tickling tongues and wits, curious and contentious diſputers, hearers, and talkers rather then doers of Gods word: ſuch the Fathers did euer ſharpely reprehend, counting them vnworthy and vnprofitable readers of the holy Scriptures. CARTVV. If (as hath been ſhewed) all ought to read the Scriptures, then all ages, all ſexes, all degrees and callings, all high and low, rich and poore, wiſe and fooliſh, haue a neceſſary dutie herein: of which particularities, neither do the Scriptures nor auncient writers keepe ſilence. For the Scripture declareth, that women and children, and that from their infancie, that noble and ignoble, rich and poore, wiſe and fooliſh, exerciſed themſelues in the holy Scriptures. And Theodoret liketh well, that the points of religion which the Church taught, were not onely knowne of Doctors and Maſters, but of Taylors, Smiths, VVeauers and other Artificers: not of men onely, but of women, and the ſame not onely learned, but labouring men, Sewſters, Seruants and Handmaids; not of Citizens alone, but of Country-folk, Ditchers, Deluers, Neat-heards, and Gardiners, diſputing euen of the holy Trinitie. &c.

And being commanded to be talked of both within the houſe and without, both lying, ſitting and walking: a man would think that therein is commanded the exerciſe of it in all places, both Table and Bench, both Boat and Barge. And it is too great ignorance to make that difference of place in this matter, which was not made vnder the Law: when in all manner of places it is not onely lawfull, but commanded to talke of the Law. And ſeeing to the cleane all things are cleane, the Boat and Boatman, the Rudder and the Rower: it is too palpable a darknes, to think that the word ſhould be prophaned by thoſe things which by faith and praier it ſanctifieth. VVherefore it is moſt falſe, that the Bibles were then onely in Monaſteries, Colledges, Churches, Biſhops, Prieſts, and ſome deuout principall lay-mens hands. For Chryſoſtome exhorteth all the people and ſecular men to get them Bibles, at the leaſt the new Teſtament. Ierom alſo ſaith, That married men, Monkes, ſilly women, were wont to contend who ſhould learne moe Scriptures without booke. But Chryſoſtom is bold, and affirmeth it more fit and profitable for the lay people to read Gods word, then for Monkes, Prieſts, or any other. And if priuate reading of the Bible were vrged ſo ſore, when (through the travell of writing) it muſt needs coſt much: how much more then is it now to be preſſed, when (through the benefit of Printing) it is ſo eaſily and lightly obtained. It is falſe alſo, that either they ſung in an vnknowen language, or without knowledge of the ſence in ſome profitable meaſure: which had been liker vnto the prating, pratling and parating of birds, tickling the eares of fond men; then to any Chriſtian melodie, pleaſant in the eares of the onely wiſe God.

After, like men fighting in the darke, they ſtrike themſelues in ſtead of the enemie. For they are forced to bring forth Ierom, exhorting men and women to the reading and meditation of the Scripture, thereby to walke comely in their ſeuerall callings. Themſelues therefore which driue men from reading of the Scriptures, are cauſes why neither virgines can meditate of chaſtitie, nor wiues of faithfulneſſe, Prince how to rule, nor ſubiect how to obey: ſeeing theſe duties are euidently to the vnderſtanding of the ſimpleſt, laid forth in holy Scripture. And if then the inferiors taught not their ſuperiors: it was becauſe that as they excelled their vnderlings in age and dignitie; ſo they went before them in knowledge and vnderſtanding of the word. But becauſe Poperie is ſuch a time, wherein (as Salomon ſaith) the ſeruants ride, and the maſters go on foot: that is to ſay, wherein commonly the Biſhop can bite, but not barke: the Paſtor can milke but not feede: the Prieſt can mum, but cannot ſpeake, it is needfull that in ſuch a caſe, the waters ſhould go againſt the ſtreame, and the Scholler ſhould teach his maſter, the ſheepe controule his Paſtor, &c. Yea in the learneſt and lightſomeſt times that euer were, and in perſonages of notable marke, it hath ſometimes come to paſſe, that not onely women haue inſtructed men: but euen the Sheepe the Shepheard, the Schollers their Maſter, the Seruant their Lord. And Chryſoſtom and Auguſtine will haue euery one to learne, as they may teach one another. Againſt which, as alſo againſt the peoples reading of Scriptures, neither Ierom nor Auguſtine haue a word. For Ierom in the ſame Epiſtle exhorteth to the reading of the Scripture, onely he reproueth them, which truſting vnto the ſtrength of their wits, and to their own ſtudie, ſeek not the neceſſarie helpe of a teacher, the principall means which God hath ordained to bring men to ſound knowledge of the truth. And how farre Ierom was from the Ieſuits iudgment, it appeareth other where: when he ſaith, that the Scripture is tearmed the Scripture of the people, becauſe it is read vnto all people, that all may vnderſtand. Likewiſe he ſharply reproueth ſuch as contemned thoſe that read the Scripture, and muſed of them day and night, as chatters and vnprofitable: which is the very Popiſh Spirit that reigneth in theſe dayes. The ſame anſwer ſerueth for Auguſtine, who reproueth not men for reading of the Scripture, but onely for that in reading them, and finding difficulties which they cannot auoid: they forthwith condemne the word, in ſtead that they ſhould repaire to ſuch as are able to vndoe their knots. VVhich thing is not onely cleare vpon the place, but confirmed by other ſayings. VVhere declaring it not to bee enough to heare the word in the Church onely, hee exhorteth all in their priuate houſes either to read, or to get ſome to read for them. And againe, that nothing abideth, but that which a man hath laid vp in the treaſure of his conſcience, for health of his ſoule by reading, praying, or doing good workes, and that we muſt alwayes pray and read. And if they wrot this, when the malady of arrogancie in diuine matters was not ſo great as now it is: how much more would they haue wrote it in theſe dayes; conſidering that the vſe of the Scripture is to beat down the pride and arrogancie of the minde: whereas the Ieſuites conclude cleane contrary, that becauſe men are more proud now then heretofore, the Scriptures ſhould be withdrawne more now then then; eſteeming that pride gaineth by reading of the Scripture: therein like to thoſe whom Auguſtine ſharply reproueth, which hearing that they muſt be humble, will learne no nothing: thinking that if they learne any thing, they ſhall be proud.

RHEM. 10. S. Gregorie Nazianzene made an oration of the moderation that was to be vſed in theſe matters: where he ſaith, that ſome in his time thought themſelues to haue all the wiſdom in the world, when they could once repeat two or three words and them ill couched together, out of Scripture.

but hee there diuinely diſcourſeth of the orders and differences of degrees: how in Chriſtes miſticall body, ſome are ordeined to learne, ſome to teach: that all are not Apoſtles, all Doctors, all interpreters, all of tongues and knowledge, not all learned in Scriptures and diuinitie: that the people went not vp to talke with God in the mountaine, but Moſes, Aaron, and Eleazar nor they neither, but by the difference of their callings, that they that rebell againſt this ordinance, are guiltie of the conſpiracie of Corah and his complices: that in Scripture there is both milke for babes, and meate for men, to be diſpenſed, not according to euery ones greedineſſe of appetite, or willfulneſſe, but as is moſt meete for each ones neceſſitie and capacitie: that as it is a ſhame for a Biſhop or Prieſt to be vnlearned in Gods myſteries ſo for the common people it is often times profitable to ſaluation, not to be curious, but to follow their Paſtors in ſinceritie and ſimplicitie: whereof excellently ſaith S. Auguſtine, [a] Fidei ſimplicitate & ſinceritate lactati nutriamur in Chriſto: & cum parui ſumus, maiorum cibos non appetamus, that is, Being fed, with the ſimplicitie and ſinceritie of faith, as it were with milke, ſo let vs be nourished in Chriſt: and when we are little ones, let vs not couet the meates of the elder ſort. Who [b] in another place teſtifieth, that the word of God cannot be preached, nor certaine myſteries vttered to all men alike, but are to be deliuered according to the capacitie of the hearers: as he proueth both [c] by S. Paules example, who gaue not to euery ſort ſtrong meate, but milke to many, as being not ſpirituall, but carnall and not capable: and [d] by our lordes alſo who ſpake to ſome plainely, and to others in parables, and affirmed that he had many things to vtter which the hearers were not able to beare.

The Scriptures muſt be deliuered in meaſure and diſcretion, according to ech mans neede and capacity.

RHEM. 11. How much more may we gather, that all things that be written, are not for the capacitie & diet of euery of the ſimple readers, but that very many myſteries of holy writ, be very farre aboue their reach, and may & ought to be (by as great reaſon) deliuered them in meaſure & meane moſt meet for them? which in deede can hardly be done, when the whole booke of the Bible lieth before euery man in his mother tongue, to make choiſe of what he liſt. For which cauſe the ſaid Gregorie Nazianzen wiſheth the Chriſtians as good a law as the Hebrues of old had who (as S. Hierom alſo witneſſeth) tooke order among themſelues that none ſhould read the Canica Canticorum nor certain other pieces of hard Scriptures, till they were thirtie yeeres of age.

RHEM. 12. And truely there is no cauſe why men ſhould be more loth to be ordered and moderated in this point by Gods Church and their Paſtors, then they are in the vſe of the holy Sacraments: for which as Chriſt hath appointed Prieſts and Miniſters, at whoſe hands we muſt receiue them, and not be our owne caruers: ſo hath he giuen vs doctors, prophets, expounders, interpreters, teachers and preachers, to take the law and our faith at their mouthes: becauſe our faith and religion commeth not to vs properly or principally by reading of Scriptures, but (as the Apoſtle ſaith) by hearing of the preachers lawfully ſent: though reading in order and humilitie, much confirmeth and aduanceth the ſame. Therefore this holy booke of the Scriptures, is called of S. Ambroſe, Liber ſacerdotalis, the booke of Prieſts, at whoſe hands and diſpoſition we muſt take and vſe it. Lib. 2. ad Grat.

Rom. 10. 17.

RHEM. 13. The wiſe will not here regard what ſome wilfull people doe murner, that the Scriptures are made for all men, and that it is of enuie that the Prieſts do keepe the holy booke from them. Which ſuggeſtion commeth of the ſame ſerpent that ſeduced our firſt parents who perſwaded them, that God had forbidden them that tree of knowledge, leſt they ſhould be as cunning as himſelfe, and like vnto the Higheſt. No, no, the Church doth it to keepe them from blinde ignorant preſumption, and from that which the Apoſtle calleth falſi nominis ſcientiam, knowledge falſely ſo called, and not to embarre them from the true knowledge of Chriſt. She would haue all wiſe, but vſque ad ſobrietatem, vnto ſobrietie, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: ſhe knoweth the Scriptures be ordained for euery ſtate, as meates, elements, fire, water, candle, kniues, ſword, and the like: which is as needfull (moſt of them) for children as old folkes, for the ſimple, as the wiſe: but yet would marre all, if they were at the guiding of other then wiſe men, or were in the hands of euery one, for whoſe preſeruation they be profitabe. She forbiddeth not the reading of them in any language, enuieth no mans commoditie, but giueth order how to doe it to edification, and not deſtruction: how to doe it without caſting the holy to dogs, or pearles to hogs: (See S. Chryſoſtome. hom. 24. in Math. declaring theſe hogges and dogges to be carnall men and Heretikes, that take no good of the holy myſteries, but thereby do both hurt themſelues and others:) how to do it agreeable to the ſoueraigne ſinceritie, Maieſtie, and depth of myſterie contained in the ſame, ſhee would haue the preſumptuous Heretike, notwithſtanding he alledge them neuer ſo faſt, flying as it were through the whole Bible, and quoting the Pſalmes, Prophets, Goſpels, Epiſtles, neuer ſo readily for his purpoſe, as Vincentius Lirinenſis ſaith ſuch mens faſhion is: yet ſhe would according to Tertullians rule, haue ſuch meere vſurpers quite diſcharged of all occupying poſſeſſion of the holy Teſtament, which is her old and onely right and inheritance, and belongeth not to Heretikes at all, whom Origen calleth Scripturarum ſures, theeues of the Scriptures. Shee would haue the vnworthy repelled, the curious repreſſed, the ſimple meaſured, and the learned humbled, and all ſortes ſo to vſe them or abſteine from them, as is moſt conuenient for euery ones ſaluation: with this generall admonition, that none can vnderſtand the meaning of God in the Scriptures, except Chriſt open their ſence, and make them partakers of his holy Spirit in the vnitie of his myſtical body: and for the reſt, ſhe committeth it to the Paſtor of euery prouince and people, according to the difference of time, place, and perſons, how and in what ſort the reading of the Scriptures is more or leſſe to be procured or permitted.

CAPT VV. The moderation of Nazianzen is neceſſary, but helpeth you nothing at all,. For it maketh a deſtinction, firſt generally between Doctor and Scholler, and then of the Doctors Office, varying his teaching according to the diffrence of one Scholler from another: which we confeſſe; and not between Scholler and Scholler, as you pretend. And therefore following your ſence of Nazianzen, which is, that the people ſhould not meddle with the Scriptures, but the Miniſters alone: your ſelues are guiltie of the conſpiracie of Korah, which permit to ſome of the people the reading of the Scriptures, which (out of Nazianzen) you pretend to be the ſeuerall of Biſhops and Miniſters. VVe grant it is often profitable for the common people not to be curious: and ſo is it alſo for the Paſtor, in matters that breed queſtions rather then edifying to God, which is through faith in Chriſt. Howbeit commending his Siſter for her cunning in the Scriptures both old and new: it is manifeſt that by curioſity he meaneth not to draw them to carleſſeneſſe of reading and meditating of the Scriptures. Auguſtines words, as they make not for you, conſidering that the ſimplicitie of faith reacheth it ſelfe to the beleeuing (and conſequently vnderſtanding) of the whole Scripture, and euery part thereof: ſo to fit them for your purpoſe, haue you ſhamefully gelded them, For you haue left out the pronoune this, which marreth all your market. Auguſtine hauing before out of the Scriptures confuted certaine which held that there ſhould bee no reſurrection of the fleſh, concludeth with this exhortation; that they ſhould bee nouriſhed with this ſimplicity of faith which hee had proued out of the Apoſtles and Chriſts words, with which ſimplicitie, both himſelfe and all other was, and ought to bee contented. After hee ſheweth the cauſe of their errour, for that being little ones in knowledge, they had neglected the firſt principles and grounds of their Religion, as it were the milke whereby they ſhould haue growne to the ſtrength of partaking of ſounder and harder meate. All which doth nothing bar them from the reading of the Scriptures, in euery booke, chapter, and almoſt verſe; whereof there is as well milke for babes, as ſtrong meates for thoſe which are growen. And as in the moſt champion and plaine grounds of the bookes of Scripture, there are ſome myſteries (as hillockes) higher then the reſt of their fellowes; ſo in the greateſt and ſteepeſt hill thereof there is footing whereby with labour and trauaile, with much reading, and often prayer wee may come to that heigth of it, wherein wee may ſee and diſcouer ſo far of the land of Canaan, and the kingdome of heauen, as our places and callings, ſexes and ages do require: And as there is no booke in the Scripture ſo myſticall and deepe, whereout a good teacher will not deliuer doctrine fit as well for the vnlearned as for the learned; ſo is there no good ſcholler in the ſchoole of Chriſt, which out of the hardeſt bookes cannot draw ſomething, as well for the confirmation of that which hee hath learned, as for his entrance into the knowledge of that which hee is yet to learne. And as when a man hath learned Arithmetick, the way is open and eaſie to Geometrie, both which make eaſie ſtaires to climbe vp to Aſtronomy; euen ſo the people hauing laid the grounds of Religion well, and reade diligently the eaſier and plainer bookes of the Scripture, ſhall haue alſo a plaine and a paued way, euen in the deepeſt Myſteries, and profoundeſt bookes of the Scripture: Heereof Salomon ſaith, That all the words of wiſedome are open and eaſie to euery one of vnderſtanding: VVhere, becauſe by a man of vnderſtanding, hee meaneth euery one that is godly, as by the foole the wicked: it is manifeſt that hee declareth that all the words of God are eaſie, and open to all Gods people. VVhereof alſo commeth that that is ſaid, that God reuealeth his ſecrets and hid counſels to all that feare him. Seeing therefore the people may aſwell come to the reading of the Scripture with the feare of God, as the Miniſters themſelues, it followeth that there can bee no hardneſſe or difficultie of any place of Scripture, which ſhall more with-hold the ſight of that which is needfull for them in their place and calling, then which is neceſſary for the Miniſters in theirs. Chriſt ſaith that whoſoeuer will do the will of God, the ſame ſhall know his doctrine: Seing therefore the people and vnlearned, may haue as ſetled a purpoſe to doe the will of God, as well as the Paſtor or learned: it is euident, that their labour and trauaile in reading of the Scripture, ſhall bee no more fruſtrate for their eſtate, then the Miniſters for theirs: Likewiſe there being a certaine promiſe, that thoſe which abide in the word which they haue beleeued, ſhall know the truth: it cannot be, but that the people doing that as well as the Miniſter, ſhall for their proportion bee partakers of the promiſe as well as hee. Hitherto belongeth the plaine and moſt vſuall words, the phraſe and manner of ſpeech moſt frequented, the compariſons and ſimilitudes moſt familiar, taken out of the ſhops, and out of the fields, from huſbandry and houſwiferie, from the flocke and from the heard, from the Plow and the Mowe. For notwithſtanding that it had beene eaſie for the Lord by his learned Prophets and Apoſtles, and our Sauiour Chriſt eſpecially, to haue flien vp into the heauens, and to haue gone downe to hell, for compariſons to ſet forth his doctrines with; yet wee ſee how hee creepeth as it were vpon the ground in taking that which is before mens feete to cleere his doctrine with. VVherefore? but that thereby hee would notifie vnto the ſonnes of men, that hee wrote the Scriptures for the capacity and vnderſtanding of the vnlearned. Laſt of all when the whole body of the Scripture, from the head to the foote thereof, is termed a Light and Lanterne, they muſt needs bee the children of darkneſſe which breathe and bluſter darkeneſſe and obſcurity continually againſt them. And therefore if it bee hidden to any, it is hidden to thoſe whoſe vnderſtandings the God of this world hath blinded, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt ſhould not ſhine vnto them. This iudgement of the eaſineſſe and facilitie of the Scriptures haue the ancient Fathers: Origen[a] ſaith, that they are ſhut againſt the negligent, and open to thoſe which knocke and ſeeke. Another, That[b] all is cleere and plaine in holy Scriptures, whatſoeuer is neceſſary for vs is manifeſt. Another, that the[c] Lord hath ſpoken by his Goſpell, not that a few, but that all ſhou'd vnderſtand it, That Plato wrote his writings, but not to the people, but to a fewe, ſcarce three vnderſtanding him. Laſt of all, Cyril ſaith, [d] that the Scriptures are profitably recommended vnto vs in an eaſie ſpeech that they ſhou'd not goe beyond the capacity of any. VVherefore it is no Catholike, but the Pelagian iudgement,[e] that the Scripture is hard and fit for a few learned men. Your owne Pope ſaith, that they are [f] like a flond wherein the Lambe may wade and the Elephant may ſwim. And if all the Scripture carry this light with it, it is cleere that euery book doth the ſame: VVherefore alſo the book of the Canticles of Salomon, intreating of our ſpirituall coniunction with our Sauiour Chriſt, and that in moſt chaſte, and yet familiar ſpeeches, is meete for all ages. VVee agree that there may bee a profitable diſcretion of reading one booke before another, and of reading one twiſe before another once. But forſomuch as the whole Scripture is a [g] letter ſent from the Almighty to his creature: there is no iuſt cauſe why the booke of the Canticles, &c. ſhould bee plaſtered vp, that yong men and children ſhould not reade that part of the letter, as well as the reſt. And howſoeuer Ierom in that place ſeeme to allow the Iewes deniſe which they ſaw, what time the vaile was before their eyes; yet the ſame Ierome in another place, where hee ſpeaketh of the education of a yong maide of ſeuen yeares old, ſaith: [h] Let her learne without booke the Pſalter, and vntill ſhee come to bee maiageable let her make the treaſure of her heart, the bookes of Salomon, the Goſpels, Apoſtles, and Prophets. Vnleſſe therefore you will denie, that the Canticles are amongſt the bookes of Salomon, you ſhall bee conſtrained to confeſſe, that Ierome would not haue the tender ages ſhut Ioseph. 2. lib. contra Apion. shut out from the reading of them. Heere the testimonie of Iosephus is notable, who affirmeth that if any asked any of the Iewes concerning the law, they were as well able to tell him, as their owne names. And as for your argument, that the people should bee no more loath to bee ordered by their Pastors in the reading of the Scriptures, then in the vse of the holy Sacraments, it is absurd: For the Lord commanded the father of the household to teach his children at home, and by some opening to sharpen and set an edge of the doctrine of the law, that it might cut the deeper into their hearts, yet did not hee suffer that the householder should not minister the Sacrament in his house. And your selues, which grant vnto certaine Lay persons leaue to haue the vse of the Bible, doe you thinke it lawfull also, that you may credit them with the administration of the Sacraments? Howbeit (indeed) you deale with the people mush alike, both in holding them from the reading of the Scriptures, and in excluding them from the Sacrament of the Supper, not onely in that they receiue but once a yeare, but that euen then they receiue no Sacrament of Christ, but an Idoll of your own braine. VVhen therefore you haue answered the trust you professe in the Sacraments, men may commit somewhat the more vnto you, in the stewardship and dealing out of the Scriptures. There is no such place of Ambrose in that booke, if there were, yet the answer is easie; that the Bible is called the Priests Booke, as they are called the pillars of the truth: for that they were more continually to occupie themselues in reading of them; but that hee meant not thereby to shut out the people from reading thereof, it appeareth in that hee saith: That hee careth not much for his belly which is earnest in the food of reading, that that is the refection that maketh a fat soule, Also that the reading of the Scripture is life. VVee do not thinke that you do so much enuie the people the reading of the Scriptures, as that thereby you seeke your vantage; that your vile filthie marchandise of Masses and Diriges, Pardons and Indulgences, hauing no light to shew them by, might bee vented abroad, which would lie rotting at home vpon your hand if men might bee suffered to bring any light with them into your packhouses. But seeing you obiect enuie against your selues, let vs heare how you answer it. You compare your accusers heerein to the deuill, surmising an euill and enuious eye in God that forbad our parents the fruite of one tree: You do well, if you bee able to shew that God hath forbidden the people to reade the Scriptures: VVhich because you cannot, the accusation returneth vpon your selues, it being as Satanicall to forbid that which God hath bidden, as to bid that which hee hath forbidden. And because it pleaseth you to compare the restraint of the Scriptures, with the inhibition of eating of the forbidden tree, hearken of how contrary a iudgement Irenæus is vnto you in this point, who alluding to this place of Genesis, exhorteth all men to eate of euery Diuine Scripture. You take a sure way to keepe the Church from knowledge falsly so named, whilst you will let them know neither good nor bad: not vnlike to those parents, which to bee sure that their children shall not surfet, keepe them altogether from meate. You would haue them wise to sobrietie, Therefore (belike) you banish them from the acquaintance of the Scripture the mistresse of all wisedom and sobriety. VVhere reade you that the Scriptures are compared to knines in the hands of little children; They are indeed compared with a sword in the hand of a Souldier, whereby it is easie for them to know, that your meaning is to betray them into their spirituall enemies hands which haue taken their weapons from them. And if some mad men or quarrellers in the campe abuse them to their own and others destruction, yet the law of not bearing sword in field will neuer bee iust: In stead therefore that you should haue generally commanded that all Souldiers should weare swords, but such as (in respect of franzie or quarrelling with their fellowes) are specially restrained; you make your proclamation that no souldier shall weare weapon but with speciall licence thereunto. Is this your skill and discretion in warfare? But thus at least you prouide that dogges and hogges should not come vnto them; so do you also, that neither sheepe nor lambe should touch them. Thus the vsurpers are kept from them, but the true owners also enioy them not. Herein you bewray a contrary spirit to that wherewith our Sauiour Christ was conducted; For hee oftentimes preached in the hearing of knowne dogs and hogges, that is the Scribes and Pharises, obstinately set against him; least for their sakes the children should bee defrauded of their bread: And you of the contrary side defraude the children of their appointed portion, least the dogges should happily snatch at it. Besides this, doe you thinke, that the discretion of dogges and hogges from sheepe and lambs is so easie vnto you as it was vnto our Sauiour Christ and his Apostles? Can you tell who diuide the hoofe and chaw the cud, who are cleane and who are vncleane, who reade in simplicity of heart, and who with pretence? Heere therefore you mutter that, which Harding your companion speaketh plainely, that the common people are dogges and hogges: And indeed your argument is none at all in this place, vnlesse by hogs and dogs you meane all those from whom you steale away the reading of the Scriptures. As for your description of dogs and hogs out of Chrysostome, to bee heretickes and carnall men, it maketh not so much to take the Scriptures away from the common people, as from the learneder and richer sort: For heresie maketh her nest oftner in the breast of the learned, and of those that reade the Scriptures in the learned tongues, then in the common peoples heads. And the rich are more often loaden with carnall lusts then the poorer sort: so that if Chrysostome or Tertullian proue any restraint of reading of Scriptures, they proue it directly against your practise, which lay the Scriptures wide open to all the learned, and as it was in Queene Maries daies (if wee will remember) to those that might dispend by yeare a certaine land; that is, to those from whom either you durst not hold it, or of whom you hoped to haue gaine through speciall licence accorded vnto them. You say truely, that no man can vnderstand the Scriptures but by the spirit of Christ. VVhereof if you would haue concluded any thing for your purpose, you ought to haue shewed that the Spirit of Christ is appropriated to the learned, or at the least ofner accompanieth them, then it doth the vnlearned: The contrary whereof being true, that God reuealeth his secrets (for the most part) vnto the simple and vnlearned ones, and that not many wise men, nor many noble men are taught by his Spirit: it is euident, that if any should bee shut from the reading, and other exercises of the Scriptures, the same are especially the learned, and not the ruder, the nobler and not the baser, the richer and not the poorer sort.

Gregorie Nazianzen[a] witneſſeth) that the Scriptures and all holy lections of diuine things were loathſome vnto them: whereby their holy Biſhop was forced [b] in many of his ſermons to cry out againſt their extreme negligence and contempt of Gods word, declaring, that not onely Eremites and Religious (as they alledged for their excuſe) but Secular men of all ſortes might read the Scriptures, and often haue more neede thereof in reſpect of themſelues, then the other that liue in more purite and contemplation: further inſinuating, that though diuers things be high therein, yet many godly hiſtories, liues, examples, and precepts of life and doctrine be plaine: and finally that when the Gentiles were ſo cunning and diligent to impugne their faith, it were not good for Chriſtians to be too ſimple or negligence in the defence thereof, as (in trueth) it is more requiſite for a Catholike man in theſe dayes when our aduerſaries be induſtrious to empeach our beleefe, to be skilfull in Scriptures, then at other times when the Church had no ſuch enemies.

The Anſwer to the 14. 15. and 16. Sections.

CARTVV. Marke (good reader) the blaſphemie of theſe wretched caitifes, that eſteeme ſo vilely of the holy Scriptures, as if there were no better, nor more honourable vſe of them amongſt the people, then to make choyce of the reading of them, rather then to be much occupied about Stage-playes, cards, and dice. Theſe men (no doubt) could be well content, that the people ſhould rather ſit downe and pill ſtrawes, then they ſhould take any booke of holy Scripture into their hands. Pharaoes prophaneneſſe from henceforth ſhall not be ſpoken of in reſpect of the vncircumciſed lips of theſe beaſtly Ieſuites. For hee which held the people from exerciſes of godlineſſe, in reſpect of doing ſome profitable work, tending to the fortification of the land: but theſe are content that ſports & playes, and that of the baſeſt ſort, and of worſt report; as Cards, Dice, and Stage-playes, ſhall keepe the people from reading of the Scriptures; ſo that they be not much giuen vnto them. And yet notwithſtanding, if (as you pretend) they ingender hereſies amongſt the people: it ſhould appeare that they ſhould be as well occupied in the one as in the other: both of them being ready and beaten wayes to euerlaſting damnation. But a lyer (ſay they) hath need of memory. For if (as you haue alledged) Chryſoſtom calles carnall men dogs and hogs; theſe delicate ones, giuen ſo much to Cards, Dice, and ſtage-playes, being carnall: it followeth by your diſcourſe, that Chryſoſtome was of this iudgement, that the moſt ſeaſonable time for the people to read the Scriptures in, was when they were dogges and hogges: then which what can be more unworthily ſpoken of the good Biſhop? But marke alſo (good reader) the braſen impudency of the Ieſuits, whereby it will not be hard for thee to ſee, how all conſcience in them is euen ſeared away, as it were, with a hot Iron. For Chryſoſtom diſputeth of a neceſſary and continuall vſe of reading the Scripture by the people: and therefore doth not ſo much ſpeake againſt the lets of certaine times, as when they were giuen to ſtage-playes, &c. but meeteth with the ordinary and continuall impediment, as the care for houſe, wife, and children. For which purpoſe hee alledgeth the Apoſtle, that the Scripture was written for our correction. Which if the Ieſuits will reſtrain to the correction of exceſſe in dicing and carding, &c. their cogging and iuggling cannot be hid from any. In the third homily of Lazarus, he doth not obiect the excuſe of paſtime: but declareth that for to deliuer themſelues from the dutie of reading the Sctipture, one would ſay, that he hath matters to plead: another, that hee hath publicke affaires: a third, that he hath his handy craft to await vpon: another, that he hath his wife, his children, and family to maintain, and take care for, and generally euery one could ſay, I am a man of the world, it belongeth not to vse to read the ſcripture, but to thoſe which hauing taken their farewell of the world, dwell in the mountaines, and liue a continent life. To whom when he had anſwered, that they had therefore more need to read the Scriptures: he concludeth, that both they and he that liued amongſt men, as it were, in the midſt of the ſeas, haue alwayes need of the perpetuall and continuall ſolace of the ſcriptures. And yet reckoning vp the manifold vſes of reading of the Scriptures by the people, he concludeth thus: VVherefore it is neceſſary, that we ſhould inceſſantly fetch our armour at the ſcriptures. Againe, he compareth in the ſame places which are here quoted, the the bookes of Scriptures, to the Artificers inſtrument, wherewith he getteth his liuing, which he will not gage: and as he maketh his workes with his tooles, ſo we by the ſcriptures muſt correct our depraued minds. And a little after, The reading of the ſcripture is a great munition againſt ſin, but the ignorance thereof is a downfall, and a deepe hell: this begetteth hereſies. Againe, It cannot now be (I ſay) it cannot be, that any can obtaine ſaluation vnleſſe hee be continually occupied in reading of the ſcripture. There would be no end of writing, if we ſhould lay open all that Chryſoſtom hath in this behalfe, to proue that he herein preſcribed phyſicke for the generall diſeaſe of all Chriſtian people, and not for a ſpeciall maladie (as it might be the ſweating ſickneſſe) that haunted that people whereof he had the gouernement. Alſo for all times both in proſperity and aduerſity, euen inceſſantly; And not onely in thoſe, wherein (through aboundance) they waxing wanton, gaue themſelues to dicing and carding, &c. VVherefore your diſtinction of a teacher in the ſchoole, and pulpit-man, hath no place here: as indeed it is fooliſh, and hath no place otherwhere. For the doctrine in ſchoole, is and ought to be the ſame that is in pulpit, and that in pulpit as exact, abſolute, and neceſſary, as that in the ſchoole, The difference is, that in ſchoole it hath not annexed the goad and prick of exhortation, as the other hath. For you may not imagine Chryſoſtomes pulpit ſo looſe and ſo prophane as yours is, to ſpeake all at randome, without any girdle of truth about your loynes. Our women (God be praiſed) although they are well able to ſet ſuch Doctors as you are to ſchoole: know their places, and keepe ſilence, content to teach their children at home: which if you cannot brooke in them; or euer it can light of them, your condemnation muſt firſt paſſe vpon the head of S. Paul, who commandeth them to be teachers of good things vnto their daughters: and of Bathſheba, who taught the wiſeſt childe that euer was among the ſonnes of Adam, Chriſt excepted. The example alſo of Eunice, who taught Timothie from his very infancy in the Scriptures, is notable to teach, that neither women muſt forbeare teaching, nor very Babes to learne. And if alwayes learning, they are alwayes ignorant: in what degree of ignorance ſhall yours bee found, that neuer learne any thing at all. They read the whole Bible, ſeeing all is inſpired of God, and all profitable, and therefore the morall parts. But yet preferre thoſe that be doctrinall, or as you ſpeake, dogmaticall; as both the foundation of all good manners, and the rule whereby they may judge of the example of life, whether it be good or bad, worthy of praiſe or diſpraiſe. And it pittieth them, to ſee the blindneſſe that is yet in your eye: which deemeth that to be ſo crooked which to all ſound iudgement it ſtraight: that is to ſay, that the cauſes ſhould go before the effects, and the rule before that which is ruled by it. And as Paul in the dutie of teaching, could not acquite the faith and truſt put in him, but by teaching the people the whole counſell of God: ſo they thinke not themſelues diſcharged in the dutie of learning, vnleſſe to the vttermoſt of that they may, they indeuour to learne what is the good pleaſure and perfect will of God towards them. Neither doubt they, but that they vſe more reuerence and true humilitie in comming to the high miſteries you ſpeake of, then you do in turning your backes vnto them. And they are well aſſured, that they are fitter to wonder at, and to aduance the incomprehenſible bredth, length, height and depth of them, which haue waded ſo farre in them as the Bowies and markes of holy Scriptures doe teach them: then you, which neuer wet your neb in them. And if they read the harder bookes of Scripture, oftner and more diligently, then they do the eaſier: a wiſe Schoolemaiſter which taketh pleaſure in his Scholler, would commend them. Neither hath it been heard of, that the Scholler was euer reproched for his greater diligence in his harder leſſon, but of ſuch three halfepeny vſhers as you be, which are loth your Schollers ſhould learne too faſt; but here one word and there another; here a line and there a line; leſt in their dexteritie and forwardneſſe of learning, your inabilitie and vntowardneſſe of teaching ſhould appeare. The claſped and ſealed booke, to vs which come not in the ſtrength of our owne wits or merits, bnt in the victory of our Sauiour Chriſt, who hath vnſealed them for vs, lie ſo farre forth open, as therein we are well aſſured to read ſo much, as will ſerue for our certaine direction vnto the kingdom of heauen. But in you, which bring of your naturall powers, and vaunt your ſelues of your merits; It is true that the Prophet ſaith, That neither can your learned read, becauſe all is vnto them as a ſealed letter; and your vnlearned being offered the reading, they refuſe to read it, and think themſelues diſcharged becauſe they haue no learning. And wherefore (I pray you) ſhould the Epiſtle to the Romanes not bee read of Artificers and women: to both which ſorts (amongſt others) it was firſt written, and why ſhould that be baulked more then others by the ſimpler ſort: which hath a ſpeciall teſtimonie that both it, and all other the preachings and writings of the Apoſtles, are tempered as well to the capacitie of the fooliſh and vnlearned, as of the wiſe and vnderſtanding men. If there bee nothing in that Epiſtle, for the ignoranter ſort to learne: then hath Paul made a deſperate debt, which now being dead, he is neuer able to pay. As for Peters words, they make no more againſt the peoples reading of his Epiſtles, then againſt any other part of the Scripture: the whole whereof he affirmeth to be peruerted of vnlearned and vnſtable men. In which kinde, if you iudge all the vnlearneder ſort of your people to be, you ſome our your owne ſhame, and manifeſtly verifie the prouerbe, ſuch Doctor, ſuch Scholler. For our people we cannot hold them for vnlearned, which haue learned Chriſt; nor vnſtable which by faith are founded and rooted ſo ſtedfaſtly, that all the wind and weather, waues and flouds that can beat againſt them, are not able to remoue them from the truth which they haue learned in the Scripture. VVe acknowledge with Auguſtine, their wonderfull depth: which would affray no man from reading of them, if you had faithfully reported Auguſtines words. VVho affirmeth that the enormoſt of them ſmileth vpon the little ones, and a little after addeth, Let vs therefore come together, to the words of thy booke, meaning Gods. In the other place quoted by you, he ſheweth that if a man of the ſharpeſt wit, and greateſt diligence, from his childhood ſhould giue himſelfe, to the ſtudy of them, continuing in them vntill crooked age: as if hee ſhould liue the yeares of Methuſalah: yet he might alwaies profit further in them. VVhich is manifeſtly againſt you. For being bottomleſſe, hee ſheweth that notwithſtanding no man can ſound them, yet that his endeuour to ſearch is not in vaine, but is ioyned with daily profit, eſpecially in things neceſſary to ſalvation: which he affirmeth not to be ſo hardly come vnto. Yea himſelfe confeſſeth, that euen in his very firſt entrance to the Chriſtian faith, he read the Epiſtle to the Romans (which you would wreſt out of the peoples hands) with great fruit. And Chryſoſtom vpon this Epiſtle, teacheth that the people did not vnderſtand S. Paul's writings, not becauſe they were vnlearned, but becauſe they would not haue his writings continually. Ierom. Epiſt 13. 4. ſpeaketh of the hard ſhell of the Scripture, as Auguſtine did of the depth: to whet the diligence and induſtry of men, to greater and more continuall trauell to be taken in the ſtudy of them: euen alſo as doth the Scripture it ſelfe, which doth not will the Diſciples vpon the hardneſſe of a place to giue ouer the reading thereof, but to add further diligence and care to vnderſtand it. Where the Ieſuits do it cleane contrarily, to terrifie men from them. And therefore Ierom ſaith, They ſhine and are very bright euen in the very ſhell of them, although the marrow be ſweeter. Likewiſe he exhorteth all to cracke the ſhell, to the end to eate the kirnel. And in the very next Epiſtle writing to a Matrone, he ſaith, Therefore let the diuine Scriptures be alwaies in thy hands, and let them vnceſſantly be turned ouerolled in thy minde. Beſide that, if all the Scripture were ſo ſhelly as you (out of Ierom) pretend: where is the milke and hony for children, that are called (as hath been ſhewed) to the reading of them: They haue no teeth to cracke the ſhell, yet they depart not emptie, nor returne not hungry from them. Where fore Auguſtine ſaith, that God hath ſo tempered the Scriptures, that by manifeſt places he might prouide againſt famine, and by thoſe which are obſcurer, he might cleanſe the loathſomneſſe of our ſtomack in exerciſing our ſelues about them: noting thereby, that men would grow to diſdainfulneſſe of the Scripture, if with the eaſier Scriptures they ſhould not ioyne the ſtudy of the harder. Finally, if before the lawfull expoſition of Scriptures, whole thirteene yeeres are required, onely to run the courſe of reading the Scripture: we ſuppoſe verily, that ſuch an expoſitor will neuer be found in Poperie, although he bee ſought with a candle: where the chiefe garland and crowne of diuinitie, is not giuen to him that hath been moſt conuerſant in the old and new Teſtament, but to him that can quite himſelfe beſt in Duns and Dorbel, in Lombard and Gratian, and ſuch other vnwholſome Nurſes as theſe be, at whoſe breaſts the Popiſh Diuines doe ſucke their firſt milk in Theologie. And to what end ſhould they beſtow thirteen yeeres before their entrance to the Miniſterie, and the moſt of their time after they are entred in the ſtudie of the Scripture: if they may bring no other interpretation of any place, then that which they haue receiued of their forefathers. As for the interpretation of euery part of the Scripture, by the Apoſtolick tradition, further then by tradition (as appeareth afterward) is vnderſtood to the written word of the Apoſtles: there is no manner of mention in any writing that carrieth credit with it. But of interpretation, the diſcourſe will follow after more at large.

RHEM. 17. If our new Miniſters had had this cogitation and care, that theſe and all other wiſe men haue, and euer had, our Country had neuer fallen to this miſerable ſtate in Religion, and that vnder pretence, colour, and countenance of Gods word, neither ſhould vertue and good life haue beene ſo pittifully corrupted in time of ſuch reading, toyling, tumbling and tranſlating the book of our life and ſaluation: whereof the more pretious the right and reuerent vſe is, the more pernicious is the abuſe and prophanation of the ſame, which euery man of experience by theſe few yeares proofe, and by comparing the former daies and manners to theſe of ours, may eaſily try.

Manners and life nothing mended, but much worſe, ſince this licentious toſſing of holy Scripture.

RHEM. 18. Looke whether your men bee more vertuous, your women more chaſte, your children more obedient, your ſeruants more truſty, your maides more modeſt, your friends more faithfull, your Laity more iuſt in dealing, your Clergy more deuoute in praying: whether there bee more Religion, feare of God, faith and conſcience in all ſtates now, then of old, when there was not ſo much reading, chatting, and iangling of Gods word, but much more ſincere dealing, doing, and keeping the ſame. Looke whether through this diſorder women teach not their husbands, children their parents, yong fooles their old and wiſe fathers, the ſchollers their maſters, the ſheepe their Paſtor, and the people the Prieſt. Look whether the moſt chaſte and ſacred ſentences of Gods holy word bee not turned of many into mirth, mockery, amorous Ballets, and deteſtable letters of loue and lewdneſſe; their delicate rimes, tunes, and Tranſlations much encreaſing the ſame.

Scriptures as prophanely cited, as heathen Poets.

RHEM. 19. This fall of good life and prophaning the Diuine Miſteries, euery body ſeeth, but the great corruption and decay of faith heereby none ſee but wiſe men. who onely know, that, were the Scriptures neuer ſo truely tranſlated, yet Heretickes and ill men, that follow their owne ſpirit and know nothing but their priuate fantaſie, and not the ſenſe of the holy Church and Doctors, muſt needs abuſe them to their damnation: and that the curious, ſimple, and ſenſuall men, which haue no taſte of the things that bee of the Spirit of God, may of infinite places take occaſion of pernicious errour: For though the letter or Text haue no errour, yet (ſaith S. Ambroſe) the Arrians, or (as wee may now ſpeak) the Caluinian interpretation hath errors. Lib. 2. ad Gratianum cap. 1. And Tertullian ſaith, The ſenſe adulterated is as perilous as the ſtile corrupted. De preſcript. S. Hilarie alſo ſpeaketh thus: Hereſie ariſeth about the vnderſtanding, not about the writing: the fault is in the ſenſe, not in the word, Lib. 2. de Trinit. in principio. And S. Auguſtine ſaith, that many hold the Scriptures as they do the Sacraments, Ad ſpeciem, & non ad ſalutem: To the outward ſhew and not to ſaluation, de Baptiſm. cont. Donat. lib. 3. cap. 19. Finally, all Sect-maiſters and rauening wolues, yea the deuils themſelues pretend Scriptures, alledge Scriptures, and wholy ſhroud themſelues in Scriptures, as in the wooll and fleece of the ſimple ſheepe: whereby the vulgar, in theſe daies of generall diſputes, cannot but be in extreme danger of errour, though their bookes were truely tranſlated, and were truely in themſelues Gods own word indeed.

CARTVV. We are wel content that our Religion ſhould be condemned of them, that condemne the reading of the Scriptures: and as if they had to doe with a hand or foot ball, delyte in the taunting teatmes of toſſing and tumbling of them. And we waite patiendie vntill the Lord come to giue iudgement of all theſe blaſphemous ſpeeches which wicked ſinners ſpeake againſt him, in his word. The triall of the cauſe by the outward fruites, receiueth manie exceptions. Firſt, of foure ſorts of grounds ſowne by the ſeed of the Goſpel, there is but one fruitful: the reſt being not bettered by the preaching thereof, are worſe then when they remained in their Popiſh ignorance, or other fallings from the truth. Wherefore to preiudice the fruit that the good ground yeeldeth, by the barrennesse and vnprofitablenes of the other three sortes which haue receiued the seed aswell as it: is not equall, nor upright iudgement. Secondly, this offensiue and apparant wickednesse, euen in the hypocriticall profession of the Gospell: proceedeth of the negligence of the gouernours of the Church and Common-wealth, which loosing the coard of both Church & Common-wealth discipline, suffer wicked men to spir out the poison of their hearts, which the wholesome seuerity of commanded correction, would keep sealed vp in them. And therefore our Sauiour Christ, is not afraid to confesse franckly that for the abundance of iniquitie appearing in them that made profession of the Gospell: the loue or zeale of manie, euen of those which sometimes were forward in the same, should waxe cold. Now to lay that fault vpon the Religion, which cleaueth vnto the gouernours: is likewise an vn-equall and vn-euen iudgement. When in the commonwealth and Church of Israel, euery man did what hee lusted: who knoweth not, that there were heathen common-wealths wherein many vnlawfull things, by law and lawfull punishments were restrained. Yet we suppose the Iesuites are not so forsaken, that they will therof conclude, that the heathenish people were better then the people of Israel: and that the religion of those Gentiles, was better then the religion amongst the Iewes. Thirdly, it ought to be remembred that although sinne reigned in Poperie: yet it appeared not; there being no light of the law of God to shew it by for that the candle-light of knowledge, was cleane put out. Where in the preaching of the Gospell, by the beames of trueth shyning so bright, that which in Poperie was holden for no sinne, is now known to be sinne: and that which seemed vnder it, a little sinne, the Gospell sheweth it to be very great. To iudge therefore our mote, and gnat (which the light of our doctrine sheweth) bigger then their beame and Camell, which the night of their ignorance would nor suffer to be seene: is not to holde an euen hand, and to goe with a streight foote to the iudgement which is required. Further, it hath been an olde practise of the Diuell, against the professors of the Gospell, to charge them with disordered manners: and therefore it ought to offend no man, if it be now renewed, by the aduersaries of the truth. And although our witnes in heauen, & witnes in heart might well content vs; whileſt by your slanderous speeches, you doe (as it were blowing in the dust) raise it into your owne eies, to make you blinder: yet we dare be bolde with all the faultes of the professors of the Gospell, (mo manifoldlie then ought or woulde haue been, if we had walked according to the light that we haue seene) to compare with such black Mores as you be, which beside teeth and tongue, that is to say, vaunts and brags, haue no white about you. For what either vertue in men, chastitie in women, or obedience in children, &c. can there be amongst you: which hauing learned no such thing in the schole of the word, where they are onely taught, know them not. Your men may haue the vertues that Turks and Iewes haue, your women and children the chastitie and obedience that is found amongst them: they may fight manfullie for their countrie, they may keep their bodies from outward pollution, they may do the things that their parents command them &c: yet is there heere neither true vertue, nor vndefiled chastitie, nor humble obedience: as those which are not done for Gods cause, but either in seruile feare, vaine-glorie, filthy lucre, or some such by-respect. Whereupon wee reade that Seres a heathen and idolatrous people, had through seuerity of discipline neither fornicator nor adulterer amongst them. In which point with some others, how Angel-like we are in respect of you; there is occasion to speak afterwarde. It is a disorder if women do teach their husbands, children to their parents, &c. which you saying, and saying againe to be amongst vs, neither doe nor can proue it. But it is a greater confusion, when neither husband can teach his wife, nor parent his children, nor old the young, nor Priest the people. When the Seer is blinde, and the Embassadour dumb, and finallie when the guide of the way knoweth not the way himselfe: which how true it is in your kingdom; wee leaue it to be esteemed of all indifferentlie. Singing of Psalmes, hymnes, and spirituall songs, the Scripture recommendeth vnto vs. Bede witnesseth also, that diuerse books of Scripture were translated into English meetre. If any man abuse this sacred and holy exercise to wantonnesse, the same shall beare his condemnation. But to meet with such an euill by taking away the good altogether: is like vnto those vnskilfull physicians that ridde their patients of no disease, vnles they take their liues from them.

In the laste of these 3. sections, are Scriptures and Doctors, idlely and fooliſhly alledged, to proue that which no man denieth, that Hereticks abuse the Scriptures, now thrice in this preface repeated: by the concluſion, that therefore either the Scriptures should not bee translated, or being translated should not bee imparted to the common people, is naked and desolate of all proofe: vnlesse it bee proofe, that because hereticks throwd themselues in the wooll of the Scriptures, therefore Catholicks may not warme themselues with their fleece. Or that becauſe they draw poison from them, therefore we may not suck hony at them: or finally for that they climbe into the Lords armory, to arme themselues against vs, therefore wee should not enter by the dore to prepare and appoint our selues against them. And if hereticks impugning the truth out of the Scripture, haue such force to baniſh them from the common people: why should not the confutation of hereticks by the Scriptures, bring them home againe to the peoples hands. If euer therefore there were doting disputers these are their brethren.

The scriptures haue bin falsly & heretically translated into the vulgar tongs, and sundry other wayes sacrilegiously abused, and so giuen to the people to read

* Beza annot. in c. 1. Luk. v. 78.

RHEM. 20. But the case is now more lamentable, for the Protestants and such as S. Paul calleth ambulantes in astutia, walking in deceitfulnesse, haue so abused the people and many other in the world, not vnwise, that by their false translations they haue in stead of Gods Law and Testament, and for Christs written will and word, giuen them their own wicked writing and phantasies most shamefully in all their versions Latin, English, and other tongues, corrupting both the letter and sense by false translations, adding, detracting, altering, transposing, pointing, and all other guilefull meanes, especially where it serueth for the aduantage of their priuate opinions, for which they are bold also, partly to disauthorise quite, partly to make doubtfull diuers whole bookes allowed for Canonical Scripture by the vniuersal Church of God this thousand yeares and vpwards: to alter all the authenticall and Ecclesiasticall words vsed sithence our Christianity, into new prophane nouelties of speeches agreeable to their doctrine: to change the title of workes, to put out the names of the authors, * to charge the very Euangelist with following vntrue translation, to adde whole sentences proper to their sect into their Psalmes in meeter, euen into the very Creed in rime, all which the poore deceiued people say and sing as though they were Gods owne word, being indeed through such sacrilegious treacherie made the deuils word.

RHEM. 25

RHEM. 21. To say nothing of their intollerable liberty and licence to change the accustomed callings of God, Angels, men, places, and things vsed by the Apostles and all antiquity, in Greek, Latine, and all other languages of Christian Nations into new names, sometimes falsly, and alwaies ridiculously and for ostentation taken of the Hebrewes, to frame and fine the phrases of holy Scriptures after the forme of prophane writers, sticking not for the same to supply, adde, alter or diminish as freely as if they translated Liue, Vngall, or Terence: Hauing no Religious respect to keepe either the Maiesty or sincere simplicity of that venerable stile of Christs Spirit, as S. Augustine speaketh, which kinde the holy Ghost did chuse of infinite wisedom to haue the Diuine Mysteries rather vttered in, then any other more delicate. much lesse in this meretricious manner of writing that sundry of these new translators doe vse, of which sort * Caluin himselfe, and his pue-fellowes so much complaine that they professe, Satan to haue gained more by these new Interpreters (their number, leuity of spirit, and audacity increasing daily) then hee did before by keeping the word from the people. And for a paterne of this mischiefe, they giue Castalion, adiuring all their Churches and Schollers to beware of his Translation, as one that hath made a very sport and mokery of Gods holy word: So they charge him, themselues (and the Zuinglians of Zuricke, whose Translations Luther therefore abhorred) handling the matter with no more fidelity, grauity, or sincerity then the other, but rather with much more falsification; or (to vse the Apostles word.) canponation and adulteration of Gods word, then they, besides many wicked glosses, prayers, confessions of faith, containing both blasphemous errors, * and plaine contradictions to themselues and among themselues, all priuiledged and authorised to bee ioined to the Bible, and to bee said and sung of the poore people, and to be beleeued as articles of faith, and wholy consonant to Gods word.

All this their dea'ing is noted (as occasion serueth) in the annotations vpon this Testament: and more at large in a booke lately made purposely of that matter, intitled, A Discouery, &c.

* Caluin complaineth of the new delicate trãslators, namely Castalion:

himselfe and Beza being as bad or worse. Præfat. in nouum Test. Gall. 1567. Iosias Simlerus in vita Bullingeri. See the 4. Article of their Creed in meeter, where they professe that Christ descended to deliuer the Fathers, and afterward in their confession of their faith they deny Limbus Patrum.

The Answer to the 20. and 21. Sections.

CARTVV. It is an old practise of Satan to bestir himselfe, and to open the mouth of all his hel-hounds against the godly and learned trauels of those which haue laboured in this worke of translating the holy Bible, or any part thereof. Heereof Ierom complaineth in many places of his prefaces and Epistles, that hee was tongue-rent and raild vpon miserably. The same complaint is renewed of Erasmus, who was bayted by Ley in England, Natalis Bede in Fraunce, Stunica in Spaine, and infinite other vnlearned Monks and Friers: And therefore it ought not to seeme strange if the worthy labours of Maister Beza, and other learned men of ours, and other Countries, haue also their curres to bark at them. As for vs, albeit we are not of that sort of men which loue our own, and (as the Dolphines do their yong ones) haue in admiration our workes and writings: And further also confesse that our Translations are not so exact in all points of perfection, but that time and study may better them: yet how falsly they are charged by the slanderous pennes of these wrangling Iesuites, appeareth at large by the learned and substantiall defence made for our English translation vnto the vnlearned and trifling quarrels against the same. And if it appeare to the indifferent Reader, that our translation which (no doubt) for pure loue they beare to their Country and Countrymen they iudge the worst of all others, is free from those corruptions wherewith the Iesuites haue slandered it: the good Reader may easily know what to iudge of our translations in other languages, Latine, French, Italian, &c. And heerein let all men marke their equity, and by their fidelitie in their iudgement of Maister Caluins and Bezaes translations, affirmed by them to bee as new and delicate as Castalions, or worse then it, esteeme what trust they deserue in other their accusations: for either they haue neuer read them, or else partly their ignorance, and partly their furious malice against them, hath so bewitched them, that they can put no difference betweene a swelling and swaged speech, betweene an honest homely stile, and that which is pricked and pranked vp by choise and exquisite words sought rather to tickle the eares of daintie fooles, then for the fit deliuerie of the sense the holy Ghost intendeth. Finally betweene that which goeth vpon a plaine sandall, fit to go farre for the publishing of the Gospell: then that which is mounted vpon moyles and pantofles, meet to keep it at home, amongst a few, whom that courtlinesse and curiositie of speech doth delite. And if they will purge themselues from a manifest and impudent slander heerein, let them note the places wherein Caluin and Beza departing from Castalion, haue either rioted as hee doth, or in licentiousnesse of speech haue gone beyond him. Now where they charge vs to disauthorise, or to make doubtfull diuers whole bookes of Canonicall Scriptures, allowed by the vniuersall Church of God, a thousand yeares and vpwards: their limitation leauing vnto vs the most ancient fathers and Councels which liued the best and first fiue hundred yeares after Christ, reiecting the same bookes which wee doe, argueth a guilty conscience constrained to confesse the truth which they condemne.

Hieron. ad Do. & Rog. in Esd. & Nehem. & in paralip. Erasm Epist. ad. Mosellanum.

A strange impudencie therfore, which are neither able to answer our manifest reasons, nor to bring any of theirs, nor yet to match in any sort our authorities: notwithstanding blare out their tongues, crying & barking still, that we disauthorize the Canonicall Scriptures. Their quarrell against Mr. Beza is answered in the proper place: That against the tenth article of the Creed in meeter, is vtterly vnworthy of any answer. For the meeter alwayes requiring a paraphrasis, or some compasse of words: the Poet could not more fitly haue expounded the forgiuenesse of sins then by noting our saluation by faith alone: according as the Apostle, of the remission of sins out of the Psalme, concludeth the iustification by faith without workes. The other corruption of Christs soule descending into hell, after his death, argueth no contradiction amongst our selues, but a small remnant of the infection of Poperie in that author: which is so malicious and stubborn a leprosie, as for the approued triall of their cleansing from it, they haue commonly need to be shut vp from pulpit and pen, some reasonable time: and as they say in the French prouerbe: The Monkes Cowle is not easily put off in many yeares, what consent of iudgement there is amongst vs in that behalfe, the latter editions which haue left that Creed cleane out, may somewhat declare.

the pure and blessed word of trueth, much also moued thereunto by the desires of many deuout persons: haue set foorth, for you (benigne readers) the new Testament to begin withall, trusting that it may giue occasion to you, after diligent perusing thereof, to lay away at least such their impure versions as hitherto you haue been forced to occupie. How well we haue done it, we must not be iudges, but referre all to Gods Church and our superiours in the same: to them we submit our selues, and this, and all other our labours, to be in part or in the whole, reformed, corrected, altered, or quite abolished: most humbly desiring pardon if through our ignorance, temeritie, or other humane infirmitie, we haue any where mistaken the sense of the holy Ghost, further promising, that if hereafter we espie any of our own errors; or if any other, either friend of good will, or aduersarie for desire of reprehension, shall open vnto vs the same: we will not (as the Protestants do) for defence of our estimation, or of pride and contention, by wrangling words wilfully persist in them, but be most glad ro heare of them, and in the next edition, or otherwise to correct them: for it is truth that we seeke, and Gods honour: which being had either by good intention, or occasion, all is well. This we professe onely, that we haue done our endeuour with prayer, much feare and trembling, lest we should dangerously erre in so sacred, high, and diuine a work: that we haue done it with all faith, diligence and sincerities: that we haue vsed no partialitie for the disaduantage of our aduersaries, nor no more licence then is sufferable in translating of holy Scriptures: continually keeping our selues as neere as is possible to our text, and to the very words and phrases which by long vse are made venerable, though to some prophane or delicate eares they may seeme more hard or barbarous, as the whole stile of Scripture doth lightly to such at the beginning: acknowledging with S. Hierom, that in other writings it is enough to giue in translation sence for sence, but that in Scriptures, lest we misse the sence, we must keepe the very words. Ad Pammach. Epistola 101. cap. 2. in princip. VVe must, saith S. Augustine, speake according to a set rule, lest licence of words breed some wicked opinion concerning the things contained vnder the words. de Ciuitate, lib. 10. cap. 12. VVhereof our holy forefathers, and ancient Doctors had such a religious care, that they would not change the very barbarismes or incongruities of speech, which by long vse had preuailed in the old readings or recitings of Scriptures: as, Neque mubent neque unbentur, in Tertullian, lib. 4. in Marcion, in S. Hillarie in c. 22. Mat. and in all the fathers. Qui me confusus fuerit, confundar & ego eum, in S. Cyprian, ep. 63. nu. 7. Talis enim nobis decebat sacerdos (which was an elder translation then the vulgar Latine that now is) in S. Ambrose. c. 3. de fuga seculi. and S. Hierom himselfe, who otherwise corrected the Latine translation that was vsed before his time, yet keepeth religiously, (as himselfe professeth Præfat. 4. Euang. ad Damasum) these and the like speeches, Nonne vos magis pueris estis illis? and filius hominis non venit ministrari, sed ministrare: and, Neque nubent, neque nubentur: in his Commentaries vpon these places. And Non capit Prophetam perire extra Hierusalem, in his Commentaries in c. 2. Ioel. sub finem. And S. Augustine, who is most religious in all these phrases, counteth it a special pride & infirmitie in those that haue a little learning in tongues, and none in things, that they easily take offence of the simplest speeches or solœcismes in the Scriptures. de doctrina Christ. lib. 2. cap. 13. See also the same holy father, li. 3. de doct. Christ. c. 3. and tract. 2. in Euang. Ioan. But of the manner of our Translation more anon.

RHEM. 23. Now, though the text thus truely translated, might sufficiently, in the sight of the learned, and all indifferent men, both controule the aduersaries corruptions, and proue that the holy Scriptures whereof they haue made so great vants, make nothing for their new opinions, but wholly for the Catholiques Churches beliefe and doctrine, in all the points of difference betwixt vs: yet knowing that the good and simple may easily be seduced by some few obstinate persons of perdition (whom we see giuen ouer into a reprobate sence, to whom the Gospell, which in it selfe is the odour of life to to saluation, is made the odour of death to damnation; ouer whose eies, for sin and disobedience, God suffereth a vaile or couer to lie, while they read the new Testment, euen as the Apostle saith the Iewes haue till this day in reading of the old, that as the one sort cannot finde Christ in the Scripture, read they neuer so much, so the other cannot finde the Catholike Church nor her doctrine there neither) and finding by experience this saying of S. Augustin to be most true; If the preiudice of any erronious perswasion preoccupate the minde, whatsoeuer the Scripture hath to the contrary, men take it for a figuratiue speech. for these causes, and somewhat to helpe the faithfull reader in the difficulties of diuers places, we haue also set forth large Annotations, thereby to shew the studious reader in most places pertaining to the controuersies of this time, both the heretical corruptions and false deductions, and also the Apostolike tradition, the exposition of the holy Fathers, the decrees of the Catholike Church, and most ancient Councels: which meanes whosoeuer trusteth not, for the sence of the holy Scriptures, but had rather follow his priuate iudgement, or the arrogant spirit of these Sectaries, he shall worthily through his owne wilfulnesse be deceiued, beseeching all men to looke with diligence, sinceritie, and indifferencie, into the case that concerneth no lesse then euery ones eternall saluation or damnation.

RHEM. 24. VVhich if he do, we doubt not but he shall to his great contentment, finde the holy Scriptures most cleerely and invincibly to proue the Articles of Catholike doctrine against our aduersaries, which perhaps he had thought before this diligent search, either not to be consonant to Gods word, or at least not contained in the same, and finally he shall proue this saying of S. Augustine to be most true. Multi sensus, &c. Many sences of holy Scriptures lie hidden, and are knowne to some few of greater vnderstanding: neither are they at any time auouched more commodiously and acceptably then at such times when the care to answer heretickes doth force men thereunto. For then, euen they that bee negligent in matters of studie and learning, shaking off sluggishnesse, are stirred vp to diligent hearing, that the Aduersaries may be refelled. Againe, how many sences of holy Scriptures, concerning Christs Godhead, haue been avouched against Photinus? how many of his Manhood against Manichæus: how many of the Trinitie against Sabellius? how many of the vnitie in Trinitie against the Arians, Eunomians, Macedonians? how many of the Catholike Church disperse throughout the whole world, and of the mixture of good & bad in the same vntill the end of the world against the Donatists and Luciferans, and other of the like error? how many against all other hereticks, which it were too long to rehearse? Of which sences and expositions of holy Scripture the approued authors and auouchers should otherwise either not be known at all, or not so well known, as the contradictions of proud heretickes haue made them. August. in Psalm. 67 prope finem.

Heretickes make Catholikes more diligent to search and find the senses of holy Scripture for refelling of the same.

RHEM. 25. Thus he ſaith of ſuch things as not ſeeming to be in holy Scriptures to the ignorant or heretiques, yet indeed be there. But in other poynts doubted of, that indeed are not decided by Scripture, he giueth vs this godly rule to be followed in all, as he exemplifieth in one. Then doe we hold (ſaith he) the veritie of the Scriptures, when we do that which now hath ſeemed good to the vniuerſall Church, which the authoritie of the Scriptures themſelues doth commend: ſo that, foraſmuch as the holy Scripture cannot deceiue, whoſoeuer is afraid to be deceiued with the obſcuritie of queſtions, let him therein aske counſell of the ſame Church, *which the holy Scripture moſt certainly and euidently ſheweth and pointeth vnto. CARTVV. What compaſſion haue you had of your country men, which haue kept back the wheat of Gods word from them ſo many yeares and ages, wherewith they ſhould haue been fed to eternall life. And your compaſſions now, what are they but (as Salomon ſaith of the compaſſions of the wicked) moſt cruell. Wherefore it is certaine, that as the curſes of Gods people haue hitherto pearced your ſoules, and runne them thorow for engroſſing into your hand, the graine of life: ſo now they will be as ſore and ſharp againſt you for ſelling them ſuch muſtie, melded, blaſted, and by all meanes corrupted graine. Neither is your impietie leſſe now in poyſoning them; then it was before in ſtaruing them. Wherefore you partly perſwade vs, that you haue done this worke in feare and trembling: ſeeing in ſo open corruptions, and ſo manifold and manifeſt wreſtings; it was harde for you not to ſee eft-ſoones hell opened before your eyes. As for your childiſh tranſlation of numbering word for word, and as it were ſyllable for ſyllable, rather then to giue ſenſe for ſenſe, and to tranſlate rather by weght of ſenſe, then by tale of words; although alſo, it ſhall appeare that you haue kept your ſelfe to neither; yet haue you no defence in Ierome for it. For although by the words you alleadge, may well be gathered out of him a ſtraighter law in turning the Scriptures, then in turning other writers: yet hauing ſhewed in the ſame Epiſtle, that his vſe in tranſlating was not to number but to weigh words, that he followed the words ſo farre as they were not ſtrange from the cuſtome of ſpeach, that he tranſlated not words, but ſentences; he addeth, that it is no maruell, if this were done in tranſlating prophane and eccleſiaſticall writers, ſeeing that the ſeuenty interpreters, the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles had done the ſame, not yeelding word for word. And after in the ſame Epiſtle he ſaith, that the care of the Euangeliſts, was not to hunt after words and ſyllables, but to ſet down the minde or ſenſe of the doctrines. And therefore ſheweth by diuers examples, where they in wordes neither agree with the 70. interpreters, nor yet with the Hebrew. Amongſt other, the example that he citeth out of Saint Marke is notable: where our Sauiour Chriſts words being onely Tabitha Cumi. i. Riſe mayd: the Euangeliſt tranſlating it, to make the ſenſe more full, interlaceth I ſay to thee. And if the Ieſuites tarie to heare, where Ierome himſelfe vſeth this libertie in tranſlating the Scriptures: wee ſend them to another Epiſtle of his, where they ſhall find him defending himſelfe in his liberty of tranſlating Naſchon Bar which being word for word, kiſſe the Sonne, hee tranſlated adore the Sonne; leaſt (as hee ſaith) if hee had turned otherwiſe hee ſhould haue turned it euill fauouredly: Which wee write, rather to ſhew how farre Ieromes iudgement in tranſlating differed from theſe apiſh Ieſuites, then that wee eſteeme that the other tranſlation which hee ſhunned, was ſo hard or rough as hee iudged it. And therefore it was elegantly ſaid of the Emperour, I hate alike as departing equally from the meane both Antiquaries and affectors of nouelties: The firſt place recited out of Auguſtine, maketh nothing to the purpoſe? For as the ſtile of the Scripture as it were the garments and habite thereof, is neither new fangled, nor exquiſitly laboured by perſwaſible words of mans wiſedom: ſo is it not foule and ſluttiſh, but it is arayed from top to toe as an honeſt and chaſte matron, auoiding as well barbarouſneſſe and ruſticalneſſe of the one ſide, as curioſitie and affectation of the other, In the other place there is no ſuch thing found as they talke of, albeit that alſo ſhould make as little to the purpoſe as the other. And if the old writers ſpeaking and writing vnto their people, did ſpeak and write barbarouſly, that they might bee the better vnderſtood of them: what is that, to make it a rule in tranſlating: If Ierome in correcting the old tranſlation ſo tempered his penne that amending it where it changed the ſenſe of the Text, hee left the reſt to remaine as they were; it followeth not becauſe hee ſuffered them to ſtand that therefore hee allowed of them throughout, conſidering that a man would not vſe that boldneſſe in correcting another mans worke, which hee would doe in his own, nor put out euery phraſe and euery manner of ſpeech which hee himſelfe could better. Beſides, that it is a harder matter then you are euer able to performe, to ſhew that this old tranſlation wherein theſe venerable barbariſmes and ſolœciſmes are found, is the ſame that Ierome corrected. In none of the other places alledged out of Auguſtine, is there any thing to maintaine this babiſhneſſe of tranſlation, bnt rather contrariwiſe when hee affirmeth that ſome binde themſelues too much vnto the words, which tranſlations he holdeth for inſufficient. Alſo that when the phraſes are not tranſlated according to the cuſtome of the ancient Latiniſts, although nothing be taken away from the vnderſtanding, yet they offend thoſe which are delighted with the things, when a certain pureneſſe is kept in the ſignes of the things, meaning the words. And what his iudgement is in this cauſe, hee doth other where plainely and cleerely ſet downe, when hee ſaith that the Scripture is to bee declared according to the proprietie of euery tongue. Indeed hee ſaith that ſometime the vulgar ſpeech is more profitable, but his reaſon is farre more different from yours; For it appeareth when hee preferreth thoſe Barbariſmes, it is for the better commodity and capacity of the people to whom hee ſpake or wrote, preferring rudeneſſe of ſpeech, onely to that pureneſſe which either bringeth new words to offend the eares of the Reader, or elſe maketh the ſenſe doubtfull or obſcure: in which reſpect hee affirmeth, that to let his ſpeech fall the eaſilier to the vnderſtanding of his people hee had rather ſay oſſium, which is no true ſpeech then os, which is the proper and true language. Beſide that it is more euident by their barbariſmes in other ſpeeches then in the texts of Scripture. that they ſo ſpeak ſometimes becauſe they met with no better nor more choiſe words. Seeing therefore a good pure Latine ſpeech is now better vnderſtood then the old rotten and ruſty words, there is no cauſe why they ſhould not now bee aboliſhed, if euer they had any vſe heeretofore. And if it pleaſe the Ieſuites to confer the ſtile of theſe daies; ſithence the Goſpell (after a long winter of ignorance) began to flowre againe; with the ſtile of thoſe which wrote 200 yeares hence, wee ſuppoſe that they will accord vs, that there is as great difference as was ſometime betweene the Dunickes and the Attickes tickes in Greece, or is now betweene the Court any Countrey with vs, yet we thinke that the Iesuites will not therefore rather chuse to stamber and stut with their fore-goers, then to speake clearely and purely with the present age; sure wee are, that they haue done the best to the contrary. VVherefore it is euident, that you can bring nothing to defend your sottish speach of hell of fire, for hell fire: for against the spirituals of wickednesse in the celestials, for double of God, &c. nor yet for your doubtfull and dangerous speech of the sinne of the spirit, for the sinne against the spirit, with a number more of the same lare. And yet you haue not kept the law your selues haue made, for you haue translated eighteene yeares, where both the Greeke and old Interpreter, which you propound to follow so superstitiously, haue ten and eight yeares. If heere seeing your folly, you amended it, why haue you not corrected it in places of greater importance, and hauing corrected the old translatour in another place of some moment, Rom 13.9. wheer for restored you haue turned comprised: why haue you not performed the same in other of greater weight. Not to speake of Lindanus your brother in this impietie. who speaking of the truth of the matter retained by the old interpreter, more then the truth, yet notwithstanding confesseth the often slips of impropriety in speech, and other babishnesse of him in translating. Now as by your vnlearned translation you haue greatly embased the pure mettle of the holy word; so by your corrupt annotations, wresting and writhing, haling and pulling the translation, either to a diuers or contrary sense of that which the words giue you haue made it no better then filthie drosse: So that it may bee verified of your work which Ierom saith: You make of the Gospell of Christ, the Gospell of man, or that which is worse the Gospell of the Deuill. If you had giuen your people your translation alone, wee doubt not, but they should notwithstanding all your declinings from the native pureness of the word, haue found releefe in it against extreme famine; which your vnfaithfulnesse hath thrust them into. VVhich thing you well perceiuing durst not vpon the perill of quenching your kitchin-fire, put forth your single sew of translation, without the Cooloquintida of your Annotations, thereby to bring certaine death to all those that should taste of them. VVherein let the indifferent Reader compare our confidence wee haue in the goodnesse of our cause, in either nakedly deliuering the Scriptures without any annotations at all, or else with few and short directions. Rather to open the file and course of the Scriptures, then to preiudice the reader, either with recommending ours, or condemning the aduersaries iudgement. Let him (I say) compare it with the fearefull doubt that the Iesuites haue of theirs, which durst not commend their single Translation vnto the conscience of the Reader, vnlesse (beside the load and charge of their margent notes) they had added almost at the end of euery Chapter a iag of Annotations, wherein they recommend their own and condemne our doctrine, thereby (at vnawares) testifying against themselues that the words of the holy Ghost speake nothing for them vnlesse they bee twitched aside with the wrench and wrest of their Annotations. VVee hauing found Christ in the Scriptures, cannot bee to seeke in the true Church, you that hold not the head it is no maruell, if you haue not laid hold of a filthy and dead carion, in stead of the liuely body of Christ which is his Church. VVee which follow the light of the Scripture in all questions that can bee mooued of Religion, and not in those onely which you idlely and rouingly alledge out of Augustine haue promise of resolution in all our doubts. But you which blasphemously make the Scriptures to giue no more light, to the decision of diuers points in religion, then a haire-cloth: doe miserably run your selues and others to the condemnation whereunto you are ordained. In which way, although you would drag Augustine with all your might and main, yet will not he keep you company, not only for that he hath nothing for you in the place which you alledge, but that he hath the cleane contrary vnto you: who affirmeth, that in the Scriptures we are to seke the Church, by them to discusse our controuersies. And after hee saith, That all should be removed, what soeuer is alledged of either side against other, saving that which commeth out of the Canonical Scriptures. And againe, we desire not to be beleeued, because we are in the Church of Christ, or that Optatus, or Ambrose, or innumerable Bishops of our profession haue commended it vnto vs. Howbeit, as through the whole booke it shall appeare, how small consent of the ancient Church, you haue in the principall demands hanging between you and vs: so it shall appeare a little after, that there is a more certaine rule of the vnderstanding of the Scriptures then you assigne: and that although the former iudgement of the Church of Christ sithence the Apostles time, it is able to keepe vs from falling dangerously in the principall & fundamentall points of our religion; yet that they cannot free vs from errour in every question that may be moued of it: not to speake of the faint proofes that sometime they vsed euen in great mysteries of our religion, wherein notwithstanding (touching the matter it selfe) their iudgement is sound and Catholicke.

Many reasons of this translation.

RHEM. 26. Now to giue thee also intelligence in particular, most gentle reader, of such things as it behoueth thee specially to know concerning our Translation: we translate the old vulgar Latine text, not the common Greeke text, for these causes.

1. It is so ancient, that it was vsed in the Church of God aboue 1300. yeeres agoe, as appeareth by the Fathers of those times.

1. It is most ancient.

The Answer to the 26. section, together with the first reason.

CARTVV. After that by hiding and burning the Scriptures, by threatning and murdering of men for reading of them, they cannot attaine to the causing of such a night of ignorance, wherein they might do all things without controulement: there remained one onely engine, which Sathan (with all his Angels) hauing framed and hammered vpon his lying forge, hath furnished them of. This engine is the defacing and disauthorizing of the Scriptures, as it were the taking from them their girdle or garter of honour, by a false surmise of corruption of them, in the languages wherein they were first written. Which abhominable practise being attempted in the old Testament by Lindanus, (whom some tearme Blind-asinus) is now assayed in the new, by the Iesuites, who of all others (for their deadly hatred to the truth) are not called vnfitly Iebusites. First therfore, or euer we come to their particular arguments, whereby they would (as it were) couer the head and maiesty of the authenticall copies in the Greeke, to bring them to subiection vnto the old translation: we thinke it not amisse to set downe the generall doctrine, that no one oracle or sentence of God can fall away. Whereby it will bee euident that the holy Scriptures both in the old and new Testament written in their originall tongues, cannot either by addition, detraction, detraction or exchange be corrupted. Whereunto the conſideration of the authour of them, miniſtreth a ſubſtantiall proofe. For ſeeing they are of God, all whoſe workes remaine for euer: it followeth that all the holy Scriptures, being not onely his handy worke, but as it were the chiefe and maſter-worke of all other, muſt haue a continuall endurance. And if there be not the leaſt and vileſt creature in the world which either hath not heretofore, or ſhall not hereafter, (by the mightie hand of God vpholding all things) be continued: how much leſſe is it to be eſteemed, that any ſentence of God, wherein a greater glory commeth to him, and greater fruit to his people then of many of thoſe creatures, which (for theſe two ends) he doth ſo carefully continue, ſhould periſh and fall away. Secondly, they all are written generally for our inſtruction, and more particularly for admonition and warning, for comfort and conſolation, &c. vnleſſe we will ſay that God may be deceiued in his purpoſe and end wherefore he ordained them: it muſt needs be, that it muſt continue whatſoeuer hath been written in that reſpect. For if it, or any part thereof fall away, the ſame cannot, according to the ordinance of God, either inform vs againſt ignorance, or warne vs againſt danger, or comfort vs againſt afflictions: or finally doe any other dutie vnto vs which we haue need of, and they were prepared for. Thirdly, if the authority of the authentical Copies in Hebrew, Chalde, and Greeke fall: there is no high court of appeale, where controuerſie, (riſing vpon the diuerſitie of tranſlations, or otherwiſe) may be ended: ſo that the exhortation of hauing recourſe vnto the Law and to the Prophets, and of our Sauiour Chriſt asking how it is written, and how readeſt thou are now either of none effect, or not ſufficient: whileſt diſgracers and diſgraders of the Scripture haue taught men to ſay, that the copies are corrupted, and the ſence changed. Nay, not onely our eſtate is worſe then theirs vnder the law, and in our Sauiour Chriſts time: but worſe then theirs which liued ſome hundred yeares after Chriſt, when the ancient Fathers exhorted in ſuch caſes, that men ſhould make ſuite vnto the originall Scriptures, to haue an end of their controuerſies. Yea their owne Gratian out of Auguſtine falſly (alledged for Ierom) ſendeth vs in deciding of differences, not to the old tranſlator, but to the originals of the Hebrew in the old, and of the Greeke in the new Teſtament. They vſe quarrelouſly to ſurmiſe againſt vs, that we abbridge the priuiledges of the Churches of our dayes, becauſe wee accord them not to be ſo ample in euery point, as they were when the Apoſtles liued. But woe vnto the Churches of our daies, if the Scriptures be (as the Papiſts would beare vs in hand) corrupted, if the Charters and records whereby we hold the inheritance of the kingdom of heauen, are razed, or otherwiſe falſified, if we haue not wherewith to conuey our ſelues to be children vnto the heauenly Father, & Prieſts vnto God in Ieſus Chriſt; further then from the hand of ſuch a Scribe and Notarie as both might erre, and hath erred diuerſly. Theſe euidences were ſafely and ſurely kept, when one onely Nation of the Iewes, and the ſame ſometimes (a few excepted) vnfaithfull, bare the keyes of the Lords Librarie: now when there be many Nations that haue the keyes vnto the Arke or Counter wherein they are kept; it is altogether vncredible, that there ſhould be ſuch packing, or ſuch defect as the aduerſarie doth wickedly ſuppoſe. Againe, if the Lord haue kept vnto vs the booke of Leuiticus, and (in it) the ceremonies (which are aboliſhed, and whereof there is now no practiſe) for that they haue a neceſſarie and profitable vſe in the Church of God: how much more is it to be eſteemed, that his prouidence hath watched ouer other bookes of the Scripture which more properly belong vnto our times. Laſt of all (paſſing by other reaſons which might further bee alledged) let vs heare the Scripture it ſelfe, witneſſing of it own authoritie and durableneſſe to all ages. Thus therefore Moſes writeth of it; The ſecret and hidden things remaine to the Lord our God, but the things that are reuealed are to vs and our children for euer: Dauid alſo profeſſeth, that hee knew long before, that the Lord had founded his teſtimonies for euermore. But our Sauiour Chriſts teſtimony is of all other moſt euident: That heauen and earth ſhall paſſe, but that his Word cannot paſſe: And yet more vehemently, that not one iote, or ſmall letter, prick or ſtop of his Law can paſſe vntill all bee fulfilled: Now as for the common obiection of diuers books mentioned in the old Teſtament, whereof we finde none ſo intituled in the canon thereof, it is eaſily anſwered. That either they were Ciuill and Common-wealth Stories, whether the Reader is referred if it like him to reade the Stories more at large which the Prophets (to a ſufficiencie of that they wrote them for) touched ſhortly: or elſe they are contained in the bookes of the Kings; which are manifeſtly proued to haue beene written by diuers Prophets in their ſeuerall ages wherein they prophecied. In the former kind whereof, if wee reape not that fruit which they did which liued in the daies wherein the Reader was ſet ouer vnto them: yet wee reape a more excellent fruit, which is a certaine knowledge of a more ſpeciall prouidence and care of the Lord, for the preſeruing of the Scriptures appearing euidently, in that all thoſe falling away, the bookes of the Canonical Scripture do ſtill remaine. Hereof we haue a notable example in the books of Salomon; whereof thoſe falling away that hee wrote of naturall Phyloſophie, and other by knowledge, the profitableſt bookes that euer were: (the Canon onely excepted) thoſe alone which pertained to godlineſſe haue been ſafely kept for the poſteritie. VVhich is ſo much the more to bee obſerued; as there being infinitely more in the world that affect the knowledge of naturall things, then do godlineſſe, haue not yet with all the care of keeping them beene able to deliuer them from this whole and perpetuall forgetfulneſſe whereunto they are fallen, as if they had neuer beene written: VVhere of the other ſide his holy VVritings, hated of the moſt part, and careleſſly regarded of a number, haue notwithſtanding as whole and full a remembrance as they had the firſt day the Lord gaue them vnto the Church. And ſeeing there are now more then 1500 yeares wherein there is not onely no book, but no ſentence of any book of Canonicall Scripture fallen away: what cauſe is there wee ſhould think that in the time which was vnder the Law, whole bookes fell away ſo thick and three-fold? For as for bookes of the new Teſtament imagined of ſome to haue beene loſt, their reaſons whereupon their imagination leaneth are ſo faint that they are not worth the naming. Of all which matter, it is euident, that not onely the matter of the Scripture, but alſo the words, not onely the ſenſe and meaning of them, but the manner and frame of ſpeech in them do remaine. For ſeeing the Scripture remaineth, which wholy both for matter and words is inſpired of God, it muſt follow that the ſame words wherein the old and new Teſtament were written and indited by the hand of God, do remaine. For how great difference there is betweene the things both words and matter, that haue paſſed through the mouth or pen of God, and thoſe which come from a mortall man, may appeare by the ſayings of the Poets taken vp of the holy Ghoſt. For notwithſtanding the Poets vſe the ſame words and ſenſe which the Scripture vſeth, yet were they neither the words nor the ſenſe of God, but of the Poets, vntill they had paſſed by the golden pipe of the Lords mouth: VVhereby it came to paſſe, that thoſe ſayings which were before prophane, are now moſt holy: euen as the ſtones and timber which in the quarrey and forreſt were common, were after holy when they were laid in the building of the Temple. If therefore words, the ſame in letters and ſillables with thoſe the holy Ghoſt vſeth, are not words inſpired of God, becauſe they were neither written nor ſpoken of him, his Embaſſadours and publique Notaries: How much leſſe are the words of the old Tranſlator, diuers from them of the holy Ghoſt, inſpired of him, ſeeing they neuer paſſed either by pen or mouth of his. And albeit the old Tranſlator (which hee is farre from) ſhould alwaies giue ſenſe for ſenſe, and waight for waight, yet ſhould not his tranſlation (which ſo ſhould bee the truth of God) bee therefore the word of God: conſidering that the title agreeth onely to the truth of God, which hath alſo the frame of his words. And therefore the Apoſtle maketh a manifeſt difference betweene the wholeſome words of our Sauiour Chriſt, and the doctrine that is according to godlineſſe: And our Sauiour Chriſt in ſaying that thy Word is the truth, doth manifeſtly eſtabliſh a difference betweene Gods word and his truth: otherwiſe hee ſhould ſay, Thy Truth is the Truth, or thy Word is the Word: which were no declaration of his meaning, but onely an vnneceſſarie repetition. VVherefore it is truely verified of theſe men, which the Prophet ſaith, that they haue forſaken the fountaine, and digged ciſterns: But let vs examine the pith of their reaſons which haue moued them rather to draw from the riuen and leaking cask of the old Tranſlator, by the which many things haue entred to the empairing the ſweet wine of the Scripture, then from the ſtaunch and whole veſſels of the Greek copies which preſerue it from all corruption.

The anſwer to the firſt Reaſon.

CARTVV. Theſe men are worthie to go alwayes in their olde cloathes, that make the age of the tranſlation, the firſt and principall commendation thereof. Whereby it ſhould appeare, if they could haue come by the tranſlation that Ierom amended, they would haue tunned their drink out of that, rather then out of this: as that whoſe head was hoarer. And if this be a good reaſon why ſhould not the tranſlation of Symmachus. Aquila and Theodotion be preferred: which are auncienter then he. Yea why ſhould not the 70. before them all, be much more preferred, as thoſe that were vſed oftentymes of the Apoſtles, and commended highly of the auncient fathers. But as gray hearers are then onely honorable, when they are found in the way of righteouſnes: ſo the age of the old tranſlator, is there onely to be reſpected and reuerenced, where both for properneſſe of wordes, and truth of ſenſe he hath wiſely and faithfully tranſlated. And ſo far we holde him worthie to be preferred, before other interpreters. But if antiquitie commended the olde tranſlation vnto you for that it was aboue 1300. years olde: the Greek coppies being more ancient then it; and hauing been vſed aboue 1500. yeares, ſhould (yewiſſe) haue had the right of the olde tranſlator.

[a] 2 Corrected by S. Hierom.

[b] Look Ierō vpon theſe places and compare them with the old Tranſlator. Gen. 1. 2. Eſay 1. 12, 30. & 5. 2. Gal. 1. 16. & 2. 5. & 5 8. Eph. 2. 14. & 4. 19. &c.

[c] Looke alſo afterward, for other examples.

RHEM. 27.] 2. It is that (by the common receiued opinion and by all probability) which [a] S. Hierom afterward corrected according to the Greeke, by the appointment of Damaſus then Pope, as hee maketh mention in his Preface before the foure Euangeliſts, vnto the ſaid Damaſus, and in Catalogo in fine, and epiſt. 102.

[a] Præfat. ad conuer. veter. teſtamenti.

To the ſecond reaſon.

CARTVV. It is falſe. For it is not the receiued opinion, neither is there any probabilitie of it, conſidering that [b] Ierome in the old and new Teſtament, both tranſlateth otherwiſe then the olde interpreter, and often controwleth him. Hereof the teſtimony of Eraſmus, (a man that had as quick a noſe in Ieromes doings, as whoſoeuer:) is notable, who flatly affirmeth that this tranſlation is neither Cyprians, nor Hilaries, nor Ambroſe, nor Auguſtins, nor Ieromes; ſeing his reading is diuers from it, and that it is much leſſe, that which he corrected, ſeing there be found in this which he condemneth, not onely as touching the wordes, but alſo as touching the meaning. And in another place he ſaith, that [c] Ierome manifeſtly condemneth the former tranſlation, which we yet (for the moſt part) doe vſe. Ierome (although without cauſe) ſcourgeth the old interpreter, for tranſlating σωφροσυνη, Sobrietie: which (ſaith he ſhould haue been tranſlated chaſtitie. And this he doth in two or three places. Now a man would not think, that Ierome was ſo vn-aduiſed, as to haue giuen his aduerſarie this aduantage: that hee might reply againſt him, that it was his own tranſlation, or that which he corrected, and therefore that he was driuen to a hard ſhift, which could not defend his cauſe but by denyall of himſelfe. But that this tranſlation in not Ieromes, let the reader looke the diſcourſe, that [d] Mumſter hath made hereof. Howbeit if this were granted them which they were neuer able to proue: what haue they gained thereby? for it followeth not, that if either it were truly tranſlated, or faithfully corrected by Ierome that therefore it is now true, and voyd of corruption. The fountaine of the Scriptures is ſo walled by the prouidence of God, ſo cloſe ſealed and couered; that by no, either negligence or malice of men, there can any ſuch thing fall into it, to trouble the cleare and ſweete water thereof: but as for the writings of men, they haue no ſuch priuiledge, neither are they laid vp in any arke of the durable wood of Cittim, but that they may be, and are corrupted, as the daily experience doth declare. Whereof it is good to heare Ieromes own teſtimony. [e] I doe not think, that the Lords words are to be corrected; but I goe about to correct the falſeneſſe of the the Latin bookes: which is plainly proued by the diuerſitie of them, and to bring them to the originall of the Greek (from the which they do not deny but that they were tranſlated) who if they miſlike the water of the moſt pure fountaine, they may drink of the myrie puddles. And in the ſame place where they haue alledged, [f] if wee muſt beleeue the Latin copies, let them tell vs, which. For there bee (in a manner) as many diuers copies as bookes. But if they think, that the truth is to be ſought out of the greater parte; why doe we not returne to the originall in Greeke, and correct thoſe things which either haue been vnskilfully tranſlated, or of ignorant preſumptuous perſons fooliſhly amended, or of negligent writers added or changed. Now if the Latin tranſlations before Ieromes time, were in three hundred yeares ſo manifoldly corrupted: how much more, may wee think that Ieromes tranſlation hath in 1300. yeares been impaired and imbaſed? eſpecially when as in diuers of theſe hundreth yeares, there hath raigned ſuch blindneſſe and and barbarouſneſſe as neuer the like: and when as it was coppied out (for the moſt part (by vnclarkly [g] Monkes, whoſe vnlearnednes is come into prouerbe. Of this coruption of books, the reader may further ſee both in Ierome and others of later times. Wherefore it is euident, that either this tranſlation is not Ieromes, or els it is corrupted and changed, and that more materially, then themſelues are able to alledge of the Greek copies. Wherefore if you flie from the Greek, for that there is some alteration from the originall: there is no cause why you shou'd runne to this translation, so diuers and repugnant to Ieromes: vnles it be for that which Ieroms saith, that you had rather drink of the myrie puddles of the Latine translations, then of the pure fountaine of the Greek coppies.

RHEM.28.] 3. Consequently it is the same which S. Augustine so commendeth and alloweth in an Epistle to S. Hierom. Epist.10. 3. Commended by S. Augustine.

To the third reason.

CARTVV. The antecedent being vntrue, the consequence of Augustines commendation of it, can haue no truth. And if it were the same translation, that Augustine commendeth: yet Augustines praise is such of it, as doth not free it from faults, nor lifteth it vp (as you doe) into the place of Canonicall Scripture. For speaking of his translation of the Gospels onely, hee affirmeth that it was almost faultles. And in another place, speaking of Ieromes translation of the olde Testament: he saith, that if there were any darke places Ierome was like to be deceiued in them, as other before him. Beside that it is known, that Augustine doth not alwayes follow this translation: yea that hauing seene Ieromes, he still preferred the elder translation to Ieromes that was newer: and affirmeth that the same was not his alone, but the Churches iudgement of those tymes wherein Ieromes translation came abroade. Aug. Epi. 10 Aug. Epist. 8. & 10. Aug. lib. 18. cap. 43. de ciuitate dei.

RHEM.29.] 4. It is that which for the most part euer since hath been vsed in the Churches seruice, expounded in Sermons, alledged and interpreted in the Commentaries and writings of the ancient Fathers of the Latin Church. 4. Vsed and expounded by the Fathers.

To the fourth reason.

CARTVV. Although your speach being vsed of the most part, being faint and short to proue that it alone should now be vsed: yet euen this is verie false: first you are constrayned to confesse, that the Greek fathers vsed it not: which argueth plainly that they had it not in that estimation, which you haue it. For then they would haue caused it to be translated, for the vse of their own Churches; if they had esteemed it truer then the Greek copies. Secondly, the most ancient Latin fathers do not follow it, as Tertullian, Cyprian, Hilary, who haue scarce a foottstep of it: albeit it was (likely) in the church in their times, before Ierome corected certain places in it, Ierome often dissenteth from it, often also confuteth it. There remaine Ambrose and Augustine, who although they vse it more then the rest: yet do they often forsake it, and vsed it not (as you doe) seruily. This is yet more euident, in that the ancient fathers, & euen those that vsed them most, send men (when there is controuersie of Latine bookes) to the originals of Hebrew and Greeke. Yea in the very Diocese of Rome, long after the time of these fathers: the Pope himselfe doth witnes, that not onely he, but the Apostolike seat vsed both the new and old translation in Latin. Now if the Apostolicke seate in Gregories time (who made too great acount of this translation) vsed both, and (in the booke of the Psal.) refusing Ierome followed the old translation: there is no liklihood that the authority which this had before his tyme, buried the authority of the other translation. And as the elder expositors haue not vsed nor expounded it without controulment: So the later writers whereof some haue been pillers in your sinagogue, haue been bould manifoldly to crosse this translation of yours. For besides Bede, Burgensis, and Arcaman: of late dayes Lyra, Iansenius and others, haue left the ferular in the olde translators hand. As for the Church seruice, it was so (in the primitiue Church) in the Latin tongue, as the people by reason of the Romain Empire vnderstood it. As touching your Popish seruice, full of Idolatry and superstition, as we care not what translation it followeth; so we iudge most corrupt the most commodious. Hierome. Ambrose. Augustine. Looke the places before noted, Greg. magn. epist. ad Leandrum in exposit. Iobi. cap. 5. Exposit. Iobi. to. c. 24.

RHEM.30.] 5. The holy Councell of Trent, for these and many other important considerations, hath declared and defined this onely of all other Latine translations, to be authenticall, and so onely to be vsed and taken in publique lessons, disputations, preachings and expositions, and that no man presume vpon any pretence to reiect or refuse the same. 5. Only authenticall by the holy councell of Trent, Sess. 4.

To the fifth reason.

CARTVV. It might aswell haue commanded, to eate accornes, after corne was found out. And as for this Trent couuenticle being assembled by the Pope the archenemy vnto our Sauiour Christ, and holden of a sort of blinde Bishops, sworn to speak no truth but that he (the enemy of truth) should allow of: we esteem it no more, then the godly fathers did the council of Ariminū & Ephesinū the second: especially seing that many Councils before it, better, wiser, learneder, and more troubled with hereticks, difficulties of translations, neuer so concluded. Secondly being here ashamed of the Trent conclusion, they mollify it, as though they held it for a good translation: where both the Councill concludeth, and the Iesuites holde it for the authenticall Scripture, which they doe neither of the Greek, nor of the Hebrew. Thirdly, let them tell vs how they will reconcile the Trent conclusion with Pope Leo the 10. his authority. Who approued Erasmus translation, as Damasus had Ieroms. Last of all, admitting it were the best translation: yet that is no cause why the originall should not be rather translated. In Martins preface before his Discouery number 35. Apol. Erasmi aduersus Stunicam. Platina in Damaso.

RHEM.31.] 6. It is the graueſt, sincereſt, of greateſt Maieſtie, leaſt partiality, as being without all respect of controuersies and contentions, specially these of our time, as appeareth by those places which Erasmus and others at this day translate; much more to the aduantage of the Catholique cause. 6. Most graue least partiall.

To the sixt reason.

CARTVV. Further then it hath been corrupt by popish Monkes, which were (for some yeares) the ordinary Iaylers to keep it within the prison of their Cloisters: we accuse it not of partiality to popery, whereunto it could hardly be partial, when popery was not, But sure we are, that the Greek is lesse partial. Secondly they might translate with purpose not to hurt the truth, and yet faile of the purpose: as appeareth manifestly in the example of promeriting of God, not only barbarously, but falsly translated. As touching the sincerities, grauitie, and maiestie of it, compared with other translations of later yeares: the matter is before the Iudge, where our no, is as good as your yea: but if it were, as you say: yet your translating it, in passing by the originall of the Greek, can by no meanes be excused: but onely by this, that not able to clime vp into the Scriptures in the Greek and Hebrew tongues; you were compelled to seaze vppon the Latine, which is the honestest excuse that you can make,

RHEM.32.] 7. It is so exact and precise according to the Greek, both the phrase and the word 7. Precise in following the Greeke.

Preciſe in following the Greek.

that delicate Heretickes therefore reprehend it of rudeneſſe, and that it followeth the Greeke farre more exactly then the Proteſtant Tranſlations: beſides infinite other places wee appeale to theſe, Tit. 3. 14: Curent bonis operibus præeſſe προϊστασθαι Eng. bib. 1577. to maintaine good workes, & Heb. 10. 20. Viam nobis initianit, προσφατον Engliſh Bib. hee prepared: So in theſe words, Iuſtificationes, Traditiones, Idola, &c. in all which they come not neere the Greek, but auoid it of purpoſe.

To the ſeuenth reaſon.

CARTVV. Preciſenes in tranſlation is worthy to be commended, but ſuperſtition is worthy no praiſe. And if the Latine phraſe ſerue the Greek, and anſwer vnto it better ſometime then the Engliſh doth: that argueth no more the goodnes of the tranſlation, then it proueth the Engliſh to be better then the Latine Tranſlation, becauſe the Engliſh phraſe frameth often better with the Greeke, then doth the Latine. Of this preciſenes they bring two examples, wherein commending the old tranſlation they condemne ours. The firſt is, for that we tranſlate Tit. 3. 14. to maintain good workes. Your Greek ſtomakes be very queaſie, that cannot brook this tranſlation. Tell vs (I pray you) how will you tranſlate that in Demoſthenes, προισασθαι τον υμετερον δικαιον, but to maintaine your right. Howſoeuer you tranſlate it we care not, ſeeing Budeus, a man of ſingular skill in that tongue, doth ſo tranſlate it, as we haue done. In the other places, Heb 10. 20. we are charged for turning he prepared. Wherein, whether the old tranſlator haue ſwarued further from the Greek, it will not be ſo eaſie to diſcerne. For the Greek word doth properly ſignifie to make new: which the Latine word that the old tranſlator vſeth, doth not expreſſe. For initio doth not ſignifie to make new (for that doth innouo but to enter into. And this defect of the old tranſlator in this word, the Ieſuites themſelues do bewray, which forſaking a proper Engliſh word, more expreſſing the old tranſlators initiabit, haue followed M. Bezas tranſlation, who tranſlateth dedicabit, which they turn dedicated, without acknowledgement of him by whom they haue (in that place) bettered their tranſlator. The other cauil of Traditions, Iuſtifications and Idoll, is plentifully anſwered, and further ſhall be, as they fall out in the diſcourſe of this booke. But from this preciſe and exact following of the Greeke, how farre the old tranſlator is, by differing from it, by being contrary to it, by putting to that which is not in the Greek, & taking away that which is in it: ſhal ſoone after appeare. Although if it were ſo preciſe, yet that is nothing to yours; which goeth ſo farre from it, both in words and ſence.

8 Preferred by Beza himſelfe.

RHEM. 33.] 8. The aduerſaries themſelues, namely Beza, preferre it before all the reſt, In præfat. no. Teſt. an. 1556. And againe hee ſaith, that the old Interpreter tranſlated very religiouſly. Annot. in Luk. 1. ver. 1.

To the eighth Reaſon.

CARTVV. If M. Beza commend it, who knew ſo many faults by it: he hath thereby teſtified the ſoftneſſe and mildneſſe of his ſpirit, and his loving and charitable affection, couering (ſo farre as the edifying of the Church might beare) the old tranſlators wants and defects: and thereby layeth naked the proud, diſdainfull and quarrelling ſpirit of the trifling and cauelling Ieſuites, child ſhly ſnatching & carping where there is no cauſe, and diſcouering their owne ſhame, in ſtead of diſgracing others. Howbeit it is vntrue, which they here alledge out of Maſter Beza. For hee doth not prefer the old tranſlator vnto Erasmus, bnt defendeth him in certain places, where Erasmus (without cauſe) doth challenge him. And in the other place vpon S. Luke, his praiſe of him, is not ſo full as they pretend. For he ſaith, that although he may ſeeme very religiouſly to haue turned theſe holy bookes: yet it appeareth, that hee knew not the ſignification of theſe words, much leſſe the force and power of them. But if M. Bezas iudgement be one of the pillers that muſt vphold this old tranſlator, this it is in plain words. It goeth often from the Greek, oft it is abſurd, oft it doth add, the learned it neuer ſatisfied, the ignorant it brought into many errors. Which notwithſtanding he ſpeaketh not altogether in reſpect of the old tranſlator as in regard of either the negligence, raſhneſſe, or malice of thoſe whoſe hands it hath paſſed through. But if it were the beſt tranſlation, by M. Bezas iudgement: yet it followeth not thereof, that it hath no fault, or ought to be tranſlated before the Greek. It would vndoubtedly be more credit for your cauſe, to giue better weight of reaſon, although the number were leſſe.

RHEM. 34.] 9. In the reſt there is ſuch diuerſity and diſſention, and no end of repehending one another, and tranſlating euery man according to his phantaſie, that * Luther ſaid, if the world ſhould ſtand any long time wee muſt receiue againe (which hee thought abſurd) the Decrees of Councels. for preſeruing the vnitie of faith becauſe of ſo diuers interpretations of the Scripture. And Beza (in the place aboue mentioned) noteth the itching ambition of his fellow-tranſlators, that had much rather diſagree and diſſent from the beſt, then ſeeme themſelues to haue ſaid or written nothing. And Bezaes tranſlation it ſelfe, being ſo eſteemed in our Country, that the Geneua * Engliſh Teſtaments bee tranſlated according to the ſame, yet ſometimes goeth ſo wide from the Greeke, and from the meaning of the holy Ghoſt, that themſelues which proteſt to tranſlate it, dare not follow it. For example, Luk. 3. 36. They haue put theſe words, The ſonne of Cainan, which hee wittingly and willingly left out: and Actes 1. 14. they ſay, With the women, agreeable to the vulgar Latine, where hee ſaith, Cum vxoribus, with their wiues.

To the ninth Reaſon.

CARTVV. It were to be labored for, that there were in euery ſeueral country, for the vſe of the Church in it, one Bible tranſlated into the language therof, and one Latin Bible generally for all the Churches, in whoſe Schooles the Latine tongue is the common interpreter: which (for their euidence and manifeſt preheminence aboue all other tranſlations) might haue at the leaſt the moſt voyces of them which are skilfull in that matter, to recommend them to the publick vſe of euery country, ſeuerally in their proper language, or ioyntly of all the Schooles in the Latine tongue, as is before mentioned. But that any ſuch tranſlation ſhould be ſeated with the originall of the Greek or Hebrew, (whereby they ſhould not haue the principall or royall Chariot, whereinto the tranſlations (how honorable ſoeuer) ſhould as ſubiects not once dare to clime:) is in no ſort to be ſuffered. And although theſe tranſlations were (for the publicke vſe) to be onely holden, and without waightie cauſe and great conſent not to be changed, or without great modeſtie not to be checked: yet other inferiour tranſlations might (for conference ſake) haue in priuate houſes and ſtudies, their fruit not to be repented of. Which if it cannot bee yet obtained, men are therefore (for the meaſure of grace they haue receiued) no more to bee diſcouraged from their worthy labours of daily cleanſing the corruption of tranſlations: then Luke was beaten backe from writing the moſt holy Story, wherein he was preuented of many, which vndertooke that which hee onely atchieued. Neither is there any more danger of diſſentions, and endleſſe reprehending by the diuerſitie of tranſlations now, then was in the primitiue Church, Wherein Auguſtine affirmeth, that the number of Latine interpreters could not bee numbred: yet was he ſo farre from deeming that they bred diuerſitie of doctrine, that he deemed them profitable, eſpecially for thoſe which wanted the originall tongues: foraſmuch as that which was obſcure in one, might be manifeſt in another. Whereunto may bee added that diuerſitie of tranſlations was alſo profitable for the learned, whoſe diligence of ſeeking for the Greek copies was thus whetted on. It were a pittifull thing if the vnitie of Chriſtians (which the Lord hath bound with ſo many bands) ſhould be broken by diuerſitie of tranſlations. And if there may be a diuerſitie of expoſitions vpon one place of Scripture, without vnlooſing the knot of vnitie of faith and doctrine: it is not to be feared, that the diuerſitie of tranſlations ſhall be able to cut in ſunder the ſtrings wherewith Chriſtian vnitie and concord are tied. And if any will abuſe this diuerſitie of tranſlation to contention: yet are the tranſlations no more in fault therefore, then many other good things, which being ordained for the nurcerie of vnitie, are (through corruption of men) abuſed to the contrary of that which they were ordained for. As for Cochleus words of Luther, whoſe enemie he was: they will not be taken of any indifferent men. We gladly receiue this teſtimony of our enemies the Ieſuites, that we are ſworne to no mans iudgement, how learned and loued ſoeuer hee be vnto vs. Howbeit we make it no rule, either to condemne M. Beza, where we depart from him, or to iuſtifie the old tranſlator, where we cleaue to him: but ſhew our iudgement onely, which we held at that time; which vpon more light of knowledge in the originall, wee are ready to reforme. For with Auguſtine wee profeſſe our ſelues of that number which write in profiting, and profit in writing. For the particular acculation of Cainan, Luk. 3. 36. look for anſwer in the proper place. As for that of Acts 1.14. who be furtheſt from the ſence of the holy Ghoſt, may be conſidered of the reaſons alledged there. But that neither wee tranſlating with the old tranſlator, women, nor M. Beza tranſlating wiues, are farre from the Grecke: it would eaſily haue beene vnderſtood of all thoſe which being not Greeke borne, had gotten any manner of denization in Greece. For it is well known, that the Greek word which the Euangeliſt vſeth, ſignifieth both a woman and a wife. And if they had not learned the vſe of this word, to bee indifferent to both in the Greeke writers: yet they might haue learned it in Ierom, a Latine Authour, who telleth them expreſſely, that the Greeke word ſignifieth both women and wiues. Therefore whetherſoeuer of theſe theſe two tranſlations departeth from the ſences; yet it is euident, that neither departeth from the Greeke.

RHEM. 36. The proofe heereof is euident, becauſe moſt of the ancient Heretickes were Grecians, and therefore the Scriptures in Greek were more corrupted by them, as the ancient Fathers often complaine. Tertullian noteth the Greek text which is at this day (1. Co. 15. 47.) to bee an old corruption of Marcion the hereticke; and the truth to be as in our vulgar Latine: Secundus homo de cælo cæleſtis, The ſecond man from heauen heauenly: So reade other * ancient Fathers, and Eraſmus thinketh it muſt needs bee ſo, and Caluin himſelfe followeth it, Inſtitut. lib. 2. cap. 13. Parag. 2. Againe, S. Hierom noteth that the Greek text (1. Cor. 7. 33.) which is at this day, is not the Apoſtolicall verity, or the true text of the Apoſtle, but that which is in the vulgar Latine, Qui cum vxore eſt, ſollicitus eſt quæ ſunt mundi quomodo placeat vxori, & diuiſus eſt: Hee that is with a wife is careſull of worldly things, how hee may pleaſe his wife, and is diuided or diſtracted. The Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie called the Tripartite, noteth the Greeke text that now is (1. Ioh. 4. 3. to be an old corruption of the ancient Greeke copies, by the Neſtorian heretickes, and the true reading to be as in our vulgar Latine, Omnis ſpiritus qui ſoluit Ieſum, ex Deo non eſt. Euery ſpirit that diſſolueth Ieſus, is not of God. And Beza confeſſeth that Socrates in his Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtorie readeth ſo in the Greeke. πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ λύει τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐκ θεοῦ, &c.

CARTVV. The originall copies of the new Teſtament, are (by this paradoxe of the Ieſuites) leaſt beholden to Gods watchfull prouidence, of all other writings. For in all other learning the good liquor is beſt preſerued in the firſt tongue, as it were the firſt caske wherein it was put; and the water is alwaies ſweeter and holſommer in the fountaine, then in the ſtreames that ſtreame from it. Whereupon it is holden by all learned conſent, that it is better to reade Plato, Ariſtotle, Xenophon, Euclide, and Galen, in Greek then in any language whereinto they haue bene turned, be the interpretet neuer ſo wiſe & faithfull. And therefore (in their workes) the doubts which riſe of their meaning are voyded by their Greek Copies, as by their higheſt court which taketh knowledg thereof, Onely in the art of of all artes, and learning of all learnings, which concerneth men ſo deeply, as all other knowledge (in compariſon) is ſcarce as one haire to the whole head: the prouidence of God hath ſo ſlept, that therin the originall as the gold is become ſiluer, and the olde tranſlator which would hardly go for good ſiluer, is become the fineſt and pureſt golde, The prophane writers, ſome hundreth yeares before the new Teſtament, haue been maintained in that purenes, that their tranſlations, haue alwaies remained in ſubiection and obedience of their firſt copies from whence they were drawne: onely in the originall of the new Teſtament, the watchman of Iſrael hath ſo not ſlumbered onely, but ſlept alſo: that that which was ſometime the Ladie and Dame of all, is now become tributarie to the olde tranſlator. Theſe are the golden conſequences of the leaden Ieſuites, which how brutiſh they be, let the reader iudge (of that which hath been ſpoken in the entrance to this queſtion. They might (with as much truth) haue led the Lord himſelfe into captiuitie, and thraldome of the olde tranſlator, as to put down his ſcepter which is the new Teſtament in the Greek tongue; by not ſuffering it to bee borne vp, in the preſence of the olde tranſlator. But the olde tranſlator himſelfe, from whence hath hee receiued, the great wealth and riches ſuppoſed to be in his tranſlation? from the orginall: for what can they els anſwer? And haue they of Gods careſull prouidence, beene more vpon the olde tranſlation, then vpon the originall: more vpon a mans word then vpon his own. If therefore the originall, haue been ſithence that time corrupted; how much more the tranſlation, that hath been drawen from it. It would require a booke by it ſelfe; to ſet forth the iudgement of the ancient fathers, directly fighting againſt the horrible blaſphemy of the Ieſuites: which old fathers ſend men for reſolution of all doubts, vnto the originall of the Greek for the new, and the Hebrew for the old Teſtament. Ierom ſpeaking hereof, concludeth, that the water of the fountaine is to be beleeued to flow more pure, then that of the riuer or ſtreame. And againe, as the truth of the bookes of the old Teſtament, are to be examined by the Hebrew: ſo the bookes of the new Teſtament, require the triall of the Greeke which ſentence Gratian citeth as it were out of Auguſtine. Ambroſe ſpeaking in a certaine place of the new Teſtament, affirmeth, that the authority of the Greeke bookes is to be preferred. Auguſtine ſaith, that we ought rather to beleeue that tongue, from which it is by interpreters, deriued into another. And againe, the former tongue expounderh the latter, and it is made certaine and plain in one, that was doubtfull in another. And if it be ſaid, that the originall was then a virgin, which is ſithence defiled and defloured: what reaſons can the Ieſuites alledge why the Hebrew and the Greeke, which kept their integrity 400. yeares together after Chriſt, amidſt as bitter enemies as euer they had, as troubleſome and tempeſtuous times as euer were ſithence: ſhould after in time of leſſe danger, and greater quiet, leeſe not their beautie onely, but their chaſtitie alſo. And wee maruell that the Ieſuites are not afraid to ſuffer this blot to fall vpon their Popiſh gouernment, which braggeth it ſelfe to be the pillar of truth, and yet hath had no better care to preſerue the truth. But the abhominable ſtinch of this blaſphemous opinion, will better appeare by the Ieſuites reaſons: whereby they haue raked and ſtirred vp this dung of theirs.

Aug. de Ciu. dei. 18. 15. c. 13.
Aug. in Pſal. 38.

The firſt reaſon whereby they bring vp an euill report of the vndefiled virginity of the Greeke originall; is, that through multitude of heretickes riſing out of Greece, it hath (as it were) loſt her maidenhead. But they remember not, that as many clouds of hereſie roſe from thence, by occaſion of worldly wiſedom, and humane ſciences, whereinto they (excelling) leaned rather then to the ſimplicity of the word: ſo there roſe from that ſame corner of the world, great lights of Catholike doctrine, whereby thoſe miſty clouds were ſcattered. Neither was the diligence of the heretickes greater to deface them, then was the care of the Catholikes to keepe them vndefaced. And ſeeing they conuinced their hereſies out of the Scriptures, forſomuch as error is not confuted but by truth: it followeth, that if the falſifying of Copies by heretickes were proued; yet the ſame could be but in part, not ſo much as in the narrow compaſſe of Greece, much leſſe in the wide circuit of the world, where the Greek Copies were ſpred, as well as in Greece. And notwithſtanding that there haue been, for many hundred yeares, weightie controuerſies between the Greek Church and the Turke, diuers alſo betweene you and it: yet neither doe wee accuſe them, nor you are able to ſhew one place of the new Teſtament, which they haue attempted to corrupt for their aduange, either in the proceeding of the holy Ghoſt, or in your ſole primate and vniuerſall Biſhop, or otherwiſe.

This ſecurity from incorruption of the Greeke Copies, is greatly ſtrengthened by compariſon of the Lords ſafe conduct, giuen to the originall Hebrew for the ſpace of about a thouſand yeares, before the firſt comming of our Sauiour Chriſt. For howſoeuer that is alſo charged to bee impaired and embaſed either through malice, or negligence of thoſe that were put in truſt with the keeping thereof: yet the contrary thereof is manifeſt. For men muſt conſider who put them in truſt, not man which looketh onely vpon the preſent eſtate and face of men; but God himſelfe, which looketh into the ſecreteſt kidneyes of the heart, to diſcerne, not onely ſuch as they were at the time wherein he committed his oracles vnto them, but alſo what they ſhould be a thouſand yeares after.

Rom. 3.

Whereupon it will be eaſie to vnderſtand, that if the Lord had eſpied any ſuch vnfaithfulneſſe in them of keeping thoſe euidences, whereupon the happy and good eſtate not of them onely, but of the great poſterity of the Church depended, and whereby they ſhould haue both certaine and vndoubted entrance and ſeiſen of their inheritance; and finally, whereby they might conferre the promiſes made vnto the Fathers vnder the Law, with the full and exact accompliſhment of them in the Goſpell, hee would haue made other choice of the VVardens of his bookes, then they were. And ſeeing the Law went of Sion into all the world, it went forth pure and vndefiled, which otherwiſe had not beene the Law of God, but either of man, or man and God together. But what truſt the Iewes diſcharged heerein, may appeare manifeſtly in our Sauiour Chriſts time, of all other the moſt corrupt, yet was there no ſuch corruption of the Text brought in, by either Phariſies, Sadduces, or any other the ſworne enemies of the truth. For ſeeing our Sauiour taking them vp hotely and ſharpely for corrupt interpretations which was petilarſinie in regard of their famous robberies that ſhould change the text of Scripture; it is euident, that if there had beene any ſuch Church-robberie of raiſing the records, hee would haue made a ſcourge of Scorpions to haue laid vpon their skinnes, for ſuch inſufferable treacherie. Yea when of the contrarie part hee exhorteth the people to ſearch the Scriptures, ſuch as they were then: hee alloweth them for the ſame which the Prophets had by diuine inſpiration left vnto the Church, And this latter reaſon Origen vſeth to maintaine the perpetuall virginitie of the Hebrew Text.

Ioh. 5.
Hieron. in cap. 6. Eſay.

As for their trifling reaſons brought here againſt, in their diſcouerie of want & ſurpluſage, they are ſcarce worth the naming; They alledge Pſal. 22. which they ſuppoſe to differ from the Euangeliſts words in Greek; whereas the Maſſorites do witneſſe, that the moſt corrected copies haue, They haue pearſed my hands and feete, word for word with the Greeke. And your own Genebrard will not haue the Iewes charged with any falſification in this place. They further alledge, Pſal. 68. where there is no manner of difference of ſenſe, for the Hebrew hauing, Chriſt receiued gifts for men; doth in thoſe words declare manifeſtly that he gaue them vnto men. For otherwiſe they could not haue been to the vſe of men vnleſſe Chriſt had giuen them. Howbeit in the very next verſe there is added, that God doth load us with gifts: So that the Hebrew doth not onely tell vs, that Chriſt gaue gifts, but that hee gaue them as Mediatour, hauing receiued them. Beſide that it is known that the Apoſtles in alledging teſtimonies, doe not number the wordes but giue the waight of the ſentence, to which numbring of words, when not ſo much as tranſlators are alwaies (as it is ſaid) bound to: much leſſe were the Apoſtles tyed vnto it, which were no tranſlators but expounders of the Scriptures. And all reaſonable men will iudge it good payment if for foure ſingle pence hee receiue a whole groat: or if the opportunity ſo ſerue, eight ſingle halfepence.

In the preface number. 44. Genebrard. in Pſal. 21.

They proceed with the 40 Pſal. where in ſtead of the Hebrew, Thou haſt pearſed my eares the Apoſtle hath hath, Thou haſt prepared mee a body. But they ought to haue vnderſtood, that there is firſt a Trope of the part for the whole, which the Apoſtle doth elegantly expreſſe, when for the eare hee ſetteth down the body. Secondly, they ſhould know that there is a manifeſt Metaphor in the word pearcing vſed of the Prophet, which being drawn from the Law, prouiding that the ſeruant which would willingly giue himſelfe ouer to a perpetuall and whole ſeruice of his maiſter, ſhould ſo bee ſerued: ſignifieth an inabling of the Prophet for a willing obedience to bee giuen vnto the Lord: And therefore this metaphor is elegantly expounded by the Apoſtle, when he ſaith, Thou haſt prepared and fitted mee a body, without the which our Sauiour Chriſt could not haue beene the ſeruant of God to any ſuch purpoſe as he was ordained, So that if as Dauid by Chriſt, ſo Chriſt for Dauid, muſt bring not a legall ſacrifice, but his eares bored through, that is, a body obedient vnto the death: men may eaſily ſee, that the Apoſtle did expound and make plaine that which was ſomewhat obſcure in the Prophet, whoſe ſenſe (and not whoſe words) hee alledged.

Further they alledge, 2. Chron. 28. 19. Achas King of Iſrael, for King of Iuda: As if they ought to bee ignorant that the place where Achas was buried was firſt the place where the Kings of Iſrael, that is of the twelue Tribes, were buried, or euer it was the place of the Kings of Iuda onely. And if they had marked it, they ſhould eaſily haue known both the Prophet Ieremie, and the Apoſtle, to containe Iuda vnder Iſrael, and contrariwiſe Iſrael vnder Iuda. And the vulgar according vnto the Hebrew in the laſt verſe, readeth, in the Sepulchres of the Kings of Iſrael, And as ignorance of the ſtory of the Scripture deceiued you here; ſo in the Text, the ignorance of the tongue abuſeth you. For 1. Chron. 2. 18. that which you turne out of the Hebrew, hee begat Azubah his wife and Ierioth. is falſly and ignorantly tranſlated. For ETH the particle there, is not a note of the accuſatiue caſe, but is a prepoſition, and ſignifieth that he begate of Azubah his wife, &c. as is confirmed by other places where it is ſo taken. As for that out of 2. Reg. 24. 19. of putting brother for vncle, it argueth you are vtterly vnacquainted with the Scriptures in any tongue, ſeeing the word brother is generall for all kinſ-men both in the old and new Teſtament: VVhereupon Abraham is called Lots brother, as your vulgar printed by Plantaine 1576. himſelfe readeth: and ſo our Sauiour Chriſt is ſaid to haue brethren. VVhereupon it is euident how free the Hebrew is from corruption, when the obiections againſt it are ſo friuilous as nothing can bee more. And as this is eaſie to conceiue of all that know the Church (which vnto that time was alwaies ſealed amongſt them) to be the pillar of truth: ſo it ſhall much more bee ſetled firmely in their breaſt, if the Iewes carefull minde and endeuour of keeping the Hebrew Text ſithence the time of their falling away, be conſideſiered: VVhich appeareth not onely in that the greateſt teſtimonies written by the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts (for the proofe of Ieſus to bee the Chriſt) doe remaine as they were alledged: but alſo by the teſtimony of the ancient Fathers 400 yeares after Chriſt, which beare witneſſe to their innocencie heerein. Your own men are now as much aſhamed of you in this charge of the Hebrew Text, as Ierom was of ſome in his time, charging the Hebrew as you do. Look Arias Montanus which defendeth the Iewes innocency in this behalfe. Look Lucas Burgenſis how he defendeth the Hebrew againſt the vulgar Latine where he cannot reconcile them. Read Iohn Iſaac, a Popiſh Iew, againſt Lindan. Now let them anſwer whether the Lords care bee not as great to keep the new Teſtament, as to keepe the old: whether it bee not as great to keepe thoſe words which hee ſpake by his Sonne, as it was to keep thoſe which hee ſpake by his ſeruants. Finally, whether he keepeth not his writings as ſafely by the Church, which is his friend, as hee keepeth it by the Synagogue which is his enemie. Laſt of all, let the good Reader vnderſtand that this Popiſh allegation is a very hereticall practiſe and ſhameleſſe ſhift of the deceiuers of Gods people. For thus Ierome chargeth Heluidius, That hee quarrelled with the truth of the copies, and did moſt fooliſhly perſwade himſelfe that the Greek bookes were falſified. The like practiſe vſed the monſtruous hereſie of the Manichees of whom Auguſtine writeth thus. The Manichees not able to wreſt many places of the holy Scriptures whereby they are moſt euidently conuinced, affirme the ſame to bee falſe: yet ſo, that they attribute the ſame not to the Apoſtles which wrote them, but I know not to what other, which after corrupted them: Which becauſe they cannot proone, neither by the moſt copies, nor by the moſt ancient, nor by the authority of the former tongue (from which the Latine bookes were tranſlated) they are confounded, &c. Wee may bee bold therefore to raunge you vnder the banner of heretickes, which beare their proper marke and recogniſance.

But let vs come to the particular places ſuppoſed to be corrupted: wherein let the Reader obſerue, firſt that to diſcredite numbers of the Greek copies, reading as we do, they bring but the authority of one onely Doctor. For although in the third place they alledge the corruption, from the Treparnite ſtorie and Socrates, yet it being known, that the tripartite ſtory gathereth that which hee writeth out of Socrates: vnder two authors there is but one authority, VVhich may alſo bee ſaid of the ſecond places, where the Authors alledged are not eye-witneſſes, but hang all of the report of the old Tranſlator. And if in Gods Law the witneſſe of one man is not ſufficient to take away a mans life: much leſſe may one mans witneſſe take away the life and authoritie of Gods word, which (without that witneſſe) ſhould vndoubtly be ſo taken. And if we ſhould weigh the old Tranſlator with ſuch weights, wee might with farre more right daſh out a great part of your Tranſlator in the old Teſtament: Euen ſo much as hee differeth and diſſenteth in from the 70 Interpreters: For there is a great conſent of the old fathers, that the interpretation of the 70. Interpreters in Greek was written by the ſame ſpirit wherewith the Prophets wrote in Hebrew. Secondly, it is to be obſerued that in prooning the Greek copies in three places to bee corrupted by the Greeke heretickes: they alledge for two of thoſe places Latine writers and Latine tranſlators, ſuch as were vſed in the Latine Church: ſo that if the teſtimonies proue any thing of the corruption of the originall, it proueth it more againſt the Latine, then againſt the Greek Church. For notwithſtanding that Marcion were a Greek borne, yet was not his hereſie begotten in Greece, but in Rome, after that his father (being a Biſhop) had for his lewd behauiour caſt him out of the Church, in his native Country. And ſeeing Rome taketh vpon her, to bee the Pillar of truth, and the Lords Librarie, whatſoeuer can bee proued of the corruption of the originall, ſhall by their own doctrine returne to the further diſcredite of the Latine then the Greek Church. Now touching the firſt example of Marcions corruption, you do belie Tertullian, and that in two ſorts: For firſt Tertullian ſaith not, that the truth is as it is in the vulgar. For Tertullian himſelfe readeth otherwiſe then the vulgar, after this ſort:

Lam. 2. 2. Rom. 9. 4. 27. & 10. 21. & 11. 7 16. & 2. 9. 10. & 3. 1. & 2. 9.

The

Tertul. de reſurrectione carnis Cyprian de zelo & liuor & aduerſus Iudaos, & alibi.

The firſt man of the earth earthy, that is ſume, which is Adam. The ſecond man is from heauen, that is the word of God which is Chriſt, leauing out heauenly, which the vulgar hath, and you ſtriue for. And ſo his Scholler Cyprian readeth. Secondly you falſifie him, for that he doth not ſay (as you ſuppoſe of him) that the Greeke text which is now, is Marcions corruption. For ſo ſhould he haue accuſed himſelfe as well as Marcion: conſidering that himſelfe alſo departeth from that which is in the vulgar. Indeed Marcion had corrupted the place, by leauing out (man) in the ſecond place; thereby to helpe his hereſie of the vntruth of Chriſts manhood. It may alſo be gathered, that Tertullian liked not the word Lord; but eſteemed it; a corruption of Marcion. This is therfore now the queſtion, whether Lord in that place, be the true or hereticall reading? Firſt therefore let them ſhew vs, how this reading doth maintain (in any ſort) the hereſie of Marcion: conſidering that the Greek hath (with full conſent) the ſecond man, which Marcion left out, whereby the humanitie of Chriſt is plainly eſtabliſhed. And it appeareth that the vulgar tranſlation hath more colour of that hereſie then the Greeke reading. For he might haue eaſier abuſed the vulgar, to proue that Chriſt brought his fleſh from heauen; then he can do the Greeke. And as the Greeke reading is further from the hereſie of Marcion then the vulgar: ſo it is (in diuers reſpects) more proper, both from the generall analogie of the true doctrine of the perſon of Chriſt, and for the circumſtance of that particular place. For firſt, the Greek reading containeth a notable teſtimony of the two natures of our Sauiour Chriſt, in the vnitie of one perſon; which the vulgar doth not ſo manifeſtly expreſſe. Secondly, the oppoſition of Adam from the earth, and of Chriſt the Lord from heauen: is much fuller and liuelier: conſidering that hee might haue been both from heauen and heauenly: and yet haue been but a naked creature, as the Angels. Thirdly, the Greeke copies did not ſhun the word heauenly, which Marcion is ſuppoſed to haue of purpoſe auoyded: conſidering that they call Chriſt heauenly. For in the next two verſes the Greeke copies (with full conſent) apply the word heauenly vnto Chriſt. Therefore the Greek copies ſhunned not this word heauenly in ſpeaking of Chriſt: but reſerued it vnto a fitter place. For hauing in the former verſe called Chriſt the Lord from heauen: in the verſes following he might (without danger) call him heauenly: whereas if he had not ſent that title of The Lord from Heauen before, he might haue been thought to haue been called heauenly, in reſpect of the place he came from, as the firſt man is called earthly in regard of the earth from whence he was taken. Againe, ſeeing that Marcion did corruptly alledge verſe 45. as plainly appeareth by Tertullian, which corruption is not in the Greeke: there is no likelihood that one of the corruptions of Marcion ſhould continue in the Greeke more then the other. Moreouer, the Syrian and Arabian paraphraſis, ancienter then was Marcions reading, as the Greeke copies do: it is euident that either Marcion brought not in this reading (of the Lord) or elſe he brought it in long before he was borne. Laſt of all, ſeeing the Greeke Fathers ſo read, [a] Damaſcene, [b] Chryſoſtom, Theophilact, Oecumenius, all which deteſted the hereſie of Marcion: either this is no corruption, or elſe theſe learned mens noſes were ſtuffed, which could neuer ſmell the ſauour of any Marcioniſme. And although diuers ancient and other writers, accuſtoming themſelues to the reading of the vulgar tranſlation, followed it in this poynt, becauſe there is no manifeſt repugnance in it to any Article of faith: yet that is no let, but that this may be (as indeed it is) the truth which is found in Greeke copies, and not that which is in the old tranſlator.

[b] In hunc locum,

In the ſecond place Ierom alone is brought to diſcredit ſo many Greek Copies. Againſt whom (beſide the great conſent of the Greek Copies) we oppoſe the Syrian and Arabian Paraphraſis, Chryſoſtom, Theophilact, Oecumenius, and Baſil, who thrice in one book doth ſo alledge it, as the Copies ſuppoſed to be falſified. And laſt of all, we oppoſe Hierom himſelfe: who for once alledging it thus for his benefit againſt his aduerſarie in that booke, where the Papiſts themſelues cannot deny, but he abuſed diuers teſtimonies of the Apoſtles ſhamefully, alledgeth it twice as it is in the Greek Copies, which they condemne. Let all men therefore iudge what a worthy proofe this is, brought from Hierom to diſcredit theſe Copies, which is contraried of ſo many, and of himſelfe: who after he was departed from his heate of diſputation, to ſet down what was more agreeable to the truth, then what ſerued beſt againſt his aduerſaries, ſo readeth as we read.

Baſil. lib. περὶ τῆς τοῦ παρθένου ἀληθοῦς ἀφθορίας. Hieron. aduerſus Helvidium, & ad Euſtoch. de ſeruand. virginitate. Beza annot. in hunc locum.

Beſides all this, ſome Greek copies read as the old tranſlator doth. And therefore it is falſe which they ſay, that it is not in the Greeke. The third pretended corruption ſtandeth onely vpon Socrates teſtimony, who affirmeth, that in the Greeke Copies to be an hereticall corruption. How ſo? What one word is there in the Greeke Copies that leaneth to the Neſtorian hereſie? What light footing thereof can you ſhew? If you can ſhew none, there is no likelihood of hereticall corruption: conſidering that Neſtorius voyce, differing farre more from S. Iohns, then Iacobs did from Eſaus, might euen of a blinde man haue been diſcerned. Secondly, the Greeke reading falleth in farre better with the phraſe and circumſtance, then that which Socrates commendeth. For in the verſe before S. Iohn hath thus, Euery ſpirit that confeſſeth Ieſus Chriſt to bee come in the fleſh, is of God. VVhereupon he inferreth the words in queſtion, that euery ſpirit that confeſſeth not Ieſus Chriſt to be come in the fleſh, is not of God. VVhere it is euident, not onely that this doth aptly anſwer in oppoſition vnto the verſe before: but that it keepeth the frame and phraſe of ſpeech, which is to amplifie, and deeplier to imprint one thing in the memorie of the hearer, by deniall of one propoſition directly oppoſite vnto another. As in the 6. verſe of the ſame chapter, He that knoweth God heareth vs, he that is not of God, heareth not vs. Againe in the 7. verſe Whoſoeuer loueth, is of God, and knoweth God, he that loueth not, knoweth not God, Likewiſe 1. Epiſt. chap. 5. verſe 10, and verſe 12. &c. Thirdly, it is plaine that he which ſaith that Chriſt came in the fleſh, condemneth him that diſſolueth Chriſt: ſo that it was to no purpoſe to change it ſo. Laſt of all, if we would examine your alone witneſſe in this caſe; by the ſame law that your companion examineth the double witneſſe of Socrates and Sozomene in the caſe of Paphnutius, commendation of the Miniſters marriage: we might vtterly diſable him, and throw him from the barre: who (to diſcredit the truth of this ſtory) ſaith thus. The thing dependeth of Socrates and Sozemene, whereof the one was a Nouatian, the other greatly extolled Theodorus, whom the 5th Synod condemned. And a little before affirmeth it to haue bin a tale of the Arrians, or of ſome vnchaſte perſons. Now if Socrates were not (as your man ſaith) to beare witneſſe in the matter of Paphnutius: how commeth it that you lift vp his credit ſo high, as not alone to counteruaile, but to preuaile againſt ſo full a conſent of the Greek copies.

RHEM. 37. But the proofe is more pregnant out of the aduerſaries themſelues. They forſake the Greek text as corrupted, and tranſlate according to the vulgar Latine, namely Beza and his ſchollers, the Engliſh tranſlators of the Bible, in theſe places, Heb. cap. 9. verſ. 1. ſaying, The firſt couenant, for that which is in the Greeke, The firſt Tabernacle, where they put couenant, not as of the text, but in another letter, as to be vnderſtood according to the vulgar Latine, which moſt ſincerely leaueth it out altogether, ſaying, Habuit quidem, & prius iuſtificationes, &c. The former alſo indeed had inſtifications, &c. Againe, Rom. 11. v. 21. They tranſlate not according to the Greek text. Tempori ſeruientes, ſeruing the time, which Beza ſaith, muſt needs be a coruption: but according to the vulgar Latine, Domino ſeruientes, ſerning the Lord. Againe, Apoc. 11. verſ. 2. they tranſlate not the Greek text, Atrium quod intra templum eſt. The court which is within the temple, but clean contrary according to the vulgar Latine, which Beza ſaith is the true reading, Atrium quod eſt foris templum, the court which is without the temple. Onely in this laſt place, one Engliſh Bible of the yeare 1562. followeth the errour of the Greeke. Againe, 2. Tim. 2. v. 14. they add, but, more then is in the Greek, to make the ſence more commodious & eaſie, according as it is in the vulgar Latine. Againe, Iam. 5. 12 they leaue the Greek, and follow the vulgar Latin, ſaying, leſt you fall into condemnation. I doubt not (ſaith Beza) but this is the true and ſincere reading, and I ſuſpect the corruption in the Greek came thus, &c. It were infinite to ſet downe all ſuch places, where the aduerſaries (ſpecially Beza) follow the old vulgar Latine, and the Greeke Copy agreeable thercunto, condemning the Greeke text that now is, of corruption.

Engliſh

CARTVV. The Ieſuites in knocking their heads againſt the originall copies, haue loſt euen the common ſenſe and vnderſtanding of a man. For to proue that we (in many places) haue left the Greeke to follow the vulgar tranſlation: they haue not brought ſo much as one place, wherein Maiſter Beza hath not ſhewed that he followed better light, then that which hee had of the old tranſlator, In ſome places many Greek copies, in euery place ſome one or other Greek copie, and that of ſingular note: beſide the Syrian paraphraſt ancienter then the old tranſlator. And if Maiſter Beza being but one man, was able (by the prouiſion he had made of copies) to warrant his interpretation by one Greek booke at the leaſt: it is euident, that if it had been poſſible for him to haue gotten all the Greeke copies in his ſtudie; hee ſhould haue been able to haue performed it more plentifully. Touching the firſt place Heb. 9, 1. It is falſe: that eyther M. Beza, or we haue followed the vulgar, who tranſlateth that place doubtfully. For his word former may aſwell agree with the copies, which reade the firſt Tabernacle, as with the firſt couenant. And Maiſter Beza ſheweth that both Photius the Greek interpreter, and the Syrian Paraphraſt, as alſo the Greek copie of Clermont, reade as the copie which the vulgar followed. And becauſe both the diſcourſe of the former chapter, and the direction of the verſe next going before, argueth that this word former is referred to the couenant. Therefore (for more plainneſſe) wee put couenant in ſmall letters. Which was ſo much more needfull to be done, as certaine reading ioyne this word with Tabernacle. And yet becauſe we are entred into queſtion of this place, we will not feare to ſet down what wee think in this caſe. Which is that (ſauing ryper iudgement) the conſent of the Greeke copies in the word σκηνὴ may well and ought to be retained: not in proper ſignification, but in a Trope of the part for the whole outward and ceremoniall worſhip of God: euen as the writer of the Hebrewes doth afterward vſe it, where he ſaith, that we haue an Altar, whereof they haue no authority to eate, which ſerue the Tabernacle: that is to ſay, which retaine the ceremoniall worſhip. Rom. 12. 11; they ſay, that the Greeke hath ſerning the time, for ſerning the Lord. Wherein they doe nothing but dally with the truth. For manie Greek and ancient copies haue, ſerning the Lord. So hath the Greeke Scholiaſt, Chryſoſtome, Theophilacte, and Baſile. And the cauſe of this diuerſity Maiſter Beza noteth to haue the ſhort writing by χ ω which was taken of ſome for κυρίῳ where they ſhould haue taken it for κυρίων. Apoc 11. 2. they affirm that the Greeke hath, the Court within the Temple the Latine hauing (and truely) the Court without the Temple. Wee anſwer, that that reading is found in Greek both ſcholiaſt and copie. Wherefore herein wee had more certain guides, then is the olde tranſlator.

Heb. 13. 10.

Baſil defi-nit.

2. Timoth. 2. 14. we read (but) as the old interpreter. But the old tranſlator, and we both, read ſo without any word of that ſignification in the Greek: onely to lay open to the reader, that which the ſhort ſpeach of the holy Ghoſt, might haue made harder to be vnderſtood in our language, And therefore this is meere dotage to bring this example, to proue that wee haue forſaken the Greek to follow the olde tranſlator, And as for vs; wee haue put our (but) in a ſmall letter, to note it an addition aboue the words which are in Greek; yet needful to cleare the ſenſe vnto the reader, and to make plaine the Eclipſe that is in the Greek, wheras the vulgar hath not delt ſo ſincerely, who hath put it in the ſame letter with the the text, And beſide that ſome of your copies make no ſupplie of the Eclipſe which is in Greek in thoſe copies of yours, where there is in any ſupply, it is fondly made by niſi; which is not an aduerſatiue anſwering to our but, which you allow of, but a note of exception. And therefore we haue bettered your tranſlator herein.

They ſay that in Iames 5. 12, we haue left the Greek and followed the Latine: which is moſt falſe. For there is ſhewed forth, for warrant of that reading, a moſt excellent Greek copie, beſide the Syrian paraphraſt tranſlating the Greek before the Latine did. Hereby the reader may eaſily vnderſtand, that where our tranſlations agreed with the olde tranſlator: it is not in following him but through warrant of the Greek copies, which are extant at this day. And that the Thraſonicall Ieſuites of the infinite examples, wherein thy would make the world beleue, that we haue forſaken the Greeke to follow the vulgar: are not able to ſhew, ſo much as one poore example.

Superfluities in Greeke which Eraſmus calleth trifling & raſh additions. See no. Teſt. Grec. Rob. Stephani in folio, and Criſpini.

RHEM. 38. Againe, Eraſmus the beſt tranſlator of all the latter, by Bezas iudgement, ſaith, that the Greeke ſometime hath ſuperfluities corruptly added to the Text of holy Scripture, as Mark. 6. to the end of the Pater noſter, theſe words, Becauſe thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory for euer-more. which hee calleth nugas, trifles, raſhly added to our Lords prayer, and reprehendeth Vlla for blaming the old vulgar Latine becauſe it hath it not. Likewiſe, Rom. 11. 6. theſe words in the Greeke, and not in the vulgar Latin: But if of workes, it is not now grace: otherwiſe the worke is no more a worke. and Mark. 10. 29. theſe words, or wife, and ſuch like. Yea the Greeke text in theſe ſuperfluities condemneth it ſelfe, and iuſtifieth the vulgar Latine exceedingly, as being marked throughout in a number of places, that ſuch and ſuch words or ſentences are ſuperfluous, in all which places our vulgar Latine hath no ſuch thing, but is agreeable to the Greek, which remaineth after the ſuperfluities to be taken away. For example, that before mentioned in the end of the Pater noſter, hath a marke of ſuperfluitie in the Greek Text thus ". and Mar. 6.11, theſe words: Amen I ſay to you, it ſhall bee more tolerable for the Land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of iudgement then for that Citie, and Math. 20.22. theſe words, And bee baptiſed with the Baptiſme that I am baptiſed with which is alſo ſuperfluouſly repeated againe, verſe 23. and ſuch like places exceeding many, which being noted ſuperfluous in the Greek, and being not in the vulgar Latine, proue the Latine in thoſe places to bee better, truer, and more ſincere then the Greek.

The Anſwer to the 38. Section.

CARTVV. Leaſt there ſhould want any thing, wherein theſe enemies of God and of his word, ſhould not play their parts againſt the originall Greek; they haue thought good to ſet vpon it with a new accuſation of ſuperfluitie: whereof notwithſtanding they cannot bring a word of reaſon, beſide the bare authoritie of Eraſmus, whoſe naked teſtimonie (without proofe againſt the Greeke they are content to admit: which notwithſtanding they vtterly reiect, when (with good and ſubſtantiall reaſon) it commeth againſt the old tranſlator. But let vs ſee into the authoritie. Firſt it is confeſſed of the Ieſuites, that the Greeke copies read the ſuppoſed ſuperfluities with full conſent. And doe they thinke that ſuch a conſent of Greek copies ſhall not be able to weigh down the authoritie of the vulgar tranſlation, and Eraſmus allowance of it in this place: where neither vntruth of doctrine nor anie vnſutablenes to that which either goeth before or commeth after, is able to be ſhewed? If you your ſelues ſhould lay in ballance together, Eraſmus which here maketh for your vulgar, and Valla, that maketh againſt him: we ſuppoſe that vnleſſe your extreame pouertie in this caſe draw you to doe otherwiſe, you would giue the better weight to that ſkale, wherin you lay Valla: as one that dealt not ſo roughly with Monkery & other your pedlary as did Eraſmus. And as for the preheminence and authoritie, that all the Greek copies haue before the old tranſlator (thoſe Papiſts excepted onely which haue made themſelues driuels & drudges vnto him: we refuſe no mans weight, nor no mans iudgement. Beſide that to diſburden the Greeke of this falſe ſurmiſe of ſuperfluitie: wee haue the Syrian paraphaſt which in this poynt is not ſuperfluous in that being long before the vulgar, he beareth witnes in all theſe pretended ſuperfluities vnto our Greeke copies; as vnto thoſe that are moſt auncient. Now as for the place Math. 6. for thine is the kingdom &c. If Eraſmus had vnderſtood that it is taken out of the booke of Chronicles, written by the pen of the holy Ghoſt: he would (no doubt) haue taken heed how hee had called this concluſion of the Lords prayer, triſles. For it appeareth manifeſtly, that this ſentence was borowed from the Prophet David, with ſome abridgement of the Prophets words: which being then fit to ſet forth the zeale and preſent touch of the loue wherewith he loued the Lord, was not ſo fit (without an abſtract (for that prayer wherein our Sauiour ſought all ſhortneſſe poſſible. Secondlie, that cannot be ſuperfluous without the which we ſhould not haue had a perfect form of Praier. For when praier ſtandeth as well in praiſing of God & thankſgiuing, as in petitions & requeſts to be made vnto him: it is euident that if this concluſion had been wanting, there had wanted a forme of that praier, which ſtandeth in praiſe & thankſgiuing. Laſt of all, if to giue a reaſon of that which goeth before be ſuperfluous, then this concluſion may be ſo. But we ſuppoſe that it will be a ſtrange voice in the eares of all the learned; to affirme that a ſubſtantiall reaſon giuen of any thing, ſhould be iudged reaſonleſſe, and the coupling vp of the cauſe with the effect in their ſurmiſed ſuperfluitie of this place. Rom. 11.6. is charged likewiſe, VVhere it is no maruell although they iudge the later propoſition ſuperfluous: ſeing they are not able to beare the enimity of the former, as that which hangeth their blaſphemous opinion of merit; ſo that it can draw no breath when it appeareth. VVhich becauſe the Apoſt. would be ſure to hang thorowlie, he doubled his coard by a manifeſt oppoſition, frequented oftentimes of the holy ſcriptures. And therefore with the ſame kniſe they cut off this branch, that they may lop as ſuperfluous boughs a number of ſentences in the Scripture, eſpecially in S. Iohn. And theſe men that account Logicall reaſoning ſuperfluous in the Apoſtle: how will they beare the holy ghoſts rethorick, in repeating one thing in one place, by variety of words alone, without any variety of ſentence: which is ſo cuſtome-able a thing in the Proph. as the Rabbins (for auoyding of rediouſnes) note the whole rule thereof in fiue letters. ראאכמט. And if they will not giue the Apoſt. leaue to vſe his Logicke, without reproach of ſuperfluity: they may (with better reaſon) denie the Prophets that figure of Rethorick, which of all other they moſt delighted in. Laſt of all, Eraſmus teſtimonie here (vpon whom they onely leane) is not ſo full. For he doth not condemne the place of ſuperfluity but ſuſpecteth it. There followeth Mar. 10.29. where (with other things) wiues being ſpoken of in one verſe, is not with them repeated in the next. Whereupon is concluded, that in the former verſe it is a ſuperfluitie. And if it were not for reverence of Eraſmus learning, we might well ſay it were a fond concluſion. For why may there not be aſwel a defect in the latter verſe, as a ſuperfluitie in the former: and rather a defect here, then a ſuperfluitie there; conſidering that in Luke, there is a full agreement of all Greek copies, reading as Saint Mark doth in the former verſe. But that this reaſon is neither proofe of ſuperfluitie nor defect: it is manifeſtly ſhewed by a like place. For the Apoſtle hauing nombred and marked out diuerſe gifts & offices in the Church: in the two next verſes making rehearſall of them againe, leaueth out two: of which notwithſtanding he might as trulie affirm that which hee aſcribeth to the other as of any of them whatſoeuer. If therefore in a rehearſall the leauing out of ſome things ſent before, be an argument of ſuperfluitie: let them thruſt out theſe two ordinarie offices out of the Church; and together with the whole honourable traine of the greeke copies, which they will be eaſilie intreated vnto: let them alſo condemne their vulgar tranſlation. Nay, more then that, let them condemne (with the Greek) their own vulgar, in this verie place of Saint Marke: which hauing made mention of fathers in the former verſe, maketh no more mention of them, in the verſe following then of wiues. And where they would proue, that by theſe two pricks " in Robert Stephanus edition of the new Teſtament in Greek, is noted a ſuperfluitie in the Greek: we know not whether wee ſhould aſcribe it vnto their blockiſh ignorance, or to their hatefull mallice againſt the truth. For doe they think that Robert Stevens and Criſpine, men men of great iudgement & learning both so senceles, as to haue put that for the text of the Scripture, which by their note, they would discredit with the reproach of superfluitie: whose purpose was to shew by those notes some diuersity of reading in those places, which they so marked as it is manifest by the exãples here alledged. In all which M. Beza declareth, that there is difference amongst the greeke copies. But yet the differences is not such, but both by the greater number of the greeke copies, & by their antiquitie, manifestly confirmed by the Syrian Paraphrast, & lastly by the good coherence & sute of one sentence with another: it may easilie appeare that there is defect in the vulgar, and no superfluitie in our editions. As in Mar.6.29. how aptlie is that threatning added against the refusers of the Gospell, that it shall be easier &c. So in Matth. 20.22. the similitude of Baptisme with the death and afflictions of our Sauiour Christ and his Apostles, is not onely elegant to declare how they should bee ouerwhelmed with them, as the body is plunged in the waters: but also comfortable exceedinglie, to shew that the person baptised, lifteth vp his head. after that he hath bin sowced in the waters: so both hee and his Apostles should haue a certaine and most assured good issue, out of all their troubles, and death it selfe. Of which comfort liuelie set forth in this similitude, which was not in the similitude of drinking the cup: the Church had been depriued of, if there had not been either wiser heades or diligenter hands then your vulgar had. Which being repeated in the 23. verse should not haue been iudged a superfluitie, seing beside the use of repetition, to imprint it deeplier in memory, there is a noble increase whereby it is declared, that they shall assuredlie suffer with him: that so calling them home from their ambitious preasing after superioritie ouer their fellowes, they might think to prepare themselues to troubles.

RHEM. 39. Whereupon wee conclude of these premises, that it is no derogation to the vulgar Latine text which we translate, not to disagree from the Greek Text, whereas it may notwithstanding be not onely as good, but also better, and this the aduersarie himselfe, their greatest and latest translatour of the Greeke, doth auouch against Erasmus in behalfe of the old vulgar Latine translation, in these notorious words: How vnworthily and without cause (saith hee) doth Erasmus blame the old Interpreter as dissenting from the Greek? hee dissented, I grant, from those Greek copies which hee had gotten: but wee haue found not in one place, that the same interpretation which hee blameth is grounded vpon the authority of other Greek copies, and those most ancient: Yea in some number of places wee haue obserued, that the reading of the Latine Text of the old Interpreter, though it agree not sometime with our Greek copies, yet it is much more conuenient, for that it seemeth hee followed some better and truer copie: Thus farre Beza; In which words hee vnwittingly, but most truely, iustifieth and defendeth the old vulgar translation against himselfe and all other cauillers that accuse the same, because it is not alwaies agreeable to the Greek Text: Whereas it was translated out of other Greek copies (partly extant, partly not extant at this day) either as good and as ancient, or better and more ancient, such as S. Augustine speaketh of, calling them doctiores & diligentiores, the more learned and diligent Greek copies, whereunto the Latine translations that faile in any place must need yeeld. Lib. 2. de doct. Christ c.15. And if it were not too long to exemplifie and proue this, which would require a treatise by it selfe, wee could shew by many and most cleere examples throughout the new Testament, these sundry meanes of iustifying the old translation.

Beza præfat. no. Te. 1556 See him also, Anno in 13. Act. v. 20.

When the fathers when say, that the Latin Text must yeeld to the Greek, & bee corrected by it, they meane the true and vncorrupted Greek Text.

The answer to 39. section.

CARTVV. The Iesuites taking pleasure to proue the Lord an euill husband in suffering thornes and thistles to ouergrow his most sacred and holy field, of the originall in the new Testament: alledge Master Beza, which preferreth the reading of the translator in some places vnto the Greeke copies which he had. Wherein first mark, that one sentence of Master Beza is snatched at contrarie to his continuall practise, through euerie page in a manner, where he conuinceth the old translator, of slippes and falles in translating, Secondly, obserue how fondlie they would conclude that Master Beza iustifieth the vulgar translation, because he saith: that in some places his reading is sounder then the reading which he found in his Greeke copies. Thirdly, it ought not to be passed by how sottishly, they would conclude: that therefore the old translator is in some places purer then the Greeke copies, for that he is in some places purer then those copies which Master Beza had. For they might well haue known, that as Master Beza had Greeke copias which Erasmus had not, whereby he was able to relieue the old interpreter against Erasmus, that charged him to haue forsaken the Greek: so diuers others may haue other copies, which neither Master Beza nor Erasmus haue come vnto. And therefore if the old translator should haue any thing better then the Greek copies, which Master Beza had: yet thereof should it not follow, that it should be purer then all the Greeke copies, But this is the prophane minde of the Iesuites, which would rather put fault in the Greeke copies, then either in the negligence, or inabilitie of translators, to get such a number of copies, as might be able to furnish that worke of translation throughly. Now of all the examples in the new Testament that they could chuse to iustifie the olde translator against the Greeke: it seemeth good vnto them to send vs to Act.13.20. where wee nothing doubt but the old translator vsed the same Greeke copie that we haue in full consent. But because there are not 450. yeares vnder the gouernment of the Iudges: he changed the place of the preposition μετα and set it so, as the account of the 450. yeares should be referred vnto the time which was from the birth of Isaac, vnto the time of the Iudges Wherein as we take his iudgment to be good and sound: so his meanes to shew it needed not to haue been so violent, by carrying the Preposition so farre from his home: if (according to the manner of all tongues) he had vnderstood a commodious particle. For (sauing better and riper iudgement) we would think that it may well be thus read. After these things done in 450. yeares, or thereabout, he gaue, &c. The like eclipse of speech we read in another place of the Acts, where it is said, Ioseph sent for his father Iacob, and all his kindred, standing of 75. persons. And again, to you the promise was made. And so the account of the yeares is very certaine. For adding to the 400. yeares expired at their departure from Egypt, 40. yeares, wherein they were vnder Moses in the desart, and 7. yeares, wherein they hauing made a great conquest of the land, receiued their inheritance by Lot: there riseth the number of 447. whereto make a round number, as the Scripture doth in diuers other places: the Apostle added three yeares. For which cause he saith not precisely 450. yeares, but about 450. thereby marking out either the defect of the same number of 50, if (ſeuen onely yeares of Ioſua being taken to his account, the reſt of his yeares be gathered to the reigne and gouernment of the Iudges, or the ſurplus of the ſame number of 50. if the whole gouernment of Ioſua (compaſſed in 17. yeares) be numbred. Such alſo is the forehead of theſe Ieſuits, that they dare cite Auguſtine in this caſe, as if there grew any thing in his garden that can giue the old tranſlator ſuch an incorruptible nature, as they pretend, whoſe iudgement againſt the ſcourgers of the holy Scriptures, hath been before ſhewed. Who affirmeth alſo in the very chapter by them alledged, that all Latine bookes whatſoeuer ought to be reformed by the Greeke copies, if therefore the old tranſlation was ſo highly commended of him, as they ſay; yet it is euident, that hee would not haue him priuiledged againſt the Greek in ſuch ſort as he ſhould not (as a ſubiect) appeare before the Greeke copies, as before his lawfull and competent Iudge.

Auguſt. de doctr. chr. lib. 2. c. 15.

RHEM. 40. Firſt, if it agree with the Greek Text (as commonly it doth, and in the greateſt places concerning the controuerſies of our time, it doth moſt certainely) ſo far the aduerſaries haue not to complaine, vnleſſe they will complaine of the Greek alſo, as they do, Ia. 4. ver. 2. and 1. Pet. 3. ver. 21. where the vulgar Latine followeth exactly the Greek Text, ſaying Occiditis, and Quod vos ſimilis forma, &c. But Beza in both places correcteth the Greek text alſo as falſe.

The vulgar Latine tranſlation is many waies iuſtified by moſt ancient Greek copies.

RHEM. 41.] 2. If it diſagree heere and there from the Greek text, it agreeth with another Greek copy ſet in the margent; whereof ſee examples in the aforeſaid Greek Teſtament of Robert Stevens and Criſpin throughout, namely, 2. Pet. 1. 12. Satagite vt per bona opera certam veſtram vocationem faciatis διὰ τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔργων and Mar. 8. v. 7. Et ipſos benedixit, ἐυλογήσας αὐτά.

RHEM. 42.] 3. If theſe marginall Greek copies bee thought leſſe authenticall then the Greek Text, the Aduerſaries themſelues tell vs the contrary, who in their tranſlations often follow the marginall copies, and forſake the Greek text; as in examples aboue mentioned, Rom. 11. Apoc. 11. 2. Tim. 2. Iam. 5. &c. it is euident.

RHEM. 43.] If all Eraſmus Greek copies haue not that which is in the vulgar Latine, Beza had copies which haue it: and theſe moſt ancient (as hee ſaith) and better: And if all Bezaes copies faile in this point, and will not helpe vs, Gagneie the French Kings Preacher, and hee that might command in all the Kings Libraries hee found Greek copies that haue iuſt according to the vulgar Latine, and that in ſuch place as would ſeeme otherwiſe leſſe probable, as Iac. 3. v. 5. Ecce quantus ignis quam magnam ſilnam incendit! Behold how much fire what a great wood it kindleth! A man would thinke it muſt bee rather as in the Greek text, A little fire what a great wood it kindleth! But an approued anicient Greek copie alleaged by Gagneie, hath as it is in the vulgar Latine: And if Gagneies copies alſo faile ſometime, there Beza and Criſpin ſupply Greek copies fully agreeable to the vulgar Latine, as Epi. Iuda. verſ. 5. Scientes ſemel omnia, quoniam IESVS, &c. And verſ. 19. Segregant ſemetipſos. Likewiſe 2. Epheſ. 2. Quod elegent vos primitias ἀπαρχὰς in ſome Greek copies, Gagn. & 2. Cor. 9. Veſtra æmulatio, ὁ ὑμῶν ζῆλος ſo hath one Greek copy, Beza.

CARTVV. In all theſe ſections the Ieſuites poynts of their ſwords are ſet againſt themſelues. For if to iuſtifie the vulgar tranſlation they iudge it expedient to ſhew the agreemenr of it, with ſome Greek readings either copies or Fathers that followed their copies: then followeth it that the Greek is of more authoritie then the Latine, as that whoſe credite dependeth of the good report, which the Greek will giue of it. Whereof alſo it is brought to paſſe, that in tranſlating the vulgar rather then the Greek; you are like to thoſe ſilly poore men, that hauing not wherewith to buy new out of the Marchants ſhop, goe to the huck-ſtars that haue things at the ſecond hand. Maiſter Bezaes reuerence of the Greek copies, which you haue vtterly caſt from you doth heerein appeare, that euen where his iudgement leadeth him otherwiſe, he notwithſtanding leaueth the Greek reading, according to the vniforme conſent of the Greek copies: As Iam. 4. 2. where alſo we miſlike not the vulgar for his tranſlation, conſidering that the Apoſtle (to make the enuious emulation which followeth more deteſtable) doth as our Sauiour Chriſt did, in the caſe of cruel and vnaduiſed wrath, call it murder: wherein alſo the Apoſtle doth very excellently expound the commandement of murdering. But in the other place of 1. Pet. 3. 21. you falſely report Maiſter Beza, who correcteth the old Interpreter by a Greek copie of great authority, And therefore correcteth not the Greek. How ridiculous they make themſelues, and their Gagneie in iuſtifying the old Interpreter, which maketh it a wonder, that a great deale of fire ſhould conſume a great deale of wood: all men (that haue but their common ſenſe) may eaſily vnderſtand. Howbeit what good choiſe your vulgar hath made of Greek copies, where it hath any that are now extant, it already appeareth manifeſtly by your deepe ſilence, againſt their reaſons which haue conuinced the frailty of his iudgement that waies: and more ſhall in the cenſure of your tranſlation which pretendeth to follow him.

RHEM. 44.] 5. If all their copies bee not ſufficient, the ancient Greek Fathers had copies and expounded them, agreeable to our vulgar Latine, as 1. Tim. 6. 20. Prophanas vocum nouitates: So readeth S. Chryſoſtome and expoundeth it againſt Hereticall and erronious nouelties. Yet now wee know no Greek copie that readeth ſo. Likewiſe Io. 10. 20. Pater meus quod mihi dedit maius omnibus eſt: ſo readeth S. Cyril and expoundeth it, lib. 7. in Io. c. 10. Likewiſe 1. Io. 4. 3. Omnis ſpiritus qui ſoluit IESVM, ex Deo non eſt, ſo readeth S. Irenæus lib. 3. cap. 18. S. Auguſtine tract. 6. in Ioh. S. Leo Epiſt. 10. c. 5. beſide Socrates in his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, lib. 7. cap. 22. and the Tripartite lib. 12. cap. 4. who ſay plainely, that this was the old and the true reading of this place in the Greeke. And in what Greeke copie extant at this day is there this text. Io. 5. 2. Eſt autem Hieroſolymis probatica piſcina? and yet S. Chryſoſtom, S. Cyril, and Theophilact read ſo in Greeke, and Beza ſaith it is the better reading, and ſo is the Latine text of the Romane Maſſe-booke iuſtified, and eight other Latine copies, that read ſo. For our vulgar Latine here is according to the Greek text, Super probatica, & Rom. 5. v. 17. Donationis & iuſtitiæ, ſo readeth Theodoret in Greek, and Luke 2. v. 14. Origen and S. Chryſoſtom read, Hominibus bonæ voluntatis, and Beza liketh it better then the Greek text that now is.

And who would not thinke that the Euangeliſt ſhould ſay, The Phariſes waſh often, becauſe otherwiſe they eate not, rather then thus, Vnleſſe they waſh vp to the elbow, they eate not.

CARTVV. Look for the anſwer in the thirtie nine ſection. Beſide that they deale vnfaithfully here with Maiſter Beza: For although he affirme that the old Interpreter might (in ſome places) haue a better copie then himſelfe could come vnto, yet heere hee preferreth the conſent of the Greeke readings. And indeed it is moſt fit for the circumſtance of the place: For telling afterward, how often they waſh, namely as often as they had come from any place of common and ciuill meetings; It agreeth both with the ſhortneſſe of ſpeech which Mark (aboue all other) followeth, and with the doting ſuperſtition of the Phariſes: to expound this by a diligent and exact waſhing, thereby declaring that they did not onely waſh often, but waſhed with great endeuour of rubbing one hand againſt another: leaſt (happily) any vncleanneſſe ſhould ſtick vnto them: which ſenſe alſo is confirmed of the Syriack Paraphraſt.

RHEM. 46.] 7. If all ſuch coniectures, and all the Greeke Fathers helpe vs not, yet the Latine Fathers with great conſent will eaſily iuſtifie the old vulgar tranſlation, which for the moſt part they follow and expound, as Ioh. 7. 39 Nondum erat ſpiritus datus, ſo readeth S. Auguſtine, lib. 4. de Trinit. c. 20. and *li. 83. Quæſt. q. 62. & tract. 52. in Ioan. CARTVV. If your Latine Interpreter be ſo neere driuen, as to borrow his Iuſtification of the Latine Fathers, which ſeek themſelues throughout to be iuſtified by the Greek Copies: it is euident that the accuſations againſt him, muſt needs cleaue ſtill vnto him; vntill ſuch time as his proctors can get ſome Greek copies to cleare him by.

RHEM. 47.] 8. And laſtly, if ſome other Latine Fathers of ancient time read otherwiſe either here, or in other places, not all agreeing with the text of our vulgar Latine, the cauſe is, the great diuerſitie & multitude that was then of Latine Copies, (whereof S. Ierom complaineth) till this one vulgar Latine grew onely into vſe. Neither doth their diuers reading make more for the Greeke then for the vulgar Latine, differing oftentimes from both, as when S. Ierom in this laſt place readeth, Si ſic eum volo manere, li. 1. adu. Iou. it is according to no Greeke Copie now extant. And if yet there be ſome doubt, that the reading of ſome Greeke or Latine Fathers, differing from the vulgar Latine, be a check or condemnation of the ſame: let Beza, that is, let the Aduerſary himſelfe tell vs his opinion in this caſe alſo. Whoſoeuer (ſaith he) ſhall take vpon him to correct theſe things (ſpeaking of the vulgar Latine Tranſlation) out of the ancient Fathers writings, either Greek or Latine, vnleſſe hee do it very circumſpectly, and aduiſedly, hee ſhall ſurely corrupt all, rather then amend it, becauſe it is not to bee thought, that as often as they cited any place they did alwaies looke into the book, or number euery word: As if hee ſhould, Wee may not by and by thinke that the vulgar Latine is faulty and to bee corrected, when wee reade otherwiſe in the Fathers, either Greek or Latine becauſe they did not alwaies exactly cite the words, but followed ſome commodious and godly ſenſe thereof.

CARTVV. And if the multitude of Latine copies hurt the authoritie of your vulgar amongſt the Latine Fathers, becauſe (after it was ſet forth) there were many other tranſlations abroad in their hands. Why did they hurt it, vnleſſe it were becauſe the Fathers eſteemed other tranſlations (in diuers points) better then it? for they were neither ſo proud, nor ſo negligent, as to haue left the old Interpreter in thoſe places wherein they eſteemed him to haue approched neerer vnto the truth: eſpecially ſeeing your vulgar is ſaid to haue had Damaſus the Popes commendation, to whoſe voyce you would beare the world in hand that the Fathers gaue no leſſe reuerence, then to an Oracle from heauen. If therefore the Latine Fathers forſooke the old Interpreter, when he was freſh and new, and therefore furtheſt from corruption. How much more would they, if they were now aliue, in many places let him goe peaking alone after he hath been ſo corrupted as hath been before declared, and is further euident by the multitude of Latine Copies differing one from another, by farre greater diuerſities, then the Greeke Copies doe: ſo that if it were an impoſſible thing to make choyce of the truth of Greeke Copies, becauſe of their diuerſitie: it is much more impoſſible to pick out the truth of the old tranſlation, encumbred with ſo many and great varieties.

Looke the King of Spaines great Bible.

RHEM. 48. Thus then wee ſee that by all meanes the old vulgar Latine tranſlation is approued good, and better then the Greek Text it ſelfe, and that there is no cauſe why it ſhould giue place to any other Text, copies, or readings. Mary if there bee any faults euidently crept in by thoſe that heeretofore wrote or copied out the Scriptures (as there hee ſome) then wee grant no leſſe, then wee would grant faults now adaies committed by the Printer, and they are exactly noted of Catholicke writers, namely in all Plantines Bibles ſet forth by the Diuines of Louain. And the holy Councell of Trent willeth that the vulgar Latine text bee in ſuch points throughly mended, and ſo to bee moſt authenticall: Such faults are theſe, In fide, for in fine: præſcientiam, for, præſentiam: Suſcipiens, for Suſpiciens: and ſuch like very rare, which are euident corruptions made by the copieſts, or grown by ſimilitude of words. Theſe being taken away, which are no part of thoſe corruptions and differences before talked of, we tranſlate that Text which is moſt ſincere, and in our opinion, and as wee haue proued incorrupt. contrary, translate that text, which themselues confesse both by their writings and doings, to be corrupt in a number of places, and more corrupt then our vulgar Latine, as is before declared.

The Answer to the 48 Section.

CARTVV. Thus then we may see, that all the sope, niter and scouridge, that the Iesuites are able eyther to beg, to borrow, to steale, or otherwise to come by: are not able to cleanse the vulgar translation, from the filth of blood, eyther wherein it was first conceiued, or which it hath gathered, from some hundred yeares by passing through so manie filthie hands of vnlearned Monkes; from the which the Greek copies, haue had great freedome and rest: because vntill a few yeares ago, wherin the Popish shauelings haue been somewhat wakened, by the professors of the Gospell: their vnskilfulnesse in the Greek tongue, was so notorious, that they caused it to come into prouerb: It is Greek cannot be red. yea wee doubt not, but apparant vnto all indifferency: that it is not onely cleansed from the filth thereof but that the more they haue laboured to rub and skoure it, the fouler it appeareth, to all that haue not willingly closed their eyes against the trueth, which, that it may more euidentlie and without contradiction be vnderstood; go to, you Iesuites, and after a vomit of your dogged stomack discharged against the Greek copies, almost in a continuall vntruth. Heare the most trew and modest charge, that shall be obiected against the insufficiences of your vulgar translation, in one kinde alone, Where, far be it from vs that we should take advantage of that which may probably bee deemed, to haue crept in, by the slip either of pen or print. For it were not onely a poynt of vnfaithfulnes, but of mere folly, in such an infinit number of foule corruptions, whereof the mower may (in a manner) fill his arme, labouring in this feild: once so much as to stoupe after these slippes, before the other were cut down. Although (euen in them also) the loue that popery is in with error, may euidently appeare: which counting them slippes of pen, haue not yet in so many yeares, & after so many impressions, caused them to be amended: VVhereby they bewray how they dote after lies, which will not farme out that which (in their vulgar rranslation) they are constrained to confesse, to be sowtage or kitchin stuff: so much more intollerable, as some of these corruptions are blasphemous: as in stead that the greek hath, that Christ committed himselfe vnto him (meaning God) that iudgeth iustly: it hath, that he committed himselfe to him, that iudgeth vniustly. For we had rather lay this fault being so grosse, vpon the writer then vpon the translator. And albeit the Iesuites retaine it dreaming of a sense to make this interpretation stand: yet it is manifoldlie confuted and cannot be admitted without foule and grosse error. Yet Rom.12. they haue left the old translator which saith not defending your selues, and followed the Greek with vs, which is not reuenging your selues. In the corruptions of the vulgar, which shall be layd forth: let the reader vnderstand that they are all conuinced by the generall consent of all the Greeke copies which are known at this day, by the Syrian Paraphrast, by their own interlineal, & by circumstance of the place, in diuers places most euident, in other some pregnant & apparant enough, to such as haue any singlenesse of eie to look vpon them. Amongst the corruptions that stand in addition, let that be for example, which is Luk.2.18. And concerning those things spoken by the shepheards. VVhere beside the superfluitie, there is no good sense, Secondly, Iohn 2.15. he made as it were a whipp: where is added as it were: which beside the falsifying the storie, can hardly haue any tollerable vnderstanding. Againe Iohn. 8.19. if you know me perhaps you might know my father. VVhere perhaps is dangerously added, fauouring the heresy of Arius: considering that our Sauiour Christ otherwhere also doth preciselie affirm, that he that seeth him, seeth the father. Hebrew.3.14. If yee keepe the beginning of his substance firme vnto the end: where he hath added his, not onely to the obscurling of the argument of the Apostle, but to insinuate thereby an aduantage to the Arians, that Christ had a beginning of his substance. And these may suffice for a tast of addition. The detractions follow. Mat. 6. the conclusion of the Lords prayer is wholy left out. Mark 9.38. because he followed not vs, left cleane out. Mark.13.14. where is left out which was spoken by the prophet Daniell. Also in the same chapter, neyther do you meditate left out. 1.Cor.4.4. to my selfe left out. Diuers also of detractions, detract from the truth which is in controuersie, Mat.17. where it is said Elias shall come, there is left out first, for the maintenance of theirs, & the Iewes idle fable of Elias, cõming a few yeares before the worlds end, Rom.11. But if it be of Works now it is not of grace otherwise, &c. Heb.1.3. by himselfe left out: which is verie effectuall to exclude all mans merits with other meanes whatsoeuer in the matter of our saluation, & therfore went to the heart of their sinfull sacrifice: and is prooued that it ought not to be left out, by the other member of the verse. The altrations are infinite almost, and those often of waight. Math.1.23. born in her, for begotten in her. And in the same verse and other-where, in sleepe for in dreame. Mark.3.92. Cyltie of eternall sinne, for eternall iudgement. Math.26.30. when they had said an hymn, for when they had sung an hymn. Ioh.6,45. shall be teach-able of God, for shall bee taught of God. Rom. 1. 13. hatefull vnto God, for haters of God. Rom.14.5. Let him abound in his own sense, for let him bee perswaded fully in his own minde. 1.Cor.15.51. Wee shall all indeed rise againe, but wee shall not all bee changed; for wee shall not all sleepe, but wee shall all be changed. Of which reading of the vulgar Ierome denyeth that there is any warrant in the Greek copies. Gal.3.1. The old hath, that Christ was proscribed, which is a Law word, signifying a man whose substance (for debt or some crime) is set to publicke sale: where the Apostle setteth forth, that Christ was (by Pauls preaching and administring the Sacraments) so pourtraied and painted before their eies, as if hee had beene crucified among them. Heire by God, for heire by Christ: as both the phrase of the Scripture, and the circumstance of the place conuinceth. And often in the aduantage of their Popish doctrine, as Ioh.14. for this the holy Ghost shall bring to your remembrance whatsoeuer I haue said vnto you, to further the Churches vnwritten verities, it hath Hee shall suggest whatsoeuer I shall say vnto you. For the merite of workes, in Ephes.2. in stead of, God hath created vs vnto good workes, it hath in good workes. And Hebr.13. in stead of, with such sacrifices God is delighted, it hath is promerited. Luk.10. for whatsoeuer thou spendest more, it hath, whatsoeuer thou shalt supererogate. Luk.1. for looked on the low estate of his handmaid, it hath the humility of his handmaid: And in the same place, for had freely graced, it hath full of grace. Colloss. 2 23. In superstition for in Wil-worshipp, thereby to make way to the inuentions of their own braine. Ephes.5. (for multiplication of Sacraments) in stead of a great Mysterie, it hath Sacrament. And Luk.22.20.

For this cup is the new Teſtament, it hath, this is the cup: thereby to auoyd the euidence of the figuratiue ſpeech, Heb. 5. 11. which cannot be expounded, for which is hard to be expounded: thereby to defend the Popiſh opinion of the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt. Heb. 7. 25. To ſaue for euer, for to ſaue wholly, or throughout. Heb. 9. 14. By the holy ſpirit, for, by the eternall, in fauour of their wicked opinion that our Sauiour Chriſt is high Prieſt, onely in regard of his humanitie, and not in regard of his diuinitie, with numbers of others, the iuſt treatiſe whereof would require a whole booke.

RHEM. 49. And if we would here ſtand to recite the places in the Greeke, which Beza pronounceth to be corrupted, we ſhould make the reader to wonder, how they can either ſo plead otherwiſe for the Greek text, as though there were no other truth of the new Teſtament but that: or how they tranſlate onely that (to deface, as they thinke, the old vulgar Latine) which themſelues ſo ſhamefully diſgrace, more then the vulgar Latine, inuenting corruptions where none are, nor can be, in ſuch vniuerſall conſent of all, both Greeke and Latine copies. For example, Math. 10. The firſt Simon, who is called Peter. thinke (ſaith Beza in annot. Nou. Teſtam. an. 1556.) this word πρῶτος firſt, hath been added to the Text of ſome that would eſtabliſh Peters primacie. Againe; Luk. 22. The Chalice that is ſhed for you. It is moſt likely (ſaith he) that theſe words being ſometime but a marginall note, came by corruption out of the margent into the text. Againe, Acts 7. Figures which they made, to adore them. It may be ſuſpected (ſaith he) that theſe words, as many other, haue crept by corruption into the text out of the margent. And 1. Cor 15. He thinketh the Apoſtle ſaid not νῖκος, victorie, as it is in all Greeke copies, but νεῖκος, contention. And Acts 13. he calleth it a manifeſt error, that in the Greeke it is 400 yeares, for 300. And Acts 7. v. 16. he reckoneth vp a whole catalogue of corruptions, namely, Mark. 12 v. 42. ὅ ἐστι κοδράντης, Which is a farthing: and Acts 8. v. 26. αὕτη ἐστὶν ἔρημος, This is deſart. And Acts 7. v. 16. the name of Abraham, and ſuch like. All which he thinketh to haue been added or altered into the Greeke Text by corruption.

The Caluiniſts confeſſing the Greeke to be moſt corrupt, yet tranſlate that onely, & hold that only for authenticall.

RHEM. 50. But among other places, he laboureth exceedingly to proue a great corruption, Acts 7. v. 14. where it is ſaid (according to the Septuaginta, that is, the Greeke text of the old Teſtament) that Iacob went downe into Egypt with 75. ſoules. And Luk. 3. v. 16. he thinketh theſe words, τοῦ κωναν, Which was of Cainan, to be ſo falſe, that he leaueth them clean out in both his editions, of the new Teſtament, Anno dom. 1556. and 1565. ſaying, that he is bold ſo to do, by the authoritie of Moſes. VVhereby hee will ſignifie, that it is not in the Hebrew text of Moſes, or of the old Teſtament, and therefore it is falſe in the Greek of the new Teſtament. Which conſequence of theirs (for it is common among them, and concerneth all Scriptures) if it were true, all places of the Greek text of the new Teſtament, cited out of the old, according to the Septuaginta, and not according to the Hebrew (which they know are very many) ſhould be falſe, and ſo by tying themſelues onely to the Hebrew in the old Teſtament, they are forced to forſake the Greek of the new: or if they will maintaine the Greek of the new, they muſt forſake ſometime the Hebrew in the old. But this Argument ſhall be forced againſt them elſe-where.

They ſtanding preciſely vpon the Hebrew of the old, and Greeke text of the new Teſtament, muſt of force deny the one of them.

CARTVV. Notwithſtanding theſe ſwiniſh Ieſuites tread the pearles of the Greeke Copies vnder their filthy feet, and that either without any manner of reaſon at all, or elſe with ſo ſmall reaſon, as will hardly iuſtifie them to be reaſonable creatures: yet can they not beare that Maſter Beza ſhould (with great probabilitie and likelihood of truth) ſo much as ſuſpect the Greek Copies. For they are not able to ſhew one onely place that he hath corrected, contrary to a whole conſent of the Greek Copies. They may condemne without reaſon, he may not ſuſpect, with great probabilitie thereof. They may ſet in the Text what pleaſeth them, contrary to the authority of all the Greeke copies: he may not vtter his opinion in his ſcholies and annotations vpon the text. They cannot beare to be charged with their preſent errour: but he muſt beare the blame of ſlips and errours which are paſt, and now are reformed. VVherefore, either their hatred is ſo great againſt the Greeke Copies, that they cannot abide M. Bezas modeſt and ſhamefaſt reprehenſions of them, vnleſſe he ſhould flatly condemne them, as they doe: or elſe their equitie is ſo little, that they can ſee a mote in his eye, when they perceiue not the beame that is in their owne. And if the places were ſo many, wherein M. Beza pronounceth the Greeke to bee corrupted, that they would make the reader to wonder: you haue done very fooliſhly, which (in the great ſtore you pretend, haue repeated the moſt places twice, and that of Cainan, thrice at the leaſt in this booke: bewraying thereby, how (in great want of abilitie of accuſing him iuſtly) the will and deſire to accuſe, was out of all meaſure. Yet ſpeake we not this, as taking vpon vs M. Bezas defence, without all exception. For we haue ſhewed Acts 13. how the Greeke Copies do well agree with the truth: ſo we hope that the ſame might be performed in other appearances of contradiction, euen in the two moſt difficu teſt places of all other, which are in the ſeuenth of the Acts. And touching that of the 75. ſoules beſide Iacob, it accordeth well with the number which Moſes particularly reckoned vp; Geneſ. 46. where (beſide Iacob) are mentioned 75. perſons. Neither doth S. Stephen affirme, that 75. perſons came into Egypt: but declareth in that number the whole family of Iacob was, before he came to Egypt: that when men knew, that it came in ſo many yeares to no greater a ſumme then 75. perſons, reckoning alſo the 4. wiues of Iacob, and two ſonnes of Iehuda that were dead: they might the more cleerely ſee the wondrous and miraculous bleſſing which followed before their departure from Egypt. The other place which ſeemeth likewiſe irreconcileable, concerning Abrahams bying of a peece of ground at Sichem, of the ſonnes of Emor: is cleare as the ſunne at noone dayes: if this place of the Acts be compared with the places of Gen. 12. 3. 4. and 33. 19. 20. for in the former of theſe places it is euident that Abram had built an Altar vnto the Lord in the very ſelfe ſame place which Iacob (in the latter of theſe chapters) is ſaid to haue bought for 100. peeces of money Now if Abraham would not bury his wife in that land wherein he was a ſtranger, but in ground bought with his owne money: much leſſe would he build an Altar to ſerue the Lord with, but vpon a purchaſe thereof made. It appeareth therefore, that S. Stephen might (with as good right) call it the place which Abram bought, as that which Iacob bought; both of them hauing bought the place. Neither can it ſeeme ſtrange vnto any, that Iacob purchaſed the ſame againe, that his grand-father had bought before: if they remembred that the Fathers were often iniured and depriued of VVelles and other things that they had had gotten, especially amongst a people, who (in all kinde of impietie and iniustice) were now come almost to the top. And that it was S. Stephens meaning to note out Abrahams purchase, rather then Iacobs; it may partly appeare in that he maketh no mention of a certaine price paid for the ground; which notwithstanding is twice precisely made mention of in the purchase of Iacob. And if the places were of that difficultie, that we were not able to cleare them: yet (for our parts) we had rather confesse our owne ignorance; then to charge a full consent of Greek copies with an vntruth. And although it should be true, which M. Beza suspecteth some where of the Greeke Copies: It followeth not, that the truth, or any part of the truth is fallen from the Greek copies: considering that the corruptions suspected of him, are not such; but by either circumstance of the place, or conference of other places of Scripture, the repaire may be made.

Gen. 33. 19. Ioſ. 24. 31.

Last of all, where they assigne such contrarietie, between the testimonies cited according to the 70. interpreters in the new Testament, and the Hebrew text in the old; that either we must be driuen in cleauing to the Hebrew of the olde, to forsake the Greeke of the new; nor in cleauing to the Greek in the new, to forsake the Hebrew in the old: they declare themselues to be verie trifelers, & to abuse their readers too impudently. For they know that we are able to iustify euery place cited out of the 70. by the Apostles and Euangelists, to be agreeable with the Hebrew, and (in some diuersitie of words) to haue the same sense; at the least to haue no sense repugnant to that in the Hebrew: which is manifest by this, that where the 70. differed in sense, there they leauing the 70, whom they so desirouslie followed (for support of the Gentiles acquainted therewith) follow the Hebrew text. And as this is manifest by experience, so it is obserued expresly of Ieromie.

Hierom. prolog. 15. lib. in Esai.

RHEM. 51. By this little, the Reader may see what gay Patrones they are of the Greek Text, and how little cause they haue in their own iudgements to translate it, or vaunt of it, as in derogation of the vulgar Latine translation, and how easily wee might answer them in a word why wee translate not the Greek: forsooth because it is so infinitely corrupted. But the truth is, wee doe by no meanes grant it so corrupted as they say, although in comparison wee know it lesse sincere and incorrupt then the vulgar Latine, and for that cause and others before alleaged, we preferre the said Latine, and haue translated it.

They say the Greek is more corrupt then wee will grant them.

The Answer to the 51 Section.

CART VV. Doubt not (good reader) but the Iesuites are like to bruste for anger, to vnderstand that we are so well prepared, to proue both that the princely garments are not worn vpon the Greek originals for the space of aboue fifteene hundred yeares, wherein they haue passed from hand to hand in the horrible desart of this wicked world: and that both the bread and apparell of the olde translator, setting out some hundreth yeares after it, if euer it were clad and vitailed, in any possible measure of a translation? yet that now it is so patched and so peeced, so hoary and so mouldly, that any man (that asketh counsell of the Lord) may easily see, that neyther it commeth so far as the Iesuits do pretend, neither hath food and rayment, able to feed or cloth the children and heires of so great a King. And where hauing no more shamefastnesse in their forehead, then they haue haire on their bald pates: they haue taken this boldnes to say, that the Greek is not so corrupt as we say, although the olde translator be lesse corrupted then the Greeke: vnto whom what may we answer better, then that which our Sauiour Christ answered vnto the Deuill confessing him to be the son of God, hold your peace. For beside that the truth cannot beare any praise of such foule mouthed enemies as these be: their praise (inferior to the Deuils in truth) is alwaies to the same end that his, that is wholy tending to the destruction of the trueth. The Greeke is not so corrupt as we say. O impudency: as if there were any, that hath cald down the royall value of the originall Greeke, as you haue done, Though (in comparison) wee know it lesse sincere and corrupt, then the vulgar Latine. O noble commenders of the Greek copies. Could you haue set them lower then vnder the vulgar? You might aswel haue set heauens vnder the earth: cõsidering that the Greek original being borne in heauen, your vulgar sprung out of the dust. How doth also this agree, with your owa saying: which affirme that you haue forsaken the poynting of the Latine to follow the poynting of the Greeke And if the Greeke hath kept the trew poynting, why should it not keep the trueth of words. And if your Latine haue lost the true poynting (without the which hee that readeth the Scripture is like him that rideth without a bridle) why should it not rather be said, to haue lost the truth of the words and sense, then the Greek which keepeth the trueth in poynting.

The last page of their preface.

RHEM. 52. If yet there remaine one thing which perhaps they will say, when they cannot answer our reasons aforesaid: to wit, that wee preferre the vulgar Latine before the Greek text, because the Greek maketh more against vs: we protest that as for other causes we preferre the Latine, so in this respect of making for vs or against vs, we allow the Greek as much as the Latine, yea in sundry places more then the Latine, being assured that they haue not one, and that wee haue many aduantages in the Greeke more then in the Latine, as by the Annotations of this new Testament shall euidently appeare: namely, in all such places where they dare not translate the Greek, because it is for vs, and against them; as when they translate δικαιώματα, ordinances, and not, iustifications, and that of purpose, as Beza confesseth, Luk. 1. 6. παραδόσεις, ordinances or instructions, and not, traditions, in the better part. 2. Thes. 2. 15. πρεσβυτέρους, Elders, and not Priests: εἰδώλα, Images rather then Idols. And specially when S. Luke in the Greeke maketh so much for vs, (the vulgar Latine being indifferent for them and vs) that Beza saith it is a corruption crept out of the margent into the text. VVhat need these absurd deuises, and false dealings with the Greeke text, if it made for them more then for vs, yea if it made not for vs against them? But that the Greeke maketh more for vs, see 1. Cor. 7. In the Latine, Defraud not one another, but for a time that you giue your selues to prayer. in Greeke, to fasting and prayer. Act. 10. 30. The answer to the 52. Section.

CARTVV. The principall cause that hath made you take armes against the Greek copies: is that you are not of God, and therefore cannot abide the words of God. Thereupon it commeth, that the old translation as it is further from the word of God, smacketh you better then the Greek copies doe. And although you may sooner get water out of a flint, then anie reliefe of your cause from the Greek copies: yet if it were possible for trueth to helpe to maintaine a lye, it were yet vnpossible for you to like of it: and therefore although wee are assured that you had great aduantage out of the vulgar which is a great cause, that maketh you stand so close vnto it, and no aduantage at all out of the Greek (as partly hath and further shall appeare) yet we know that you haue a further fetch in preferring the hand-maide vnto her mistres: which is thereby to vndermine all authoritie of the holy Scripture, that (it being ouer-thrown) the Popes decrees might ride on horseback? which cannot take breath, as long as the authoritie of the holy Scripture remaineth. And if it be as you say, that the Greek serueth your turne better then the vulgar: you beare vs witnes (at vnawares) that the small estimation which we haue your vulgar in, procedeth not of any feare, that we stand in, lest he should hurt our cause. Ioh. 8.47.

RHEM. 53. But is the vulgar translation for all this Papisticall, and therefore doe wee follow it? (for so some of them call it, and say it is the worst of all other) If it bee, the Greek (as you see) is more, and so both Greek and Latine, and consequently the holy Scripture of the new Testament is Papisticall. Againe, if the vulgar Latine bee Papisticall, Papistry is very ancient, and the Church of God for so many hundred yeares wherein it hath vsed and allowed this translation hath beene Papisticall. But wherein is it Papisticall? forsooth in these phrases and speeches, Pœnitentiam agite. Sacramentum hoc magnum est. AVE GRATIA PLENA. Tabbus hostijs promeretur Deus, and such like. First, doth not the Greek say the same? See the Annotations vpon these places. Secondly, could hee translate these things Papistically or partially, or rather Prophetically, so long before they were in controuersie? Thirdly, doth hee not say, for, Pœnitentiam agite, in another place, Pœnitemini: and doth hee not translate other Mysteries, by the word Sacramentum, as Apoc. 17. Sacramentum mulieris, and as hee translateth one word, Gratia plena, so doth hee not translate the very like word, Plenus vlceribus, which themselues doe follow also? is this also Papistry? When hee said, Heb. 10. 29 Quanto deteriora meretur supplicia. &c. and they like it well enough, might hee not haue said according to the same Greek word, Vigilate vt mereamini fugere ista omnia & stare ante filium hominis, Luk. 21. 36. and, Qui merebuntur sæculum illud & resurrectionem ex mortuis, &c. Luk. 20. 35. and, Tribulationes quas sustinetis, vt mereamini regnum Dei pro quo & patimini, 2. Thess. 1. 5. Might hee not (wee say) if hee had partially affectated the word merit, haue vsed it in all those places, according to his, and your own translation of the same Greek word, Heb. 10. 29? which hee doth not, but in all these places saith simply, Vt digni habeamini, and Qui digni habebuntur. And how can it bee iudged Papisticall or partiall when he saith, Tabbus hostijs promeretur Deus, Heb. 13? Was Primasius also; S. Augustines scholler, a Papist for vsing this text, and all the rest that haue done the like? Was S. Cyprian a Papist, for vsing so often this speech, Promereri Dominum vestris operibus, pœnitentia, &c. or is there any difference, but that S. Cyprian vseth it as a deponent more Latinely, the other as a passiue lesse finely; Was it Papistry to say Senior for Presbyter, Ministrantibus for sacrificantibus, or liturgiam celebrantibus, simulachris for idolis, fides tua te saluum fecit sometime for sanum fecit. Or shall wee think that hee was a Calfinist for translating thus, as they thinke hee was a Papist, when any word soundeth for vs? The Protestants condemning the old vulgar translation as making for vs condemne themselues. Against D. Sand. Rocke p. 147. See Kimnit. in exam. Concil. Trid. sess. 4. Matth. 3. 12. Ephes. 5. Luk. 1. Hebr. 13. Mark 1. μετανοεῖτε. ἐλεημοσύνας. It is void of all partiality. Luk. 16. 20 No. Test. 1580. In Epist. ad Heb. Epist. 14. & 18.

The Answer to the 53. Section.

CARTVV. It were (doubtles) vnworthie the name of a translation, that should be inferiour to the vulgar. Howbeit wee charge not the old translator of Popery, and impute not all the corruptions in the vulgar to the translator: but rather to the enemie, which sow tares in his field: albeit as (hath bin said) he might some where preiudice the trueth, not thinking of it. As for the testimonies both here and in the former section, they are discussed in their proper places.

RHEM. 54. Againe, was he a Papist in those kind of words onely, and was he not in whole sentences? As, Tibi dabo claues &c. Quicquid solueris in terra, erit solutum & in cœlis, and Quorum remiseritis peccata, remittuntur eis, and, Tunc reddet vnicuique secundum opera sua, and, Nunquid potest fides saluare eum? Ex operibus iustificatur homo & non ex fide tantum, and, Nubere volunt, damnationem habentes, quia primam fidem irritam fecerunt, and Mandata eius grauia non sunt. And Aspexit in remunerationem. Are all these, and such like, Papisticall translations, because they are most plaine for the Catholicke faith which they call Papistry? Are they not word for word as in the Greek, and the very words of the holy Ghost? And if in these there bee no accusation of Papisticall partialitie, why in the other? Lastly, are the ancient Fathers, Generall Councels, the Churches of all the VVest part, that vse all these speeches and phrases now so many hundred yeares are they all Papisticall? Bee it so, and let vs in the name of God follow them, speake as they spake, translate as they translated, interpret as they interpreted, because wee beleeue as they beleeued. And thus farre for the sense of the old vulgar Latine translation, and why wee translated it before all others. Now of the manner of translating the same. The papistry thereof (as they terme it) is in the very sentences of the holy Ghost, more then in the translation. Math. 16. Iohn 20. Math. 16. Iam. 2. 1. Tim. 5. 1. Iohn 5. Heb. 12.

The Answer to the 54. Section.

CARTVV. We grant they are word for word as in the Greek. And therefore vnleſſe wee ſhew that Poperie leaning vpon them, falleth to the ground, and that is not onely ſtaied by them, but deſtroyed of them. We will willingly confeſſe, our ſelues moſt vnworthie eyther of the defence of ſo good a cauſe, or of the places which wee occupy in the Church of God. In the meane ſeaſon your beggery is to impudent which take that for graunted, wherein you haue been alwaies (in the face) reſiſted, And if wee would trifle out the time, as you doe; we could for fiue or ſix ſentences which you bring, as ſeeming to to ſmyle vpon you; alledge fiue or ſix hundreth, which doe ſo apparantly frowne vpon your Poperie, as at the verie ſight of them it falleth down dead. If you had any generall Councils or any other auncient fathers of the weſt part, beſide Cyprian and Primaſius to warrant your phraſes by: we doubt not, but you would haue made them ſpeake: which handle the matter ſo cunninglie, that the dumbe in your cauſe, and ſometime thoſe which are eloquent againſt it, are notwithſtanding (for want of others) compelled to ſpeake for it. As for the two fathers alledged: let the reader looke the anſwer in the proper place.

The manner of this tranſlation, and what hath been obſerued therein.

RHEM. 55. IN THIS OVR TRANSLATION, becauſe we wiſh it to bee moſt ſincere, as becommeth a Catholick tranſlation, and haue indeuoured ſo to make it: we are very preciſe and religious in following our Copie, the old vulgar approued Latine: not onely in ſence, which wee hope we alwayes doe, but ſometimes in the very words alſo and phraſes, which may ſeeme to the vulgar reader, and to common Engliſh eares, not yet acquainted therewith, rudeneſſe, or ignorance: but to the diſcreet reader, that deeply weigheth and conſidereth the importance of ſacred words and ſpeeches, and how eaſily the voluntary tranſlator may miſſe the true ſence of the holy Ghoſt, we doubt not but our conſideration and doing therein, ſhall ſeeme reaſonable and neceſſary: yea and that all ſorts of Catholike Readers will in ſhort time thinke that familiar, which at the firſt may ſeeme ſtrange, and will eſteeme it more when they ſhall otherwiſe * bee taught to vnderſtand it, then if it were the common knowne Engliſh.

Neophyte.

Why we ſay, our Lord, not the Lord (but in certaine caſes) ſee the annotations 1. Tim. 6. pag 585.

Catholicke termes proceeding from the very text of Scripture.

For example, we tranſlate often thus, Amen, Amen, I ſay vnto you. Which as yet ſeemeth ſtrange, but after a while it will be as familiar, as Amen in the end of all prayers and Pſalmes. And euen as when wee end with Amen, it ſoundeth farre better then So be it: ſo in the beginning Amen, Amen, muſt needs by vſe and cuſtome ſound farre better then Verily, Verily. VVhich indeed doth not expreſſe the aſſeueration and aſſurance ſignified in this Hebrew word. Beſides that it is the ſolemne and vſuall word of our Sauiour to expreſſe a vehement aſſeueration, (See annot. Io. 6. 8. verſ. 34. and Apoc. cap. 19. verſ. 4.) and therefore is not changed, neither in the Syriack, nor Greek, nor vulgar Latine Teſtament, but is preſerued and vſed of the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles themſelues, euen as Chriſt ſpake it, propter ſanctiorem authoritatem, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith of this and of Alleluia, for the more holy and ſacred authoritie thereof, lib. 2. Doct. Chriſt. cap. 11. And therefore do we keepe the word Alleluia. Apoc. 19. as it is both in Greeke and Latine, yea and in all the Engliſh tranſlations, though in their booke of Common prayer they tranſlate it, Praiſe ye the Lord. Again, if Hoſanna, Raca, Belial, and ſuch like, be yet vntranſlated in the Engliſh Bibles, why may not we ſay Corbona, and Paraſceue: ſpecially when they Engliſhing this latter thus, The preparation of the Sabboth, put three words more into the text, then the Greek word doth ſignifie. Math. 27. 62. And others ſaying thus, After the day of preparing, make a cold tranſlation, and ſhort of the ſence, as if they ſhould tranſlate Sabboth, the reſting. For Paraſceue is as ſolemne a word for the Sabboth eue, as Sabboth is for the Iewes ſeuenth day, and now among Chriſtians much more ſolemner, taken for Good-friday onely. Theſe words then we thought farre better to keepe in the text, and to tell their ſignification in the margent, or in a table for that purpoſe, then to diſgrace both the text and them with tranſlating them. Such are alſo theſe words, The Paſche, The feaſt of Azymes, The bread of propoſition. VVhich they tranſlate, The Paſſouer, The Feaſt of ſweet bread, The ſhew bread. But if Pentecoſt Acts 2. be yet vntranſlated in their Bibles, and ſeemeth not ſtrange, why ſhould not Paſche and Azymes ſo remaine alſo, being ſolemne feaſts as Pentecoſt was? or why ſhould they Engliſh one rather then the other? ſpecially whereas Paſſouer at the firſt was as ſtrange as Paſche may ſeeme now, and perhaps as many now vnderſtand Paſche as Paſſouer. And as for Azymes, when they Engliſh it, The feaſt of ſweet bread, it is a falſe interpretation of the word, and nothing expreſſeth that which belongeth to the feaſt, concerning vnleaued bread. And as for their tearme of ſhew Bread, it is very ſtrange and ridiculous. Again, if Proſelyte bee a receiued word in the Engliſh Bibles, Math. 23. Acts 2. why may not we be bold to ſay, Neophyte, 1. Tim. 3. ſpecialy when they tranſlating it into Engliſh, do falſely expreſſe the ſignification of the word thus, a yong ſchollar. VVhereas it is a peculiar word to ſignifie them that were lately baptized, as Catechumenus ſignifieth the newly inſtructed in faith, not yet baptized, who is alſo a yong ſchollar rather then the other, and many that haue been old ſchollers, may be Neophytes, by differring baptiſme. And if Phylacteries be allowed for Engliſh, Mat. 23. we hope that Didragmes alſo, Prepuce, Paraclete, and ſuch ſuch like, will eaſily grow to be currant and familiar. And in good ſooth, there are in all theſe ſuch neceſſity, that they cannot conueniently be tranſlated, as when S. Paul ſaith, Conciſio non circumciſio: how can we but follow his very words and alluſion? And how is it poſſible to expreſſe Euangelizo, but as we do, Euangelize? For Euangelium being the Goſpell, what is Euangelizo, or to Euangelize, but to ſhew the glad tidings of the Goſpell, of the time of grace, of all Chriſts benefits? All which ſignifications is loſt, by tranſlating as the Engliſh Bibles do, I bring you good tidings, Luk. 2. 10. Therefore we ſay, Depoſitum, 1. Tim. 6. and, He exinanited himſelfe, Philip. 2. and, You haue reflouriſhed, Philip. 4. and, to exhauſt, Heb. 9. 28. becauſe we cannot poſſibly attain to expreſſe theſe words fully in Engliſh, and we think much better, that the reader ſtaying at the difficultie of them, ſhould take an occaſion to looke in the table following, or otherwiſe to aske the full meaning of them, then by putting ſome vſuall Engliſh words that expreſſe them not, ſo to deceiue the reader. Sometime alſo we doe it for another cauſe: as when we ſay, The aduent of our Lord, and, Impoſing of hands, becauſe one is a ſolemne time, the other a ſolemne action in the Catholicke Church, to ſignifie to the people, that thoſe and ſuch like names come out of the very Latine text of the Scriptures. So did Penance, Doing penance, Chalice, Prieſt, Deacon, Traditions, Aultar, Hoſt, and the like (which we exactly keepe as Catholicke tearmes) proceed euen from the very words of Scripture.

CARTVV,

The answer to the 55. Section.

CARTVV. As the Philoſopher ſaid of his work, that being ſet forth, it ſhould for the hardnes and darknes therof (as it were) be vn-ſet forth: ſo may it be verified in a good part of the Ieſuites tranſlation; that being tranſlated, it remaineth, partly for the ſottiſh ſuperſtition of keeping of words rather then ſenſe, and partly for the vnneceſſarie new fangledneſſe of forraine ſpeach, as it were vn-tranſlated. So is your tranſlation as little Catholik, as may be: as that which is ſo proud, ſo ſcornfull and diſdainfull, that none of the ruder ſort, can haue any acquaintance with it: whereas a good tranſlator will endeuour to deliuer to his reader, the meaning of his author which he tranſlateth, with all light & plainnes of ſpeach poſſible. VVhat are the ſacred words and ſpeaches for retaining whereof you are fallen into this ſeruitude? If you had tranſlated the Greek you might better haue pretended this. For we acknowledge the pens of the Apoſtles and Euangeliſts to haue been ſacred: which we cannot acknowledge, nor you cannot ſhew in the old tranſlator. Vnleſſe your Councell of Trent comming ſo many yeares after the olde tranſlator, was able then to make that ſacred, which had not been ſo before. Cadres ſmall.

But let us heare their examples. The firſt kind wherof is, of Hebrew words retained in the Greek text, and by the ſame reaſon to be contayned in all tranſlations. But this argument turneth not all together ſo round as you think. For it may well bee, that theſe words of Amen, and Alleluia &c. were well known, by the Apoſtles preaching to the Churches in that time. VVherefore the vſe of them then, when they were well and generallie knowne, was more iuſtifiable then now, when they are not ſo. And for the word Amen, firſt we haue the Apoſtle, which giueth iuſt weight thereof in a Greeke word, whereunto our yea anſwereth. Secondly the old tranſlator vſeth it as an indifferent thing, eyther to tranſlate it into Latine, or to let it remaine, as he found it in the Greeke text. Heere therefore the drudgerie of the Ieſuits is manifeſt. For notwithſtanding they eſteeme it not meet, that Amen ſhould be tranſlated: yet becauſe the vulgar hath tranſlated it, they haue alſo thought good to follow him therein. Thereby tying themſelues faſter vnto the vulgar, then the vulgar did tye himſelfe vnto the originall. Howbeit in retaining of the Hebrew words, which the originall doth vſe, they ſhould (for vs) haue paſſed without blame if by contrary practiſe of that which they profeſſe, they had not differed as much frō themſelues, as from us: yet deceiue themſelues in that they think they may keep Corbana aſwell as wee keep Hoſanna, Raca, Beliall. For Saint Luke hath tranſlated Corbana Gazophylacium: which is in our tongue a treaſurie, and tearmeth it alſo the place of the giftes of God. VVhich interpretation when none of the Apoſtles or Euangeliſts giue, in the words which we haue retained: it is euident, that they haue not that warrant of retaining this which wee haue of thoſe: much leſſe to keep the Paraſceue, which they ought aſwell to haue tranſlated into Engliſh, the tongue which they write in, as Saint Luke (forſaking the Hebrew and Syriack words) vſed the word that was proper vnto the tongue hee wrote in. And therefore you impudently face down the trueth, when you ſay that Paraſceue is as ſolemne a word for the ſabaoth euen, as Sabaoth is for the Iewes ſeuenth day. Neither is there more cauſes to leaue it vn-tranſlated, when we are not able, with like ſhortnes of our ſpeach, to attaine the full ſignification: then to leaue it vnturned, when the ſhortnes of our ſpeach, affordeth a ſentence in a ſmaller compaſſe of words then doth the originall. And if this be a ſufficient reaſon, to hold the tranſlators hand becauſe there are three words in the tranſlation of Paraſceue, above that which is in the Greeke: why haue you tranſlated παρασκευὴ μαρτύρων put to open ſhame, Nay, how commeth it to paſſe, that without all warrant of the Greeke, or circumſtance of the place, beyond the marke of the vulgar tranſlation, which you propounde vnto your ſelues, and that in text letters, you tranſlate παρασκευασαν, they took order for buriall. VVe know therefore that your Dirigie groats, and Trentall money, will make you lauiſh and rauill in your tranſlation, as much as your ſeruile minde maketh your dumb and mute in other places, where you might better ſpeak. In the reſt alſo, your compariſons are fooliſh. For if we haue retained certain words in their originall, becauſe our ſpeach fitteth them not ſo well: it followeth not therefore that you might doe that, where it is at hand and readie to ſerue the Greeke, or Hebrew word, Or if we haue ſometimes not vſed the benefite and wealth of our tongue: doth it follow therefore, that you may ſo doe? And if we ſeeking to tranſlate all the Greeke wordes, haue left ſome vntranſlated becauſe the Engliſh phraſe either did afford it vnto vs, or els ſtood as that time far from vs: doth it follow, that you ſhould retain thoſe words in a ſtrange tongue, which our tongue doth afford you, the tranſlation of which, we haue found out vnto your hand and which hath confirmation, by the common vſe and practiſe of our nation for many yeares together. Breifly, whereas our people by the grace of God, in knowledge of the word, through the meanes of a lightſome and plaine tranſlation, haue been deliuered out of Egypt: in ſteed that you ſhould haue added light where it is wanting, and plained that which is rough: you haue endeuoured, by your cloudy and hacked ſpeaches to bring in againe all confuſion and ignorance of God, and of his trueth. And if your danitie ſtomack could not brooke the feaſt of the ſweete bread; yet was there no cauſe for you, to accuſe it of falshood ſeing ſweete bread, and vnleauened bread (with vs) are all one. The tranſlation alſo printed at Geneua, hath vnleauened bread, But nothing taſteth you but Azymes, and that becauſe the people cannot chaw theſe cruſts of yours, or bones rather, which of purpoſe you ſet before thē, that they may depart hungrie from your table. Your interpretation of παρουσία; is falſe, without all manner of prooфes, framed out of your cruell & vnmercifull iudgement, of throwing all into hell which die without baptiſme: as if they were not planted in the houſe of God, before they be baptized: where the true vſe of baptiſm is towards thoſe, which we vnderſtand either by their own confeſſion, or by the couenant, to be already planted in the houſe of God. As for the meaning of the Apoſtle, it is euident that he would haue none drawn to the miniſtery of the word which is lately come to profeſſion of the Goſpell: and therefore your fantaſie of a neophyte that hath been an old ſcholler in the ſchoole of Chriſt (for ſo you muſt meane) implieth a manifeſt contradiction, and is all one, as if you ſhould ſay, he is a new olde plant, or a new olde ſcholler. For in thoſe that were not gathered from heatheniſh religion to the fellowſhip of the Goſpell, before the yeares of diſcretion: the ſame daie that they became true ſcholers, they became true plants, and contrariſe. VVherefore to be a young ſcholler, is the ſame thing in effect, as to be a yong plant: where Neophyte, to a bare Engliſhman is nothing at all, no more then depoſitum, examined, exhauſt: the foolerie and beastlines whereof, is euident to all men, seing our speach is able to yeeld the iust valuation of them: And if our shewing the glad tidings, be not significatiue to our nation, much lesse is your Euangelizing, which scarce one amongst a hundreth doth vnderstand.. And if you had learned that the doctrine of Christ vnder the Gospell, is not set forth sufficiently by the Greeke word, without a Trope of synechdoche, or as they call it καθ' ἐξοχην or & κατ' ἐξοχην, you might easilie haue known, that the same Trope being vnderstood in our glad tidings, would haue reached the Greek word, and whatsoeuer is signified by it, sufficiently. For εὐαγγελια was a Greeke word before the Gospell came into the world: and is vsed of Greeke authors, to signifie all manner of good newes, and nothing els. And therefore the word can properly signify no more now, then it did then. But the Euangelist chose that word especially to note, that where men are desirous to know good tidings, they should bestow both their eares to vnderstand this doctrine, which is onely worthie of that name. And if our translation liked you not, as you haue translated εὐαγγελιον Gospell: so you might haue translated εὐαγγελιζω to Gospell, and εὐαγγελιζων, Gospelling, with more vnderstanding of our people, and with as full attainment of the signification of the words, vnlesse you will confesse, that you haue fayled in turning εὐαγγελιον the Gospell. Lastly, if so much of the signification is lost, vnlesse it be turned Euangelize: how commeth it, that you, Mat. 11.5. haue translated it, the Gospell is preached. Heere therefore your drudgerie to the old interpreter, is again manifest, for notwithstanding you hold it ill turned vnlesse the Greek word be retained: yet because the old translator turneth it otherwise; you stick not contrary to your iudgment to turn it as he doth: so haue you no iudgment of your own, & the old translators iudgment (who by turning it now one way, and now another signifieth an indifferency of translation) you vtterly ouerthrow. But that which followeth, is more absurd: that the people must be depriued of the natural translation of the words, through your sottish desire of keeping of Latin words, which the vulgar vsed: which these lying spirits calling first the Latine text of the Scripture, after by & by call it, the verie words of the Scripture: as if the Scripture translated in the English tongue, were not as much the Scripture, as that which is translated into the Latine. For your penance, you must do penance: considering that Luk. 17.4. you turne the same word which you translate doe penance, be penitent. The same whip commeth to you, for your aduent: which in one and the same chapter and sense, turne it comming & aduent both. VVee are content you keepe your Priest, and your Chalice to your selues. Albeit you greatly forget your selues, which makes your Priest here, to come of the Latine word; whom otherwhere, you would faine deriue from the Greek.

Certain hard speeches and phrases.

RHEM. 56. Moreouer, we presume not in hard places to mollifie the speeches or phrases, but religiously keep them word for word, and point for point, for feare of missing, or restraining the sence of the holy Ghost to our phantasie, as Ephes. 6. Against the spirituals of wickednesse in the celestials. And, What to mee and thee woman? whereof see the Annotation vpon this place. And 1. Pet. 2. As infants euen now borne, reasonable, milk without guile desire yee. VVe do so place reasonable, of purpose, that it may bee indifferent both to infants going before, as in our Latine Text; or to milke that followeth after, as in our Latine copies, and in the Greek. Ioh. 3. wee translate, The spirit breatheth where hee will, &c. leauing it indifferent to signifie either the holy Ghost or the winde; which the Protestants translating winde, take away the other sense more common and vsuall in the ancient Fathers. VVee translate, Luk. 8. 23. They were filled, not adding of our own, with water, to mollifie the sentence as the Protestants do. And ch. 2. This is the Chalice, the new Testament, &c. not, This Chalice is the new Testament. Likewise, Mark. 13. Those daies shall be such tribulation, &c. not as the aduersaries, In those daies, both our Text and theirs being otherwise. Likewise, Iac. 4. 6. And giueth greater grace, leauing it indifferent to the Scripture, or to the Holy Ghost, both going before? whereas the aduersaries too too boldly and presumptuously add, saying, the Scripture giueth, taking away the other sence, which is farre more probable. Likewise Heb. 12. 21. we translate, So terrible was it which was seene, Moses said, &c. neither doth Greek or Latine permit vs to adde; that Moses said, as the Protestants presume to do. So we say, Men brethren, a widow woman, A woman, a sister, Iames of Alpheus, and the like. Sometimes also we follow of purpose the Scriptures phrase, as The hell of fire, according to Greek and Latine, which we might say perhaps, the firie hell, by the Hebrew phrases in such speeches, but not hell fire, as it commonly is translated. Likewise Luk. 4. 36. what word is this, that in power & authority, he commandeth the vncleane spirits? As also Luk. 2. Let vs passe ouer, and see the word that is done, where we might say thing, by the Hebrew phrase, but there is a certain maiesty and more signification in these speeches, and therefore both Greek and Latine keepe them, although it is no more the Greek or Latine phrase, then it is the English. And why should we be squamish at new words or phrases in the scripture, which are necessary: when we do easily admit and follow new words coined in Court and in Courtly or other secular writings?

The Protestants presumptuous boldnesse and liberty in translating.

The Answer to the 56 Section.

CARTVV. VVe need not trauaile much to lay forth the shame of these men, who themselues shew their own nakednes. Let their first example heere be considered: and so let all men iudge: whether a most plain sentence of the holy Ghost, be shamefully obscured: and not obscured onely, but made senseless. For the Hebrew phrase being rendred, it is plaine, that that which they turn spirituals of wickednes, ought to be turned spirituall wickednes. And if they had any care, that the people should haue been made warie, against this spirituall craftines: they would haue said, in the heauenly places or things, as the text consdered in the circumstance would best beare, rather then to say, celestials. But it should appeare that beside their peeuish affecting of obscuritie, the ignorance of the Hebrew phrase in the former part of this sentence, and the ignorance of the sense in the latter part: droue them vpon this witlesse translation. The same ignorance of the Hebrew tongue, caused them to vse some like dotage in the next example. For if they had known, that it is ordinarie and vsuall for the Hebrews to vnderstand the verbe substantiue and had further learned, that the verbe simple, hath (as the place & circumstance requireth) the signification of the compound: they should easily haue vnderstood, that this translation, what is between mee and thee, had not passed the measure of a simple and plaine translation. The next example doth likewise bewray, their ignorance in all good law of translation. For it is well known to children, that euerie tongue hath a proper composition: in such sort, that he that will make the composition of one tongue, agree with the compoſition of another, vtterly corrupteth the tongue which hee will conforme. And is all one as in a body, which is diſfigured and deformed by diſplacing of the ſeuerall members thereof. In Hebrew he that ſaith, MARA MALE, and not MALE MARA, is eaſily knowne not to ſpeak the tongue of Canaan. Bread white in our ſpeech would offend patient eares, white bread in the French language would be as offenſiue. And if ſo ſmall a change, and as it were the remouing of a word to the next houſe, be ſo foule, how much more, is it not to bee abided, that the word, whoſe naturall place is in the beginning ſhould be ſet in the end, as if it were remoued from one end of the ſtreet to the other. And if there could be any profite in this dotage, yet you haue not obſerued it. For where the Greek hath in one verſe, A reed bruſed, and flax ſmoaking; you haue in the former followed the order of the Greek, and ſay a reed bruſed, but in the latter you haue left the order of the Greek, and kept the naturall order of our ſpeech, ſaying ſmoaking flax, not flax ſmoaking. And although it be no anſwer here, to ſay that they followed their old tranſlator, ſeeing rather they ought to haue followed the full conſent of the Greek copies, if ſuch an imitation had beene needfull, yet they are eaſily ſtripped of that anſwer. For ſometimes they leaue the order of the old Interpreter, and follow the Greek, as Math. 4.4. they ſay as the Greek bread alone, and not as the vulgar alone bread: Which alſo they do not in phraſe onely, but in whole ſentences: as Math. 4. they forſake the vulgar, which ſaith, walked in darkneſſe, and take the Greek which ſaith, ſate in darkneſſe: And in Rom. 12. in ſtead of that the vulgar hath, not defending our ſelues, they haue cleaued to the Greeke, which is not reuenging our ſelues. Neither can they ſay, that this was the ſlip of a pen of the writer, for beſide that there is no reſemblance of the words, they are ſhut from that, in that that Item ſo readeth: And other ſomtime they forſake the order of the Greek and vulgar both. For where both Greek and vulgar haue, to his Angels ſhall hee giue charge of thee, they haue turned it, he will giue his Angels charge of thee. And againe, where both Greek and Latine haue, into an hill high verie: they (as it ſhould ſeeme) aſhamed of this their apiſh and ſottiſh imitation, haue tranſlated it, as wee doe, into a very high mountaine. So it appeareth, that they are vtterly ignorant of all good order of tranſlation: ſo they keepe not themſelues to their own crooked rule, but when and where it pleaſeth them.

Mat. 12. 20

Math. 4. 6.

Ibid. verſ. 8

And as they make themſelues ridiculous in the profeſſion of a ſuperſtitious obſeruation of the order of words, ſo are they not onely often ridiculous, but ſometime impious in the ſenſe, which their ſeruile obſeruation of like number of words, draweth them vnto. Take for example one of the moſt comfortable places in all the Scripture, which by their ſottiſh tranſlation (in ſparing a word) they haue turned into deadly poyſon and bitter wormewood. For vnto this queſtion, who ſhall accuſe againſt the elect of God? They haue added for anſwer, God which iuſtifieth: as if God ſhould accuſe his elect. And to another queſtion, who is hee that ſhall condemne? they adde for anſwer, Chriſt Ieſus that died, &c. Cleane contrarie to the meaning and phraſe of the Apoſtle, alſo contrary to their meaning, but yet their words can beare no other ſenſe, where the Apoſtle keeping the Hebrew phraſe, left out the verbe ſubſtantiue, which being alwaies in that phraſe vnderſtood of it ſelfe, is not ſo in our tongue, vnleſſe it be expreſſed. Now that wee ſee their peruerſe imitation of words is not religious, but ſuperſtitious, and ſometime impious, ſometime obſerued, and ſometime not, at their pleaſure, it will bee alſo eaſie to ſee in diuers examples, that they riot and play the wantons in their tranſlation. Albeit it hath already bene performed, and that in three or foure of thoſe examples, which they haue alledged to teſtifie their great frugalitie in tranſlating: yet there are others whereby the ſame is conuinced; As Math. 3.14. where the Greek hath, hee vtterly forbade him, and the vulgar forbade him: they leauing both the Greek and the vulgar, tranſlate ſtaied him, and in the ſame chapter & verſe they tranſlate preſented, and yet 8. chap. 16. offered: the old tranſlator hauing obtulerunt, in both places, Mark 9.49. they tranſlate victima, Hebr. 5.1. they tranſlate ſacrifices, and Heb. 13,16. they turne hoſtes: the word with full conſent of the Greek copies, being one and the ſame in all: Ordinarily they tranſlate præpuce and præpuced; yet Act. 7.51. they ſay vncircumciſed, Mark. 10.42. they tranſlate ouer-rule them, contrary to the meaning of our Sauiour, contrarie to Luke which vſeth the verbe ſimple, as of the ſame value as the compound, and contrary to their own vulgar, who vſeth an indifferent word, which hath not ſo great exceſſe of rule adioyned with it, thereby to help the Lordſhip of their Clergy.

Dominantur

To ſtand vpon the reſt of their examples, whereby they glory in their own ſhame, would be ſo ſmall profit of the reader: eſpecially conſidering that the places of any importance, are other-where debated, ſome of them being ridiculous, as a word done, hell of fire, &c. yet can we not paſſe ouer one open impudent, wilfull and ſaucie corruption, which they haue vſed throughout their whole tranſlation: which alwayes in ſtead of the Lord, haue ſet (and that text-wiſe) our Lord, contrary to the faith both of all the Greek examples, and the vulgar tranſlation, hauing therefore taken from, and put to: you haue all the curſes ſtanding at your doores, which are threatned againſt falſifiers of the publicke records of the Church, whether they be conſidered as they are indeed, or as they are in your opinion. For notwithſtanding you haue laid vp the vulgar tranſlation, in the holy Arke of the Lord, hurling out from thence the originall, as it were the two tables, written by the finger of God: when ſuch dealing may ſerue your turne: yet beare you ſo little reuerence vntoit, as that in a matter of ſmall importance, which can neither hinder vs, nor helpe you, you haue put out, and put in at your pleaſure. And although the former fault may happily be imputed to your ouer-ſight, yet the latter of adding, wherein you fall ſo often and continually, can argue nothing elſe, but a challenge of Maſterſhip and Rabbiniſme in the Church of Chriſt, and of a chaire aduanced ſo high, as that the chaire of our Sauiour may ſcarce ſeeme to bee a footſtoole vnto it. And if you could but ſhew one ſuch boldneſſe of ours throughout the tranſlation of the whole body of the Bible: we would couer our faces, and our anſwer ſhould bee in ſilence. We ſee eaſily what a ſmall gale of winde hath driuen you vpon theſe ſands. Onely for that wee, according to the moſt cuſtomable phraſe of the Scripture, do ſo ſpeake: you haue choſen to ſpeake otherwiſe then the Scripture, rather then you would ſpeake as we doe. Ywiſſe you ſee it otherwiſe in vs; which bauk not your phraſe of ſpeaking whereſoeuer the text of Scripture doth offer it vs. You haue made the wall of your ſeparation from vs high otherwiſe: and you might haue made it higher with leſſe appearance of your contempt of the word. Sauing that the Lord would thus diſcouer you: to a hateful abhomination of your malapertneſſe in handling his word. Beſide that, as you haue diuided your tongues from the tongue of the holy Ghost; so you haue diuided it from your own hearts. For neither indeed, nor by your owne doctrine, can you say, our God, or our Lord: which stand in a continuall mammering, whether he be louingly affected towards you or no. You haue presumed further herein, then durst your good masters and betters. For the whole vniuersitie of Louaine, translating the Bible into French, as you do the new Testament into English: kept themselues herein precisely to the old translator, turning the Lord, and not our Lord. VVhere, if the weight of authoritie be asked after, the vniuersitie of Louaine is of better marke then the vniversitie of Rhemes: the Doctors and Diuines of Louaine, then the Nouices and Questionists of Rhemes: the whole vniuersitie of Louaine of greater credit then one small Colledge of the vniversitie of Rhemes. And if to all these we had (for answer) onely returned; In such and such places we translate thus and thus, not as the Iesuites doe; as they say, that they translate not as the Protestants doe: we feare not, but all indifferent iudgements will be constrained to giue the preheminence of a true and plaine translation vnto vs, especially in respect of theirs. As euen in the next example, where the Greeke word is different, eyther to the holy Ghost, or to the Wind; forasmuch as it is most euident by vndoubted arguments, that the wind is to be vnderstood: we holde it for a grace of our translation, which hath apropriated the speach to the meaning of the Scripture. And therfore we may iustly condemn their translation, which, where one thing is intended and marked out of the Scripture, vseth that word, which is common to both significations. Albeit wee know neither generall speach of the whole land, nor particular language of any seuerall shire: where the word spirit, doth signifie wind. So that if it were a vertue for your translation, so to halt of both sides, that the certaine meaning could not be known: yet haue you not here, attained vnto it.

Heb. 7.14.

Le Scrigeur.

The Greek added often in the Margent for many causes.

RHEM. 57, VVee adde the Greeke in the margent for diuers causes. Sometime when the sense is hard that the learned Reader may consider of it, and see if hee can help himselfe better then by our translation, as Luk. 11. Nolite extolli, μὴ μετεωρίζεσθε, and againe, Quod superest date eleemosynam. τὰ ἐνόντα. Sometime to take away the ambiguity of the Latine or English, as Luk. 11. Et domus supra domum cadit which wee must needs English. And house vpon house shall fall, by the Greek, the sense is not, one house shall fall vpon another: but if one house rise vpon it selfe, that is against it selfe, it shall perish, according as hee speaketh of a Kingdom diuided against it selfe in the words before. And Act. 14. Sacerdos Iouis qui erat, in the Greek, qui is referred to Iupiter. Sometime to satisfie the Reader, that might otherwise conceiue the translation to bee false, as Philip. 4. 9. But in euery thing by prayer, &c. ἐν παντὶ προσευχῇ, not, in all prayer, as in the Latine it may seeme. Sometime when the Latine neither doth nor can reach to the signification of the Greek word, wee adde the Greek also as more significant. Illi soli seruies, him onely shalt thou serue, λατρεύσεις. And Act. 6. Nicholas a stranger of Antioche, προσήλυτος. And Rom. 9. The seruice, ἡ λατρεία, and Eph. 1. to perfite, instaurare omnia in Christo, ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι: And, wherein hee hath gratified vs, ἐχαρίτωσεν. And, Ephes. 6. Put on the armour, πανοπλίαν and a number the like. Sometime, when the Greek hath two senses, and the Latine but one, wee adde the Greek, 2. Cor. 1. By the exhortation wherewith wee also are exhorted, the Greek signifieth also consolation, &c. And, 2. Cor. 10. But hauing hope of your faith increasing to be, &c. where the Greeke may also signifie, as or when your faith increaseth. Sometime for aduantage of the Catholicke cause, when the Greek maketh for vs more then the Latine, as Seniores, πρεσβυτέρους. Vt digni habeamini, ἵνα ἀξιωθῆτε. Qui effundetur, τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον, Praecepta, παραδόσεις, and Ioh. 21. πόιμαινε, Pasce & rege. And sometime to shew the false translation of the heretickes, as when Beza saith, Hoc poculum in meo sanguine qui τὸ ποτήριον ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ αἵματι τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον, Luk. 22. And Quem oportet cœlo continere, ὃν δεῖ μὲν οὐρανὸν δέχεσθαι. Act. 3. Thus we vse the Greek diuers waies, and esteeme of it as it is worthy, and take all commodities thereof for the better vnderstanding of the Latine, which being a translation, cannot alwayes attaine to the full sence of the principall tongue, as we see in all translations.

Mat. 4.

Act 2. 2. Thess. 2. 2. Cor. 12.

The Latine text sometime noted in the Margent.

RHEM. 58. Item, we add the Latine word sometime in the margent, when either we cannot fully expresse it, (as Acts 8. They tooke order for Stephens funerall, Curauerunt Stephanum. and, All take not this word, Non omnes capiunt.) or when the reader might thinke it cannot be as we translate, as Luk. 8. A storme of winde descended into the lake, and they were filled, & complebantur. and Ioh. 5. when Iesus knew that he had now a long time, quia iam multum tempus haberet. meaning in his infirmity.

In the beginning of bookes, Matthew, Paul, &c. not S. Matthew, S. Paul. Bib. Ann. 1579. 1580 Ann. 1577, 1562.

RHEM. 59. The precise following of our Latin text, in neither adding nor diminishing, is the cause why we say not in the title of books, in the first page, S. Matthew, S. Paul: because it is so neither in the Greeke nor Latin, though in the tops of the leaues following, where wee may be bolder, we adde, S. Matthew, &c. to satisfie the Reader. Much vnlike to the Protestants our aduersaries, which make no scruple to leaue out the name of Paul in the title of the Epistle to the Hebrues, though it be in euery Greek booke which they translate. And their most authorised English Bibles leaue out (Catholike) in the title of S. Iames Epistle and the rest, which were famously known in the Primitiue Church by the name of Catholicæ Epistolæ, Euseb. hist. Eccles. lib. 2. cap. 22.

Another reading in the Margent.

Item we giue the reader in places of some importance, another reading in the margent, specially when the Greeke is agreeable to the same, as Io. 4. transiet de morte ad vitam. Other Latine copies haue, transiit, and so it is in the Greeke.

The pointing sometime altered.

RHEM. 60. VVe bind not our selues to the poynts of any copie, print, or edition of the vulgar Latine, in places of no controuersie, but follow the pointing most agreeable to the Greek, and to the Fathers Commentaries, as Col. 1. 10. Ambulantes digne Deo, per omnia placentes. Walking worthy of God, in all things pleasing. ἀξίως τοῦ κυρίου εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρέσκειαν. Eph. 1. 17. we point thus, Deus Domini nostri Iesu Christi, pater gloriæ, as in the Greek, and S. Chrysostom and S. Hierom both in text and commentaries: which the Catholicke reader specially must marke, lest he finde fault when he seeth our translation disagree in such places from the poynting of his Latine Testament.

The margent reading sometime preferred before the text.

VVe translate sometime the word that is in the Latine Margent, and not that in the text, when by the Greek or the Fathers, we see it is a manifest fault of the writers heretofore, that mistook one word for another: as in fine, not in fide. 1. Pet. 3. v. 8. præsentiam, not præscientiam. 2. Pet. 1. 16. Heb. 13. latuerunt, not placuerunt.

Thus haue we endeuoured by all meanes to satisfie the indifferent reader, and to helpe his vnderstanding euery way both in the text, and by annotations: and withall to deale moſt ſincerely before God and Man, in tranſlating and expounding the moſt ſacred text of the Holy Teſtament. Farewel good Reader, and if we profit thee any whit by our paines, let vs for Gods ſake be partakers of thy deuout prayers, and together with humble and contrite heart call vpon our Sauiour Chriſt to ceaſe theſe troubles and ſtormes of his deareſt Spouſe: in the meane time comforting our ſelues with this ſaying of S. Auguſtine: That Heretickes, when they receiue power corporally to afflict the Church, do exerciſe her patience: but when they oppugne her onely by their euill doctrine or opinions, then they exerciſe her wiſedom, De Ciuit. Dei lib. 18. cap. 51.

The Anſwer to the 57. 58. 59. and 60. Sections.

CARTVV. That the Greek neuer fauoreth you, it ſhall euidently appeare, that there is no corruption vſed of M. Beza in either of theſe verſes let the reader look in their ſeueral places. To the reſt we anſwer nothing: as we do not vnto the next ſection, nor the next to it. For firſt it is known to all the world, that in both the Epiſtles to the Hebrewes, and Saint Iames: we acknowledge the holyeſt and higheſt authoritie that can be. Secondly, it ſhall appeare in the place, that wee keepe the boundes of modeſtie, in abſtaining to name the writer of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, whoſe name the holie Ghoſt hath concealed. Thirdly, not ſticking to name Saint Iames Epiſtle in our beſt tranſlations, Generall: it is well knowen, that both that title, is not giuen of the holy Ghoſt; but of the ſcholiaſt, which tooke it of Euſebius, and is not giuen, for a mark of further degree of holynes aboue other Epiſtles, but onely to note the difference of the other Epiſtles, written with greater reſtraint of perſon or place. Where theſe latter Epiſtles of Saint Iames, Peter, Iohn, and Iude, were directed to the Iewes, ſcattered in diuers countries and prouinces, whither they had been carried captiue: and therefore are called generall. Beſide that it were good for you, not to be bould with Euſebius in the title of Catholike: vnleſſe you will match Saint Iames moſt holy Epiſtle, with the Epiſtles of Denys Biſhop of Corinth, which Euſebius calleth Catholike, as hee doth Saint Iameſes. Euſebius therefore was not a fit author for this: eſpecially, if you had remembred, his raſh iudgement of Saint Iameſes Epiſtle. To the three next ſections, we anſwer nothing.

Euſeb. lib. 4. Hiſt. Eccleſ. Eccleſ. c. 22. 22. 23.

Euſeb. 2. lib. Hiſt. Eccleſ. 6. 23.

In the laſt, let (hardly) the reader iudge how they help his vnderſtanding euery way, which make plaine places rough, darken that which is lightſom by diſorder of ſentences, by vnwonted phraſe, by wordes fetcht from far countries, which their own countrie doth afford them off. And finallie, by doubtfull ſpeach, inclyning as well to that, which is not the meaning of the Scripture, as to that which is. And the way which is ſo plain and lightſome, that they can neuer make rough nor dark by their tranſlation: they do by their annotations vtterly peruert. And therefore we comfort our ſelues with this ſaying of the Apoſtle, that you ſhall proceede no further, for aſmuch as your madnes ſhall be known to all men.

1. The infallible authoritie and excellencie of them aboue all other writings.

S. Augustine lib. 11. cont. Faustum. cap. 5.

THE excellencie of the Canonicall authoritie of the Old and New Testament, is distincted from the bookes of latter writers: which being confirmed in the Apostles times, by the successions of Bishops, and propagations of Churches, is placed as it were in a certaine throne on high, whereunto every faithfull and godly understanding must be subiect and obedient. There, if any thing moue or trouble thee, as absurd, thou mayest not say, The authour of this booke held not the truth: but either the copie is faultie, or the translator erred, or thou understandest not. But in the workes of them that wrote afterward, which are contained in infinite bookes, but are in no case equall to that most sacred authoritie of Canonicall Scriptures: in which soeuer of them is found euen the same truth, yet the authoritie is farre unequall.

CARTVV.] Who would thinke that these men were of that kennell of the Iesuites, which affirme that the Scripture is unperfect, mangled, and maimed. And in that which the Scripture doth set forth; it is as a nose of waxe, giving no certaine nor unmoueable sentence, but which may be bent or bowed to any interpretation. In censur. Iesuitar. Colonienss. fol. 220.

Whereby they embase the authoritie of the holy Scripture, beneath the authoritie of many prophane writers: out of whom the iudgement of that they write may be so certainly gathered, and so necessarily concluded, as he that shall stand in the defence of it, shall be iudged worthier of a cudgell ratling about his bones, then of any further reason sounding in his eares: whereof the good Reader may easily perceiue, that howsoeuer their speeches of the scripture are sometime oylie, yet that their hearts are so filled with the hate and contempt thereof, that their mouthes must needs runne over with it. ibid. 117.

RHEM. 2. The discerning of Canonicall from not Canonicall, and of their infallible truth and sence, commeth unto us onely by the credit we giue to the Catholick Church; through whose commendation we beleeue both the Gospell and Christ himselfe: whereas the Sectaries measure the matter by their fansies and opinions.

S. Augustine cont. Epist. Fundament. cap. 5.

I for my part, would not beleeue the Gospell, unlesse the authoritie of the Catholicke Church moued me. They therefore whom I obeyed, saying, Beleeue the Gospell: why should I not beleeue them, saying, Beleeue not * Manichæus? Chuse whether thou wilt. If thou wilt say, beleeue the Catholickes: loe they warne me that I giue no credit unto you: and therefore beleeuing them, I must needs not beleeue thee. If thou say, Beleeue not the Catholickes: it is not the right way, by the Gospel to driue me to the faith of Manichæus, because I beleeued the Gospell it selfe by the preaching of the Catholickes. Luther, Calvin.

Againe, lib. de vtilit. credend. cap. 14.

I see that concerning Christ himselfe, I haue beleeued none, but the confirmed and assured opinion of peoples and nations: and that these peoples haue on every side possessed the mysteries of the Catholicke Church. Why should I not therefore most diligently require, specially among them, what Christ commanded, by whose authority I was moued to beleeue that Christ did command some profitable thing? wilt thou (O hereticke) tell me better what hee said? whom I would not thinke to haue been at all, or to be, if I must beleeue, because thou sayest it. What grosse madnesse is this, to say, Beleeue the Catholickes, that Christ is to be beleeued; and learne of us, what he said.

Thou ſeeſt then in this matter what force the authority of the Catholicke Church hath, which even from the moſt grounded and founded ſeats of the Apoſtles, is eſtabliſhed untill this day, by the line of Biſhops ſucceeding one another, and by the conſent of ſo many peoples. Whereas thou ſayeſt, This is Scripture, or, this is ſuch an Apoſtles, that is not; becauſe this ſoundeth for me, and the other againſt me. Thou then art the rule of truth, whatſoever is againſt thee, is not true.

How the the Scripture is known to be Scripture. Tertul. in Apolog.

CART. It is here truly verified, that Tertullian deridingly (as he might wel) ſpeaketh, If God pleaſe not man, he ſhall not be God: ſo that man muſt now be merciful to God, who muſt ſtand (as it were) at his curteſie: for as truely and certainly as God is God, ſo truely is the Scripture the Scripture. If therefore the Scripture be not the Scripture, unleſſe the Church doe finde it, it muſt follow, that God ſhall not be God, unleſſe the Church doe ſo allow him. Howbeit, let us conſider of this matter: whether there be any better or certainer way to know the Holy Scriptures by, then that whereof the Ieſuites ſpeake.

Authour. 2. Tim. 3. 16. 2. Pet. 1. 21

Wherein firſt the authour of the Scriptures commeth to be conſidered, which is marked out to be God, when it is ſaid, that the ſcripture is inſpired of God: And, that the men of God ſpake, being led by the holy ſpirit. Seeing therefore it is the writing of ſo cunning an Artificer, why ſhould it not bee diſcerned from the creatures writings, as well as the Creator is diſcerned from the creature.

There is no worke of God ſo baſe, but a reaſonable man doth eaſily diſcerne the excellencie of it from the higheſt and moſt excellent worke of any creature; and ſhould they not bee able to diſcerne of the moſt chiefeſt worke of the Lord, ſeeing the wiſedome and glory that ſparkleth in other workes, flameth out here in this? whereln if they anſwer, That men, having ſome capacitie in other things, haue not the ſame in the diſcretion of the Scriptures; we yeeld willingly. But as this incapacitie of theirs is not helped by this meditation of the author of the Scriptures: ſo is it not helped by the iudgement of the Church: ſaying that they be the Scriptures, which are indeed, untill the Spirit of God come to make either of them, or both together profitable.

Matter.

The matter alſo which it handleth, which the Apoſtle calleth the truth according to godlineſſe, doth eaſily ſever it from all other writings, and more certainly then the teſtimony of the Church. For beſide that the learnedeſt and moſt adviſed of the heathen writers, ſometimes ſtray from all manner of truth, even the Eccleſiaſticall writers, that profeſſe to write of the generall doctrine of faith and good maners, haue never yet been found to haue ſpun an even threed of truth, throughout all their writings: but here and there haue made their knots, whileſt ſometimes they breake from the truth, and ſometimes from themſelues.

Now when in the Scripture there is a continuall tenure, and equall levell of the truth in all places, never diſcontinued by any tracke of untruth, or broken off by any ſquare of contradiction: it is euident, that the holy Scriptures may bee eaſily diſcerned from the writings of all other men whatſoever.

Forme.

This is further proved by the forme and frame of ſpeech in the Scripture: which outwardly being homely, without all ſhew of ſtatelineſſe, yet being more inwardly conſidered (as things that are ſo renowned) haue a marvellous beautifull regard, and ſuch a maieſtie in them, as will aſtoniſh the beholder, which ſhall more neerely and more narrowly looke into them. Whither alſo belongeth, that in ſo few words, and the ſame alſo not farre ſought, but taken from the common uſe of ſpeech: it coucheth ſuch a deale of matter, as no pen of man is able in ſo ſmall roome to lodge, ſpecially with ſo great eaſe, and facilitie of ſpeech.

Whereupon we remember that it is ſome where written, That when a great learned Philoſopher had read the firſt ſentence onely of S. Iohns Goſpell: he cried out and ſaid, that this barbarous man, (ſo calling him, becauſe he was no Grecian) had ſhut up more in theſe few words, then many Philoſophers and orators had done in whole bookes.

Effect.

Moreover, the word of God hath ſuch an effect, and working in men, both in good and bad, as will eaſily ſort it and ſingle it from all mens words. For beſide that we read oft-times, that all learned and unlearned were aſtoniſhed at the Sermons of our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles; we may underſtand that the wicked and ungratefull Nazarites, which draue our Saviour Chriſt out of their towne, and would haue throwne him downe headlong from a ſteepe mountaine, had notwithſtanding given teſtimony to the gracious words that proceeded from him, which is nothing elſe but an acknowledgement of the truth of the words he ſpake. And the miniſters of the Phariſees, which were ſent to take Chriſt, albeit they remained ſtill in their Phariſaiſme; yet notwithſtanding confeſſed, that never man ſpake as he did, acknowledging the excellency of his words over all other that ever they heard.

Now when wicked men which haue onely the light of nature, are, through the effect and powerfull working thereof, able to put a difference between the word of God and that which is not: how much more ſhall the children of God diſcerne it, which feele the power and vertue thereof, in the marrow of their ſoules, changing and transforming them from the former vanity of their converſation: for the Apoſtle declareth, that it is evidently knowne to be the word of God, in that it bringeth forth fruit.

1. Theſſ. 2. 13.

Seeing therefore every faithfull man is able to diſcerne whether he bringeth forth fruit or no, he muſt conſequently be able to know whether it is the word which he hath beleeved or no. And if the ſheepe, which beſide that it (as all other bruit beaſts) is one of the ſimpleſt and witleſſe beaſts upon the earth, notwithſtanding is able to diſcerne the ſhepheards voyce from all other mens voyces, that are not their ſhepheard: how much more ſhall the children of God be able to diſcerne between the voyce of their ſhepheard, and all other, which are not onely partakers of reaſon, but of the heavenly wiſedome, ſurmounting all reaſon further then reaſon doth unreaſonableneſſe.

Iohn 10.

The Apoſtle ſaith, that the ſpirituall man diſcerneth all things. Hereof it is good (for the underſtanding of the ſimpler ſort) to put an example,

Let

Let therefore a ſentence of the Scriptures be propourded unto one that is not able to read; The Lord openeth his heart to beleeue it. That man, although he never before read it, nor reade it afterward; yet knoweth he reſolutely, and without all doubt, that it is the holy ſcripture. To the ſame man let there be propounded a ſentence out of Auguſtine, or ſome other whoſoever: Albeit he may probably thinke it is Auguſtines ſentence; yet not being able to read it, he ſhall never be able to come to an undoubted knowledge that it is his ſentence.

Antiquitie. To this queſtion belongeth the Ancienty of the Scriptures, knowen and confeſſed before all other writings of men, for ſome hundred yeares: ſo that the gray haires thereof are able to diſcern it.

Durableneſſe Likewiſe, the incorruption and durableneſſe thereof, that all other mens writings hauing been corrupted, and (in part) falling away: the Scriptures can neither be corrupted, nor fall away in any part or ſentence thereof. Whereof let the reader looke to the treatiſe before.

Sincerity. Againe, their ſingle and plaine ſincetitie, appearing manifeſtly in the Writers, who notwithſtanding that they knew that their monuments ſhould continue unto the worlds end, yet ſpare they neither their anceſtors nor their owne faults: but how foule ſoever they be, lay them open to the glory of God, and edification of the Church, partly in warning, partly in conſolation thereof.

Thoſe that be good Bankers or money changers, at the firſt ſight of the money know whoſe money it is, and whoſe image and ſuperſcription it beareth: and ſhould not we at the ſight of the Lords money, and hearing it ring in our eares, be able to diſcerne it from the copper money of other writings.

The penſill of Apelles, is eaſilie known from the penſill of a common painter, and the graving of Lucippus, is quickly diſcerned from all other gravings.

It is no hard matter, to diſcerne between Tullies and Saluſts, between Demoſtheneſſe and AEſchines writings. Ariſtarchus could ſay: this verſe is Homers, this is not: Seruius alſo, that this is Plautus, and this is not. And (in our dayes Eraſmus, had ſo quick a noſe, eſpecially in Hieroms work that he could ſay: this Hierom wrote, this he wrote not.

If therefore the excellencie of mens writings, that exceeded one another in ſome reaſonable ſort of gifts, bee (without difficultie) diſtinguiſhed, how much more may the works and writings of God, which infinitely ſurmount in all manner of grace, and dexterity, the works and writings of men be ſevered and ſundred from them. And if men be able to diſcerne the words, and works of men, of whoſe ſpirit they haue no part: how much more are the children of God able to diſcerne from all other, the words, and writings of God, of whoſe ſpirit, (by faith in Chriſt) they are made partakers.

Churches witneſſe of the Scriptures how Howbeit we deny not, but that the Churches witneſſe of the Scriptures, is profitable: when it witneſſeth a truth of them: yet neither is it ſo generall an argument as any of theſe, and divers others, that might be brought conſidering that it reacheth not to the infidels, & towards whom theſe haue place: neither hath it power to convince any, but onely to induce a probable opinion of the truth it witneſſeth. It is well known, (and afterward ſhall more at large appeare) that the Church whether it be conſidered in the councels, or in the fathers, may, and hath erred: and that in the point now ſpoken of. Some Councels, and fathers, excluding from the Canon of the Scriptures, that which otherſome do admit. And therfore the diſcretion of the truth in Gods matters eſpecially, is unadviſedly given to men, by nature lying, and after grace ſubiect to a lie: and the determination of the trueth, which can not deceiue, nor be deceived, to men which may doe, and ſuffer both.

For notwithſtanding that the Church cannot erre in her iudgement of the whole canons, (for then ſhe ſhould not be the Church of God, being no manner of way the piller of the trueth:) yet may ſhe, and hath erred in the canon of certaine books.

Church not aboue the Scripture. And if the Church, were (with her teſtimony) able to leaue a certain perſwaſion of the diſcretion of the canon, in the mind of him to whom ſhe will giue this teſtimonie: yet that which the Ieſuits would conclude hereof, that the authoritie of the Church, is greater then the authoritie of the Scripture doth not onely follow, but is out of meaſure abſurd and blaſphemous. It followeth not for ſo much as albeit Iohn Baptiſt bare a greater & certainer witnes of Chriſt, then the Church can doe of the Scriptures: as one that was immediatlie called thereunto, yet thereof it cannot be concluded, that the authority of Iohn Baptiſt was aboue the authoritie of Chriſt: neither is everie one that can giue certain notice to another, who is the king: forthwith of greater authoritie then the king himſelfe: nor he that keepeth the charters and roules of the Cittie, or witneſſeth of the lawfull making of them, is therefore to be iudged of more authoritie (for things compriſed in the writings, then the charters, and roules themſelues. It is alſo, (as was ſaid,) abſurd, and blaſphemous, for ſeing the Church is appointed to keepe the Law, ſhe cannot be the Iudge of the Law: but muſt iudge by the Law. And theſe things. Iames oppoſeth, as thoſe which cannot ſtand together, to obſerue the law, Iames 4. and to be iudge of the Law.

Againe, if it bee a ſhamefull diſorder in the houſe of a mortall man, that the voice of the wife ſhould be lowder then the voice of her husband, & beare more ſway: how much more is it a thing full of confuſion, and reproch, that in the houſe of the living God, the commandements, and word of Chriſt which is the husband, ſhould haue no further allowance, then the Church, which is the wife) will afford it? where it is ſo far from the Lord, to ſubmit his word to the iudgement of ſinfull men: that he will not haue the holy Angels to be iudges of it, whom he ſpareth not to curſe, Gal. 1. with an horrible curſe, if that they ſhould teach any other thing, then that it teacheth: thereby advauncing the authoritie of the word aboue the authoritie of all creatures in heauen and earth.

Nay, which is yet more, the ſonne of God himſelfe as he is mediator between God and us, and therefore more then a creature: will not haue the full authoritie of the word, to reſt and ſtay upon him, untill it come to the higheſt authoritie, which is, that it came from his father, and from the higheſt ſeat and court of glorie, that is in heaven and earth.

Hereof it cometh, that our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, That who ſo would doe the will of God ſhould know know whether the doctrine hee ſpeake were of himſelfe or of God. Alſo that I doe nothing of my ſelfe, but as my father hath taught, ſo I ſpeake: that my doctrine is not my doctrine, but the doctrine of him that ſent me. Alſo, that hee that receiveth you, receiveth me, and hee that receiveth mee, receiveth him that ſent me: likewiſe hee that contemneth you, contemneth me, and he that contemneth mee, contemneth him, that ſent mee.

Ioh. 7. 17. 18. 24. 32. 44. 50. Math. 10. Luk. 10. 16

Whereuppon roſe that worthie ſentence of Tertullian, of admitting that doctrine onely, which the Church received of the Apoſtles, they of Chriſt, Chriſt of God. Now if Chriſt, God and man, will not haue us, alone reſt our Salvation in his doctrine, further then, he delivereth that unto us, which he received of his father, and unles it be ſtayed upon the authoritie of God ſimply conſidered, without any mediation: what an untollerable arrogancie is it, to graunt, the authoritie of the Scripture, in the iudgement of the Church, ſo far inferiour to the mediatour.

Tertul. lib. de preſcript. adverſ. haret.

Auguſtine anſwered.

In the firſt teſtimony alleadged out of Auguſt. to proue the authoritie of the Church aboue that of the Scripture: Obſerue firſt the compoſition of the word, which ſignifieth to moue with other things: whereby Auguſtine giveth to underſtand, that the authoritie of the Church, moved him to beleeue the Goſpell, but moved him not alone, without any other conſiderations.

Commoniſſet

Secondly, there is manifeſt iniury done to Auguſt. whileſt that, which he ſpake of himſelfe, not fully converted, is drawen, and haled to that time, wherein he was of ſound and ſetled iudgement in Chriſtianitie, what time it is manifeſt, that he was of another iudgement, for thus hee writeth. That we being made more ſtrong in faith, may be meet to underſtand that we beleeue, not now men, but God himſelfe, eſtabliſhing, and inlightning our mind inwardly. Thirdly, he ſpeaketh not of the Churches authoritie ſimply, but compared with the authority of Manichem, to whom there was no cauſe that he ſhould giue the credit, he did unto the Church as it appeareth by the words following the ſame place which they alledge, for unto Manichem ſaying, that Auguſtine did well to beleeue the Church, praiſing the Goſpel, but that he did not wel to beleeue it, diſpraiſing him: Auguſtine anſwereth thus: Doeſt thou think that I am ſo fooliſh as to beleeue what thou wilt, or not to beleeue that which thou wilt not without any reaſon given. Thereby, noting that if Manichem had brought any good reaſon, contrarie to the iudgement of the Church, he would haue beleeved him, notwithſtanding of the iudgement of the Church againſt him, which is yet further manifeſt by that he addeth, that if Manichem had brought authoritie out of Scripture, hee would neither haue beleeved the Church nor him where he uſeth this cõnection, but God forbid that I ſhould not beleeue the Goſpel giving therby to underſtand, that hee made greater conſcience of not beleeving the Goſpell, then of not beleeving the Church.

Whether Auguſtine in other places uſeth not this compound for the ſimple.

Aug. contra epiſt. Fundament. cap. 14 Contra epiſt. fundament. cap. 5.

Gerſon de vita ſpirit. & anim. lect. 2. corrolar.

And if this will not ſtop their wide throats, yet let them beleeue their own doctor, who declaring that the primitiue Church, of thoſe which ſaw Chriſt, heard him, and were his witneſſes, is of greater authoritie then the Church in theſe dayes, affirmeth that in thoſe words of Auguſtine [I had not beleeved the Goſpel unleſſe the Church had moved me thereunto] he taketh the Church for the primitiue Church, and that Aſſembly which ſaw and heard Chriſt, ſo that if the Church had ſuch authoritie, as they pretend out of theſe words, yet their credite (by their owne doctor) oweth not to the Church of Chriſt, in theſe dayes much leſſe to the Popiſh Church.

The next place de Vtilitate credendi, chap. 14. receiveth the ſame anſwer as that which hath the ſame meaning, whereupon he ſaith, toward the end of the chapter: beleeue (ſaith the Hereticke) that which is written; to whom Auguſtine anſwereth, but if any new writing not heard of, bee brought or commended by a few without reaſon, credit is not given to that, but to them that brought it forth. So that he driveth to this, that where the matter hangeth upon the authoritie of perſons, and not to the ground of reaſon: that there the Churches authoritie muſt be preferred.

In the third place, there being the ſame ſenſe, that is in the other two, it hath the ſame anſwer with them, for to the hereticke ſaying, the book is falſified, he willeth him to bring a true. If ſaith Auguſtine, he do bring one, your adverſarie crying out that not in part, but in the whole, it is falſe: whither can you turne your ſelfe. And thereupon bringeth in theſe words alleadged by the Ieſuits. Whereby it is evident, that ſtill he ſhewes the Churches authority, balanced with the hereticks, but of the ſimple authoritie of the Scripture, he ſpeaketh thus immediately: If there be queſtion of the truth of the copies, as in ſome there are certaine varieties of ſentences, which are few, and well known to divines: our doubts may bee decided, either by books of other countries, from whence the doctrine came, or if they varie there alſo, let the greateſt number of copies bee preferred to the leſſe, and the elder to the latter. And if yet the varietie be doubtfull, let the tongue from whence it was firſt turned, be conſulted with. Thus they ſeeke, which deſire to find that which moveth ſcruple in the holy Scriptures, which are confirmed, with ſo great authoritie. If therefore when the queſtion is, of one onely ſentence in the Scriptures: Auguſtine will not haue men runne to the authoritie of the Church for the deciſion thereof: much leſſe would he haue men depend on her authoritie, for the whole body of the holy Scripture.

But this cauſe is more largely handled in another place, where Auguſtine ſearching how a Gentile or heathen man ſhould be brought to the profeſſion of the Goſpell aſſigneth this to be the beſt, and moſt effectuall notice, if certaine of the old prophecies of the Scriptures, being laid out before his eyes the true and certaine accompliſhment of them, be compared with them. And doubteth not but upon the view and compariſon of the one with the other. i. of the prophecies with the evident, and notorious accompliſhment of them, hee will bee greatly mooved, to beleeue the trueth of the Scriptures.

Aug. contra Fauſtũ Manich. lib. 13. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 33. 4.

In all which diſcourſe of his', to bring a man to know, which bee the ſcriptures, hee maketh no manner mention, of the authoritie of the Church. And in another place he declareth, that whether the queſtion be of Chriſt, of the Church, or of whatſoever thing elſe, which belongeth to faith, and to our life: he is accurſed, that even announceth any thing beſide that, which is in the ſcriptures of the law and the Goſpell. And if every queſtion, is to bee defined by the Scriptures; then this alſo, whether the Scriptures be the Scriptures? To this queſtion agreeth that of Theodoret, that the Evangelicall, Apoſtolicall, and propheticall Oracles, doe plainly inſtruct us, by a touch, or feeling of their maieſtie, or divine power. Likewiſe that which Euſebius writeth of Clements bookes, reputed of antiquitie to be Apochrypha, becauſe they had not the right marke of the Apoſtolicall doctrine. Where note, that his workes were reiected from the canon. Not by the bare authoritie of the Church, but upon good and ſubſtantiall reaſon that it brought. Hiſtor. lib. 3. cap. 7. Lib. 3. 16.

RHEM. 3. No hereticks haue right to the Scriptures, but are uſurpers: the Catholick Church being the true owner and faithfull keeper of them. Hereticks abuſe them, corrupt them, and utterly ſeeke to aboliſh them, though they pretend the contrary.

Tertullian lib. de præſcriptionibus, bringeth in the Catholicke Church ſpeaking thus to all Hereticks.

Who are you, and from whence came you? what do you in my poſſeſſion, that are none of mine? by what right (Marcion) doſt thou cut down my wood? who gaue thee licence, (O Valentine) to turne the courſe of my fountaines? by what authoritie (Apelles) doſt thou remoue my bounds? and * you the reſt why doe you ſow and ſeed for theſe companions at your pleaſure? It is my poſſeſſion, I poſſeſſe it of old, I haue aſſured origins thereof, even from thoſe authours whoſe the thing was. I am heire of the Apoſtles. As they provided by their Teſtament, as they committed it to my credit, as they adiured me, ſo do I hold it. You ſurely they diſherited alwayes, and haue caſt you off, as ſtrangers, as enemies. O Luther, Zuinglius, Caluin. * The ſchollers and followers.

Againe in the ſame booke.

Encountring with ſuch by ſcriptures, availeth nothing, but to overturne a mans ſtomacke or his braine. This hereſie receiveth not certaine Scriptures: and if it do receiue ſome, yet by adding and taking away, it perverteth the ſame to ſerue their purpoſe: and if it receiue any, it doth not receiue them wholy: and if after a ſort it receiue them wholy, nevertheleſſe by diviſing divers expoſitions, it turneth them cleane another way, &c.

CARTW. To your third point we anſwer: that untill you be grieved for your hereſie it cannot grieue us, to heare you pronounce ſentence againſt your ſelues. for the uniuſt claime you make unto the poſſeſſion of the Scriptures.

RHEM. 4. Yet do they vaunt themſelues of Scriptures exceedingly, but they are never the more to be truſted for that.

S. Hierome adverſus Luciferanos in fine.

Let them not flatter themſelues, if they ſeeme in their owne conceit to affirme that which they ſay, out of the chapters of Scripture: whereas the Diuell alſo ſpake ſome things out of the Scriptures, and the Scriptures conſiſt not in the reading, but in the underſtanding.

Vincentius Lirinenſis lib. cont. Prophanas hæreſium Nouationes.

Here perhaps ſome man may aske, whether Hereticks alſo uſe not the teſtimony of divine ſcripture? Yes indeed do they, and that vehemently: For thou ſhalt ſee them flie thorow every one of the ſacred bookes of the Law, thorow Moyſes, the bookes of the Kings, the Pſalmes, the Apoſtles, the Goſpels, the Prophets. For, whether among their owne fellows, or ſtrangers; whether privately, or publikely: whether in talke, or in bookes; whether in bankets or in the ſtreets; they (I ſay) alleadge nothing of their owne, which they endeavour not to ſhadow with the words of ſcripture alſo. Reade the workes of Paulus Samoſatenus, of Priſcillian, of Eunomian, of Iouinian, * of the other plagues and peſtilences; thou ſhalt finde an infinite heape of examples, no page in a manner omitted or void, which is not painted and coloured with the ſentences of the New or Old Teſtament. But they are ſo much the more to be taken heede of, and to be feared; the more ſecretly they lurke under the ſhadows of Gods divine Law. For they know their ſtinckes would not eaſily pleaſe any man almoſt, if they were breathed out nakedly and ſimply themſelues alone: and therefore they ſprincle them as it were with certaine precious ſpices of the heavenly Word, to the end that he which would eaſily deſpiſe the errour of man, may not eaſily contemn the Oracles of God. So that they doe like unto them, which when they will prepare certaine bitter potions for Children, doe firſt annoint the brimmes of the cup with hony, that the unwary age, when it ſhall firſt feele the ſweetneſſe, may not feare the bitterneſſe. Of Calvin of Iuel, of the reſt.*

CARTW. To the fourth wee anſwer, that your concluſion of that which Ierome and Vincentius ſay, that the Divell and Hereticks uſe of the Scriptures is childiſh. And unleſſe you will conclude that all thoſe that uſe the Scriptures are Hereticks, it is utterly vaine. Diuels and Hretikes uſe Scripture, but not onely.

If you ſay that Hereticks appeale to the Scriptures alone, which the Catholikes do not. Firſt you ſay an untruth, ſeeing you may remember him that complained he was reiected with the Fathers. Dioſcorus conſil. calcedon. Act. 3.

Secondly you ſay more then Lirinenſis doth, nay he ſaith the cleane contrary, as that the Scripture alone is ſufficient againſt Hereticks, if it be taken in the right ſence. And albeit, before hee ſpeaketh of the tradition of the Catholike Church: yet thereby he meaneth not unwritten verities, but the right expoſition of the ſcriptures, made by the paſtors and teachers of the Church. For otherwiſe how can the Scriptures alone be a perfect and ſufficient rule againſt the hereticks, if it neede the ſupply of unwritten verities. Wherefore you are like to him that having arrowes to ſhoot at the armed enemy, ſpent them vainely in ſhooting at birds. And we feare not (with a holy vaunt) even to vaunt our ſelues in the Goſpell and Scriptures of God, as in the ſword, which neuer faileth to bring us home a ſpoyle and a prey from you, as oft as we ioyne battell with you. Philoſtorg.

RHEM. 5. The cauſe Why, the Scriptures being perfect, yet we uſe other Eccleſiaſticall Writings and traditions,

* So hee calleth the Churches ſenſe, and the fathers interpretation of Scriptures. * Otherwiſe Wickliffe, Luther, Caluin, Puritanes.

Heere ſome men perhaps may aske, Foraſmuch as the Canon of the Scriptures is perfect, and in all poynts very ſufficient in it ſelfe, what need is there to ioyne thereunto the authority of the * Eccleſiaſticall underſtanding? For this cauſe ſurely; for that all take not the holy Scripture in one and the ſame ſenſe, becauſe of the deepneſſe thereof: but the ſpeeches thereof ſome interpret one way, and ſome another way, ſo that there may almoſt as many ſenſes be picked out of it as there bee men. For Nouatian doth expound it one way, and Sabellius another way, otherwiſe Donatus, otherwiſe Arius, Eunomius, Macedonius, otherwiſe Photinus, Apollinaris, Priſcillianus, otherwiſe Iouinian, Pelagius, Celeſtius; and laſtly, otherwiſe Neſtorius. * And therefore very neceſſary it is, becauſe of ſo great windings and turnings of diverſe errours, that the line of Propheticall and Apoſtolicall interpretation bee directed according to the rule of the Eccleſiaſticall or Catholick ſenſe or underſtanding.

S. Baſil lib. de ſpiritu ſancto. cap. 27.

Of ſuch Articles of religion as are kept and preached in the Church, ſome were taught by the written Word, other ſome we haue received by the tradition of the Apoſtles, delivered unto us as it were from hand to hand in myſtery ſecretly: both which be of one force to Chriſtian religion: and this no man will deny that hath any little skill of the Eccleſiaſticall rites or cuſtomes. For if wee goe about to reiect the cuſtomes not contained in Scriptures, as being of ſmall force, we ſhall unwittingly and unawares mangle the Goſpell it ſelfe in the principall parts thereof, yea rather wee ſhall abridge the very preaching of the Goſpell, and bring it to a very bare name.

Scriptures how to be underſtood.

CARTW. If an hard and difficult place of the Scripture be offered unto us, the firſt and principall thing to be done, is, to haue our recourſe unto God by prayer. So Rebecca being in doubt what myſtery it ſhould be, that the two children ſtroue (otherwiſe then the courſe of nature ſuffered) in her wombe, firſt of all made her prayer unto God. The ſame did Cornelius when hee was in doubt whether ſide was more agreeable to the Scripture: that which kept the ceremonies of the Law ſtill, or that which embraced the doctrine of the Goſpell. This alſo did the Church that continued at Babylon, and in thoſe parts (by the Ambaſſadours) practiſe, when there roſe a doubt: whether they ſhould continue their ſet faſts, which they had obſerued the ſeuenty yeares of the captiuity or no. For ſeeing God is the author of the Scripture: it is cleare that none can know his minde, but he to whom he will reueale it: for if one man cannot know an other mans minde, further then he will make it knowne unto him: much leſſe can a man know Gods minde, unleſſe hee will communicate it with him. And thus far we ſuppoſe, the Ieſuites will goe with us. But this being done, whither ſhall a man goe to haue the underſtanding of that hee prayeth for? Here the Ieſuits runne to the Fathers and the Churches interpretation. Aske them by what authority? They alleadge Vincentius Lirinenſis, and Baſil, to whom it ſhall be anſwered afterward. In the meane ſeaſon, they ſhall heare an other iudgement ſtayed upon other manner of pillers then theirs. To come therefore to our former examples; Rebecca after ſhee had prayed went to aske counſaile of the Lord: which is as much as if it were ſaid, ſhe went to the Prophet of God: and in likelihood (as Aben Ezra iudgeth) to Abraham her father in law. Cornelius after he had prayed, was directed to the inſtruction of the Apoſtle Peter. The Churches Ambaſſadours likewiſe after their prayers in the Temple, are directed to goe to the Prieſts and Prophets that were in Ieruſalem. Heere firſt Rebecca (eſpecially by reaſon of the children in her wombe, bearing the figure of the Church, being in doubt) ſeeketh to a greater authority then was in her; which is the authority of the Word, in the mouth of the Prophets. In the ſecond, Cornelius doubting of the authority of both partes, whereof one notwithſtanding he knew to be the true Church, is directed for the deciſion of his doubt, to neither of them, but is ſent to Peter, the mouth likewiſe of God. Now if the Ieſuites ſay, that that which Abraham was to Rebecca in her doubt, and that which Peter was to Cornelius in his; that is now the iudgement of the Church, in her Biſhops, Fathers, and Councels. They ſay that which never good Biſhops, Fathers, or Councels ſaid of themſelues. All which either confeſſe that they haue erred, or elſe haue prayed for pardon of their errors in the matters they handled: or at leaſt haue acknowledged ſuch a breach and decay in them, as if they did not erre in matters that fell into their diſcourſe, yet were they within the danger of errour, which point is afterward Acts 15. and in other places diſputed more at large.

1 By Prayer. Gen. 25. Act. 10. 9. Zach. 7.

1. Cor. 2.

2 Conference with the Prophets. Gen. 25.

Acts. 10. Zach. 7.

Now when neither theſe together, nor no one of them apart could fall either into the Prophet that Rebecca asked counſell at; or to Peter to whom Cornelius was directed: the Ieſuits ought to be aſhamed to match the authority of the Church in her Biſhops, Fathers and Councels, with the authority either of the holy Prophets or Apoſtles.

But this will notably appeare in the third example of the Churches Ambaſſage: for in that the Ambaſſadours of the Church, being ſent to the Prieſts and to the Prophets, are firſt directed to the ordinary meanes, viz. to the Prieſts, according to that which Moyſes had provided in ſuch a caſe. Now this ordinary authority of that Church in her Prieſts, anſwereth (by the Ieſuites owne iudgement) to the ordinary authority the Church hath in her Biſhops, Fathers and Counſailes: but if the ordinary miniſtery of the Prieſts was not able to reſolue them in this doubt, they had commiſſion to proceede further, to conſult with the Prophets, as with Gods owne mouth. And that this was the manner of proceeding, appeareth evidently, for that the anſwere to the queſtion was not giuen by the Prieſts, as by thoſe that being nor able to anſwer, in likelihood ſent them to the Prophets: but it was given by the Prophet Zacharie, who had freſhly receiued an anſwer from God touching that queſtion. Whereby it appeareth, that vnleſſe you will ſay, that God in his graces to the Church under the Goſpell is cloſer handed, then to that under the law: it muſt needs follow, that for determining of controuerſies, there is an higher and more certaine authority, then is the authority of the Church.

Deut. 17.

Moreover

Moreouer that this crowne of peereleſſe authority, which in times paſt ſtood upon the heads of the Apoſtles and Prophets, was neuer tranſlated to the Church, but is with great ſolemnity put vpon the holy Scripture, that all the powers and crafts of hell are not able to remoue it, may eaſily appeare by that which Peter teacheth: for he having ſpoken of the teſtimony that God the Father (in the holy Mount) gaue to his ſonne from heauen, and of the witneſſe that hee and certaine of his fellows gaue of him, according as they had heard the ſame, ſetteth for the continuall direction of the Church, in place both of Gods owne Teſtimony, and their witneſſe: the Propheticall word which he ſoone after calleth the Propheticall Scripture; as a light whereto they are to take heede in in all their darke and doubtfull waies: and that they ſhould neuer ſuffer themſelues to bee carried away from the triall that is by the Scripture, to any, either earthly, or eccleſiaſticall iudgement, or interpretation of it, untill our Saviour Chriſt came: he addeth, that it is of no priuate interpretation, whereby what hee meaneth, hee declareth in the next verſe, where hee ſheweth the reaſon of his ſaying; namly, that it muſt be interpreted as it was written, and by as high authority. Seeing therefore it was firſt ſpoken by holy men, which ſpake as they were lead by the holy Spirit, and were inſpired of God, it followeth, that it muſt be interpreted by the ſame authority. Whereupon it is evident, that all that, is private interpretation, which is not drawne from that authority which the Prophets ſpake with, and which is not out of the publicke Notaries that God himſelfe immediatly appointed. But that authority is not now in man, but in the Scripture: the Scriptures therefore are authenticall, and able to authoriſe the interpretation of the Church. The interpretation therefore that is brought out of the Apoſtles and Prophets, is not private, although it bee auowed by one man onely. On the other ſide, that interpretation which is not brought from thence, although it haue the allowance of whole generall Counſels, is but private. We deny not but the Church is the Interpreter of the Scripture, and that a man may ſafely reſt in the interpretation of the Church ſo farre foorth as appertaineth to a ſufficient knowledge of the way of Salvation. For the true Church layeth the grounds of her doctrine out of the Scripture. And therefore as the bare authority of the Church is an inducement to the truth: ſo her iudgement being accompanied with ſubſtantiall proofes out of the Scripture, is able to ſettle the faith of Gods children. In which caſe, they leane not upon the credit of the Church, but upon the Scripture which the Church bringeth.

Scripture to be interpreted by Script. 2. Pet. 1.

Private interpretation.

But heere it is to be obſerved, that as we deſpiſe not the iudgement of the Church in her Teachers, that are dead, but eſteeme them according to the graces that ſhine in their writings: ſo wee dare boldly affirme, that their writings (how excellent and true ſoeuer) are not the ordinary Interpreters of the preſent Churches; nor the beſt meanes to perſwade us in that point of Religion whereof we may haue conceiued doubt; For when the Church is the Piller of the truth in her Miniſtery eſpecially: the dead being neither Paſtors nor Doctors, giuen of Chriſt for the building of the Church, cannot haue that bleſſing in their writings, towards the building of it, as hath the liuely voice of the Paſtors and Doctors: albeit were the Fathers writings more learned then the teaching of thoſe that liue. So that unleſſe the writings of the Fathers were either perpetuall, or Apoſtolicall, we may well ſay of them, as the Apoſtle Paul ſaith of David, as touching his Princelike gouernement: That they ſerued their time. And if the Prophets and Apoſtles writings (although inſpired) haue not (ordinarily) power to perſwade to the truth, unleſſe they be laid open by the liuely voice of the Churches Miniſtery: how much leſſe are mens writings, which may not bee preached able to lighten them, which cannot ſee or ſtay the heart of them that are wavering.

Iudgement of the fathers in expounding the Scriptures, their vſe ſeriours to the preſent Paſtors. Act. 13.

Which thing is yet more evident, in that all men being bound to heare their Paſtors and Doctors, as the ordinance of God, provided to ſaue: ſo no man is neceſſarily bound to reade the writings of the Fathers. And therefore the Papiſts which call ſo much for the Churches iudgement, do ignorantly place the ſame in the Fathers and Councels of elder times, as thoſe that haue no ordinary calling to expound the Scriptures to the Church, by any of thoſe gifts or offices which the Apoſtle teacheth to be given of God, to bring us to the unity of the truth; which we write not, as though we had them not ſtanding, much neerer unto us then to our aduerſaries, eſpecially in the principall and fundamentall controverſies betweene us. But that wee may know who are the principall Maſons, that Chriſt the Arch-builder hath ordayned for the building of the ſpirituall houſe, which is his Church. And that wee may know that this exhortation to the cloſe cleaving to the Scriptures, without any ſeperation from them, by any man or mens expoſition whatſoeuer, belongeth moſt properly to this cauſe: he addeth the reaſon of this carefull exhortation of taking heede to the Scriptures; That falſe Teachers ſhall come amongſt them, which ſhall bring in pernicious hereſies: noting thereby, that in the determination of ſuch controverſies, we ſhould not ſuffer our faith and iudgement to be ſubdued and lead away by the faith and iudgement of any man, but onely of the Scriptures.

2. Pet. 2.

And this is a principall meaning of our Sauiour Chriſt, when he willeth that we ſhould call no man Father or Maſter in the earth: that is, in that matter of Doctrine, we ſhould depend upon the authority of no man, nor of all men in the earth, but onely upon Chriſt and upon God.

Mat. 23.

Againe, when as after all diligence and travell beſtowed to finde out the truth of the matter which is doubted of; there is no fruit nor remainder but vexation of ſpirit, unleſſe the Spirit of God open our eyes, that we may ſee that which is hid from us: whether ſhall we think that ſpirit of God, will rather work by his own words, or by the words of ſome other, eſpecially ſeeing Gods promiſe is, that his word and ſpirit ſhall goe together.

And if men take more pleaſure, to work with their own tooles, rather then with other mens in whoſe inſtruments, notwithſtanding, there is untowardneſſe more or leſſe, for the work whereto they are ordained. How much more ought we to underſtand that the holy Ghoſt, will uſe his own inſtruments, which he hath ſo fitted, for giving underſtanding to the ſons of men, as the perfection hereof, ſtandeth in this, that it remaineth whole, as it is without addition, detraction or alteration.

Againe

Again, the Apoſtle doth as well enable the holy Scripture to convince the aduerſary as to teach the friend. Which ability they vtterlie take from it, which will haue the Churches iudgement, to be the finall end of controverſies. This force, and ſtrength of the holy Scripture, is euidently ſeen, in the example of S. Paul, who out of the Scripture diſputed againſt the Iewes, opening to them that Chriſt muſt dye and riſe againe: and that Ieſus whom he preached was Chriſt.

2. Tim. 3.

The ſame is ſaid of Apollos, that he convinced the Iewes by the Scriptures that Ieſus was Chriſt. Here therefore, (upon ſuch notable vertues, and effects, of the holy Scriptures, to all neceſſarie purpoſes) mee thinks the Scriptures may iuſtly renew the old complaint of our Saviour Chriſt. To whom will you go from me? to what, or whoſe writing? is there any thing you want, whereof I cannot make the ſupply? For indeed, when a man goeth from the authoritie of the Scripture, to depend upon the authority of man or men: what elſe doth he, but either depart from light to darknes, or at leaſt, from a pure light, without mixture, to a light which dwelleth with darkeneſſe, and is ſhadowed therewith? what elſe, but either goeth from the cleere fountaine water to a filthy puddle, or at leaſt, to a water that is through the remnant of the filth, which cleaveth ſtill to mens feete, ſomewhat troubled & diſordered? finally, what is it, but to frame the rule to the ſtone, not the ſtone to the rule.

Wherefore after prayer, (as is before ſaid) men muſt uſe the means of arts which God hath left for noble helpes to try the truth by.

3 How a text is to be conſidered in it ſelfe.

Here firſt the grammer of the place in controverſie muſt be ſifted, and herein firſt the nature of everie word by it ſelfe, and then the alteration that it admitteth in the diverſitie of conſtruction: after the rhetoricke of the place is to be peruſed, whether any word, leaving the proper ſignification, receiveth a borrowed: which is argued, when the proper ſignification will not be borne by the analogie of doctrine, or cannot frame with the circumſtance of the place. Aboue all, the Logicke of that place is narrowlie & exactly to be conſidered, as to know what he proveth, and by what: to conſider whether he holdeth the naturall order of reaſoning, or whether (by ſome diſplacing of parts) he fideth Art.

Conſidered by compar.

After to compare it, with ſome place of Scripture, and eſpecially (if it may bee) with ſome other of the ſame, either Apoſtle or prophet, or from whom the doubt riſeth. Not to forget to haue a ſingular eye to the fiue books of Moſes, which containe ſhortly, the whole doctrine of the Law and of the Goſpell: to call (if we be able) the queſtion in hand to ſome of thoſe bookes: then in diſcourſe of our minds to runne through the prophets, to ſee how thy haue expounded that part of the Law; ſo to come to the new Teſtament, as they did unto the Law.

Ieſom. 3. lib. cap. 12. Contra Donat. de bapt. De natur. gra. cap. 6. Lib. 3. cap. 2 contra epiſt. Parmen. Lib. ad Conſtant.

Neither haue the fathers been ſilent altogether in this queſtion, for Ireneus affirmeth, that demonſtrations out of the Scriptures cannot be ſhewed, or certainly argued but out of the Scriptures theſelues. Auguſtine ſaith, That the canonicall Scripture out of the old and new Teſtament is to be preferred to all the biſhops letters that come after the Scriptures. And otherwhere hee ſaith, That hee is free in all other writings, to conſent or no, onely hee is bound, without all refuſall, to giue his conſent to the canonicall ſcripture: which declareth evidentlie, that he tooke not himſelfe bound, to the ſentence or decree of the Church or Councels. Laſt of all, to ſet out the authoritie that the Scriptures hath in deciding controverſies, hee compareth the Scripture with a iuſt paire of balances, whoſe propertie is to ſhew the difference of weight of one thing from another.

Cyril. Hiero. catech. 4.

Hillary complayning of the diverſitie of iudgement in the Church and Councels, becauſe one Councell will allow of Homouſion, another will haue it kept in ſilence: and repenting of the Decrees, defended them; defending them, did accurſe them, ever condemning either others in their owne; or their owne in others: at the laſt, as the remedy, he ſaith to the Emperour; Inſomuch as I admire thee (O Emperour of a bleſſed and religious will) deſiring a faith onely according to thoſe things that are written: and altogether worthily doeſt thou make haſte to thoſe Oracles of the onely ſonne of God, that the breaſt capable of the Emperours care, might be full of the conſcience of divine ſayings: he that reſuſeth this is Antichriſt, which frameth it is an Anathema.

Another alſo writeth thus, Neither doe thou ſimplie beleeue mee, unleſſe thou receiue demonſtration of theſe which are ſaid out of the Scriptures, for this health of our faith, is not of the ſharpeneſſe of word: but demonſtration of the Scriptures.

Now where the Ieſuites will (happelie) ſay, that the controverſie cannot thus be compoſed, becauſe that both parties will ſtill giue out that each mans iudgement is beſt warranted by the word: wee haue to underſtand that when the trueth is plainelie and evidentlie layed out and errour ſtreightlie and mightelie overthrowen, thoſe that are of God, doe heare the word of God, and diſcerne between the holie and prophane. And as for the wicked being convinced and condemned in their own conſcience: howſoever they continue blaring out their tongues, and wrangling againſt the trueth, they (as the Apoſtle ſaith) are to bee let alone. Wherefore touching, the faithfull if anie man bee ſpirituall let him know that theſe bee the commandements of God, but of the obſtinate hee ſaith, if any man bee ignorant let him bee iguorant ſtill: and in another place, if anie man bee filthie let him bee filthie ſtill. And if they will ſpeake evill of the trueth, being ſo evidentlie convinced: they will much more deſpiſe and make a mocke of it, when it hath nothing to leane upon but the baſe and naked ſaying of the Church.

Ioh. 8. Tit. 3. 1 Cor. 14. Apoc. 22.

Vſe of Fathers.

Albeit, our meaning is not to make light of the elder Churches helpe in her graue fathers, learned Biſhops and adviſed Councels: by whom good helpes may bee furniſhed, to defray the coſts, that ſuch a great and weighty cauſe will put the Church unto. For their writings and ſpeeches (they being godlie learned, and travailed in the Scripture) by comparing and examining their light with the light of the Scriptures, cannot but further us in this affaire. But our meaning is, that neither the greateſt labour in ſearching, ſhould be beſtowed in them, but in the Scriptures: and that their iudgement ſhould not be received, without they haue paſſed the true touchſtone of the Scripture.

And finally that they ſhould not bee the authenticall intepreters of the ſpeeches or queſtions that may ſeeme hard in the Scriptures, but that ſeing men haue leaue to expound their darke ſayings, by other more plainer speach, the Spirit of God should not bee shut out from this libertie, but that which he may seeme to haue spoken somewhat darkelie in one place, he may cleere in another.

Now to the testimonie of Lirinensis. Where first let it bee obserued, that his golden booke and present sentence, affirming the canonicall Scripture to bee perfect and sufficient in it selfe: proueth that many of your books, and sentences (blaspheming that the Scripture is unperfect, mangled, and maimed) to be copporous and leaden.

Secondlie Lirinensis, seemeth not so well to haue weighed the great valew of his own words, of perfect and sufficient in it selfe. For either of them argueth apparantlie, such wealth and contentment, as hath no need of any other.

Thirdly we answer out of Lirinensis, that he will neither haue alwayes, nor all heresies to be impugned by gathering of the fathers sentences: but onely those that first rose, or ever the hereickes (for shortnes of time) could falsifie the rules of the old faith: and before that (through processe of time) the poison spreading it selfe further abroad, they went about to corrupt the volumes of the ancient fathers. But hæresies being enlarged, and with long time festered, are not to be set upon by this way of alledging the consent of the fathers, for as much as (through a long tract of time) there hath been great opportunitie given them, to steale away the truth: whereby it is evident, that Lirinensis would not haue the controversies of these dayes, wherein the old monuments of the fathers and counsels, are greatlie corrupted, to bee decided by the uniforme iudgements, and consent of the old writers, and therefore to be done by the Scripture, through the ordinarie ministerie which God hath called. Vinc. Lirinens. contra hæres.

Touching Basil first it is here to bee obserued, that this sentence here ascribed to Basil, is directlie contrarie to Lirinensis, which affirmeth, that the canonicall Scripture, is perfect and sufficient in it selfe: where this sentence of Basil maketh it a bare name of the Gospell, without custome and traditions.

Secondlie, the censure of Erasmus, of the latter end of the booke (where this sentence is conteined) is to be obserued: the summe whereof is, that it hath another phrase, another author, and another Spirit, from that in the former part of the booke: that many things are mingled from the purpose, many things, (through forgetfulnesse) are repeated. The truth of whose censure, doth evidentlie appeare by the true Basil: for where this counterfeit affirmeth, that there is a like authoritie of the Scripture, and tradition, which he calleth also customes, the true Basil saith the customes are to bee reiected, and that we must stand to the doctrine, which is inspired of God. And where this counterfet saith, that both the Scriptures, and the mysteries (wherof there is no mention in the Scriptures) ought to be received: the true Basil hath, that it is a manifest fall from the faith, and an evident fault of pride, either to refuse any thing of that which the Scripture hath, or to bring in any thing which it hath not. The same in another place, asketh whether it bee profitable, that the new come to the faith, should forthwith learne the Scriptures, answereth that it is necessarie, and agreable that everie one should learn out of the scripture as much as is necessarie, both for the full certificate, that he may haue of godlines, or religion, and that he acquaint not himselfe with the tradition of men. And to say the truth, what need had Basil here in proving the diuinitie of the holie Ghost, to flie unto secret and unwritten mysteries, as if he were ignorant that the Scriptures did richlie furnish all manner of armour, wherewith he might fight that battaile against the enemies of the H. Ghost whatsoeuer: or that he was ignorant, that the cause should haue received great disgrace, if it had not had sufficient maintenance in the scripture without the support of tradition. And unlesse also they will wrest these words they alledge: they cannot draw them well further then to such customes, and traditions, as not being in so many words found in the Scripture, are notwithstanding for their substance) conteined in the Scripture, for uppon occasion, that certaine of the Greeks, could not beare these words: Glorie to the Father, Sonne, and to the Holy Ghost, for that they were not in the Scripture; he fell into this treatise of traditions. Erasm. in Epist. dedicat. in suam & propriam hujus lib. versi. Basil. epist. 80. In regn. contract. quæst. 95.

The Summe of the new Testament.

THat which was the Summe of the old Testament, to wit, Christ and his Church, as S. Augustine saith cathechizing the ignorant, The verie same is the Summe of the new Testament also. For (as the same S. Augustine saith againe) In the Old Testament there is the occultation of the new, and in the new Testament there is the manifestation of the Old: And in another place: In the old doth the new lie hidden, and in the new doth the old lie hidden. And thereupon our Saviour said, I am not come to breake the Law or Prophets, but to fulfill them. For assuredlie I say unto you. Till heauen and earth passe, one iot or one title shall not passe of the Law, till all be fulfilled. In which words he sheweth plainly, that the New Testament is nothing else but the fulfilling of the Old. RHEM. Aug. de cat. rud. cap. 3 4 Super Exod. q. 73. Matth. 5.

Therefore to come to the parts. The Gospels do tell of Christ himselfe (of whom the old Testament did foretel) & that even from his comming into the world, unto his going out thereof again. The Acts of the Apostles do tell of his Church beginning at Hierusalem the head Cittie of the Iewes, and of the propagation thereof to the Gentiles and their head cittie Rome. And The Apocalypse doth propheſie of it, even to the consummation thereof: which shall be in the end of the world. The Epistles of the Apostles do treat partly of such questions as at that time were moved, partlie of good life, and good order.

CARTW. That in the first Chapter, that Rome was the head cittie, standeth well with the trueth being then the seat of the empire. But if they would insinuate thereby, that it it is the head Church (to leaue the proofes, which are handled afterwards) their own practise, which set Canterbury aboue London (the cheefe cittie of our Land where the Prince maketh residence) will shew the vanity of their conclusion.

Vpon Math. 16.

The Summe of the foure Gospels.

RHEM. THE Gospels do tell historicallie the life of our Lord Iesus, shewing plainely, that he is Christ or the king of the Iewes, whom untill then, all the time of the old Testament, they had expected: and withall, that they of their own meere malice and blindnesse (the iniquitie beginning of the Seniors, but at length the multitude also consenting) would not receiue him, but ever sought his death: which for the Redemption of the world, he at length permitteth them to compasse, they deserving thereby most iustly to be refused of him, and so his Kingdom or Church to be taken away from them, and given to the Gentiles, For the gathering of which Church after him, he chuseth Twelue, and *appointeth one of them to be the chiefe of all, with instructions both to them and him accordinglie.

Iohn. 20. 31

The story hereof is written by foure? who in Ezechiel and in the Apocalypse are likened to 4 living creatures, everie one according as his booke beginneth S. Matthew to a man, because hee beginneth with the pedegree of Christ as hee is man. S. Marke to a lion, because he beginneth with the preaching, of S. Iohn Baptist, as it were the roaring of a lion in the wildernesse. S. Luke to a calfe, because hee beginneth with a Priest of the Old Testament (to wit, Zacharie the father of S. Iohn Baptist) which priesthood was to sacrifice calues to God. S. Iohn to an Eagle, because hee beginneth with the Divinitie of Christ, flying so high as more is not possible.

Exe. 1. Apoc. 4.

The first three do report at large what Christ did in Galilee, after the imprisonment of S. Iohn Baptist. Wherefore S. Iohn the Evangelist writing after them all, doth omit his doings in Galilee (saue onelie one, which they had not written of, the wonderfull bread which he told the Capharnaits, he could and would giue. Io. 6.) and reporteth first, what he did whiles Iohn Baptist as yet was preaching and baptizing: then, after Iohns imprisoning, what he did in Iurie every yeare about Easter. But of his Passion all foure do write at large.

Where it is to be noted, that from his baptizing (which is thought to haue been upon Twelfth day) what time he was beginning to be about 30. yeare old, Luke 3. unto his passion, are numbred three monethes and three yeares, in which there were also 4. Easters.

CARTVV. In the summe of the Gospels, it is untrue that Christ appointed one of the twelue to be the cheefest of all, whereof the reader may see at large Mat. 18. & 16. And therefore this totall sum is misaudited: as that which containeth more, then the particulars.

In the second section of this sum, the speculation touching the Evangelists compared with a Man, a Lion, a Calfe, and an Eagle: was not seene in the Lords watchtower. And although it hath some antiquitie to leane upon, yet the ground from which it was taken bearing no such sence, it must need fall. for in Ezec. 1. and Apoc. 4. are set forth 4. principal properties of the Angels, in their ministerie. All which agree to everie one of those, that are meant in the places of the Prophet and Evangelist. And the Prophet affirmeth that they had all the likenesse of a man: Whereupon if this be carried to the Evangelists: it will follow that Mark, Luke, and Iohn shall as well be compared to a man, as Matthew. And S. Luke doth more properly and naturally set forth the pedegree of our Saviour Christ, then doth S. Matthew. Neither was the most ordinarie and common sacrifice a calfe: but either a lambe or a goat. And therefore if the Scripture had had any such meaning, it would haue put a sheepe or a goate, rather then a calfe.

The rest of this summe, is almost a fruitlesse blotting of paper: there being diverse things touching the difference of Evangelists, of farre greater weight to haue been observed.

In the next Page, the argument of Matthew is transubstantiate into a division. How poore a one, it were follie to teach the Iesuits: which haue not learned, to put a difference between the argument of a book, and the division of it.

To the last touching the person of S. Matthew] S.

And first for the chopping and hacking of the Scripture, it is contrary to the order which God hath ordained and his Churches haue practised from time to time,

Deut. 31. 10 11. 12. & 1 5.

Secondly, the Church of Rome herein hath not onely declared her irreuerence towards the word of God by reading and seuering that which God hath conioyned, but bewrayed her great vnskilfulnesse in mangling it, not cutting it in diuers places as it were in the ioynt, but as boisterous butchers and un-cunning cooks haue slashed it at all a very venture without consideration of coherence and sutablenesse, not onely of one matter with another, but not so much as of one sentence with another: no (which is more) no not of one member of one and the same sentence with another member of the same sentence.

Thirdly, shee hath therein bewrayed her intollerable impudencie of adding to the word of God, and changing them at her pleasure, and that in the same letter that the text of the Scripture is, without any manner of note or step of difference betweene the graue language of the Scripture and their barbarous and uncircumcised tongue: As in the beginning of their Epistles and Gospels, Fratres charismi in diebus illis: I. illo tempore dixit Iesus pharisæu. And in the end, Ait Dominus omnipotens. Dominus Deus noster, In Christo Domino nostro: And, Fer. 6. post. 2 Dominicam: for audite aliam parabolam, they haue put, In illo tempore dixit Iesus turbis iudæorum parabolam hanc: And Sabbat. post. 2. dominic. quadragesi. they haue added, In illo tempore dixit Iesus pharisæis parabolam hanc: whereas out of the second and third verse of the chapter from whence they take their Gospell, it appeareth that it was spoken not onely to the Pharises but also to the Scribes. And fer. 5 post. 2. dominic. quadrag. they haue added that Iesus spake to his Disciples: it being more like that hee spake it especially to his enemies as the speeches that went immediately before: yet are these those modest men (forsooth) that with open mouthes cry out of our boldnesse in altering the text of Scripture: whereas if they were able to shew but a gleaning in vs of that whereof wee can shew whole sheaues and shockes in them, we would bee in hope of some modesty in them, as of those who although they spake not the truth of vs, yet should not speake without some colour of truth against vs.

Fourthly, they haue caused some one peece of the Scripture to bee often repeated, whereas others of the same fruitfulnesse are not once mentioned.

Fiftly, they professe the singing of these Gospels and Pistles, when notwithstanding they are neither Psalmes nor Hymnes, nor spirituall sungs which the Lord hath onely set apart for vse of singing therein; inferiour to the little children which play in the marketstead, which answer in the gestures of mirth and sorrow according as they are by their companions thereunto prouoked.

Eph. 5. 19. Iam. 5. 13.

Last of all, in that it is said that they are sung in holy Church, as wee take it thankfully to bee shut from the account of that holy Church that out of the aboundance of the pleasures of this world doth nothing but sing, that she may for euermore weepe in the world to come: so it may well bee hardly and heauely at the hands of your Country Churches which hauing no such Quires as the Cathedrall their mothers haue to chant and rore it out with, are in this account of yours discarded and cast out from the reckoning and estimation of holy Church.

And as for the title of our Ladie you giue to the most blessed Virgin Marie, it is an invention of your own head without warrant of the VVord; yea contrarie vnto the same; especially as you take it which make her also Queene of heauen as our Sauiour Christ is King: And further aduance her aboue our Sauiour Christ, when you giue her authority to command him: whereas if shee bee Queene of heauen, shee is so either as Queene wife to our Sauiour Christ (which were incestuous) or as Queene Mother, which title groweth from her husband being King, from which dignity Ioseph the Carpenter was farre remoted: And although it were granted shee were

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. I.

RHEM. [v.3. Thamar.] Chriſt abhorred not to take fleſh of ſome that were ill, as he choſe Iudas among his Apoſtles: Let not vs diſdaine to receiue our ſpirituall birth and ſuſtenance, of ſuch as be not alwayes good.

RHEM.2. [16. Ioſeph.] Ioſeph marrying our Lady as neere of kin (for ſo was the * Law) by his Pedigree ſheweth hers, and conſequently Chriſts Pedigree from Dauid. Numb. 36.

CARTVV.2. [v.16 Ioſeph.] There is no ſuch law, Numb.36. which commandeth to marry thoſe which were neere of kin: no nor ſo much as to marry thoſe in the ſame Tribe, but onely in the caſe where the daughter was heire to the land of her Fathers in his tribe: as it appeareth both by the reaſon of the Law, which prouideth onely that the inheritance of one Tribe ſhould not bee tranſlated vnto another; and by the practiſe of the twelue Tribes, before the caſe of Zelophehads daughters was moued. VVho notwithſtanding that they had for many yeares before, a carefull endeuour to keepe the knowledge of the Tribes, in regard of our Sauiour Chriſt to come: yet did they not ſpare to marrey their daughters out of their own both houſes and tribes. Otherwiſe there had been no cauſe the Tribe of Manaſſes to haue commenced this ſuit before Moſes, if it had not been before lawfull for virgins to haue been ſo married. And this iudgement is confirmed both by inſtructions and practiſe of the people of God after this Law giuen. For when Sampſon doted after one of the daughters of the vncircumciſed Philiſtims: his godly parents to reſtrain him from that vnequall yoke, propound vnto him the libertie and large choyce that he had to take a wife amongſt all the daughters of his brethren and people. The practiſe alſo and execution of it is to be ſeene in Dauid, who notwithſtanding that he was of the tribe of Iuda, where this ſuppoſed law (coloured by the diſtinction of tribes) ought moſt religiouſly to haue been kept: tooke Michol, Sauls daughter, of the tribe of Beniamin to wife? The ſame we read to haue been done of King Abiah of the poſteritie of Dauid, who married in the ſame tribe of Beniamin. Neither ought it to trouble any, as if the ſtaires of Chriſts naturall pedigree from the virgin Mary were made thus hazardous, vnleſſe in the tribe and family of Ioſeph, the tribe alſo and family of the virgin be concluded. For by the teſtimonies of the Angell, and the Euangeliſt, he is infallibly verified to bee the ſonne of Dauid, by the perſecution of Herod raiſed againſt the infants of the houſe of Dauid. And finally, by the conſtrained iourney of the holy virgin to go to Bethlehem the Citie of Dauid to be taxed. And although it be called into doubt, whether our Sauiour came from Salomon or from Nathan, and therefore alſo doubted whether his naturall pedigree or linage be laid out by S. Matthew or S. Luke: yet (they both being the ſonnes of Dauid) there is by this doubt no queſtion moued whether he be Dauids ſonne or no. Howbeit foraſmuch as it is euident, that the light of Salomon was quite quenched in Ieconias, who was the laſt of that family: it is manifeſt that S. Matthew doth not propound vnto himſelfe the naturall deſcent of our Sauiour, which draweth the line of his pedigree by Salomon. For the other gouernors of the people, which are reckoned vp after Ieconias, are not his naturall poſteritie or ſucceſſion, but onely (as they are called) Legall: that is to ſay, thoſe whom the lawes of the Princes vnder whom the people were in bondage, did appoynt to ſucceed vnto him in gouernment. VVherefore as S. Luke doth vnfold the naturall pedigree of our Sauiour Chriſt: ſo doth S. Mathew ſet forth the Kings and Princes that ruled ouer the people of God: thereby to declare that our Sauiour Chriſt is the King and Prince whom all they were the figures and ſhadowes of: for as it is neceſſary to know, that he was Dauids naturall ſonne: ſo is it alſo requiſite to be vnderſtood, that he ſucceeded him in his kingdom: to the end that the promiſe of the euerlaſting kingdom of Dauid might be verified. The truth whereof is in Chriſt alone: the outward Scepter being vtterly wrung from the hands of Dauids poſterity. 1. Sam. 18. 1. King. 5. 2. 2. Chron. 13 2. Luk. 1. Math. 2. Luk. 2. RHEM.3. [16 Husband.] True and perfect marriage, and continuall liuing in the ſame without carnall copulation, Aug. lib. Conſen. Euang. c.1.

CARTVV.3. [16 Husband.] I grant: but ſeeing the ſame roſe vpon ſo ſolitary and ſingular a cauſe, it is apparent, that it is not to be followed, eſpecially conſidering the Apoſtle which licenceth ſeparation by conſent of both parties, will not ſuffer the ſame to be of long indurance. In the whoſe chapter cited out of Auguſtine, there is neither the word true, nor perfect, nor continuall liuing. 1. Cor. 7. 5.

RHEM.4. [v.20. Borne in her.] The triple good or perfection of marriage accompliſhed in the Parents of Chriſt, to wit, Iſſue, Fidelitie, Sacrament, Aug. de nup. & conc. l. 1. c. 11.

CARTVV.4. [20 Borne in her.] The word perfection is none of Aug. and as for the word Sacrament, ſeeing he calleth it the good of Marriage: marriage it ſelfe can be no more ſaid to be a Sacrament, then it can be ſaid that marriage is the iſſue, or marriage is fidelitie. Againe, the reaſon here giuen, why the Sacrament was accompliſhed in the parents; namely, for that there was no diuorce, ſheweth that Auguſtine calleth marriage a Sacrament, hauing regard to the coniunction not of the man with the wife, but of Chriſt with his Church, in another ſence then you doe: or if there had been a divorce, by this reaſon there had been no Sacrament, contrary to your doctrine, which will haue a Sacrament remaine after diuorce: and contrary to your doctrine of divorce, which admitteth no paſſage to another marriage, becauſe you ſay it is a ſacrament. Where it may ſeeme ſtrange that the Papiſts imagining ſo baſely of marriage as to eſteeme it too earthly a thing for their helliſh Prieſts, and not ſpirituall enough for their carnall Sacrificers, do notwithſtanding lift it vp to the height of a Sacrament: were it not that by this meanes they wreſt matrimoniall cauſes from the ciuill Courts, and with the manifold marchandiſe thereof fill their purſes.

And matrimony being ordained before the fall, it is cleare it can be no ſacrament which is a ſeale of the promiſe, and couenant of grace after & by reaſon of the fall. And that Auguſtin meant not to giue the name of a ſacrament in the proper ſignification thereof, may appeare in that hee ſaith, that thoſe kinde of Sacraments are feweſt in number. Epiſt. ad Ianuar. 118.

Virginity preferred.

RHEM. 5. [23. A virgin] Our Sauiour borne in marriage, but yet of a virgin, would honour both ſtates: and withall, teacheth vs againſt Iouinian the old heretick, and theſe of our time, that virginity and the continent life are preferred before marriage that hath carnall copulation. See S. Hier. adu. Iou. & S. Greg. Naz. Ser. 20. de ſtudio in pauperes, in initio.

RHEM. [v. 23. A virgin] As our Lady, both a virgin and a mother, brought forth Chriſt the head corporally: ſo the Church a virgin and a mother, bringeth forth the members of this head ſpiritually, Aug. lib. de virg. cap. 2.

CART VV. 5. [v. 23 A virgin] In what words, or in what circumſtances? It is your teaching therefore, & not the doctrine of this place: Howbeit we confeſſe, that he that hath the gift of continencie, is in that poynt better then he which hath it not: ſo farre as he hath receiued a heauenly gift aboue the other. But the practiſe of it is ſo farre from commending ſuch a perſon alwayes, aboue all other married perſons: that he preferreth him not vnto his own eſtate of marriage: for if the neereſt of the kin vnderneath the Law, hauing the gift of continency, had refuſed to raiſe vp ſeed vnto his brother deceaſed without iſſue: the ſame making of himſelfe thereby infamous, Ruth. 4. to the whole Church and Common-wealth of Iſrael, ſhould with much more honour vnto himſelfe, and glory vnto God haue married. Likewiſe, a maiden hauing the gift of continencie, as ſhe may vſe that gift as it is free for her by the good leaue and liking of her parents: ſo if they for cauſes enioyne her marriage, ſhe ſhall with greater peace of conſcience, in obedience to her parents, marry, then continue the practiſe of the gift: whereby it is euident, that touching the vſe of virginity and marriage, the preferment of one of them before another, is to be taken of the ends & circumſtances of them both: yea, what will they anſwer vnto the Lord God affirming, that it is not good for man to be alone, and that in his innocencie when there was no perill of fornication, doth he not directly preferre the married eſtate of it ſelfe before the vnmarried and ſolitary condition of life? ſo if that the virgins eſtate be in ſome caſe, perſon, or time to be preferred before the married, the ſame ariſeth not of the nature of virginity, but in regard of the diſorder that ſin hath brought into the world. As for the preferment of married perſons abſtaining continually from the company each of other, vnto thoſe which in the feare of God & in ſobriety do vſe their mutual ſocietie there is no queſtion conſidering that (this marriage only excepted) it is vnlawful, as hath been ſhewed, for man and wife to vſe any ſuch continuall ſeparation. But ſeeing you will with ſuch violence carry this example ſo farre, and tranſport the plant thereof into your common field, which onely proſpered in the priuate garden of this couple: I beſeech you anſwer me which eſtate you iudge better, the eſtate of a virgin in marriage or out of marriage. If you will be like your ſelues, you muſt needs ſay in marriage; which fetch all your proofe for the preferment of virginitie from this example. And becauſe that virginitie is equall in both eſtates, you ſhall bee conſtrained by your doctrine (which maketh the married virgins richer by a Sacrament) to preferre to thoſe virgins which liue out of marriage. And if it be ſo, why do you barre your Prieſts and Nunnes from marriage, whereby they might come to a perfecter eſtate. Nazianzen ſaith, that Chriſt honoured virginitie, by being born of a virgin: but of any preferment of virginitie vnto marriage, he hath not a word in that place. Hierom. aduerſus Iouian. is known through heat to haue rather declaimed againſt marriage, then lawfully diſputed for virginitie: ſo farre as the Papiſts themſelues muſt therein be conſtrained (will they they nill they) to leaue his company; as after more at large ſhall appeare. In the meane ſeaſon let them know that Ierom himſelfe being charged with his intempered ſpeeches wherewith he wronged marriage in that diſputation, confeſſeth that therein he ſtriued rather then taught.

Our B. Ladies perpetuall virginity.

RHEM. 6 [v. 23. And bring forth] The heretick Iouinian is here refuted, holding that her virginity was corrupted in bringing forth Chriſt. Aug. Har. 28 l. cont. Iulian. c. 2.

CART VV. 6. [v. 23. And bring] If by virginity corrupted, he meant that ſhe ceaſed to be a virgin; it is an hereſie. But if it be meant that our Sauiour Chriſt comming from her, ſhe ſuffered that which other women doe in childbirth, that is to ſay, ſhe trauelled in pain, that her matrice was opened, and ſuch like: then it is a Catholicke iudgement, the contrary whereof ſauoureth ſtrongly. firſt of Marcions hereſie; and after, of the hereſie of Eutiches, whereunto the Papiſts are acceſſaries, which deny that it was with the virgin Mary in ſuch caſes as with other women: and partly alſo it is vttered afterward, by theſe Ieſuites: which affirme that he came from his mothers wombe, without opening the matrice. But the holy ſcripture, not onely in generall words, declareth that our Sauiour Chriſts birth ſhould be like vnto the birth of other children, ſin onely excepted: but ſetteth forth certain points particularly: as the trauelling with child, which being ſpoken of the Church properly, is of the Ieſuites themſelues in alluſion applied to the virgin, the after burden, and finally and moſt euidently, the opening of the wombe, the perpetuall ſhutting vp whereof the Ieſuites make one of their bulwarkes of Tranſubſtantion, for the virgin preſenting our Sauiour Chriſt at the Temple before the Lord, is ſaid by S. Luke to haue done it according to the law: that euery man childe that firſt openeth the wombe ſhould be holy vnto the Lord. Ierom alſo the great trumpet of virginitie, who ſingeth the note thereof higher then the muſicke of the Scripture will ſuffer, is euidently of this iudgement when he ſaith, Dei filius pro noſtra ſalute hominis factus eſt filius. nouem menſibus in vtero vt naſcatur expectat, faſtidia ſuſtinet, cruentus egreditur, &c.

CARTVVZ [v. 25. Till, &c.] If Gennadius bee of any credite with you, hee will tell you, that Helvidius was confuted by Ierome, out of the Scriptures: Howbeit herein let vs heare Ierom himselfe; We beleue not (saith he) that Marie after that shee had born a childe married againe, because wee reade it not: VVhereby first is euident, that Ierome condemned Helvidius for his rashnesse, because hee did so definitiuely speake of things whereof there was no ground in the Scripture. which rod Ierome left to beate you with, that fault ofther herein then euer did Helvidius. Further of these words, That it is not to bee beleeued, that is not contained in the Scripture: followeth the vtter ruine of your Traditions, which hauing no stay of the Scriptures, must needs bee like the reed of Egypt, pricking the faith of those which leane vpon them. In Augustine heresie 84. there is not a word to proue the support of this perpetuall virginity by Tradition. Last of all, albeit there were no decision of this point out of the Scripture, yet should it not thereupon follow which the Iesuites pretend, that some necessary point of Christianity wanted the ground of holy Scripture: It being sufficient for vs to know that shee was a Virgin when our Sauiour Christ was borne of her, as the Prophets did foretell: whereupon Basil affirmeth that whether shee married againe or remained a Virgin belongeth not to the mysterie of faith.

CHAP. II.

The Gentiles come vnto Christ with their offerings, and that so openly that the Iewes cannot pretend ignorance. 3 The Iewes with Herod conspire against him: 13 Hee thereupon fleeth from them into Egypt. 16 They afterward seeing their subtilty preuailed not, imagined to oppresse him by open persecution: 19 But they at length died, and hee returneth to the Land of Israel: all according to the Scriptures.

The holy feast of the Epphany called Twelfth-day the 6. of Ianuary vpon which day this is the Gospel

WHen IESVS therefore was * born in Bethlehem of Iuda in the dayes of Herod the King, ‖ behold, there came Sages from the East to Hierusalem,

2 Saying, where is he that is borne king of the Iewes? For we haue seene his ‖ starre in the East, and ‖ are come to adore him.

3 And Herod the King hearing this, was troubled, and all Hierusalem with him.

4 And assembling together all the high Priests and the Scribes of the people, hee ‖ inquired of them where Christ should be borne.

5 But they say to him, In Bethlehem of Iuda. For it is written by the Prophet:

Micha 5. 2. 6 And thou Bethlehem the land of Iuda, art not the least among the Princes of Iuda: for out of the shall come forth a Captain that shal rule my people Israell.

7 Then Herode secretly calling the Sages, learned diligently of them the time of the starre which appeared to them:

8 And sending them into Bethlehē, said, Goe, and inquire diligently of the child, and when you shall finde him, make report to me, that I also may come and adore him.

9 VVho hauing heard the King, went their way: and behold the starre which they had seen in the East, went before them, vntill it came and stood ouer, where the child was.

10 And seeing the starre, they reioyced with exceeding great ioy.

11 And entring into the house, they found the child with MARIE his mother, & falling down ‖ adored him: and opening their treasures, they offred to him * ‖ gifts: gold, Psal. 71. 10 frankincense, and myrrhe.

12 And hauing receiued an answer in sleepe that they should not returne to Herode, they went back an other way into their countrey. ☞

The Gospell of Childermas day.

13 And after they were departed, behold an Angell of our Lord appeared in sleep to Ioseph, saying: Arise, and take the childe and his mother, and flee into Egypt: and be there vntill I shall tell thee. For it will come to passe that Herode will seeke the child to destroy him.

14 VVho arose, and tooke the child & his mother by night, and retyred into Egypt: and hee was there vntill the death of Herode:

15 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken of our Lord by the Prophet, saying, * Out of Egypt haue I called my Sonne. Osee 11. 2.

16 Then Herode perceiuing that he was deluded by the Sages, was exceeding angrie: and sending ‖ murdered all the men children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the borders thereof, from two yeere old and vnder, according to the time which hee had diligently sought out of the Sages. The martyrdom of the holy Innocents, whose holy day is kept the 28. of December.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Ieremie the Prophet, saying, 18 A voice in Rama was heard, crying out and much wayling, Rachel bewayling her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not. ☞ Iere. 31. 15.

19 But when Herode was dead, behold an Angell of our Lord appeared in sleep to Ioseph in Egypt, The Gospell on Twelfth eue.

20 Saying, Arise, and take the childe and his mother, & go into the land of Israel. for they are dead that sought the life of the childe.

21 VVho arose, and tooke the childe and his mother, and came into the land of Israell.

22 But hearing that Archelaus reigned in Iewrie for Herode his father, he feared to go thither: and being warned in sleepe retyred into the quarters of Galilee.

23 And comming he dwelt in a cittie called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was said by the Prophets: That hee shall be called a Nazarite.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. II.

RHEM. 1. [1 Behold.] Our Lords apparition or Epiphanie to these Sages being Gentiles their pilgrimage to him, and in them the first homage of Gentilitie done vnto him the twelfth day after his Natiuitie: and therefore is Twelfth day highly celebrated in the Catholike Church for ioy of the calling of vs Gentiles. His Baptism also and first miracle are celebrated on the same day.

CARTVV. 1. [1 Behold.] Of ordaining feastes there is occasion generally to speak afterward, but if this feast should not be kept vntill you had made certaine proofe what was the day thereof, wee might bee well assured that the lightnesse of your proofes would soone ease us of the burthen of this ceremonie: For although of the month, and of the yeare wherein hee was borne, there might bee found some proofe out of the word of God: yet thereby to trace the day of his birth, to finde out the twelfth day after, you shall finde very cold footing. And as all are not agreed of this day, so are they in farre greater variety of indgement about the Epiphanie: Seeing therefore it seemed good to the wisedom of God to bury the knowledge of this day: so open profession of the knowledge of it, sauoreth not the modesty that is required. Further what equity is there that you should trusse up so many famous actes of our Sauiour Christ into one holiday, as you heere do three at once: when sometime one onely act of a pettie and unknown Saint, occupieth a whole day in your Church, where if it were meete the Church should bee pestered with so many holidaies, it were fit that the acts and sufferings of our Sauiour Christ, should take them up all.

Luk. 1. 5. & 2. 1. 2.

RHEM. 2. [2 Starre.] Christs Natiuity depended not vpon this Starre, as the Priscillianists falsly surmised: but the starre vpon his Natiuity, for the seruice whereof it was created. Greg. Hom. 10.

CARTVV. 2. [2 Starre. S.]

S. Is a note that there is nothing materiall in the Note to bee suspected.

RHEM. 3. [2 Come to adore.] This comming so far, of deuotion to visite and adore Christ in the place of his birth, was properly a pilgrimage to his person, and warranteth the faithfull in the like kinde of externall worship done to holy persons, places and things. Pilgrimage.

CARTVV. 3. [2 Come to adore.] In this argument the Iesuites wits seemed to haue gone a pilgrimage: for is it not think you groundedly concluded: the seruant must seeke the Maister by Pilgrimage; that is to say by iourney taken into a strange Country, therefore one seruant must seeke another: or the Lord liuing heere vpon earth must thus bee sought to, therefore the seruant which is dead: or whole Christ was thus sought vnto, therefore the fragments of the Saints bodies: or Christ himselfe, therefore his seruants, or ragges rather: Finally, the Sages did it by Gods calling through a Starre, therefore their posteritie must do it without calling.

RHEM. 4. [4 Inquired of them.] The high Priests were rightly consulted in question of their Law and Religion, and bee they neuer so ill, are often forced to say the truth by priuiledge of their vnction: as heere and after they did concerning the true Messias.

CARTVV. 4. [4 Inquired of them.] Heere is no forced speech in the Priests, but that which was freely acknowledged of all the Iewes commonly both good and bad. And if those who are supposed to bee Aarons successors amongst the Iewes at this day, were asked the like question, notwithstanding their annointment hath lost all the sweete perfume that it smelled of, and is as profane as yours: yet would they giue him the like answer now, that those did then: And if they had bene forced to speak the truth, yet should it not therefore haue followed that they did it by priuiledge of their annointment: vnlesse you will say Balaam the coniurer and false Prophet, blessed the people by such priuiledge. And if you affirme it of Balaam, what will you answer to his Asse, who forcibly reproued the madnesse of the Prophet. I think you will not so lash out your ointment, as to powre it upon the Asses head with foure feete. But all were it so as you say, yet doth it not fit your turne, which would proue heereby that the Pope cannot erre: For if the strength of the ointment work but by fits, although it often enforce to speake the truth, yet if sometime the tongue breake loose from it, it is so nimble a member that it may make great hauock in the Church of God or euer your strengthlesse and lasie ointment can ouertake it againe.

RHEM. 5. [11 Adored him.] This body (saith S. Chrysostome) the Sages adored in the Cribbe, Let vs at the least imitate them: Thou seest him not now in the Cribbe, but on the Altar: not a woman holding him, but the Priest present, and the holy Ghost powred out aboundantly vpon the sacrifice: Hom. 24. in 1. Cor. hom. 7. in Mt. de sanct. Philogonio. Adoration of the B. Sacrament.

CHRTVV. 5. [11 Adored him.] Hee is indeed upon the Communion Table, or as the the ancient Fathers sometime call it, upon the Altar; and the same upon the Table which was in the Cribbe, but after another sort, that is, Mystically, Spiritually and Sacramentally: which opus imperfectum attributed by themselues to the same Chrysostome heere alledged doth confirme, where it is said, that in the holy vessels is not, nor is not contained the very body of Christ, but the mysterie of his bodie. And as heere they haue wrested the Fathers words from his meaning, so haue they in that which followeth falsified him, and fathered other words on him then hee hath: Hee exhorteth indeed to follow the example of the Sages, not in adoration of his bodie (as the Iesuites would haue it vnderstood) but in comming with reuerence and feare to the Mysticall Supper, which is that whereunto we exhort. And that it is so to be understood appeareth manifestly in that as the bodie is upon the Altar, so it is said that the Holy Ghost is powred down upon the Sacrifice: As therefore wee see not the Holy Ghost with bodily eyes, no more do wee the body of Christ, but onely with the eyes of faith. In the meane season here is no mention of worshipping the Virgine Mary, none of honouring the crib wherein our Sauiour lay. In opere imperfecto hom. 11.

RHEM. 6. [11 Treasures.] These treasures are as it were the first fruits of those riches and giftes, which (according to the Prophecie of Dauid and Esay) Gentility should offer to Christ and his Church, and now haue offered, specially from the time of Constantine the great. As also these theſe three Sages, being principall men of their Countrey, repreſent the whole ſtate of Princes, Kings, and Emperours, that were (according to the ſame Propheſies) to beleeue in Chriſt, to humble themſelues to his Croſſe, to foſter, enrich, adorne and defend his Church. VVhereupon it is alſo a very conuenient and agreeable tradition of antiquitie, and a receiued opinion among the faithfull, * not lacking teſtimonies of ancient writers, and much for the honour of our Sauiour, that theſe three Kings alſo were Kings, to wit, either according to the ſtate of thoſe Countries, *where the Princes were Magi, and * Magi the greateſt about the Prince: or as we read in the Scriptures, of Melchiſedec King of Salem, and many other kings that dwelt within a ſmall compaſſe: as Iobs three friends are called Kings. Theſe are commonly called the three Kings of Colen, becauſe their bodies are there: tranſlated thither from the Eaſt Countrey: their names are ſaid to haue been Gaſper, Melchior, Baltaſar.

The three Kings.

CARTVV. 6. [11. Treaſures.] It is but a beggerly fable which is here told of the Kingly eſtate of theſe Sages. And where it is ſaid, that it ſerueth for our Sauiour Chriſts honour: it is a priuie accuſation either of want of wiſedom, or fidelitie in the Euangeliſt, who left out that which (by theſe mens iudgements) might greatly haue aduanced his honour. But it is more agreeable to the firſt comming of our Sauiour Chriſt, which was in all ſhew of a poore and baſe eſtate: to be ſought vnto by theſe which were not kings, rather then by thoſe that were honoured with ſo great a title, according as the practiſe laid forth in the whole ſtorie of the Euangelifts doth declare. And if their gifts be conſidered, which they beſtowed: they ſhall eaſily be ſeene to haue been farre from the hand or magnificence of Kings. For in leſſe then fortie dayes after the virgin Mary offering her gift according to the Law, offered it in that kinde, which was proper to thoſe that were in great pouertie: namely, a paire of Turtle Doues. Either therefore theſe ſuppoſed Kings were very cloſe handed in their gifts, which is a raſh and needleſſe accuſation of them: or elſe the holy Virgin dealt vnfaithfully, which hauing plentifully wherewithall to haue made a fatter offering, defrauded the Lord thereof, which were yet more abſurd. Hither commeth the teſtimonie of Suetonius & Tacitus: who affirme it to be a fable, that is ſaid of their Princely eſtate. Yea, one of your kindred, a Minorite, confeſſeth frankly, that there is no antiquitie of Interpreters which fauoureth this opinion of yours. Chryſoſtom indeed calleth them Kings, but with ſmall vantage to your opinion: for in the ſame treatiſe of them, he ſaith, that when they had worſhipped Chriſt, they returned vnto their owne king: that they might haue our Sauiour for their heauenly, as they had the other for their earthly King. VVhereby it is alſo apparant, that Theophilact, who commonly treadeth in Chryſoſtoms ſteps, meant not by the title of Kings giuen them, to exempt them from the condition of ſubiects: which is further confirmed, by that he calleth them all Kings of Perſia, whereas Chryſoſtom and all hiſtorie maketh but one King ouer Perſia. That alſo out of Tullie is vnskilfully cited: for he ſheweth, that in Perſia none could aſcend to the dignitie of the kingdom, vnleſſe he had been trained vp in the Diſcipline or learning of the Sages. You fault therefore, not onely in that you would conclude, that all Sages were Kings, becauſe all Kings were Sages: but in that alſo that euen the contrary of that which you ſet downe, may bee gathered out of this place. For in Perſia it was one thing to be a King, and another to be in the account of the Sages: the Sages being as it were Schoolemaſters, through whoſe hands thoſe that had title to the Crowne, ought to paſſe to their kingdom. Plinie ſpeaketh of them: but of either Crownes or Scepters, or of any kingly countenance, he hath not a word. Contrariwiſe, aſſigning Ecbatana, which was a Citie in Media, to the dwelling of diuers Sages: he declareth that their eſtate was not Princely. But it anſwereth well with their opinion, which hold that they were of counſell with the king, whoſe Court was often holden in that Citie. In Heſter the word ſignifieth wiſe men, which ſo generall a word, if they will draw into ſo ſtraight a roome, as to the profeſſion and order of the Sages: yet can they gain thereby no greater honour vnto them, then that they were three of the ſeuen, that aſſiſted the king in counſell. In the ſecond Chapter of Tobie, nor in whole Tobie there is not a word of this matter in the Greek, which is the true originall of Tobie, but the aduantage is taken of the old tranſlator; and yet it is nothing at all, as is not that of Ambroſe: who calleth likewiſe the three friends of Iob Kings. For the friends of Iob were partly of the poſterity of Eſau, which neuer were accounted in the number of the Sages: that title being proper to the Perſian kingdom, as the Druides were into France and our Countrey. After you ſay, that their names are ſaid to be Gaſper, &c. of you Papiſts onely, who (belike) know all things, and can tell what the king roundeth in the Queenes eare: for this haue you ſucked out of your own fingers, and haue no teſtimony of Antiquity for it, nor ſo much as any colour, The ſame boldneſſe there is, in defining of their number, wherein the Scripture is ſilent: and if any antiquitie open mouth, it is againſt you rather, as in Chryſoſtom, who eſteemeth that they were twelue in number.

Luk. 2. 24. Leuit. 5, 7.

And hauing no more proofe in your Fable, which ſuppoſeth them to be the three Kings of Colen: how commeth it to paſſe, that you vſe not (at the leaſt) the ſame moderation of ſpeech, which you do in their names; but chooſe rather preciſely to affirme, that their bodies are tranſlated to Colen, out of the Eaſt parts: then to ſay, that ſo it is ſaid. I would it were here ſo eaſie with you, as onely to carry the note of the foole which the wiſe man deſcribeth: beleeuing euery thing that is ſayd. I greatly feare an euil conſcience, and that you were ſo farre from trembling, when you wrote this, that you ſcarce held your laughter, to conſider how kindly you can couzen the ſimple of their ſiluer, with ſuch ſingle ſleights as theſe be. But the ſame prouerb ſaith: that a wary man wil conſider the going or proceſſe of the matter, according to which rule, aske them (good reader) what was of the cauſe of this ſo farre a tranſlation; the like whereof is neuer read of in the old Teſtament, wherein tranſlation of dead bodies was more proper, was neuer read of (as I ſuppoſe) in any prophane hiſtory. Aske them who were the Authors of it. Aske them finally in what yeare of the Lord: whereby it will appeare, that their bodies were rotten many yeares before Colen knew Chriſt: much more before it could be ſo ſottiſhly zealous, as to trauell ſo farre, to diſquiet the dead dead bones of the Saints. But if you were not feed, otherwise partiall for Colen: the chalenge of Millaine, that maketh claime vnto the same bodies, carry as much truth, and some more colour then this doth. The contentions of the Greek Cities, in which of them Homer should bee borne, was neuer so vaine, nor so ridiculous as are the repugnances which the monstrous fables of translation of these and other reliques haue engendred.

RHEM. 6. [11. Gifts] These Sages were three, and their gifts three, and each one offered euery of the three, to expresse our faith of the Trinitie. The Gold, to signifie that hee was a king: Frankinsence, that he was God: the Myrrhe, that he was to be buried as Man. Aug. serm. 1. de Epiph.

CARTVV. 6. [11. Gifts] They offered as the Patriarkes did, the commendable commodities of that Countrey whereof they were, without making choyce of them, according to the nature or office of our Sauiour Christ: which was not in some yeares distinctly known of the disciples, which continually heard our Sauiour; much lesse of these men. And if the doctrine of the holy Trinitie were not better borne vp, then with such reasons as this is, it must needs fall to the ground.

RHEM. 7. [15. Out of Egypt] This place of the Prophet (and the like in the new Testament) here applied to Christ, whereas in the letter it might seeme otherwise, teacheth vs how to interpret the old Testament: and that the principall sence is of Christ and his Church.

CARTVV. 7. [15. Out of Egypt] The letter may seeme otherwise vnto you which are vnexpert in the word. For vnto those which are exercised, it is well known to be a receiued vse of the Prophets, that when they made any promise of great deliuerance, either temporall or eternal, forthwith they made mention of our Sauiour Christ, and to note him of some of his notable
2. Cor. 1. 20 either actions or sufferings, in which the former promises were to haue their Yea and Amen.

Canonizing of Saintes

RHEM. 8. [16. Murdered] By this example wee learne how great credit wee owe to the Church in canonizing Saints, and celebrating their holy daies: by whose onely warrant, without any word of Scripture; these holy Innocents haue beene honoured for Martyrs, and their holy day kept euer since the Apostles time, although they died not voluntarily, nor all perhaps circumcised, and some the children of Pagans. Aug. Epist. 28. Orig. Hom 5. in diuersos.

CARTVV. 8. [16. Murdered.] The Iewes children were within the couenant, whether
Gen. 15. circumcised or vncircumcised, by warrant of the word, which declareth the seed of the faithfull
1. Cor. 7. holy. Wherefore the Church, by vertue of the same word, in all equitie generaly might esteeme them to be the Saints of God: without entring into the Lords hid Councell, of euery one particularly; which they neither did nor can doe. To account them also Martyrs, which were persecuted for Christ; and which, as they chose not to die for his sake, so refused they it not: wanteth not some reasonable defence, although Herods owne sonne being one of those Infants, there is no great appearance that he being out of the couenant, was to be accounted a Saint. And Stephen being called the first Martyr, argueth that the Church did not account those Infants murdered by Herod, Martyrs. Neither yet doth this appeare in Eusebius, nor in Nicephorus, that wrote the story of the crueltie of Herod against them, nor in the Catalogue of the festiuall; which proueth that it was not alwayes kept since the Apostles time. After it seemeth so to be far from being kept since the Apostles time, as of a whole holy day, it was made but halfe a holy day: so that the diuine seruice being ended, euery man might come to his labour. But to keepe their holy dayes from the Apostles times, as they ought not in any conuenience to haue done: so is there no mention in either of the Fathers alledged by you, which proueth it to haue been performed vnto them, and therefore you are continually found deceiuers of your reader. For notwithstanding it should haue been kept holy day in Origens time, which hath no good ground, the homily Diuersos, being for some part none of his, and for that those that were his were more corrupted by Ruffin; yet between the Apostles time and Origens there is more then a time and halfe a time. And the author himselfe (whosoeuer he was) weigheth the celebration of this feast with the weight of the Fathers, and not of the Apostles of Christ.

Iohn Baptist by his Eremites life, by his preaching and Baptisme, calleth all vnto penance, to prepare them to Christ. 10 He preacheth to the Pharises and Sadduces, threatning to them (vnlesse they truely doe penance) reprobation here, and damnation hereafter: and for salvation sendeth them to Christ and his baptisme, which being farre more excellent then Iohns, yet Christ himselfe among those penitents, vouchsafeth to come vnto Iohns Baptisme. CARTVV. 1. [1 Deſart.] This Monkiſh and Eremeticall life, is firſt of all contrarie to the nature of man when the ſame was vncorrupt, for whom it was not iudged good to bee alone, but contrariwiſe thought conuenient that hee ſhould haue one of the ſame nature to keep him company, not onely in marriage for creation ſake, but for other helpefull and comfortable ſocietie: now therefore that hee is fallen from that ſufficiencie whereby hee was paſſingly more able to liue of himſelfe then now hee is; it is euident that to vphold himſelfe in any commendable eſtate agreeing vnto his creation, it is needfull that hee leane vpon the companie of his like. Wherefore Salomon ſaith, Two are better then one, for that they haue a good reward of their labour: For if the one fall the other may raiſe vp his fellow: but woe to him that is alone, for if hee fall, there is no ſecond to lift him vp. Likewiſe if two ſleepe together, they get warmth, but how ſhould one alone come to any heat: Further, If one preuaile againſt a man, yet two ſhall bee able to ſtand againſt him. Finally, a tripled thred is not ſoone broken. The Philoſophers which ſaw as farre as naturall eye was able to pierce, eſteemed a man naturally companable, and him that naturally without conſtraint of baniſhment and ſuch like, ſeuered himſelfe from the ſociety of men; they deemed either to bee a God, or elſe to bee a wilde beaſt; they would haue ſaid a deuill if they had had aſmuch knowledge of him as of God.

Secondly, as this ſolitarie life is an enemie to mankinde, ſo is it to the communion of Saints in the Church of God: For if they haue any ſingular giftes that take their flight into the Wildernеſſe, the ſentence of our Sauiour Chriſt pulleth their wings: That no man lighteth a candle to the end to put it vnder a buſhell, but rather ſetteth it in the Candleſtick of ſome Societie. where it may giue light to all that are round about: whether alſo is referred that ſuch perſonages are called the ſalt of others, which hath neede to approach and bee applied to that fleſh which it muſt ſeaſon and deliuer from putrefaction: And if hee bee voide of ſuch giftes, or haue them not in any great meaſure: then alſo is it meete, that hee ſhould ioyne himſelfe to their company, by whom hee may haue the ſupply of his wants, that by daily conuerſation with the wiſe hee may learne wiſedom? And if neither any man ſhould haue need of him, nor hee need of any; yet the deſire of being in the Congregation of Gods people, to ſee the beauty of the houſe of God, in the participation of the Word and Sacraments would call him, would ſo inflame him, as to cauſe him to ſpeed himſelfe as faſt from the forſaken Wilderneſſe, to the place of the Aſſembly of Gods people, as the Hart purſued of the dogges, maketh foote-manſhip to the ſoile: For Dauid being many yeares an Eremite, according to your deſcription, that is one that liued in Eremo, or Wilderneſſe, did notwithſtanding the Lords calling into that place feele the horror of the Wilderneſſe, through deſire hee had to go with the reſt of the people vnto the houſe of God: If therefore it bee a pleaſant paradice vnto you, which was vnto him an horrible and deſolate waſte: if you voluntarily flie from that, which hee did ſo thirſtily purſue, and if you ſo greedily ſeek thither from whence hee ſo deſirouſly departed, it is eaſie for all men to ſee, that your Eremites and Monkes bee of another ſpirit then Dauid was.

Pro. 13. 20. Pſal. 42. Pſal. 43.

But the example of the Primitiue Church conducted by the hands of the Apostles is very pregnant against these wilde Asses, whose habitation is in the Wildernesse: For Luke beareth witnesse, that as many as beleeued were together in one place: and that they communicated not onely in spirituall things, but nourished loue by societie in their bodily repasts. Where also is noted one cause of their meetings together: namely, that the aboundance of certaine, might supply the defect of others: which being marked out in one kinde of gift, ought by the same reason to bee translated vnto all other. Whereupon it may bee easily perceiued, that as amongst birdes they are the uncleanest and most hatefull, that couet the desolate places: so amongst men they are most to bee detested that forsake the mutuall societie of their brethren. Against this, and for foundation of Eremites and Monkes, is alledged:

Act. 2,44.

First, that Iohn was in the Wildernesse: Whereunto our men answering, that it was no such Wildernesse but that there were Townes in it, are charged with shameless peruerting of the place. Howbeit take that away which you haue falsly surmised of vs, that we expound a Wildernes which is full of Townes; and the shame of your ignorance will returne vpon your selues. For if you had not beene unured or unreadie in the Word, you should haue knowne out of the Prophet, who willeth the Wildernesses with their Cities to lift vp their voyce. That places which in comparison of others more peopled, are called Wildernesses, are not so naked of their inhabitants, but that they may haue diuers Townes and Villages planted in them: Heerevpon the Citie of Betzar with the Suburbes is said to bee in the Desert of Iordan; And euen in the very selfe-same quarter of the Wildernesse of Iordan where Iohn was, there was the Towne of Bethabara builded vpon the bank of the riuer. Here therefore it is manifest that the entrance into his Ministerie was not in such a Wildernesse as the Iesuites imagine, but in a Plaine inhabited of men: The reason wherof is, that as the first captiuitie and stroke of Gods iudgement began about those parts of Iordan, so to them also first should be offered the sauing health, which was able to comfort them ouer all their desolations. There are two other places, and but two (as farre as I remember) famous by Iohns Ministerie, that is the waters of Salem, and the waters of Enon, which are so called of the two Towns Salem and Enon, set vpon the brink of those waters: So that Iohns whole Ministerie, so farre as may appeare, was executed in habitable places: where the cause assigned by the Holy Ghost why Iohn haunted those places is to bee obserued: namely, for the aboundance of waters that were there, fit for his Ministerie in the holy Sacrament of Baptisme, whereby it is euident, that Iohn came not to those places for that they were not so much peopled as other, but seeking for the commoditie of water. Now therefore if it bee enough to make an Eremite or a Monk, to remaine in such Wildernesses as Iohn did, I can direct you to fitter Fathers and founders of your kinde of Eremites, you haue therefore Naball the Churle which dwelt in the Wildernesse of Maon; you haue also the Ziphims which dwelt in the Wildernesse of Zyph, that would haue betrayed Dauid into the hands of Saul: These are more like birds of your fether. Or if these like you not, you haue the Heathen men which are called Iaponici, who liue after the same sort that your Monkes doe, and in like lawes. Now for the closing up of Iohns Ministerie it appeareth to haue beene in the Court of Herod, whether a man would thinke that it should bee hard for you to proue; that hee repaired to the end that hee might liue in a Wildernesse. And if it were granted you, which you would haue, yet considering that whatsoeuer was done heere was done to fulfill the Prophecie of Esay, and by calling of the Lord; it can giue no warrant unto you which undertake this of your own head, without commandement or institution out of the Word. The same reason is there of his authority in diet and apparell, which is frankly confessed on our partes to haue beene after a base and homely sort: Howbeit such it was notwithstanding as the Countrie (for the aboundance of Camels and plentie of Locustes and wilde hony which was there) did affoord. For this speciall both diet and apparell, whereby Saint Iohn declining from a more liberall entertainment, which his Priestly estate did yeeld him, conformed himselfe to the baser and poorer sort of people, was not a phansie of his own, but that wherein hee had the light of the Word to go before him: First, that hee might more liuely represent the Ministerie of Elias, whereunto his was diuersly like, especially in the restoring of the true worship of God. Secondly, by commandement which being expressed in his drink, was wisely both of Iohn, and of his parents, by proportion and conuenience, translated vnto his meate and cloth: considering that it would haue beene as an old piece in a new garment, if his drinke being by Gods prescript thin and common, his meate and apparell should haue beene exquisite and picked. Further, seeing that Iohns Ministerie hath no succession, neither in respect of his calling which was immediately from God, nor of his Office, which was to prepare the way for the former comming of our Sauiour Christ, it is manifest that the Office being at an end, the things that were annexed vnto it cannot continue.

Luke 1.

After this Chrysostom is brought for the confirmation of these Orders, wherein occasion is giuen to note how these Orders of Eremites and Monkes crept first into the Church. In time of persecution, good men were glad to make the Wildernesses, as it were the Cities of their refuge from the face of tyrants that pursued them: This the Apostle to the Hebrewes doth plainely set forth, where diners amongst sufferings for the truth, he addeth that some wandred in the Wildernesses, in Mountains, and hid themselues in dennes and holes of the earth, clad in Badgers and Goates skinnes: In which number it is apparant, that Elias, upon whom you would also father this profession, is contained: Hee addeth that therefore they were in the Wildernesse, because the world (that dwelt in Cities and Villages) were not worthy of them: If therefore you now forsake the people by the example of these Eremites, it is euident that you condemne your Popish Townes and Cities as prophane and unterly unworthy your company. And that which the Epistle to the Hebrewes witnesseth of diuers times of the Law, the same do the Ecclesiasticall Writers of diuers the like times under the Gospell, as appeareth by the example of Paulus Thebæus, supposed most commonly monly to be Prince of the Monkes and Eremites, which tooke the Wildernesse onely as a remedie in persecution raised against him. Further, the Apostle in the said Epistle, and Saint Iohn witnesseth of the whole estate of the Church, that it should bee in this respect an Eremite, wherefore the cause of this Eremiticall life, being through peace of the Church taken away, the kinde of life ought to haue gone withall. But as the Churches by an vnaduised imitation drew the interrogatories ministred in the Primitiue Church, to those which were of yeares to professe their faith in Baptisme, vnto yong children: Euen so with like vnaduisednesse, the state of the Eremites, which properly agreed vnto the persecuting times, was translated vnto the peaceable times of the Church. It was no maruell therefore, although Chrysostom and others, did fall sometimes into the commendation of the Monkish and Eremeticall life. But their Eremites and Monkes are so vnlike the Popes creatures, that it is maruell they would fetch meate at the fathers hands, to nourish this cattell with, of whom they could not well bee ignorant but that they should receiue more stripes then their meate is worth. For first, they were not within any degree of Church Ministerie, whereby they were, by so much the freer to liue vnto themselues. Secondly, they were not caged as yours are, but it was left free vnto them, whether they would repaire to the companie of other Monkes or no. Thirdly, they were bound to wash the guests feete. Fourthly, there was permitted vnto them care of wiues, of family, and priuate possession, so that the same were moderate and not against the care of the soule: contrary to your lawes, which thrust vpon them the vow of wilfull pouertie. Fifthly, their diet throughout was very sparing; whereas your Monkes feed so fat, that their fatnesse and great bellies is growne into a Prouerb. Sixtly, the ancient Monkes gate their liuing with the labour of their hands, whereof also they were bound to giue an account vnto their father: yours are idle bellies, which liue of the labours of others onely. Seuenthly, they were not too notorious by singular weed, or kinde of apparell, least men passing by, should stand gazing vpon them, or point them out with the fingar? Yours are. Hither also is to bee referred, that they had no rasure commanded, onely it was prouided that they should not haue their haire long, as women haue, where yours are crowne shauen.

Likewise, in the virgins at that time, it was sharply reproued, if they did cut off their haire, whereas you commend it highly, as a vertue in your Nunnes, that they clip their haire. Eightly, many of the Monkes in the elder times remaining Monkes, retained their wiues: which to you is an abhomination, who thrust vpon them the vow of continuall continencie. Last of all, these were obedient vnto their Bishop or Pastor, as well as other of the body of the Church: yours are exempted from his obedience. So that in vowing obedience of your own invention, you disavow the obedience which the Lord hath commanded vnto you. Now touching your testimonies, Chrysostom hath not, that Iohn was Prince of the Eremites, as you would vntruely insinuate: but of the Monkes, without mention of the Eremites. Which also, if they haue no manner of ground out of the Euangelist; haue we not cause to be offended with Chrysostom? And we would thinke the Iesuits themselues should not be altogether pleased with him; sauing that they like well, that the truth be alwaies spoken against: so that it bee by a friend of the truth, vnder whom they may couer their deadly hate against it. Otherwise how will they digest it that he saith, The soule of the Monkes is without griefe or passion, and their bodies be as Adams before the fall. Ierom speaking of Anchorites and Monkes, reckoneth vp the opinions of others, how some esteeme Elias the author of them: othersome Iohn Baptist, which opinions Ierom doth apparantly nip in the head, affirming Elias more then a Monke, and Iohn a Prophet from his birth: and therefore none that made choyce of any speciall vocation. But that the most part held one Paulus Thebæus the Prince of that sect: where it is to be obserued, that this Monkish and Eremiticall birth, is so obscure, that the Father of it is vnknown. Secondly, the neerest gesse that can be had of the parentage of it, leaueth it altogether in the filth of mans invention. Last of all, that all, our Monkes and Eremites are Bastard and degenerate children from their father Paulus Thebæus, the likeliest Prince of their profession: whom Ierom affirmeth to haue taken the wildernesse, not of his own voluntary will, but persecuted euen of his neerest friends. Touching Isidorus if all speake truth that are learned: he (for his time wherein he liued) should be worthy of credit. He flourished about Pope Gregories dayes the great, when this kinde of cattle was not daintie. And therefore if the streame of common error carried him to the liking and praising of such a seate: there is no learning nor wisedom in the world (without a speciall grace from God) which was able to resist such a forcible drift. Howbeit Isidorus was not so wedded to the Monkes as the Iesuites: who of fiue kindes of Monkes reiecteth three as very bad: where there is not with the Iesuites no order of Monkes which are not sacred; who, whereseeuer they doe but finde the name of a Monke, by and by they thinke that it is ground good enough to plant Monkerie vpon. In Bernard your purveyer hath deceiued you, for we find no such treatise as you giue the title of. In a Sermon of Iohns natiuity, he greatly commendeth him: but with no marke either of Monke or Eremite. Neither hath he any other thing that maketh for your purpose.

RHEM. 2. [2. Doe penance] So is the Latine, word for word, so readeth all antiquitie, namely S. Cyprian, ep. 52. often, and S. Augustine l. 13. confess. c 12. and it is a very vsuall speech in the new Testament, specially in the preaching of S. Iohn Baptist, * Christ himselfe, and * the Apostles: to signifie perfect repentance, which hath not onely confession & amendment, but contrition or sorrow for the offence, and painfull satisfaction: Such as S. Cyprian speaketh of in all the foresaid epistle. But the aduersaries of purpose (as * namely Beza protesteth) mislike that interpretation, because it fauoureth satisfaction for sinne, which they cannot abide. where, if they pretend the ‡ Greeke word, we send them to these places, Mat. 11. 21. Luk. 10. 13. 2. Cor. 7 9. where it must needs signifie, sorrowfull, painfull, and satisfactorie repentance. We tell them also, that S. Basil, a Greeke Doctor, calleth the Niniuites repentance with fasting and hairecloth and ashes, by the same Greek word μετάνοιαν. And more we will tell them in other places.

CARTVV. 2. [2. Agite pœnitentiam, Doe penance.] First it is vntrue here, that all antiquitie readeth the Latine, which they say is word for word in our tongue, Doe penance. For Tertullian of more antiquitie then any whom you remember, doth translate it into that Latine which in our tongue is as much as, Enter into penance, or take order to repent. Where in sending the sinner to take order with himselfe for that which he hath offended, he ouerthroweth the Popish penance, which calleth him both to a reckoning vp of his sins vnto the Priest, & to an induring of what punishment soeuer, the Priest shall enioyn vnto him. Again, the Syriack Paraphrast, whose antiquity men of your own marke haue set vp, and made euen almost with the Apostles times: translateth the word into that which in our tongue signifieth to returne. Before the face of which word, your Popish penance cannot stand. For beside that it signifieth an alteration of that euill way which a man is entred into, which also agreeth with the translation that we follow, and you condemne: it declareth, that repentance once begun, is continued vntill such time as we come to our former estate wherein we stood, during the integritie of our Father Adam; in which respect the holy Ghost in the old Testament setteth out our repentance, by the word of Returne. Which estate, because it is not attained vnto, till we haue put off the body of sinne by death, it is euident that this signification striketh your Popish penance starke dead, which is determined within the circle of a few dayes, weekes, moneths, or yeeres, according as shall be thought good to the discretion of the penitentiarie Priest. Secondly, howsoeuer, and of whomsoeuer the Greek word hath ben interpreted: yet it is more euident, then the Iesuites doe manifestly gainsay, that it signifieth a change of the minde, and reacheth no further then to the action or mouing thereof: and for that cause, can in no sort signifie either confession or satisfaction. And therefore vnto this exhortation of repentance S. Iohn ioyneth another; whereby he calleth for outward actions also, so farre as they are commanded by the word: willing them that they should bring forth the fruits worthy of repentance. Which whilest the Iesuites are ignorant of, they haue confusedly cobbled vp all vnder the word μετανοια: which they might with more cunning and shew of truth haue deliuered to their Disciples out of both the places. This signification receiueth strength by the vnproper vse of it: when it is by a borrowed speech translated vnto God, of whom it is said, that he repenteth: what else can be meant then the ceasing from the worke he was occupied in before, to passe to a contrary operation. Thirdly, our translation with the sence which wee followe, agreeing with any place in the Scripture where this word is fonnd, there are found places where your translation and sence cannot stand. For where it is said, that a brother offending seuen times a day, should be forgiuen, so that hee say, it repenteth me. If you were the same there that you be here, and should translate, I doe penance: there should be contrition, confession, and satisfaction seuen times: yea by the meaning of our Sauiour Christ, setting out an infinite number by a few, seuentie seuen times in one day, which if it should be done, there must be either shorter confessions and satisfactions then your discipline doth allow, or longer dayes then the Sunne can make, especially in our climate. And therefore espying as it seemeth, the nakednesse and shame of your penance: you haue here altered your tongues; and in stead of I do penance, you haue followed and translated it, it repenteth me. And this force of the truth hath driuen you also to follow our translation of Repentance otherwhere. Mark. 1.15. Acts. 5.31. 2. Tim. 2.25. and Heb 12.17. As for the places which you affirme to bee so pressing and pregnant to proue the signification of your Popish penance: they make flat against you: for the Euangelists, to set forth the open profession of repentance, could not do it by the word that you translate Doe penance, vnlesse they had added in sackloth and and ashes, a note and signe of repentance, and not the repentance it sefe, or any part of it, which needed not, if the same had been set forth in the bare word, which you turne Doe penance. And where repentance is a continuall exercise of a Christian man: the repentance witnessed by sackloth and ashes, whereof mention is made in these places, is chiefly required in great calamities, either pressing or approching; and therefore is very vnskilfully alledged, to set forth the ordinary estate of repentance. But here you tell vs, that Basil, a Greeke Doctor, calleth the Niniuites repentance in sackcloth and ashes, by this Greek word μετανοια. We will helpe you poore men. S. Matthew himselfe who is infinitely of greater authority, doth so note it. But we tell you againe, that the trope of putting one part for the whole, is so usuall, as without a wilfull daubing up of your owne eyes, you could hardly but see it: for when this kinde of repentance is otherwhere wholly set forth by the bodily exercise alone, which is the smallest thing thereof; it is no maruaile, although it bee noted wholly by the change of the minde, which is the chiefe in this repentance. Beside that Basil in the same place calleth sackloth, and such bodily exercise, helpes to repentance, and therefore no part of repentance. The place you cite, is not in the first, but in the second Epistle to the Corinthes: and standeth stifly against your penance. For making the godly sorrow mother of repentance, and that which goeth before it, he doth plainly declare, that as repentance cannot be without godly sorrow, so the godly sorrow can be no part of repentance, signified vnder that word. So that, although we do it after another sort, yet hold we that sorrow, and a broken heart for our former sinnes, is required vnto true repentance. We teach also satisfaction, of which kinde is the satisfaction that Cyprian speaketh of, namely the satisfaction which was to be made to the Church, and that not for priuate sinnes, but for such as they offended the Church with, especially by falling to Idolatry from the true worship of God. We teach also satisfaction to be made unto the parties whom we haue any way indammaged. To God, we are able to make none. First, for that wee cannot giue any thing vnto him, considering that whatsoeuer we can by any endeuour doe, is otherwise due, albeit there were no arrerages to make paiment of. Secondly, for that all our good workes are in themselues, and without Christ, copper, not able to abide the touchstone of Gods iudgement. And for these causes wee may all bee compared to him, that owing an infinite summe had not wherewith to make paiment; and vnto those, to whom the debt was not imputed in the yeare of Iubile, which is now all the time of the Gospell. Wherefore in matter of satisfaction vnto God, we we flie onely vnto Christ, who is our whole and alone ransome and redemption. And as this blasphemous doctrine of satisfaction is against the whole course of the Scripture: so it is directly against the preaching of Iohn, who preached the baptisme of repentance to the remission of sins, which is contrary to satisfaction for sins, that the one standing, the other must necessarily fall. Hither belongeth that cited out of Ambrose, which saith, he readeth not that Peter made satisfaction, it seemeth also in this place to be out of season to talke of satisfaction, seeing that your selues teach, that the sinnes before baptisme are done away by the very worke of Baptisme without any painfull suffering of him that committed them: and that the painfull satisfaction must be done for mortall sins after Baptisme.

RHEM. 3. [6. Confessing their sins.] Iohn did prepare the way to Christ, and his Sacraments, not onely by his baptisme, but by inducing the people to confession of their sins, which is not to acknowledge themselues in generall to be sinners, but also to vtter euery man his sinnes.

CARTVV. 3. [6. Confessing their sins] Considering that Baptisme was ministred, to testifie the remision of sins: there was necessarily required a profession of the guilt of sinne. But that this confession was made by euery one apart, of euery particular fault they had committed, and secretly in S. Iohns eare: there is first of all no mention. Secondly, the nature of the word, which signifieth a confession of known faults: ouerthroweth the recitall of secret sinnes, which eare confession requireth: whereas, if the Euangelist would haue set out an opening of secret faults: he would haue vsed either the word ἐξαγόρευσις, or ἐκφώνησις, or some other word of like signification. Thirdly, it is contrary to the nature of the meeting, which was publicke, where corner and secret exercises haue no place. Fourthly, it is contrary to the nature of the Sacrament that was administred: which being publicke, required a publicke confession of mans corruption. Neither could S. Iohn vpon a whispering confession of sinne in his eare, without publick profession thereof before, haue receiued any into the participation of that Sacrament; for it belongeth as well to those which assist the Baptisme, as to him that ministreth it, to know that the persons which are to be baptised, are well and fitly qualified thereunto. And therefore although an Anabaptist or a Puritan would to the minister of the Church confesse himself a sinner, yet ought he not to be receiued vnto Baptisme, vnlesse he professe his corruption before the Church. Fifthly, if you will ground your auricular confession of this place, then must you haue it but once, and before Baptisme: and not as you haue it yearely, and before the Lords Supper. Sixthly, the generall medicine or plaster that Iohn applied to them, declareth the manner of their confession to haue been general, wherby they did (as it were) open their disease or wound to him. For Iohn prescribing them what they should do, doth according to the generall profession or order of life wherein they liued, to the Publicans that which appertained to that estate, to the Souldiers that which was agreeable to their calling: whereas if they had made confession euery one apart, hee would haue giuen his prescription also apart, to euery singular person, and if they had made recitall of their particular faultes; hee would haue limited their receits accordingly. Seuenthly, it is impossible, not onely for euery one of the people to make recitall of their sinnes particularly, which are both infinite, and in part vnknowen; but also for Iohn alone to heare all those which they could haue made confession of, especially never hauing before made confession of their sinnes in the whole course of their life.

Look Origen in hom. 2. in Psal. 37.

Dyonis. Carthag. ad Mat 3. 6.

Finally, your own Monke ouercome with so manifest light of the place, doth frankly confesse that this confession was made in common, that it is no Sacramentall confession, no distinct nor no full confession: adding further this reason, that the Sacramentall confession was not yet instituted by our Sauiour Christ: And that which is more, your own Canonists hold that auricular confession is not by the law of God, but by constitution of Bishops: And the Canon before cited out of Ambrose affirmeth that it being read that Peter wept, there is no mention that he said any thing: which controuersie to compound betweene you and them, other some haue a middle iudgement, affirming that confession is the law of God, but the forme and time to haue beene added by decree of Bishops, which indeed is euidently proued by the decree of Pope Leo, who in regard of inconueniences that had come by publique confession of faultes, whereby the offenders were cast in the teeth with their offences, and sometimes drawne into sutes of Law, ordained that it should be sufficient to make priuate confession to the Priest. This is confirmed by storie that teacheth that the Westerne Bishops obserued diligently this priuate confession being brought in by others. And after it beginning to set foote in the East parts, vpon a shameleese act of a Deacon of Constantinople, which defiled an honourable Matron: it was abrogated by Bishop Nectarius, whereunto all the rest almost of the Bishops consented, which thing was after well liked of by Chrysostom his successor, as appeareth in diuers places where hee speaketh against this priuate confession, whose iudgements being the Churches, wee much preferre vnto either Socrates or Sozimen if they had misliked the abrogation of it, which further then coniecturally and doubtfully they doe not. Therefore either are you much abused your selues, or would shamefully abuse others: which would make them beleeue, that it was instituted by the sacred authority of Iohn, which came in by the usurped power of the Bishops of Rome, and that it was in Iohns time which the Church knew not vntill about 400 yeare after him.

RHEM. 4. [8 Fruit worthy.] He preacheth satisfaction by doing worthie fruits or works of penance, which are (as S. Ierome saith in 2. Ioel) fasting, praying, almes, and the like.

CARTVV. 4. [8 Fruite worthy.] The blasphemie of satisfaction is already answered: Heer is to bee noted, that the Iesuites which are well acquainted with mens whipping themselues, haue also made their owne writings acquainted with the same discipline: the after notes ettsoones carying a whip with them to Irke their fellowes that went before: For fasting, and generally all satisfaction being assigned before to be a part of repentance, and contained in the word of penance onely, is heere made a fruite and effect of their penance; whereas notwithſtanding it cannot bee both penance, and the fruit or effect thereof: And Ierome, Ioel.2. here alledged doth plainely ſay, that repentance is declared or ſet forth, by faſting, weeping and mourning, making them figures of repentance, and not as the Ieſuites do, parts of repentance: And exhorting men not to diſpaire through the greatneſſe of their iniquities; hee doth not place the ground of their comfort in their own ſatiſfactorie paines or coſtes, but in that, that great mercie ſhall wipe away great ſinnes.

RHEM.5. [10 The Axe.] Heere Preachers are taught to dehort from doing euill for feare of hell, and to exhort to do good in hope of heauen: which kinde of Preaching our aduerſaries do condemne.

CARTVV.5. [10 The Axe.] Seeing wee muſt needs haue aduerſaries wee are glad to haue light on you, whoſe ſhameleſſe untruthes do bewray your priuitie and friendſhip with the common aduerſarie and accuſer of the people of God. Wee teach that no ſeruice is accepted of God, unleſſe it come in ſome meaſure from a readie minde: and that the Lord reiecteth all ſuch offices as are wrung from men for feare of hell onely: Hereupon the Church is called a voluntarie and frank minded people: ſaid alſo to bee delighted with the Law of God: And finally that the Lord, as hee loueth the cheerefull duties, ſo miſliketh the conſtrained. But for ſo much as there are yet in vs the remnants of our rebellious nature, wee teach that it is neceſſary that the ſame be through the threates of the Law of God reſtrained and kept under, leaſt it breaking out ſhould hinder the work of the Spirit in the children of adoption. But as for theſe Ieſuites, they ſhame not to bring ſuch a leane, or rather carrion ſacrifice unto the Lord of Hoſtes, which a mortall and ſinfull man would not accept at the hands of his ſeruant, from whom hee could draw no ſeruice but that which the feare of the whip ſhould preſſe out.

RHEM.6. [11 In Water.] Iohns Baptiſme did not remit ſinnes, nor was comparable to Chriſts Baptiſme, as heere it is plaine, and in many other places: Hier.adu.Luciſer. Aug. de Bapt. cont.Donat.lib.5.cap.9.10.11. Yet it is an Article of our Aduerſaries, that the one is no better then the other: Which they ſay not to extoll Iohns, but to derogate from Chriſts Baptiſme, ſo farre that they make it of no more value or efficacy for remiſſion of ſinnes, and grace, and iuſtification, then was Iohns: therby to maintaine their manifold hereſies, that Baptiſme taketh not away ſinnes, that a man is no cleaner nor iuſter by the Sacrament of Baptiſme then before, that it is not neceſſarie for children vnto ſaluation, but it is enough to bee borne of Chriſtian parents, and ſuch like erronius Poſitions well knowne among the Caluiniſts.

Iohns Baptiſme and Chriſts.

CARTVV.6. [11 In water.] Iohn Preached the ſame doctrine which our Sauiour Chriſt did: For the Euangeliſt laying forth the ſumme of our Sauiour Chriſts doctrine, maketh it the ſame which is noted to haue been the ſumme of S. Iohns: It followeth therefore that hee had the ſame ſeale of doctrine, ſo that there is not one Baptiſme of Iohn, and another of Chriſt: And ſeeing the Fathers vnder the Law were baptiſed with the ſame Baptiſme wherewith wee are, much more the Baptiſme of Iohn, approaching ſo neere vnto the fulneſſe of the Goſpell is the ſame with ours. Hither commeth the teſtimonie of the Apoſtle, that there is but one Baptiſme, as there is but one faith; ſeeing therefore thoſe that beleeued the doctrine of Iohn had the ſame faith that thoſe had which beleeued the doctrine of our Sauiour Chriſt, it is euident that they had alſo the ſame Baptiſme with them. Laſtly, this errour is manifeſtly ouerthrown out of this place, firſt, in that there can bee neither true repentance, where there is no remiſſion of ſinnes; nor no remiſſion of ſinnes, where there is no gift of the Spirit of God: Vnleſſe therefore you will deny that there was any true repentance in thoſe that were baptized by Iohn, or ſay that the confeſſion of ſinnes unto him was diſſembled, you ſhall bee conſtrained to confeſſe, that by Iohns Baptiſme, remiſſion of ſinnes and the gift of the Holy Ghoſt was giuen, as well as by ours. Then it is ouerthrowne in the example of the Baptiſme of our Sauiour Chriſt, who being baptized of Iohn forthwith receiued the Holy Ghoſt: And therefore the deſtinction betweene the baptiſme of Iohn, and our Sauiour Chriſts, that the Spirit was giuen by one and not by the other, is full of vntruth. The meaning of Iohn is manifeſt, to diſtinguiſh betweene that which the Miniſter doth in euerie baptiſme, and that which our Sauiour Chriſt doth: For the one is the Miniſter onely of the water, the other is the giuer of the Spirit. As if the Miniſter ſhould ſay, I can but ſpeak of the outward word, the ſound whereof beateth your eares, but it is Chriſt that with his Spirit muſt write it in your hearts, It is therefore your great fault, that you dare, to ſo manifeſt and euident a truth, oppoſe the authoritie of Ierome and Auguſtine, thereby to caſt a miſt before the ſimple to bleare their eyes, that they ſhonld not ſee the truth, And if it were meete to light a candle at noone daies, and to adde the opinion of men to ſo cleere a iudgement of the Lord in his Word, wee might alledge the authority of Prudentius an old Diuine, who ſpeaking of Iohns Baptiſme, affirmeth that this holy floud waſhed away the markes of old errours. Wee could alledge your Maiſter, whom the euidence of the truth in this cauſe, conſtrained to pronounce of our ſide againſt you, at the leaſt thus farre, as hee that was rightly baptized with Iohns Baptiſme was not to bee baptized againe; for which you whip him in the Margent. And Auguſtine himſelfe alledged for this cauſe doth ſo faintly hold that iudgement that is heere alledged, that hee doth not onely note other men to haue beene in his time of iudgement, that by Iohns Baptiſme ſinnes were forgiuen, but alſo affirmeth that hee will not greatly contend if men think otherwiſe then hee: whereas the Ieſuites ſo ſpeak of this, as if the Churches foundation were raiſed by a contrary iudgement. Vpon this matter it is apparant, that your accuſation of derogating from the Baptiſme of Chriſt, is retorned vpon your own heads: For the Baptiſme of Iohn and of our Sauiour Chriſt being one and the ſame, as after yet more cleerely ſhall appeare, whatſoeuer you take from Iohns, you are found to take from Chriſts. And upon the ſame diſcourſe it followeth alſo, that many are waſhed with the Sacramentall water which haue no ſpot of ſinne done away: For ſeeing thereunto is needfull the washing and purging hand of our Sauiour Christ, and the request of a good conscience vnto God (which onely the eternall loue of God, and his free election before the beginning of the world, is able to procure the presence of:) it cannot bee that the Sacramentall water which alwayes is not thus accompanied, can make men snow white from their sinnes. 1.Pet.3.21

And touching the elect, although we know that the Lord doth truely performe vnto them by washing away their sinnes, that which is figured by the outward washing of the bodily filth: yet we dare not here tie him to the very moment of the administration of baptisme, but leaue that to the free working of his holy spirit: who as he breatheth on whomsoeuer it seemeth good to him, so doth he also what time him seemeth best. We read that Saul (for from him also by analogy the working of the Lord in his elect may be taken) receiued certaine gifts of the Spirit some while after he had receiued the unction which was a signe thereof. In Dauid we read that the Spirit of God came vpon him the same instant wherein he was annoynted. To this vnresistable truth of the word, there commeth also the consent of the ancient Fathers. Tertullian saith, that the soule is not established by washing, but by answer of beliefe vnto the question wherein it is asked, Whether beleeuest thou or no? Also, that it is a carnall act that we are dipped in water, but it is the effect of the spirit that we are deliuered from sinnes. Cyprian saith, that remission of sinnes, whether it beginen by Baptisme, or by other Sacraments, is properly of the Spirit of God; in that to him alone belongeth the priuiledge of the effecting thereof. Also whether Iudas or Paul baptise, it is Christ that washeth, absoluеth, and doth away the sinne. Neither doth water wash the soule, but first it selfe is washed of the spirit, that it may wash others spiritually. Now touching the cruel condemnation of yong children, that can neither possibly sometime, nor with any good conuenience other sometime, be brought vnto Baptisme: it argueth not onely the ignorance of the free election of God, before the beginning of the world, but also of the couenant that the Lord hath made with the faithfull, to be not onely their God, but the God of their seed. Further also, of the nature of the Sacrament, which is to seale the remission of sins, and not to giue it. So that wee bring not our children to baptisme, to the end that they should thereby haue remission of sinnes; but because we are by the promise induced to beleeue, that as being the elect of God, they haue already receiued it: otherwise it were as much as to put the seale to a blanke, wherein nothing is written, nor nothing is giuen. In these poynts therefore, howsoeuer we must beare your consciences in accusing, we are not yet to feare the condemnation either of error or heresie in any Court where the word of God smeth in iudgement.

RHEM. 7. [12. Floore] This Floore is his Church militant here in earth, wherein are both good and bad (here signified by Corne and Chaffe) till the separation bee made in the day of iudgement: contrary to the Doctrine of the heretickes, that hold the Church to consist onely of the good.

CARTVV. 7. [12. Floore.] Vnlesse they tooke their accusations against vs, of the report of others, as they often take the defence of their own causes: it were impossible but their owne harts must needs condemne them in so manifest an vntruth as they are conuicted of, by infinite testimonies of the writers of our profession; who vpon euery good occasion teach that the Church is mingled of good and euill. Indeed they teach also that the Scripture maketh mention somtimes of a Church, of such as are onely elect, and of whom none can perish. Which if the Iesuites bee ignorant of, there is good cause they should bee ashamed of their ignorance, that hath so open proofe of the Scripture.

RHEM. 8. [16. Opened.] To signifie that heauen was shut in the old Law, till Christ by his passion opened it, and so by his Ascension was the first that entred into it: contrary to the doctrine of the heretikes. See Heb. 9.8. and 11.40.

CARTVV. 1. [8. Opened.] Our Sauiour Christ is in respect of the vertue of his passion, the Lambe slaine from the beginning of the world: and therefore the vertue of his passion once abidden, reacheth to all times and ages of the world. Hereupon the Apostle affirmeth, that by his appearance all were gathered vnder him, as vnder their head, both those in heauen, and those also in earth. Noting that there were many in heauen before his comming, whose blessed estate was ratified by his appearance. Againe, seeing the Fathers had faith whereby they obtained both remission of their sins, and perfect righteousnesse in our Sauiour Christ, whereby also they were sanctified, and walked vprightly before the Lord: it could not be that the kingdom of heauen, which is alwayes open vnto the iust, should be shut against them. Furthermore, by this doctrine of the Iesuites, the sin of Adam is made (contrary to the doctrine of the Apostle) more powerfull to condemnation then Christs righteousnesse vnto saluation. For the sin of Adam casteth his wicked and vnbeleeuing posteritie into hell immediatly after death; whereas (by their doctrine) the communication of Christs righteousnesse with them that beleeued in him, could not immediatly after death lift them vp into the kingdom of heauen. Thus the Iesuites are alwayes found in a continuall endeuour of lessening and darkning the merits of Christs death. Moreouer, the example of Enoch, of Elias, and of Moses, all which are certainly receiued into heauen, and whereof two of them appeared here vpon earth in glory, do bewray the falshood of this wicked doctrine. And finally, this opening of the heauen (noted onely to set forth more plainly the visible comming down of the holy Ghost) if it should proue any thing this way; it maketh against them which esteeme the heauens shut before the passion: when the place it selfe witnesseth, that they were open at the Baptisme. The quotations to the Hebrewes shall be answered in their proper place.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. IIII.

Eremites. RHEM. 1. [1. Deſart.] As Iohn the Baptiſt, ſo our Sauiour by going into the deſart and there liuing in contemplation euen among bruite beaſts, and ſubiect to the aſſaults of the Deuill for our ſinnes, giueth a warrant and example to ſuch holy men as haue liued in wildernes for penance and contemplation, called Eremites.

CART VV. 1. [1. Deſart] We haue learned that euery action of Chriſt is our inſtruction, but that euery action of his is our imitation (which muſt be proued to maintaine this concluſion) is a ſtrange voyce which our eares were neuer acquainted with: the vntruth whereof (as in many other caſes) is manifeſt in this. And firſt of all, in the working cauſe, which was the holy Ghoſt, that led him into the Deſart; whereby his immediate and extraordinary ſending into the wildernes is ſignified by the power of his own Spirit rapt in the body to the Deſart. And as his calling was this way extraordinary: ſo the meanes to proue this extraordinary calling was ſutable. For it appeareth as Elias was often time, and Philip once taken vp by the Angell of the Lord, or otherwiſe taken vp, and miraculouſly tranſported: ſo alſo was our Sauiour Chriſt. This is firſt noted in the compoſition of the word, which ſignifying either to bring againe, or elſe to carry vp: the former ſignification not framing with the place, the latter muſt be receiued, and ſo it is vſed of S. Paul. Secondly, this is confirmed by the word which S. Mark vſeth, that noteth a powerable and ſudden tranſport of his perſon into the wilderneſſe. Thirdly, this is euident by his returne from the wilderneſſe, which S. Luke affirmeth to haue been in the power and vertue of the ſame Spirit, wherewith hee had been annointed and carried vp into the Wilderneſſe, and therefore not in the common naturall power of a man. Laſtly, the Euangeliſt ſeemeth to haue left ſome marke hereof in that hee cloſeth vp this ſtory of his carriage and re-carriage to and fro the Wilderneſſe, whereof when your Eremites are vtterly deſtitute; and that (vnleſſe you bee maruellouſly impudent) by your owne confeſſion: the Eremites can haue no other guide of their voluntarie leaping into the Wilderneſſe then the ſpirit of Satan, contrarie to that Spirit which led our Sauiour Chriſt thether. Secondly, of the end of his going, partly to teſtifie his Diuine Glorie in abſtinence abſtinence from meate the ſpace of fortie daies, which hath no place in your Eremites: partly to bee tempted of the Deuill, which ought to haue as little place in them, if they knew the meaning of the laſt petition in the Lords prayer: for our Sauiour Chriſt heerein ſought the fitteſt place of temptation, as the Stories of the poſſeſſed by deuils doe declare, whom the deuils to greater terrour and horrour; draue into the ſolitarie and fearefull places: Vnleſſe therefore the Ieſuites dare ſay that wee may lay our ſelues open; yea ſeeke the occaſion of moſt dangerous temptation, it is euident that this example of our Sauiour Chriſt, ſealeth no warrant of an Eremeticall life. Where the folly of the Ieſuites is yet more manifeſtly diſcried, for hauing no ground heere but of Chriſts example, yet haue they cleane altered the end of their Eremites flight into the Wilderneſſe: aſſigning it to bee penance, whereof they haue no ſhadow in his example of going thither, yet were it meete that they ſhould profeſſe their penance amongſt men, rather then amongſt beaſts, that they might haue the ſame witneſſes of their repentance, whom they had beholders of their fall. Againe, if the warrant of Eremeticall life be fetched from this example. it muſt of neceſſity bee ſhut vp within the ſpace of forty daies, and as many nightes, after which time our Sauiour returning from his temptations, lived the reſt of his life in the common ſociety of men. Further, if both Iohn which liued in great auſterity of life, and our Sauiour Chriſt who liued in a more liberall ſort, after the accuſtomed manner of men, bee examples of Eremeticall life; it followeth that the Eremites may at their choice, either liue auſterely by the example of Iohn, or in great freedome of meates and drinkes by the example of our Sauiour Chriſt; contrarie to your doctrine of Eremeticall life, And heere you put mee in remembrance of the notable iniurie you do to our Sauiour Chriſt, who making him an Eremite, make Iohn Baptiſt his Prince, whoſe ſhoe-latchets notwithſtanding hee was not worthy to looſe. Verily theſe fables were not well put together: wherein if you would ſalue the matter, by expounding Prince for the firſt Eremite, you haue barred your ſelues from this anſwer, with a double barre: Firſt, in that otherwhere you make Elias an Eremite, who was before Iohn: Secondly, in that you cannot beare the Princedome ſometime of the Fathers aſcribed to Peter ouer the Apoſtles, to bee interpreted, the firſt either in time, or in order, but will needes haue it firſt in dignitie: which interpretation if you will ſo ſtiffely ſtand vnto, then haue you made a faire hand, which by the ſame conſtruction lift vp Iohn aboue our Sauiour Chriſt? that is to ſay, the ſeruant aboue his Maiſter. Wee ſee not therefore, but you muſt fetch the warrant of your Eremeticall profeſſion from the tempter himſelfe, who is a greater haunter of the Wilderneſſes then either of thoſe perſonages which you haue yet named. And although there bee no ground of your Eremeticall profeſſion, yet there is a law of leproſie, which caſting both you and your Eremites out of Cities and Townes, will make you field-men, leaſt the infection of your manifold hypocriſie and ſuperſtition ſhould ſpread it ſelfe amongſt Gods people.

RHEM. 2. [2 Faſted forty daies.] Elias and Moſes (ſaith S. Ierome) by the faſt of fortie daies were filled with the familiarity of God, and our Lord himſelfe in the Wilderneſſe faſted as many, to leaue vnto vs the ſolemne daies of faſt. (that is Lent) Hiero in cap. 42. Eſay. S. Auguſtine alſo hath the very words, ep. 119. And generally all the ancient Fathers, that by occaſion or of purpoſe ſpeake of the Lenton-faſt, make it not onely an imitation of our Sauiours faſt, but alſo an Apoſtolicall Tradition, and of neceſſity to bee kept. Contemne not Lent (ſaith S. Ignatius) for it containeth the imitation of our Lords conuerſation. And S. Ambroſe ſaith plainely, That it was not ordained by men. but conſecrated by God; nor inuented by any earthly cogitation, but commanded by the heauenly Maieſtie. And againe, that it is ſinne, not to faſt all the Lent, S. Hieromes words alſo bee moſt plaine: Wee (ſaith hee) faſt ſortie daies, or, make one Lent in a yeare, according to the Tradition of the Apoſtles in time conuenient. This time moſt conuenient, is (as S. Auguſtin ſaith ep. 119.) immediately before Eaſter, thereby to communicate with our Sauiours paſſion, and (as other Writers doe adde) thereby to come the better prepared and more worthily, to the great ſolemnitie of Chriſts Reſurrection, beſide many other goodly reaſons in the ancient Fathers, which for breuity wee omit. See (good Chriſtian Reader) twelue notable Sermons of S. Leo the Great de Quadrageſima, of Lent: namely, Ser. 6. 9. Where hee calleth it the Apoſtles ordinance by the doctrine of the holy Ghoſt. See S. Ambroſe from the 23. Sermon forward: In S. Bernard 7. Sermons, and in many other Fathers the like. Laſt of all, note well the ſaying of S. Auguſtine, who affirmeth that by due obſeruation thereof, the wicked bee ſeparated from the good, Infidels from Chriſtians, heretickes from faithfull Catholickes.

CARTVV. 2. [2. Faſted fourtie dayes.] It hath been a common practiſe of Heretickes, Montaniſts, Tacians, Manichies, and ſuch like: to ouercaſt the filth of their errors, with the face and viſard of a baſtard kind of faſting: wherefore the good reader, ſhall leſſe need to marvaile if the horrible hereſie of Poperie hath endeuoured thus alſo to paint it ſelfe: if happily by this ragge of this counterfait faſt, they might hide the ſhame of their religion, for eſtabliſhment whereof, they flie to a ſingular and extraordinarie example of our Sauiour Chriſt: to the imitation whereof, the like calling and ſpirit to them that uſe it, were neeceſſarie. It was once performed of Moſes, to authoriſe him to be the law giuer between the Lord and his people: neuer followed of any, vntill Elias the reſtorer of the law, was extraordinarily raiſed and called thereunto. In whoſe ſteppes alſo neuer anie aſſaied to put his foote vntill our Sauiour Chriſt, by the ſame miraculous worke, approued himſelfe to be the giuer of the new Law. Now if the examples of Moſes and Elias, without commandement, gaue no warrant to the Iewes of imitation of them: The like example our Sauiour Chriſt, vnto the like end, cannot iuſtifie their doings which endeuour the imitation of this act. And ſo much leſſe heere, then there, as the act of our Sauiour Chriſt (who by his own power kept his body from hunger during that time) was more miraculous and inimitable then were the actes of Moſes or Elias. Againe, the Iewes were a people more apt (by the diſpenſation of times) to haue followed thoſe corporall exerciſes, then are the Christians. Further, there is a manifest fallation in the word of Fasting. For where the Euangelist meaneth to set forth an abstinence from meat in our Sauiour Christ, without either need or appetite to it, whom he affirmeth not to haue hungred vntill fortie dayes expired: the Papists carrie it to a Fast, wherein a man both needing and desiring meate, doth notwithstanding abstaine from it. And where the Euangelist setteth forth the praise of his diuine power in this fast; they turne it another way, as if there were here set forth the commendation of his temperance, or patience in enduring hunger: it appeareth therfore that the Iesuits in this place neither touch heauen nor earth: and therefore hauing put another fast in stead of our Sauiour Christs, can haue not so much as the warrant of his example to vphold them. Whereby also falleth out the impossibility of following this fast in the same degree; as it is to follow his other miracles, of rebuking the windes and waters. And therefore by this apish imitation of theirs, they blemish to their vttermost, the glory of our Sauiour Christ, in this miracle: preasing thereby to the throne of Maiestie, which is proper vnto God alone. And if it were either lawfull or possible to be followed, yet to haue the shadow of our Sauiour Christs example, it ought to be done both in the wildernesse, and once onely in a mans life.

And besides that the Papists haue cleane changed the fast of our Sauiour Christ: they doe not obserue the Christian fast which they pretend. For what agreement is there betweene fasting and feasting: what societie between emptinesse and fulnesse? It is known, that in their Lenton fasts, as in all other their pretended abstinencies, the shambles are onely exchanged, either into the Fish-markets, or into the Grossers and the Apothecaries shops, or both: places where there bee moe pleasing and pampering dishes by ten fold, then amongst the Fleshmongers of all sorts. Of which mock-feast compared with sober eating of a peece of flesh, and drinke according to the manner of the Country: I wish the Iesuites to read S. Augustine. Let them read Thalasius also, who affirmeth that the true fast is broken, if a man do but drink his fill of water. But here the Iesuites muster all antiquity against vs; whereof notwithstanding there is no one place shewed which proueth the Popish fast, placed not in abstinence from meat altogether, but in abstinence onely from flesh. It cannot be denied but the Fathers were great commenders of fasting; and the commendations of it in their mouthes got credit; which were paternes of the practise which they taught: where these men pretending in doctrine the abstinence of Daniel, are found in their liues, to be rather among the brethren of the rich glutton, that fared delicatly euery day. Howbeit, that the elder Churches, and that soone after the Apostles times, kept no measure in this behalfe, it is euident by that which Eusebius reporteth out of Philo, that certaine were so giuen to contemplation, that in three, yea sixe whole dayes they neither ate nor dranke. Nay, they came so farre, as to thinke it vnworthy the dignitie of Christianitie, to eate onely in the day, and therefore eate onely in the night time. We read also of one Pior, a Monke, which alwayes ate his meate walking, lest he should seeme to imploy any time about eating, as about some necessary work. Another also asking him why he did so eate his meate, answered, That by mouing to and fro he might auoid the feeling of any corporall delight in his meat, which of the one side is farre from the due humiliation which ought to be in men; through the knowledge of their weaknes; & on the other side it is as far from the enioying of the liberty purchased vnto vs by the death of Christ; in the moderate vse whereof, that our harts being filled with ioy, our mouthes might be filled with the praise of God. Yet for all these seeds of superstition in eating & abstaining, they left things in greater liberty then the Popish superstition wil suffer. For some holding that the fast should be kept one day, some two daies, some mo; yet in this diuersitie of fast, they kept the vnitie of faith: leauing euery one to his own iudgement in that matter, as Irenæus declareth in his Epistle, whereby he sharply reproueth Victor, then Bishop of Rome. Which he would neuer haue done, if he had esteemed it a necessary tradition comming from the Apostles themselues. Epiphanius after him reciteth that the Lenton fast began six dayes before Easter. So Socrates after Epiphanius, declareth, that the Lenton fast at Rome, was kept but 3. weeks before Easter. That whole Greece obserued it more then 6. weeks before Easter. That other began it 7. weeks before Easter; in all which time they fasted (and that by interlacing of eating daies) only 15. daies, yet did all these call their fast, the fast of 40 daies, or as the Papists speak, the Lenton; whereat Socrates doth greatly maruell. And as there was great difference in the nnmber of daies, so differ they in the diuers obseruation of the daies, some [a] Churches not fasting Saturday, [b] other some fasting it: [c] some not fasting the Thursday; [d] some fasting solemnly only the 4. and 6. working day in the week: [e] some fasting the Lords day, [f] other some not. Neither differed they so much in the time, as they varied in the choyce of meates, which they vsed in the time of their fasts. For some abstained from all liuing creatures, other some ate fish onely; other both fish and fowle: as that had their beginning of the waters as well as the fish. Other abstained from wortes and egges: other ate onely dry bread, and other did not eate that. All which varieties of daies and meates in fasting, Socrates shutteth vp after this sort: That forasmuch as no man is able to shew any commandement of this matter, it is euident that the Apostles left it free to the iudgement and will of euery one. Which is also confirmed out of Nicephorus. Whereupon it is easie for the reader to see how small and weake grounds this Popish Lenton fast had gotten in the Church of that age: how diuersly and incertainly it was obserued: how where it was obserued, it was (for a long time) without any authority either of the Apostles, or of the Churches, without necessitie or constraint. The contrary of all which the Papists doe hold. And the first that euer we read of, to haue made Lawes of fasting, was Montan the hereticke. Wherefore it is both a meere fable which is said of Clement the supposed successor of Peter, that he instituted the Lenton fast: and contrary to the Iesuits assertion, which fetch the ordinance hereof from the Apostles. Afterward, when superstition had gathered more strength, it began to be thrust vpon the Church by the decree of Pope Telesphorus, & after of the Councel, who to put a distinction between the people and the Clergie (as they are called:) decreed that they should fast full seuen weekes. Whereas our Priests keepe neither longer Lent then then the common people, nor yet obſerue the Popes and Councels decrees, wanting three dayes of the full ſeuen weekes, which were appoynted vnto them: ſo that they will neither ſuffer it to be free, as the Apoſtles and primitiue Church are reported to haue done: neither yet obſerue it in that order as it is ſet forth when that freedom was taken away. Beſides that it will be known what they will anſwer for their Pope; who durſt after the ordinance or tradition of the Apoſtles, ordeining as they ſuppoſe, the Lenton faſt equally vnto all, adde vnto thoſe dayes the number which hee thought good. The reaſon alledged of the diſtinction of the Clergie from the people is as feeble as that alledged here for the diſcretion of Chriſtians from Pagans. For as the profeſſion of true Religion, with the exerciſe thereof in hearing the word and receiuing the Sacraments, maketh a great gulfe of ſeparation between Chriſtians and Pagans. Euen ſo the lawfull calling of the Miniſterie, with the faithfull execution thereof, raiſeth vp a ſufficient wall of partition between the Miniſters and the people.

Touching Ignatius the Ieſuites can not be ignorant, that this author carrieth a manifeſt ſuſpition of baſtardie: neither Ierome nor Euſebius making mention of any ſuch Epiſtle amongſt Ignatius writinges. And if it were Ignatius, how ſhall the Church of Rome waſh her hands from the innocent bloud of our Sauiour Chriſt, which in Auguſtines time faſted vpon the Sabboth, a thing ſo deeply condemned by this Ignatius that he counteth him a murderer of Chriſt that faſteth on the Saboth day where they will haue it ſo diligently noted, that the obſeruation of Lent is a ſeparation of the good from the evill, the infidels from Chriſtians, the heretikes from faithfull Catholickes: let it be as diligently noted with how euill markes they haue bounded Chriſtianity, for heretickes haue been greater obſeruers of the lenton faſtes, then commonlie the Catholickes haue been: keeping three lentes in one year, and that of neceſſitie, whereas Ierome maketh it rather a free will offering. For the time alſo of keeping of it before Eaſter, beſide that the reaſon alledged hath no force, we being alike bound to communicate vnto the paſſion of Chriſt all the year long: it is alſo confuted by Epiphanius whom they alledge, who affirmeth alſo that it was an Apoſtolicall tradition to faſt ſix dayes of Eaſter, which the papiſts themſelues obſerue not, as they doe not wedenſdaies throughout the whole yeare, which by Epiphanius iudgment hath the ſame Apoſtolicall authoritie that hath the Lenton faſt. and Ierome affirmeth that the Church kept the faſt not fortie dayes before Eaſter but through out the whole yeare, at ſuch time as was thought conuenient vnto men. Now where they ſay that all ancient fathers, which either of purpoſe or by occaſion haue ſpoken of this faſt, haue made it not onely an imitation of our Sauiour Chriſts faſt, but alſo a tradition of the Apoſtles, and neceſſary to be kept. They do but keepe their old manner, of ſpeaking an impudent and ſhameles vntrueth, for they might of that before alledged, (if euer they had read it) haue learned that of the auncienteſt fathers, hiſtoriographers, and Churches, there haue been and that for ſome hundreth yeares, that neuer ſo eſteemed of it. Let them alſo further learne, that Chryſoſtome an auncient father, contrarie to that which they haue cited out of Ambroſe affirmeth that our Sauiour Chriſt (although he might) did not command any imitation of this faſt: but that we ſhould learne of him to be meke &c. Now our Sauiour Chriſt giving no commandement, I would gladlie know how the Apoſtles, who deliuered only to the Churches what they receiued of him, ſhould leaue any ordinance hereof. Auguſtine alſo whoſe authoritie is here cited for the lenton faſt, teacheth that faſting is commanded by the word: but what dayes (ſaith hee) we ought not to faſt, and what dayes to faſt is not determined by any commandement either of the Lord, or of his Apoſtles. Now therefore let the Ieſuites go & brag of the conſent of all antiquity, touching the neceſſary and commanded obſeruation of the lent: when as they haue not onely the word, but the greateſt part of antiquitie flat againſt them: and thoſe that are with them, for the moſt part ether differing from themſelues, or (at the leſt) manifeſtlie diſſenting from them in ſuch points, as they make verie great account of. For as for the difference of Ambroſes faſt from theirs, conſiſting in abſtinence from dinner, according to the vſe of the ſcripture, where theirs doth conſiſt in abſtinence from ſupper, according to the deuiſe of their own heads: I paſſe it ouer for ſhortnes ſake: as I do diuers other differences of the ancient Churches, from their vpſtart ſynagogue. Beſide that thoſe ſermons of Ambroſe are by Eraſmus by vnlikelines of ſtile branded of baſtardie. The roaring of this lion, that laie in the thicket of Rome in wait for the pray of an vniuerſall Biſhop (if he could haue gotten it) we nothing feare: ſo long as we haue the lion of the tribe of Iudah with us, in this caſe, yet doth he place the lenton faſt, in a ſparing diet, not in the choyſe of meates: whereas in poperie, faſting and fulnes (ſo it be not of fleſh) are at a good concorde, beſide that he is checked of other popes of Rome Damaſus and Theleſphorus who affirme it to haue been ſet in the Church long after the Apoſtles times, as that which was hatched by Teleſphorus as before is alledged.

CARTVV. 3 [6. It is written.] It is true that is here ſaid. But note withall that the Deuils wreſting of the Scriptures, driueth not our Sauiour from the allegation of them to the expoſition of the Doctors and Rabbins, whereof there was no want, as the papiſts hating the noone light of the Scriptures, chooſe rather the twy light of the Doctors: which they would alſo were vtterlie quenched, were it not that their ſpirituall theftes and Church robberies ſhould ſo bee too euident.

Latria. Dulia.

RHEM. 4. [12. Him onely ſerue.] It was not ſaid, ſaith S. Auguſtine, The Lord thy God onely ſhalt thou adore, as it was ſaid, Him onely ſhalt thou ſerue: in Greeke λατρεύσεις. Aug. ſup. Gen. q. 61. whereupon the Catholike Church hath alwayes vſed this moſt true and neceſſary diſtinction: that there is an honour due to God onely, which to giue vnto any creature, were idolatrie: and there is an honour due to creatures alſo according to their dignitie, as to Saints, holy things, and holy places. See Euseb. Hist. Ec. l. 4. c. 14. S. Hierom. cont. Vigil. ep. 53. Aug. li. 10. Civit. c. 1. L. 1. Trin. c. 6. Conc. Nic. 2. Damasc. l. de Imag. Bed in 4. Luc.

CARTVV. 4. [12. Him onely serue.] To avoid the light of this place, whereby they are so manifestly convicted of spirituall whooredom, as if they were taken in the very act of their adulterous Idolatry: they invented a shadow of an unlearned and vntimely distinction, of serving and adoring: contrary both to the nature of the words, and circumstance of the place. And for the words of Latria and Dulia, it is evident first of the use of the Scripture, that they are both indifferently used in all religious honour, to signifie the proper worship of God, Rom. 1. 9. 7. 6. 14. 18. Acts. 20. 19. Eph. 6. 7. Phil. 2. 22. Mat. 24. Rom. 16. 18. The Hebrew word also, which the Euangelist hath turned λατρεύσεις, is known of all that haue the least glimpse in both the tongues, Hebrew and Greeke, to signifie the same that δουλεύσεις, and so is often turned of the 70. Afterward, the indifferent vse of these words, is shewed out of diuers of the purest and ancientest of the Greeke Writers, as by Laurentius Valla (one of your own religion) M. Beza and diuers others that haue had occasion to handle that matter. But you haue here for aduersaries the most part of your Schoolemen, which hold that the Crosse is to be worshipped with this worship of Latria, which your distinction maketh proper vnto God alone: for that it was sanctified by the touch of Christ. And not onely the Crosse whereupon our Sauiour Christ hung, but euery representation thereof. By which reason euery naile, euery thorne, and euery Asse is to be worshipped with the same worship which is due vnto God alone. Now for the circumstance of the place, it is euident that Moses, from whom our Sauiour Christ drew this, doth not distinguish between the worship due vnto God, and vnto Saints: but describeth that worship which being giuen vnto God, may not be communicated with any the Gods of the Gentiles. Whereas by this Popish distinction it followeth of Moses words, that the Gods (or rather the Idols of the Gentiles) may be worshipped of vs, by the worship Dulia: considering that Moses (by these mens interpretation) forbad onely the worship Latria to be giuen vnto the Idols. And by the same interpretation the Diuill might haue excepted against our Sauiour Christ: that (notwithstanding the place which he alledged) he might worship and adore him, with the worship that you call Dulia, which had been enough for the Diuell's victory against our Sauiour Christ, and consequently against all mankinde. So that if these mens interpretation haue any place, it followeth that the answer of our Sauiour Christ to the diuell is insufficient: as that which proueth not, but some religious worship might haue been giuen to him, so that Diuine worship were not giuen: where the argument of Moses is, that the Gods of the Gentiles ought not to be worshipped, because the true God of Israel was to be worshipped. By which reason Moses shutting forth from all worship whatsoeuer is not the true God of Israell: hath as well secluded the Idols of the Papists as of the Gentiles: as well S. Peter and the holy Virgin Mary, as Iupiter and Iuno: considering that they are neither of them the God of Israel. And vpon this argument of Moses, that the Gods of the Gentiles are not to be worshipped, because the God of Israel must be worshipped: our Sauiour Christ as a most sure and faithfull interpreter of the Law, concludeth that God alone ought religiously to be honoured, which was the question between him and the Diuell.

In their Annotations vpon the new Testament. Look Snydas also, that sheweth them all one.

Deut. 6.

Now as this distinction proceedeth of grosse ignorance both of the tongues, and also of the circumstance of the Scripture: so is it altogether vnseasonable, and out of time, vnlesse they had first of all proued, that προσκύνησις, mentioned here of the Euangelist (which signifieth an outward reuerence of bowing down the body to the ground) were all one with Dulia, whereof the Euangelist here maketh no mention. Which thing they are not able to performe. For it is euident, that a man will willingly in reuerence bow downe his body vnto him, whom he will not be seruant vnto: which notwithstanding their word Dulia doth import. And therefore it is cleare, that this place of the Euangelist did so much astonish them in the worship of their creatures, beside the Creator? that hauing nothing to answer the matter, they were constrained to wander in speech: if happily in speaking (although impertinently) the vnlearned sort might esteeme them not altogether vnprouided of answer. And if they were able to proue them all one, yet can they gain nothing thereby to their Saint-worship: for as it hath been shewed, that all religious seruice or worship belongeth to God alone: so it is to be proued, that all religious bowing of the body, or (as you tearme it) adoring, belongeth vnto God alone. For S. Peter seeing the outward reuerence, and bowing of the body giuen vnto him by Cornelius, to goe beyond the measure of ciuill honour accustomed to be giuen to men, especially of his degree; forbad him to do it, for that hee was a man. And the Angell of God perceiuing the reuerence giuen vnto him by S. Iohn, to surpasse all ciuill reuerence accustomed in those Countries, refused it as a religious worship, which is due vnto God alone. As for the testimonie out of Augustine, therein is some slip, in that he thinketh adoration not to bee so proper vnto the worship of God, as is seruice: whereof his reason is, for that Abraham adored or bowed himselfe vnto the Magistrates of the Countrey where he liued. Now it is euident, that it was as lawfull for him ciuilly to haue serued them, as he did ciuilly adore them, if Abrahams vocation had so suffered. Howbeit in the meane season it is manifest, that vpon this distinction of Augustine, there can grow no further honour vnto Saints departed, then that which is due vnto wicked Magistrates, nor that neither vnlesse we come in presence of them. And that Augustines meaning is not by this distinction, to giue any religious worship vnto any creature, it is manifest in that he plainly saith, That the Church bringeth vs in no creature to be adored, whereunto we are commanded to serue. Where, both adoration and seruice of any creature is denied of Augustine.

The same may bee answered vnto the second and third place of Augustine, where likewise he distinguisheth betweene the worship that is onely due vnto God, and that which is giuen vnto mortall men vpon earth: and not betweene worship due vnto God, and vnto the departed Saints: Further also, that Augustine in the same place staggereth about this distinction of Latria and and Dulia: saying that Latria is either alwaies, or so often, as that it is almost alwaies, that seruice which belongeth vnto God. But in another place, hee doth vtterly ouerthrow it, saying: That dulia is due vnto God as hee is Lord, but that Latria is due vnto God as hee is God. Seeing therefore there is but one Lord, as there is but one God: it followeth that Dulia in religious worship hath the same restraint vnto the Almightie which Latria hath. And Ludouicus Viues who standeth neerer vnto you then vnto vs upon the same place of Augustine, confuteth that distinction: yea Augustine himselfe, howsoeuer hee differeth in words, yet saying that to consecrate our selues, or any thing of ours in the right of Religion to Angels, is a worship due unto the Dietie it selfe, doth forsake you vtterly and standeth for vs: Whereupon it commeth that hee doth also hold it unlawfull to dedicate a Temple to any creature, prouing the Godhead of the Holy Ghost by that we are his Temples. And the place of Eusebius, as in the fifteene chapter, is notably against you, for the Church of Smirna doth plainely professe, that howsoeuer the wicked Iewes surmised of them, that they would leaue Christ and haue worshipped the body of Polycarpus: yet that they could neither leaue Christ, nor worship any other: For (say they) him wee adore, as being the Sonne of God, but the Martyrs wee loue as, &c. But the Iesuites being desirous to bee deceiued, and to deceiue others, left the Greek of Eusebius, and followed an old and corrupt translation of Russinus, which to the words of louing the Martyrs, added beside the booke, that they worshipped also. As for Ierome, contra vigilant. hee doth vtterly ouerthrow the distinction of Adoring and Serving. For first hee affirmeth that there is none so mad as to adore the Martyrs: into which frenzie notwithstanding the Papists are fallen. And then hee giueth this for a reason thereof, that they are not God: declaring thereby (contrarie to your doctrine) that God onely is to bee adored. And in the same booke against Vigilantius hee chargeth with ignorance and simplicitie, those that did light wax candles in the honour of Martyrs, wherein you place some part of your Religion. As for the inuectiue which Ierome maketh against Vigilantius, concerning the reuerent keeping of the Martyrs Wakes and Reliques; it is so out of square, that Erasmus, who aduanceth Ieromes credite aboue all the ancient Writers, is heere compelled to require modesty in him: shewing further, how small cause hee had to keep such a stir for them, seeing one of those which hee fighteth so hotly for, is cleane worne out of the Church: so that beside the bare name, there is nothing remaining. Hee might also haue said, that it was by an old Councell euen banished out of the Church, for the shamefull abuses that were (vnder the colour of the exercise of Wakes) committed in the night time, at the Martyrs Sepulchres. The same authority was against Reliques. In the time of the second Councell of Nice, about 800 yeares after our Sauiour Christ the Sunne of the Gospell was setting, and the face of the heauens in a manner like vnto a haire-cloth. And therefore it was no meruaile, although the milke white of Gods true worship was not discerned from the cole blacke of worshipping of Images. And the Iesuites declare, how greatly they are mistaken of all Antiquity in this point, that take so far a flight from the Apostles time: Which is also to bee answered, to Damascen, who liuing about the same time, could hardly passe without some infection of it. Heere therefore they must bee called back, to purer and ancienter times, wherein both Councels and Fathers haue iudged otherwise. A Councell therefore holden almost 1300 yeares agoe, decreed against images and their worshipping: Another Councell decreed that the Chappels and Altars of Saints, where their bodies were not, should bee throwne downe, if it might bee done without tumult of people. Lactantius saith, that there is no Religion where an Image is. Epiphanius affirmeth it to bee against the authority of the Scriptures, that the image of our Sauiour Christ should hang in the Church: and therefore passing by a Church, where either that, or the image of some Saint was, hee cut it downe, and willed it to bee giuen to some poore body, to make a winding sheet of. But the generall Conncell holden a little before the Nicene Councell is notable, not onely against the worshipping of Images, but against the making of them, and especially against the image of our Sauiour Christ. Heere I leaue to speake of the resistance which was made euen in the darke time of that second Nicene Councell: by a Synode that was holden at Francksord, especially against the Imagery set up in the second Councell of Nice by a booke written of Charles the Great, against the same Synode. Also the authoritie of Pope Gregorie the Great in whose time, although things were much disordered, yet is hee of iudgement, that Images ought not to bee worshipped, albeit hee would not haue them removed. Bede upon the fourth of Luke, allowing a distinction betweene Latria and Dulia, doth it to no aduantage of yours, whilest hee ascribeth Dulia to men heere vpon earth, and not to Saints or Reliques. But to your great disaduantage ascribing it to God, and calling them Idolaters which bestow upon Idols vowes, prayers, and sacrifices, which they onely owe unto God: making thereby all that an Idoll, whereunto vowes, prayers, and sacrifices are performed, which are due to God onely.

CARTVV. 6. [23. Healing euery Malady] By these staires of authority, by miracles of credit, by authority of multitudes you can not climbe up into your Tower of Babel. Beside, that the fortification of Religion by Antiquitie, must be soberly and warily interpreted: that is, that Religion in respect of us and our infirmitie, receiueth sometime ſtrength of antiquitie: otherwiſe it may bee truely ſaid of the truth, which our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith of himſelfe: I receiue no teſtimonie of men, no not of the ancient.

RHHEM.2. [12. Reward.] In Latine and Greeke the word ſignifieth very wages and hire due for workes, and ſo preſuppoſeth a meritorious deeed. Merces, μισθὸς.

CARTVV.2. [12. Reward] The word ſignifieth the reward that is due by couenant of him that giueth it, vnto him vnto whom it is giuen: whether the paine which he hath taken deſerue it or no. If I promiſe a man as much for making a paire of ſhooes, as he ſhould deſerue in building me a houſe; yet is it called his reward or hire, that he doth ſo receiue. And that the Scripture doth ſo vſe the word, it is manifeſt of the Parable of the Vine-gardiners, where the peny giuen to thoſe who had wrought but one onely houre, and that in the coole of the day, is as well called by this word of Reward and hire, as the peny giuen to them which had borne the heate and trauell of the whole day. And S. Paul declareth that this word of Reward is as well verified of that which is freely giuen, as of that which is due debt. Nay, if it be enough for you vpon the nature of this word to conclude merite, you may as well ſet downe that your deſert may be greater then the reward of the kingdom of heauen. For we know well, that the reward or hire of ſeruants or labouring men, from whence our Sauiour Chriſt borrowed this ſpeech, is ſometimes leſſe and inferiour to the trauell which they haue taken. In which caſe notwithſtanding, that which by naturall couenant they receiue, is called their reward or hire. Vnleſſe therefore you ſhame not to eſteeme the kingdom of heauen viler and better cheap, then the old ſhooes of your good workes: you ought to be aſhamed to ground your merit vpon the naked & bare ſignification of the word of Reward. And to ſay the truth, to this blaſphemie muſt you come whether you will or no, if you will haue your merit ſtand upon the rotten ground of reward in ſuch ſence. For if the kingdom of heauen being the reward of a cup of cold water, be (as you make it) the due and deſerued wages thereof; it muſt needs follow, that the ſuffering of grieuous perſecution in all ſorts, by loſſe of goods, wife, children, and life it ſelfe, deſerueth more then the kingdom of heauen: and that our trauell is not ſufficiently recompenced of the Lord, by a place giuen unto vs in his kingdom, cleane contrary to the doctrine of the Apoſtle, who affirmeth that the ſufferings of this time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which ſhall be reuealed vnto vs. Yea, although we were able to keepe the whole law, yet foraſmuch as the Lord hath that right (or rather greater) ouer vs that a Maſter hath ouer his ſlaue or villain, it cannot be, that thereby we ſhould any more deſerue or merit reward at Gods hands, then the villain doth at his maſters; which will not ſo much as giue him thankes, if he hath done all that was commanded him. Whereby the brutiſh ignorance of theſe Ieſuites doth appeare: that for a little of all that which is commanded (by the word of Merit) make the Lord a debter to a mortall and ſinfull man. Auguſtine ſaith, He crowneth thee, becauſe he crowneth his gifts, and not thy merits. Matth.10. 41.42. Rom.8. 18.

that they are blinde which shut their eyes against the Candle that is set on the Candlesticke, Tract. 2. in Epi. Io.

CARTVV. 3. [15. The light.] It is untrue, that the clergie is vnderstood by the light of the World, by the citie vpon an hill, by the candle upon the candlestick, especiallie taking the clergie (as the Iesuites doe) for that of Rome, which they must needs doe, if they will frame their catholick clergie vnto their catholick Church, and turne the one by the other. For (after the Apostles) there is no ministerie of anie one place or diuers places being no greater number then they that by giftes and calling is able to shine to all the world, in the light of their conuersation: no more then there is anie able by power accompaning their preaching, to cause their sound of trumpet to be heard into all the world, and to be as it were the salt, to season the vnsauorines of the whole earth and therefore where an Apostle had the Lords whole field to till: a minister now hath, but as it were a plough land to husband, where they were lightes, whereof every one did (in the night of the world) cast his brightnes into all the corners of the temple: a minister now serueth to helpe to cleare, one onelie angle or corner of the same. finallie where euerie of the Apostles, were by the height of their ministerie, set in the watch tower of the whole world: a minister now by his proper calling, discouereth no further then the precinctes of that particular Church or congregation, which is limited vnto his watch. And as no one minister, is to be compared with anie one Apostle; so can not all the ministers in the world (especiallie ordinarie) ioyned together, match the ministerie of the Apostles alone, for they are niether in any respect foundations of the Church, nor haue not all of them that arme, to throw the fire of the gospel so far, especially in so little a time, as the Apostles had: if it were now as new to be kindled, as it was before they began to sparkle it first abroad into the world. That the Church of Rome especiallie should be the Light, the citie, the candle, vpon a candlestick is as absurd, for if the Church be the Light, who are they that must be lightned, if it be the citie vpon the hill, who are they from whom that citie can not be hidden, finallie if it be the candle, what is the candlestick, wherein it must be set, what is the house to whose in-dwellers it must giue light. Alas for the blindes of these bates, could they not see out of this place, by the necessarie relation between the teachers, and those that are taught, between the paternes of good life, and those that are to follow them: that they might not huddle things vp after this sort. They might also haue learned otherwhere, that as the ministers are resembled vnto Candles: so the churches are likened vnto Candlestickes, whereupon the Ministers are set. Likewise vnto the house of God, wherein they may giue light. The restraint of these speeches, properlie vnto the Apostles, howsoeuer in some respect and after a sort, they may be applied vnto the minister, hath approbation of Ierome, Theophylack and Pope Gregorie himselfe. Howbeit what needeth the authoritie of men, when it is evident by Saint Luke, that these words were spoken vnto the twelue after they had been chosen for the office of Apostleship, whereunto (after some good time spent in learning) they were sent. Augustine in the first place alluding to this, compareth indeed the Church vnto a citie vpon a hill: but he doth it, to proue the large spread of the Church, as both the state of the question between him & the Donatists, and the other similitude of a vine, spreading it selfe long & large (& yet with smal height) doth declare. You therefore that alledge it to proue, that the Church cannot be hidden, wrest it from Augustines meaning. The second place proueth as litle for you, for it presupposing the Church to be a cittie set vpon our Sauiour Christ, which is the mountaine: doth not liken him to a mountain for height, but onelie for being vnremoueable, which Augustin doth further declare, in calling our Sauiour Christ in that place a rock, in the same sense that he calleth him a mountain. Now for to build a visible and sightlie citie of that timber whereof Augustine would build a steddy and an vnmoueable: deserueth small thankes at his hand, The last place out of Augustine, notwithstanding it departeth from the similitude of the scripture comparing the Church to a candlestick, and the minister to a candle: yet is it directlie against your selues, for seing that (by him) blind men can not see this candle, and they are all blind men and groping at noone daies, which are not inlightned by the spirit of God: it followeth that (by Augustines own words) the Church is not seen but of her selfe, whose eyes onelie haue been annointed with that Collyrium, which alone restoreth sight againe. Now your interpretation being false, what trueth can your doctrine haue, which is grounded thereupon. And how followeth it, that the Apostles being Ministers of all the world, and the twelue starres that gaue light to the whole Church in their time, apparantlie seen in all the corners of the world: which had peereles giftes of knowledge, of tongues, doing miracles, of distributing the giftes of the holy Ghost of incomparable holinesse. How followeth it (I say) that because they were laid open to the sight of all, that therefore the Ministers now, which partlie haue not the giftes and calling that they had, and partlie haue them in much scanter measure then they, should therefore be set open to the sight of all: as if the stage whereupon the Apostles were set, were no higher then that wherevpon the ordinarie ministery hath it standing, it is enough therfore, that as the Apostles were seen, or hard tell of by their charges: so the ministers be seen & heard of their flockes, and (as candles) giue light vnto the house wherein they are set. And seeing the Churches themselues, know not alwayes one another: is it any meruaile, though the wicked world doth not alwayes vnderstand where it is: especially in the time of persecution, when it is bidden to hide it selfe, and to go into her secretest chamber, untill such time as the tempest be ouer-blowne: when she flyeth into the Wildernesse, being pursued of the Dragon? considering also that when shee is not persecuted, shee is (as her head was) neglected and despised, and scarce once asked after of the world: it being also an Article of the Christian faith to beleeue a holy Catholike Church, it cannot bee alwaies in sight, for there is no vse of faith where things are sensibly knowen, no more then of hope the eldest daughter of faith.

RHEM. 5. [20 One of these.] Behold how necessary it is, not onely to beleeue, but to keep all the commandements, euen the very least.

CARTVV. 5. [20 One of these.] This iudgement may so farre be well admitted, as thereby is vnderstanded an endeuour to keepe all the commandements: which ought to bee; and not a perfect performance which (as shall bee shewed) cannot bee.

RHEM. 6. [21 Your iustice.] It is our iustice when it is giuen vs of God. Aug. in Psal. 30. conc. 1. De Sp. & lit. c. 9. So that Christians are truely iust, and haue in themselues inherent iustice, by doing Gods commandement, without which iustice of workes no man of age can bee saued. Aug. de fid. & oper. cap. 16. whereby wee see saluation, iustice, and iustification, not to come of onely faith, or imputation of Christs iustice. True inherent Iustice.

CARTVV. 6. [21 Your iustice.] It is true, that in Christians there is a iustice which is also theirs, because it is giuen vnto them of God, by Christ. Further, for iustice inherent, true it is also that no man can bee saued vnlesse hee haue that iustice, which is the sanctification of Gods children: but the same iustice is first of all lame and vnperfect, as that which is onely begun in this world: And secondly it is defiled and spotted with the leprosie of our corruption. Seeing therefore to iustification, wee must haue a perfect and vndefiled iustice in this world, it is euident that to bee iustified, wee must haue our recourse vnto our Sauiour Christ alone, who is perfectly and vnspottedly righteous, and maketh perfectly and vnspottedly righteous, all those which beleeue in him. Whereupon the Apostle affirmeth, that hee stroue to bee found not to haue his own righteousnesse that is by the Law, but that which is by faith in Christ: that is the righteousnesse of God, through faith: Wherefore otherwhere hee declareth, that Israel ignorant of the iustice of God, and seeking to establish his own iustice, was not subiect vnto the iustice of God. As for the three places out of Augustine, the last of them maketh neither hot nor cold to this matter, where hee sheweth onely that faith is not without good workes, which wee do freely confesse, the other two are so directly against them, that it argueth a desperate cause on their behalfe: which are driuen vpon such weapons. whose points and edges are turned vpon the heart and head of their own assertion. In the former place vpon the wordes of the Prophets: Deliuer mee in thy righteousnesse: hee addeth, if thou haue regard to my righteousnesse, thou damnest mee: For there is a righteousnesse of God, which is also made ours, when it is giuen vnto vs: and it is therefore called the iustice of God, least any man should thinke, that hee hath a righteousnesse of himselfe. Which words although they are plaine of the iustice which is without vs, yet the words that follow, cleare it so euidently, that they must bee notably impudent if they lay not their finger vpon their mouth. For (saith Augustine) so saith the Apostle, to him that beleeueth in him that iustifieth the wicked, that is to say, maketh him iust of wicked, his faith is imputed vnto righteousnesse. In the other place hee affirmeth, that the Apostle reproning those, that, being ignorant of the iustice of God, would establish their own. Hee saith not (as Augustine addeth) the iustice of man or of his own will, but the iustice of God: not wherewith God is iust, but which hee clotheth man withall, when hee iustifieth the wicked: Wherein the righteousnesse of God is most fitly compared to a garment put vpon vs: to note that the iustice wherewith wee are able to stand before the Lord in iudgement is without vs; euen according as the Apostle teacheth, that Baptisme the seale of this righteousnesse, doth pledge vnto vs the putting of Christ vpon vs: so wee appeare not now before the Lord in iudgement in our own person, but in the Person of our Sauiour Christ. And therefore in another place, speaking of the righteousnesse which is by faith: hee saith, That hee liueth now no more, but Christ liueth in him. Neither are wee (as Augustine saith) righteous, with the righteousnesse wherewith God is righteous; for it followeth not because hee is righteous, that wee are therefore so: vnlesse the same righteousuesse of God through faith, bee made ours. It is an easie thing to shew, by diuers other sentences in Augustine, the false dealing of these Iesuites with him: which also shall afterward appeare, and can not bee hidden from any that is not ignorant of that common sentence of Augustines: which is worne in all mens mouthes, That good workes, or the righteousnesse which is in vs, goeth not before a man, that is to bee iustified, but followeth him that is iustified. Heere onely we will content our selues, with the testimonie of a Councell, which affirmeth, That faith is the beginning and ending of our saluation, in that the iust man liueth by faith. Because that euen as righteousnesse, so life euerlasting obtained by faith, according to the Lords saying: This is life euerlasting, that they know thee to bee the alone true God, and him whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ.

RHEM. 7. [23 Hell of fire.] Heere is a plaine difference of sinnes, some mortall that bring to hell, some lesse, and lesse punished, called veniall. Venial sinnes.

CARTVV. 7. [23 Hell of fire.] All sin deserueth death, as the Apostle saith, and that euerlasting, as appeareth by the opposition of life euerlasting, which the Apostle ioyneth in the same verse: And he is accursed that abideth not in all the commandements of God to do them. Wherefore as all sinne, except that against the Holy Ghost, is veniall in Christ: so without him it is all mortall and deadly. Which none can easily bee ignorant of, but those which willingly close their eyes against the truth: For can they bee ignorant, how grieuous a thing it is, that proceedeth from the deuill: that offendeth the infinite Maiesty of God, that breaketh his most holy Law, that drew the Sonne of God, to the most horrible and fearefull death of the Crosse? All which things concurre in the least offence that is, or can bee committed of the sonnes of men. Rom. 6. 23. Deu. 27. 26

Away therefore with this filthie distinction, so foolishlie gathered, for it is euident, that our Sauiour Christ, by a similitude of earthlie iudgments (whereof one surpassed the other in weight and sharpnes of punishment:) doth set forth the degrees of sinnes with their punishments, in the place of the damned, accordinglie. As therefore smaller faultes, were punished by a iudgment seat, which inflicted small mulctes, as it were by a leet, and greater faultes by a councell which increased the penalties: as it were by a quarter session, and the greatest by a more honorable or more numberous senate as it were the Kings bench, or the generall assise, which sent the guiltie persons to bee burned in the vallie of the son of Himnon: euen so our Sauiour sheweth, that it shall be dealt with sinners in the iudgment of God, which according vnto the staiers whereby they haue descended in offending the Lord, shall descended also (as it were) into the depth of hell fire, for it is very like, that in detestation of the impiety somtimes vsed by the Iewes in that vallie: they made it the place, where they did iustice of persons criminall in the highest degree. Or els it may be, that our Sauiour borrowed his similitude, from the fires in that vallie, wherewith the children were burned, who although they deserued not to die, yet were they dealt with all, as if they had been guiltie of most greiuous crimes. But this is certain, that howsoeuer in other places, it is (by a trope) taken for the place of the damned: yet must it needs here be taken Gramaticallie, as the words doe signifie: to the end that it may answer to the other part of the similitude, which is apparantlie vnderstood, for seeing the other two of iudgement and Councell, are taken by comparison from ciuill Courts, to set forth the iudgment of God against sin: there could be no good proportion and sutablenes in the speech of our Sau. Christ, if this should not be likewise. And that by all these our Sauiour Christ meaneth, to set forth diuerse degrees of euerlasting condemnation: it is manifest, in that vnto anger the least of the three, he appointeth the same kinde of punishment, which the Pharises did vnto mere murder, & striking a man stark dead. It being then euident, that the Pharises esteemed a flat murder worthy of hell fire: it followeth our Sauiour iudged the same punishable with hell fire, And therfore, I would esteem that the word κρίσις, in the first place is simply to be expounded condemnation, in which same sence, though it be taken in the second place: yet is it wrapt vp in the similitude or metaphor of a kind of ciuil iudgment then frequented. Now let vs demand of you vpon what confidence, contrary to the whole course of the scripture, contrary to the circumstance of the place, which is to shew the seueritie of the law (that your fathers the Pharises had buried with their false glosses) and thereby to hasten men vnto our Sauiour Christ: upon what confidence (I say) haue you set down this blasphemous doctrine: Seeing you are so naked of reasons and scripture, it was meet that you should haue come armed, with some shew of antiquitie: which in diuers places you make a colour of, and professe to doe it euerie where: whose common brag is that you follow no other interpretation, then of the anncient doctors, verilie nether Ierome nor Chrysostome nor Theophylact, nor your own Pope Gregorie, nor Barnard could gather any such distinction in this place, we suppose therefore, that you will hereafter make lesse noise: if happilie we bring forth some thing, thorough the blessing of God in our studies: that the fathers haue not before spoken of, we could also tell you, that your owne Denis the Monke affirmeth that the anger here spoken of, which is the last fault of the three, is a mortall sinne.

CARTVV. 8. [24. Gift at the Altar] Our Sauiour speaking here of an Altar, speaketh according to the manner of Gods worship vnder the Law. Wherefore if you will build an Altar vpon this ground; you must bring also a bullock for a Sacrifice, and not bread and wine for the Sacrament.

RHEM. 9. [26. Prison.] This prison is taken of very ancient Fathers, for Purgatory namely, S. Cyprian Epist. ad Anton. num. 6.

[M.] signifieth the answer to the Marginall note.

CARTVV. 9. [26. Prison.] Our Sauiour moueth men to agree betime with their aduersaries, lest the aduersary being driuen to take the law, bee after irreconciliable: when he (as common experience teacheth) hath once taken the Law of him with whom he striueth. And this interpretation, as it is most naturall: so hath it the testimony of Chrysostome, Basil and Theophilact. This being the meaning, what shadow is there of a ciuill prison to build Purgatory? It might with more colour haue been fetched from S. Luke, who translateth this from the ciuill iudgement, vnto the iudgement of God. And although some referre it to Gods iudgement, wherein we will not striue; yet this prison Augustine and Ierom interpret Hell, and not (as you do) Purgatory. And this vntill, they expound neuer, as it may be evidently confirmed both by the plain words, and also by the Parable of our Sauiour Christ. And Augustine vpon this place saith, That when thou wert not reconciled, thou wert guilty of hell fire. As for Cyprian, he intetpreteth not this place of Purgatory, but of the discipline and iudgement of the Church, which was vnmeasurably vrged of diuers in those times: as if they would haue had men that had fallen into persecution, or committed Adultery, not to haue been restored into the bosome of the Church, vntill they had (as it were) paid the last farthing of that excessiue penance, which was laid vpon them. It appeareth therefore that you be maruellous Prometheusis, that can make so great a fire, without so much as a sparkle out of the word of God. And where you pretend, that the ancient Fathers gather you many stickes out of this place, to nourish this terrible fire with: it is apparant, that they bring a great deale of water to quench it: but to feed your fabulous fire, they haue not here so much as a straw.

RHEM. 10. [33. Excepting the cause of fornication.] This exception is onely to shew, that for this one cause a man may put away his wife for euer: but not that he may marry another, as it is most plain in S. Mark and S. Luke, who leaue out this exposition saying, Whosoeuer dismisseth his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery. See the Annot. Luke 19. 9. But if both parties be in one and the same fault, then can neither of them not so much as diuorce or put away the other.

place: so is it in the 19. of Mathew, where our Sauiour Christ being demanded of the Iewes, whether a man might dismisse his wife for euery cause: answereth as in this place. As for their appeale to the places of Marke and Luke, where this exception of fornication is left out, and where it is simply sayd, That he that marrieth another committeth adultery: First, where haue they learned to expound the fuller place by the shorter, whereas it is conuenient, that Marke and Luke which are briefer, should be expounded by Mathew, who with mo words carrieth more light. Then these places make directly against them. For they make him that dismisseth his wife; as well guiltie of adulterie, as him that marrieth another wife. The reason whereof is, for that our Sauiour Christ, according to the question demanded: simply answereth that for such light causes as the Iewes vsed, it was neither lawfull to diuorce, nor to marry againe. Which also is proued by the words that follow: whereby he saith, that he that marrieth another, faulteth against the former wife; against the which notwithstanding he faulted not, if hauing plaied the harlot, she had been orderly diuorced from him. For if that in such a case, a man that marrieth againe should fault: he should fault against God, and against the Sacrament, as you make it, and not against her which hath no power of his body. Wherefore it followeth, that as the Euangelists teach, that without the case of fornication, it is not lawfull neither to diuorce, nor yet to marry againe: so their meaning is, that in that case, both the one and the other is lawfull. Elsewerily should there be great iniustice, that the innocent should without fault of his part, be depriued of the benefit of children, and other comforts of marriage, beside the remedie against incontinency, which the Iesuites surmise to be in euery mans power that seekes after it. Wherefore were it not that by barre of lawfull marriage, the Pope should gain pence for dispencing: there is small reason to wrangle about his poynt.

Marriage a Sacrament, and is not dissolued by diuorce.

RHEM. 11. [33. Committeth aduoutry.] The knot of marriage is a thing of so great a Sacrament, that not by separation it selfe of the parties it can be loosed being not lawfull neither for the one part nor the other, to marry again vpon diuorce. Aug. de bon. Coning. cap. 7.

CARTVV. 11. [33. Committeth adultery.] It shall appeare afterward in a fitter place, that marriage is no Sacrament; and therefore that this reason cannot hinder a new marriage, after a lawful diuorce. And if it were a Sacrament, yet when the marriage is dissolued, wherof it is a Sacrament what place can it haue of a signe when the thing signified is gone. For the adulterer is no more one flesh with the party innocent, as hauing made himselfe the flesh of another woman, for which the knot of vnity is cleane broken. And it hath appeared how Augustine in this matter of Sacrament, dissenteth from the Iesuites doctrine. Here onely I will set downe how doubtfully and waueringly Augustine iudged of this case, of hauing recourse vnto a new marriage after a lawfull diuorce. For hee affirmeth, first that such a one seemeth not to be matched with him, that for light causes putteth away and marrieth againe. Secondly, he saith, that it is so obscure in the Scripture, whether such a one ought to be accounted an adulterer or no: as (in his iudgement any man may be without great fault deceiued. Whereby Augustine supposing, that he may as well be deceiued, that thinketh that he that marrieth againe is an adulterer, as he that that thinketh otherwise: strippeth you of all your aid in this place, which hee lendeth you in others. Touching further testimonies of antiquity against you in this case, you shall know more hereafter.

RHEM. 12. [35. Not to sweare.] The Anabaptists here not following the Churches iudgement, but the bare letter (as other heretickes in other cases) hold that there is no oath lawfull, no not before a iudge: whereas Christ speaketh against rash and vsuall swearing in common talke, when there is no cause.

CARTVV. 12. [35. S.]

RHEM. 13. [39. Not to resist euil.] Here also the Anabaptists gather of the letter, that it is not lawfull to go to law for our right, as Luther also vpon this place held, that Christians might not resist the Turke. Whereas by this, as by that which followeth, patience onely is signified, and a will to suffer more, rather then to reuenge. For neither did Christ nor S. Paul follow the letter by turning the other cheeke, Ioh. 18. Acts 23.

CARTVV. 13. [39. Not to resist euill.] Luther misliketh in one or two places the expedition taken against the Turke, by way of prouoking him, the rather for that it was the Popes setting on, to make the Princes spend themselues, and weaken their forces: that he might both in their absence with more ease establish his tyranny in their dominions, and when they came home might be the better able to tread vpon their neckes. But that hee teacheth it vnlawfull to resist the Turke inuading: it is but the Iesuites custome of slandering the worthy seruants of the Lord.

9 Thus therefore shall you pray. OVR FATHER which art in heauen, Sanctified be thy name.

Let thy kingdom come. Thy will bee done, as in heauen in earth also.

✝ In S. Luke the Latine is, Panem quotidianum, daily bread, the Greek being indifferent to both.

11 Giue vs to day our ✝ supersubstantial bread.

12 And forgiue vs our debts, ‖ as we also forgiue our debters.

13 And lead vs not into tentation. But deliuer vs from euill. Amen.

Mat. 11. 25

14 For ‖ if you will forgiue men their offences, your heauenly father will forgiue you also your offences.

15 But if you will not forgiue men, neither will your father forgiue you your offences.

✝ The third work of iustice.

16 And when you ✝ fast, be not as the hypocrites, sad. For they disfigure their faces, that they may appeare vnto men to fast. Amen I say to you, that they haue receiued their reward.

The Gospell vpon Ash-wednesday.

17 But thou when thou doest fast, annoint thy head, and wash thy face.

18 That thou appeare not to men to fast, but to thy father which is in secret: and thy father which seeth in secret, will repay thee.

Luk. 12, 33.

19 * Heap not vp to your selues treasures on the earth: where the rust & moth do corrupt, and where theeues dig through and steale.

20 But heape vp to your selues treasures in heauen: where neither the rust nor moth doth corrupt, and where Theeues do not digg through nor steale.

21 For where thy treasure is, there is they heart also. ☞

22 *The candle of thy body is thine eye. If thine eye be simple, thy whole body shal be lightsome. Luk. 11. 34.

23 But if thy eye be naught: thy whole body shall be darkesome. If then the light that is in thee, be darknesse: the darknesse it selfe how great shall it be?

24 No man can * serue ‖ two masters, For either he will hate the one, and loue the other: or hee will sustaine the one, and contemne the other. You cannot serue God and Mammon. Luk. 16. 13. The Gospel on the 14. Sunday after Pentecost.

25 Therefore I say to you, * be not ‖ carefull for your life what you shall eate, neither for your body what rayment you shall put on. Is not the life more then the meat: & the body more then the raiment? Luke 12. 22

26 Behold the foules of the aire, that they sow not, neither reape, nor gather into barnes and your heauenly father feedeth them. Are not you much more of price then they?

27 And which of you by caring, can adde to his stature one cubite?

28 And for rayment why are you carefull? Consider the lilies of the field how they grow: they labour not, neither doe they spinne.

29 But I say to you, that neither Salomon in all his glory was arayed as one of these.

30 And if the grasse of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is cast into the ouen, God doth so cloth: how much more you O ye of very small faith.

31 Be not careful therefore, saying, what shall we eate, or what shall we drinke, or wherewith shall we be couered?

32 For all these things the ✝ Heathen do seeke after. For your father knoweth that you need all these things.

✝ They seeke temporall things onely, and that not of the true God, but of their Idols, or by their owne industry.

33 Seeke therefore first the kingdom of GOD, and the iustice of him: and all these things shall be giuen you besides. ☞ 34 Be not carefull therefore for the morow. For the morrow day shal be carefull for it selfe, sufficient for the day is the euill thereof.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. VI.

Good workes iustifie

RHEM. 1. [1 Iustice.] Heereby it is plaine that good workes bee iustice, and that man doing them doth iustice, and is thereby iust and iustified, and not by faith onely. All which iustice of a Christian man our Sauiour heere compriseth in these three workes, in Almes, Fasting and Prayers. Aug. lib. perf. iust. cap. 8. So that to giue Almes, is to do iustice, and the workes of mercy are iustice. Aug. in Psal. 49. 5.

CARTVV. 1. [1 Iustice.] Heere are the Coleworts of inherent iustice; set before us againe: which being poyson at the first seething, are at the next dressing, well worse then they were before: For to their former blasphemie against the passion of our Sauiour Christ, is added this manifest falshood: that in Almes, Fasting and Prayer is compriſed all iustice: whereby besides faith shut out from the account of iustice, which in the line next before they hold for a part thereof: they haue excluded many other Christian vertues, which our Sauiour Christ partly before, and partly after hath in his Sermon exhorted unto. Moses himselfe, who talked with the Lord as a man with his friend, summing the Law into the loue of God withall the heart, &c, and of our neighbours as of our selues: is taught his lesson, and set againe to schoole by these Iesuites: which haue giuen us a shorter abstract of the whole righteousnesse of a Christian man, then Moses, that is to say the Holy Ghost by and in him, was able to compasse: And yet both truth truth, and the Law of ſumming, would haue made you ſomewhat ſhorter: For faſting and prayer which you haue made two vertues of, you might haue contriued into one; faſting being onely a wing of prayer, and no further a vertue, then it is referred to the end of bringing down the body, that the ſpirit might in prayer to God bee the eaſilier lifted up. The former place of Auguſtine hath nothing of this matter, and ſerueth to mocke the Reader with. The other affirmeth, that iuſt men by faith do the workes of righteouſneſſe: whereof Almes is one, which anſwers as much to the matter, as a mat doth unto a mattock.

RHEM. 2. [4 Repay.] This repairing and rewarding of good workes in heauen, often mentioned heere by our Sauiour, declareth that the ſaid workes are meritorious, and that wee may doe them in reſpect of that reward. Merits.

CARTVV. 2. [4 Repay.] It was eaſie for the Euangeliſt to haue vſed a ſtronger and more ſignificatiue word, ἀνταποδώσει, or ſome ſuch like, which carrieth ſome more ſhew of a proportionable exchange of duties: if hee had meant to ſet forth the merite of workes. As for this word it is (as μισθὸς was) of the middle ſort: ſignifying as well a free and franke, as a due and deſerued reward. And wee doubt not but all thoſe that haue any skill in the Hebrew tongue, will grant that it is the ſame with the word שָׁלַם, which as it ſignifieth a requitall, ſo doth it alſo betoken a ſimple giuing, Prou. 11.17. of mercy without deſert, Eſay 63.7. yea contrary to deſert, 1. Sam. 24.18. And ſuch is the merited reward of theſe men, as they are immediately after taught by our Sauiour Chriſt, to craue pardon of their ſinnes, a thing ſo contrary to merite, which in ſteed of making us debters unto God, maketh him detter vnto us, that it were a maruell to ſee them meete, and to kiſſe one another.

RHEM. 3. [5 Hypocrites.] Hypocriſie is forbidden in all theſe three workes of iuſtice, and not the doing of them openly to the glorie of God, and the profiet of our neighbour and our own ſaluation: for Chriſt before (chap. 5.) biddeth, ſaying: Let your light ſo ſhine before men, &c. And in all ſuch workes, S. Gregories rule is to bee followed, The worke ſo to bee in publique, that the intention remaine in ſecret. Hom. 11. *in Euang. c.*10. Hypocriſie.

CARTVV. 3. [Ver 5. S.

RHEM. 4. [7 Much ſpeaking.] Long prayer is not forbidden, for * Chriſt himſelfe ſpent whole nights in prayer, and hee ſaith, * wee muſt pray alwaies: and * the Apoſtle exhorteth to pray without intermiſſion: and the holy Church * from the beginning hath had her Canonicall houres of prayer: but idle and voluntarie babling, either of Heathens to their gods, or of hereticks, that by long Rhetoricall prayers think to perſwade God: whereas the Collects of the Church are moſt briefe and effectuall, See S. Auguſtine Ep. 121. c. 8. 9. 10. Luk. 6. 12. 18. 1. 21. 36 1. Theſ. 5. 17 Cypr. de orat Do. in fine.

CARTVV. 4. [7 Much ſpeaking.] The Church in her prayers goeth about to perſwade the Lord to heare them, whom they know to bee unremoueable from that councell that hee hath taken before the foundation of the world of them, in any point of their requeſts: But they endeuour to perſwade their own conſciences, that the Lord according to his promiſe heareth them: wherein perſwaſion, and the ſame rhetoricall, cannot bee condemned. Vnleſſe it bee either feined, or attending rather to the deintineſſe of words then to the pith of the matter; ſeeing there are diuers prayers in the Scripture, where ſundry rhetoricall flowers are apparantly to bee gathered. And if our Sauiour Chriſt in this place, would haue beaten us altogether from perſwading ſpeeches, the Euangeliſt would haue uſed πιθανολογία, a ſpeech tending to perſwade, rather then πολυλογία, which ſignifieth much ſpeaking: And hee would not haue ſaid, For your father knoweth what you haue need of: but to make the interpretation good he would haue ſaid, that your father is of a minde prone and bent to helpe you. In ſpeaking therefore as hee doth, it is euident that with one and the ſame ſtroke of many words, hee ſtrooke dead, as well your vaine babling, as the Heathens to whom you are like in this point: For do you not often and often againe, mumble up one and the ſame prayer: as Battus the fooliſh Poet, often repeated one and the ſame verſe. And where you ſay that the Collects of your Church are moſt briefe and moſt effectuall: to haue compaſſed your Church ſeruice, unto the rule of prayer preſcribed by our Sauiour Chriſt, you ſhould haue ſaid your Church prayers, Which is ſo euidently falſe, that your own Frier affirming that our Sauiour Chriſt doth in this rule comprehend onely either ſhort prayers, or long prayers which bee feruent: doth withall confeſſe, that the prayers of your Church are comprehended under neither of theſe kinds. And although your Collects, and other prayers apart, bee but ſhort ſhreeds: yet being patched together, and ſet upon the long laſt of your prick-ſong, and deſcant, they are able euen to wearie your Baals whom you ſerue, and to make them deafe, if they were not deafe and dead before. In the Primitiue Church under perſecution, there were ſometimes ſhort prayers, when the enemie being at the dore, the Miniſter would ſhut up the exerciſe with a ſhort prayer. as it were an arrow ſent out of a bow, which was of ſome few Churches followed afterward, euen in the time of peace. But of the Papiſts it is too too fooliſhly followed, which making one petition now, breake off, the while of a chamber walke, and then they come to a ſecond, and ſo forth, to the thirtieth or fortieth: ſo ſcatteringly and diſorderly. that if ſuch a ſuite were offered to a mortall man, hee would rather thinke himſelfe mocked, then by any ſuppliant requeſt honoured. Beſides, that by your babling prayers, you haue in a manner driuen Preaching out of the Church of God: which is his principall ſeruice: Not onely for that it is more meete, that wee ſhould heare the Lord ſpeaking unto us, then he ſhould heare us ſpeaking unto him: but alſo for that Preaching is the eye and direction of all good and godly prayers. Auguſtine in the chapters which are quoted, ſpeaketh in deed of this place, wherein hee maketh mention of ſhort and long prayers, prolonged either in words, or in a continuall deſire of the mind; but to accuſe our prayers, or excuſe yours, he hath not a word. Zigerus in hunc locum.

RHEM. 5. [11. Superſubſtantiall Bread.] By this bread ſo called here according to the Latine and Greeke, we aske not onely all neceſſary ſuſtenance for the body, but much more all ſpirituall τὸν ἐπιούσιον, spirituall foode, namely, the blessed Sacrament it selfe, which is Christ the true bread that came from heauen, and the bread of life to vs that eate his body. Cyp. de orat. Do. Aug. Epist. 121. c. 11. And therefore it is called heere Supersubstantiall, that is, the bread that passeth and excelleth all creatures: Hiero. in 2. Tit. in 6. Mat. Amb. lib. 5. de Sacr. c. 4. Aug. Ser. 28. de verb. Do. sec. Mat. S. Germanus in Theoria.

The B. Sacrament.

CARTVV. 5. [12 Supersubstantiall.] Our Sauiour Christ, which condemned vaine repetition, and by a forme of prayer prouided a remedie against the same, is made heere of the Iesuites to fault against his own rule: for that which is contained in the second petition, they teach to bee asked in the fourth. Secondly, they lodge in one petition things of diuers kinds, and farre remoued in nature, spirituall and corporall, heauenly and earthly: yea (according to their dotage) the creature and the Creator, which if they were well herbinged should not haue lien so neere together. Thirdly, heereof it should follow, that hee taught them expressly to aske that which hee had neither instituted, nor instructed them of, and whereof his Disciples were vtterly ignorant. For the Sacraments of the old Law, they make but bare and naked signes, seuered from the spirituall food, that they represented. Last of all, seeing it is also quotidian or daily bread, as they confesse it, it ought euery day to bee asked of the Lord, and consequently daily to bee receiued. if it may bee commen by: Vnlesse men will mock with the Lord, in asking that which they will not take, when it is offered. Whereby first are condemned the elder Churches which vsed this in great liberty: secondly, they bewray their own sacriledge, that make no shew of offer of it vnto the people but once a yeare: whereupou they may the better call it their yearely, then their daily bread: Thirdly, they bewray againe the foolish superstition of the whole Clergy, to whom it is accounted for a heynous crime. if they consecrate the Friday and Saturday before Easter. Let therefore these reuerend Fathers learne, that Christ in the three first petitions, comprising those things which neerest touch the glorie of God: in the rest of the prayer containeth that which neereſt regardeth vs: Of which, when there are two kindes, one pertaining to this life, another to the life to come: Hee, according to the vse of the Scripture, which commonly handleth the shortest first, dispatcheth that petition that concerneth the preseruation and maintenance of this life. In the rest of the prayer pursueth the things which appertaine vnto the life to come. And this interpretation, which expoundeth the Petition, onely of things tending to vphold this present life, hath manifold testimonies: first of Salomon, from whom our Sauiour seemeth to haue taken this petition: which being heere vnderstood of corporall maintenance argueth the same sense heere, Prou. 30. 8. לחם חקי, the bread which is ordained for mee, regarding (as it seemeth) the creatures whereof the vse was lawfull to the Iewes. Then a cloud of antiquity: Basil calleth it the bread, which is profitable to the daily life, or quickning of our substance. And againe, that it is our frugall and competent bread; alleadging that of Paul That hauing foode and couering, wee ought to bee content. And Theophylact who commonly carrieth with him Chrysostomes iudgement, as is may also bee gathered out of the 42 homily upon Iohn: affirmeth it to bee called ἐπούσιον or supersubstantiall (as it pleaseth you) because it is sufficient for our substance and constitution: Euthymius before him followeth the same sense. As for your testimonies, they haue litle force: for Cyprian onely affirmeth that it may bee vnderstood of the Sacrament, not determining definitiuely of it, as you doe. Augustine speaketh also more doubtfully, saying; That wee aske either bread to suffice vs, or the Sacrament, disiunctiuely. Whereupon if a man cleaue to his words, the Argument may bee thus framed; Either wee aske corporall food, or the Sacrament; but we aske corporall food, therefore wee aske not the Sacrament. Howbeit because in the other place, hee alloweth of that sense as doth Ambrose: Their authority is to bee weighed with the reasons and ancient testimonies before alledged; Ierome hath ouerthrowne his own credit in this: For in one place reckoning up diuers opinions, and not misliking of that which expoundeth it of the present food; in this place by you quoted, doth vtterly detest that it should bee vnderstood in any wise of the corporall food: who as hee is directly against himselfe, so is hee against you, which affirme that both the Sacrament, and corporall food, are vnderstood in this petition, And if Germanus in Theoria haue that iudgement which you follow, it is according to the title of his book but a Speculation.

The Iesuites will neuer be able to iustifie the old interpreter, which translateth one word the same both in sillables and circumstance of signification, in one place Supersubstantiall, and in another Quotidian or Daily. Against which interpretation of his, he hath not onely all antiquity before that translation; but also eleuen copies of the old translation, which in Mathew haue daily bread, as well as in Luke. The vse of the Church also, yea of the Papists themselues, both in Churches and Schooles, both amongst the learned and vnlearned: hath, maugre the authority of the old translator, retained the words of Daily bread: notwithstanding that otherwise, they haue rather vsed the forme of words which is found in S. Mathew, then that which is recorded by S. Luke.

Veniall sins.

RHHEM. 6. [12. Debts.] These debts do signifie not onely mortall sinnes, but also veniall, as S. Augustine often teacheth: and therefore euery man, be he neuer so iust, yet because he cannot liue without veniall sins, may very truly, and ought to say this prayer. *Aug. cont. duas epi. d The Iesuites vpon the 10. of Mat.

CARTVV. 6. [12. Debts] Looke the answer of this before. Although, if your doctrine be true of Veniall sinnes, there is no need to pray for the forgiuenesse of them; considering that they haue so many other purgations: as by the sprinkling of a little [a] holy water, by only entring into a [b] hallowed Church, by a [c] knock vpon the breast, and last of all by the [d] Bishops blessing: it was maruell you said not, it was done away by scratching the head with the little finger: we would also you made it plaine, wherefore men should seek the remedy of this sinne, in the crackling fire of Purgatory, which may be so easily gotten other wayes. Also, how it sticketh together, that we hauing remission and remedy of mortall sinnes (as you tearme them) in Christ, should not finde redresse redreſſe in him for the ſmaller, which you call Veniall. And if the good reader will know how ſmall things they be, that theſe cunning Launders can with ſo ſmall coſt make white: know that generally they define the veniall ſinnes to be when as a man (without the Creator) taketh pleaſure in the creatures, which in effect is as much to loue the creatures, and not the Creator. And leſt you ſhould not vnderſtand them in this generality of ſpeech, they giue you a particular example of their veniall ſins, preciſely numbring drunkenneſſe amongſt them: the ſtain whereof is ſo eaſily and quickly taken away. Bonauent. ibid. Bonauent. ibid.

In expoſ. orat Do. Luc. 11 RHEM. 7. [13. Lead vs not] S. Cyprian readeth, Ne patiaris nos induci, ſuffer vs not to bee lead, as S. Auguſtine noteth, lib. de bo. perſeu. c. 6. and ſo the holy Church alſo vnderſtandeth it, becauſe God (as S. Iames ſaith) tempteth no man: though for our ſinnes, as for our probation and crowne, he permit vs to be tempted. Beware then of Bezas expoſition vpon this place, who (according to the Caluiniſts opinion) ſaith, that God leadeth them into temptation, into whom himſelfe bringeth Sathan for to fill their hearts: ſo making God the author of ſinne. God is not author of euill.

CARTVV. 7. [13. Lead vs not.] Here the Ieſuites take vpon them to teach the Euangeliſts to ſpeake: as if the Holy Ghoſt which ſpake in them, were a babe, and had not fit words to vtter his minde withall: eſpecially when as Luke, which otherwiſe in diuers words varieth from Mathew, here keepeth the ſame phraſe with him: where if any thing had been hardly ſpoken of the one, the other would in all likelihood haue mollified it. And if this manner of ſpeech had been but once or twice in the ſcripture, it had been a great malepartneſſe to haue delaied it, that the ſtrength of the words ſhould periſh by a wateriſh interpretation. But now that the Scripture vſeth this phraſe in diuers places, and that in ſtronger ſence then here: it is too ſhameleſſe an impudency to go againſt the ſtreame of ſo plain, ſo often, and ſo vehement ſpeeches. For it is ſaid, God giueth vp to a reprobate ſence: That he hardeneth the heart: That it was of the Lord that Elies ſonnes did not obey the good counſell of their Father: That Roboboam did not harken to the reaſonable requeſt of the Iſraelites: That he ſent Ioſeph into Egypt, whom his brethren had enuiouſly ſold, and rather he ſent them then they: That he tooke away from Iob that which the Diuel, the Chaldees, and the Sabees did: That ſitting in the throne of his high iudgement, he ſendeth the Diuell to be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of the falſe Prophets: that he commandeth him to goe to perſwade the wicked. Rom. 1. Rom. 9. 1 Sam. 2. 1 Reg. 12. Gen. 45. Gen. 50. Iob. 1.

Finallie that if a Prophet bee deceiued, it is hee that hath deceiued him, yet followeth it not hereof, that the Lord is author of anie ſinne, for although he doe the ſame thing, that the wicked do: yet is hee ſeuered from them in the guilt, becauſe he doth it vppon other cauſes, of another ground, and to another end then they doe, conſidering that by the ſame things, that they fulfill wicked luſts and cruell harts: the Lord putteth in practiſe both his mercie towards the elect, and his iuſtice towards the reprobate to deſtroie them, or towards the elect to chaſtice, or to trie them. So the Lord in hardening of heartes, giueth men part of the wages, which their former ſinnes haue deſerued: ſo, that which Ioſephs bethren did in enuie to deſtroie him, the Lord did in mercie to preſerue both him and them, ſo that which the diuel in hatred, the Caldees and Sabees in couetouſnes and enmitie, did vnto Iob: the Lord did it in loue, to trie him and make him an example of patience to all poſteritie. And therefore after Iob had ſaid, that it was the Lord that had doen all this: it is added, that in all that, Iob had not faulted. So finallie that which the deuil in hatred, and the falſe prophets for flatterie of King and people did: the Lord in iuſtice did it, to warne all poſteritie to loue the truth for the trueths ſake. And we haue hereof a principall example, in the death of our Sauiour Chriſt, for it is ſaid, that the father gaue his ſonne to death: alſo that Chriſt gaue himſelfe to the ſame death: further that the Iewes gaue him likewiſe: laſt of all that Iudas did the ſame. And the Scripture in all theſe uſeth one and the ſame word, yet for ſo much as Iudas did it of couetouſnes, the Iewes of malice, our Sauiour Chriſt in obedience vnto his father, his father in loue toward the world: it is manifeſt, that notwithſtanding the cooperation and meeting together of all theſe in one action, yet our Sauiour Chriſt, and his father be in their doings glorious, where the other are full of ignominie. This doctrine is ſet forth by a notable ſimilitude. For as in a faire image, the black colour if it be well placed ſerueth for the beautifying of the image: euen ſo if a man could with learned eyes behold the gouernment of all things, taking the ſinners and wicked (as the black) amongſt them: he ſhould ſee it all verie beautifull: notwithſtanding that the wicked being conſidered in them ſelues are full of deformitie. And as a cunning artificer, will make good worke, although he haue but a ſorie toole: euen ſo the Lord, through his infinite wiſdome, working by the wicked, as by vntoward and crabbed inſtruments, ceaſeth not to make vp his worke, with ſingular commendation of all who haue any light in them. Finally, as the expert Phiſicians and Apothecaries, know ſo to temper that which of it ſelfe is poiſon, as it ſhall be ſouerein for medicine: ſo the Lord which taught them this cunning, is more able himſelfe to handle the poiſon of the wicked, in ſuch ſort as to all purpoſes both of his glorie, and of the ſaluation of the elect ſhall ſerue for triacle. And thus is the iuſtice of God, ſufficiently defended againſt the quarrel of thoſe, which vpon theſe manner of ſpeeches (underſtood as the words themſelues do require) open their blaſphemous mouthes. But of the Ieſuites fooliſh defence, which (forſooth take pitie vpon the Lord; it may be trulie verefied, which Iob affirmed of his friendes; that in fauour of the almightie, and for defence of his iuſtice, they ſpake iniquitie & fraud. Let us ſee therfore what maner of defence this is, that theſe men bring of their idle permiſſion, and ſuffering of things. And firſt of all by childiſh diſtinction: they cut of (as it were) as much as in them lieth, the Lordes right hand, and ſpoile him, more then of the better halfe, of his wonderful ſcepter and gouernement, which hee houldeth in all the world, for they will not ſuffer him to carry any mace in hell, as if hee had no Commandement there; where there are ſo many diuils, and wicked ſpirits, conſidering that they can doe nothing, but that which is euill. And by the ſame reaſon, they alſo put down his ſword, in the greater part Iob. 13. 7. Ephe. 5. 2. Acts 3. 13. Math. 10. Iob. 6. 2 Theſſ. 2. Iob. 3. Aug. de ciuit. dei, l. 11. c. 6 of the earth: ſeeing the number of the godly, is much leſſe then the number of the wicked, which are altogether ſet in wickednes: And wheras he is ſaid in reſpect of this prouidence: to be the iudge of the world: let them anſwer, whether it be enough for a iudge when he hath giuen ſentence of a malefactor to leaue him to the diſcretion of the hangman, or no: which they do in al the Lords iudgments wherin ſin is puniſhed by ſin. Beware therfore of the Ieſuits, which are not far from the hereſie of Marcion & of the Maniches that hold two immediate authors & cauſes of things. Secondly the iuſtice of God, which they haue vndertaken to be aduocates of, doth by their patronage, lie in the duſt: For if the Lord ſhould draw any guilt from mens wicked actions, becauſe he ruleth them: he ſhould not be able to waſh his hands from the ſame guilt, if hauing power to let them, he ſhould ſuffer them to be done. Do they think Elie was guiltleſſe: becauſe he did onely but ſuffer his ſons to commit fornication, and diſorderly to take the fleſh of the ſacrifice at their pleaſure: although he gaue not commandement thereof? although he miſliked it, yea although he reproued it, it is euident that the guilt of his ſons, ſtuck to his fingers ends: becauſe he did not let it, ſo much as in him lay. When ſolicited by others to euill, we ſuffer our ſelues to be carled away: are wee therefore free; if a captaine ſhould not betray his ſouldiers into the hands of their enimies, yet knowing it, and being able to let it, if he ſuffer them to be betraied: ſhall he not be accountable to the Generall of the field? Thankes be to God therefore that the iuſtice of the Lord (by his direction and rule of all things) is not ſick: if it were, you are miſerable helpers, and Phyſicians nothing worth. That which you alledge out of Iames is eaſily anſwered, of the words which follow. For thereby Iames declareth, that the Lord ſetteth not the tentation in a mans heart, corruption being there before in his own concupiſcence, he offereth affliction, or ſome other outward obiect, which is fit either by mortification and repreſſing his concupiſcence, to declare his obedience, or by ſending of it forth, and letting it flie vpon the occaſion that is offered, to bewray the contrary. In ſhort, Iames ſheweth, that although the Lord do worke by the wicked: yet hee worketh not in them as he doth in his children. Again, when he ſaith, God tempteth no man, as he himſelfe is not tempted of euill: he diſtinguiſheth the tentation by the cauſe ſpoken of in the Lords prayer, and that which he himſelfe ſpeaketh of: teaching that as the Lord cannot bee moued of any euill, to doe that which he doth: ſo when he tempteth men, he doth it not of euill, or for euill, but onely of good, and for good, as hath been declared. Now as for the authority of the Fathers, who ſpeak ſometime as you haue here tranſlated, it is an eaſie matter to ſhew them that haue alſo tranſlated otherwiſe. as Tertullian that affirmeth the perſecution to come of God, into which wee deſire the Lord that hee would not lead us. Alſo Bernard uſeth the ſame tranſlation, when hee ſpeaketh of prayer to bee made againſt falling a freſh into ſinnes by paſt: and Auguſtine preſſeth this very tranſlation againſt the Pelagians: contra Iul. lib. 5. cap. 3. Howbeit wee anſwer that wee do not flie the word of Permiſſion: which under colour heereof, pulleth out the raignes of Gods direction, and working from him in all ſuch things as hee is ſaid to permit: As if permiſſion and doing were not all one in reſpect of the Lord, Elſe let the Ieſuites anſwer, how they can maintaine the Lord, in his right of doing thoſe things, which by his holy Spirit hee worketh in his elect: For the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, promiſing to proceed in his moſt ſacred Treatiſe: ſaith, that hee will doe it, If God permit. Now if God doth not, nor ruleth not thoſe things, that hee doth permit: it is euident, that hee is ſpoiled of the glory of his moſt laudable actions. If hee doe the ſame things that hee doth permit, then it ſolloweth that this diſtinction of permitting and not doing, is altogether triſling and unlearned.

Now whereas theſe barking and bauling curres againſt Maiſter Beza, hollow in the eares of their Readers to take heed of that worthy learned man: the Reader is once againe to bee admoniſhed to take heed of the Ieſuites which like unto the Epicures, ſet the Lord walking the circle of the heauens there to looke upon the frame of the world, without mouing ſo much as a little finger to the gouernement thereof. For as by plaine affirmation they turne the Lord out of the gouernment of the greater part of the world: ſo by conſequent, they leaue him not ſo much as the gouernment of the godly, in their beſt and moſt laudable actions. Let them note alſo, that (by this diſtinction) they themſelues do bring in the Lord, to permit ſinne as it is ſinne: whereas wee hold, that God is neither the author nor the permitter of ſinne, as it is ſinne: But ſo farre, as thereby hee worketh a moſt excellent work to his glory, and to the ſaluation of his people. A man would thinke that this matter would beene mould enough to haue filled up the open graue of their ſlanderous throates, but heere they might haue ſome excuſe, becauſe the ſilly men underſtood not what abſurdities wait upon their doctrines. Howbeit haue they not heard of their fellow Ieſuites, which defended that the lying and wanton inticements which Iudith uſed towards Holophernes, proceeded from God, and were the doings of the Holy Ghoſt, ſpeaking in her and working by her; If they knew of it and approue it, they carry their old fore-head with them ſtill: which ſhame not to charge us with thoſe things, wherewith the ſoles of our ſhooes being not once dipped, themſelues are up to the hard ancles. If the report of this hath not come unto them, yet ſhould they not haue beene ignorant, of that which is written in their Canon Law: Wherein there may bee (good Reader) ſome doubt, whether wee may bid thee to open, or to ſtop thine eares, the ſpeech being ſo horrible) as it is a wonderfull patience of God, that the earth opened not her mouth to ſwallow the Author, the Writer, the Printer, and all which had any thing to do therein: yea, it may ſeeme ſtrange, that the dumbe and dead paper, did not ſtand up, refuſing to take that inke, wherewith ſuch an abhominable blaſphemy ſhouid bee either Printed or written, it is no more but this: That the Iewes had ſinned deadly, if they had not crucified our Saviour Chriſt: whereby the immaculate Lambe of God in whom there was no ſinne, neither any guile found in his mouth: is affirmed to haue beene iuſtly and worthily condemned. CHAP. VII.

In this third and laſt chapter of his Sermon, becauſe wee know not where he ends. hee biddeth us beware of iudging: 6 And neuertheleſſe to take open dogges (ſo hee calleth them) as they bee. 7 If theſe workes of iuſtice ſeeme too hard, wee muſt pray inſtantly to him that giueth them. 12 In the concluſion hee giueth one ſhort rule of all iuſtice. 13 And then hee exhorteth with all vehemency to the ſtraite way both of the Catholicke faith. 21 and alſo of good life: becauſe onely faith will not ſuffice.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. VII.

RHEM. 1. [1 Iudge not.] It is no Christian part to iudge ill of mens actes which bee in themselues good, and may proceed of good meaning, or of mans inward meanings and intentions which wee cannot see: of which fault they must beware that are too suspitious and giuen to deeme alwaies the worst of other men: But to say that Iudas, or an Hereticke euidently known to die obstinately in heresie is damned, and in all other plaine and manifest cases to iudge, is not forbidden.

Harding in his former booke. pag. 155 CARTVV. 2. [6 Holy to dogges.] Heere, if you durst put out your hornes so farre, you would haue told us, as other your mates and companions do, namely that the people as dogges and swine, ought not to read the Scripture. Now you turne it more mannerly, to the secluding of the unworthy from the Sacrament, but yet foolishly and ignorantly: For our Sauiour Christ hauing spoken of rash rebuking of a brother, doth shew that there are some of so desperate hope of recouery, that they are not once to bee reproued; for no more profite comming unto them by admonition, then to a sow before whom pearles are hurled: Great perill may come unto the reprouers from them as from dogges. which are ready to flie upon those that shall rebuke them: Which is confirmed of Salomon. And further by the next uerse of the Euangelist. For as in a matter of great difficulty, to discouer betweene the desperate, and those which giue hope of repentance, they are commanded to haue their recourse to prayer, for obtaining the spirit of discretion in that affaire: where it is not so hard a matter to discerne who are meete to bee receiued vnto the holy Communion: neither is there danger, that the wicked should rise against the Ministers to rend them a peeces, because they admit them to the use of the Sacrament: but rather the danger is when they deny it them. Heere againe the Iesuites, bewray their contempt of Gods Law, in their light estimation of sinne: for of the veniall sinnes (which what they bee hath beene before noted) they make so small account: that for purgation and freedome from them, rhey are not (in their iudgement) worth so much as the speaking of. And being without the compasse of confession, there needeth much lesse sorrow or contrition, satisfaction or amends: considering that they haue cheined these so together, that taking one linke away, the other must needs follow.

RHEM. 3. [8 Euery one that asketh.] All things that wee aske necessary to saluation with humility, attention, continuance, and other due circumstances, God will undoubtedly grant when it is best for us.

CARTVV. 3. [8 Euery one that asketh.] How mighty is the truth and preuaileth, breaking out at the Iron gate of the enemies mouth, which would so faine keepe it prisoner. For if undoubtedly, God will giue us the things which wee demand: why should not wee haue that certaine and undoubted perswasion in our consciences? If you beleeue this, why should not other beleeue it? And why should you not (contrary to your staggering doctrine) teach the people so? If you beleeue it not why do you so cerainely affirme it?

RHEM. 4. [15. Clothing of sheepe.] Extraordinary apparance of zeale and holinesse in the sheepes coat in some Heretickes: but these of this time weare not that garment much, being men of vnsatiable sinne. This is rather their garment, common to them with all other heretickes, to cracke much of the word of the Lord, and by pretensed allegations, and * sweet words of benediction, and specially by promise of knowledge, light and liberty of the Gospell, to seduce the simple and the sinfull.

CARTVV.

CARTVV. 4. [15 Cloathing of sheepe.] Could you so suddenly forget that which went in a few verses before, of casting out the beame out of your own eye. I am affraid that your hypocrisie is heere accompanied with malice, and that your own hearts giue the pen the lie: for your eies are sore to behold our honest conuersation: And if (as it commeth to passe) through our inborne corruption, wee fall offensiuely: yet doe wee not (as your custome is) cloke, excuse, or defend our faults, but condemne them and punish them openly. Wee haue no sanctuaries for theeues and murtherers. Wee haue no Clergy priuiledges, to exempt the Ministers from the sword of the ciuill Magistrate. Wee haue no open stewes. There is none of our coat, hath made so light of simple fornication, as you do. There is none that hath defended buggery, as one of the highest order of all your Hierarchie (the Pope onely excepted) hath done, That we propound the word of God for our defence, it is our praise; with all that are of God: Neither may the sheepe leaue the fell, because the woolfe doth sometimes put it on: Whether wee propound it truely or otherwise, it will partly appeare by this conflict. But how miserably you bee forsaken of the holy Scripture, this one thing doth sufficiently declare, that you dare not so much as pretend it, But you hold out the names of the interpreters thereof, at whose hands as there can bee no sufficient triall: so haue you them for the most part, and in the weightiest causes your enemies.

RHEM. 5. [16. Fruites.] These are the fruits which Heretickes are known by, diuision from the whole Church, diuision among themselues, taking to themselues new names, and new masters, inconstancy in doctrine, disobedience both to others, and namely to spirituall officers, loue and liking of themselues, pride and intollerable vaunting of their owne knowledge aboue all the holy Doctors, corruption, falsification, and quite denying of the parts of Scriptures that specially make against them, and these be common to all heretickes lightly. Other some are more peculiar to these of our time, as Incestuous marriages of vowed persons, spoyle of Churches, Sacriledge and profanation of all holy things, and many other speciall poynts of doctrine, directly tending to the corruption of good life in all states. Heretikes knowne by their fruits.

CARTVV. 5. [16 Fruites.] These charges giuen upon us, especially of spoyling Churches, and in incestuous marriages &c, being as sufficiently disproued by a bare denyall, as they are proued by a bare affirmation, haue been partly before, and partly are afterward to be examined.

RHEM. 6. [21. Lord, Lord] These men haue faith, otherwise they could not inuocate, Lord, Lord: Ro. 10. But here we see, that to beleeue is not enough, and that not onely infidelity is sinne, as Luther teacheth. Yea Catholikes also that worke true miracles in the name of our Lord, and by neuer so great faith, yet without the workes of iustice shall not be saued. 1. Cor. 13. Againe, consider here who they are that haue so often in their mouth, The Lord, the Lord, and how little it shall auaile them that set so little by good workes, and contemne Christian iustice. Not onely faith.

CARTVV. 6. [21 Lord, Lord.] Rather you might reason on this sort: These men haue good workes, yet shall they bee condemned: therefore a man hauing good workes may bee condemned. For inuocation is not faith, but a worke if it bee duly done proceeding from faith. But as no man calling truely upon the name of God, can bee condemned, because of the iustifying faith, from which his holy inuocation commeth & proceedeth: so much lesse can any which haue that true faith it selfe in respect of it, bee shut out of the Kingdom. Againe, the inuocation proceeding from the faith, for which they cite Rom. 10. 14. is alwaies ioyned with life euerlasting. For in the very next verse before, the Apostle saith: That all those which call upon the name of God, shall bee saued. This allegation therefore is too blockish, as that which proueth without cause, that all they that call vpon the name of God shall be saued: and much more that no man hauing faith (which is mother to this inuocation) can be cast out from the kingdom: both which they in this note do deny. I grant there is a kinde both of inuocation and of faith mentioned in the Scripture, which is sundred from saluation: but these Iesuites are so rude and inexpert in the Scripture, that they are not onely ignorant of the poore helpes, that it in some shew would yeeld them, but also in purposing to strike vs, they wound themselues. Besides that, it is meerely false, that no man can say Lord, Lord, without faith, For the Euangelist, as well in the very next verse, as other-where, doth say, that the hypocrites in the last day, shall say vnto him, Lord, Lord: whereas it is known, that faith is in this life onely. The rest is nothing but the Iuniper coles of your wicked tongues, which the innocency of our life shall easily quench. Rom. 10. 13 Act. 2. 21. Mat. 25, 11 1. Cor. 13.

Prieſts forgiue ſins. RHEM. 1. [4. Prieſt] The Prieſts of the old Law (ſaith S. Chryſoſtom) had authority and priuiledge onely to diſcerne who were healed of Leproſie, and to denounce the ſame to the people: but the Prieſts of the new Law haue power to purge in very deed the filth of the ſoule. Heb. 9. Ioh. 1. 1. Ioh. 2. Apoc. 1. 1. Tim. 4. CARTVV. 1. [4. Prieſt] Chriſt is the onely Prieſt which purgeth our ſinnes: euen as he is the onely ſacrifice and Lambe of God, euen as well at this inſtant as at the day of his paſſion, as the phraſe and manner of ſpeech doth declare. It is he that hath the key of Dauid, which ſhutteth and no man openeth, openeth and no man ſhutteth. As for the Miniſters, they may bee ſaid to purge from ſinne, as they are ſaid to ſaue; inaſmuch as they be fit inſtruments, by the miniſtry of the word, to communicate this cleanſing from ſinne. And in this miniſteriall worke of cleanſing, the Prieſts (for the meaſure of reuelation of the will of God vnder the Law) had their part, as well as the Miniſters of the Goſpell: and haue remiſſion and purgation of ſins, as well as they. That is to ſay, God which worketh effectually in the miniſtery of the Goſpell, to the ſaluation of the elect which now liue; wrought alſo powerfully in their miniſtery, to the like ſaluation of the elect vnder the Law. This is euident, in that where the Prieſt at the iſſue of diuine ſeruice, bleſſeth the people, and prayeth for all manner of good things to be giuen vnto them: it is added by and by, that the Lord himſelfe would make good the bleſſing vnto his peoole. Hereupon it commeth, that there be as full and ſounding words to ſet forth their miniſtery, as there bee to ſet forth ours. For the godly Prieſthood of Leuie is ſaid to haue conuerted many from their iniquity. They are ſaid to make cleane and vncleane, to root vp and throw downe, to deſtroy and caſt vnder feet, to build and to plant. Finally, for this cauſe they are alſo ſaid to haue had the keyes of the kingdom of heauen: whereby to open it, and lock it, according to the faith or infidelity, to the repentance or hardneſſe of heart of the people. If Chryſoſtom giue leſſe then due to the Prieſts of the Law, it is no maruell: which otherwhere ſpeaketh of the people under the Law as if they had been pampered vp like ſtall fed oxen, or had had no further promiſes then of this life. Again, in this place he magnifieth the Miniſtery of the Goſpell with exceſſiue and hyperbolicall ſpeeches; as if they had power to do all things in heauen: which ſpeeches, if they bee taken preciſely, as the words ſignifie, are directly contrary to the truth, as in the next Chapter ſhall further appeare.

RHEM. 2. [4. Gift] Our Sauiour willeth him to go and offer his gift or ſacrifice, according as Moſes preſcribed in that caſe; becauſe the other ſacrifice, being the holieſt of all holies, which is his body, was not yet begun. So ſaith S. Auguſtin. lib. 2. q. Enang. q. 3. & cont. Aduerſ. leg. & Proph. lib. 1. c. 19. 20.

CARTVV. 2. [4. Gift.] The Body of Chriſt was both begun and finiſhed to be offered in ſacrifice in one onely day: as it ſhall manifeſtly appeare afterward. For the daily offering, Auguſtine is ſhamefully wreſted. For he ſheweth the cauſe, why notwithſtanding the Goſpell already begun to be preached, and our Sauiour Chriſt entred into his charge: yet the ſacrifices of the Law ceaſed not to be offered, which ſhould ſeeme to haue been abrogate by his comming: hee ſheweth therefore that the cauſe hereof was, that he had not yet offered vp the burnt offering in his paſſion. Where to haue had any ſuch meaning as you would haue him; hee ſhould haue ſaid, that Chriſt had not yet inſtituted his laſt Supper, before his paſſion. He oppoſeth therefore his ſacrifice vpon the Croſſe, unto the Legall ſacrifice, and not vnto the ſupper of the Lord. The ſame is the ſence of the ſecond place alſo. In the third place he termeth indeed the Lords Supper a Sacrifice: but in ſo diuerſe a ſence from your blaſphemous ſacrifice, as all men may eaſily know you for renters rather then readers of the Doctors. For he calleth it there twiſe a ſacrifice of thankeſgiuing: and not (as you would haue it) a ſacrifice propitiatory. He compareth it alſo with the wine and bread which Melchiſedeck brought forth vnto Abraham. For confirmation whereof he citeth the Prophet Malachy: that a pure ſacrifice ſhall be offered vnto God, in euery place. Which teſtimony being the ſtock whereon you would graffe your Maſſe: is hereby proued not to beare or brook any ſuch twig. For that ſacrifice (by Auguſtine) is not (as you fooliſhly ſay) the naturall body of Chriſt, but bread and wine, which are a ſacrament of his naturall body, as we affirme. And that Sacrifice is not a Sacrifice propitiatory, or a ſinne offering, as you wickedly beare us in hand; but a ſacrament of thankeſgiuing, as we truly confeſſe.

CARTVV. 3. [8. Not worthy] Chriſt through his ſpirit by faith dwelleth in our hearts: that is to ſay, is made one with vs, as the head is one with the body: who becauſe he is conceiued and faſhioned in vs, it commeth to paſſe, that as often as we vſe thoſe helpes of the Word and Sacraments, by which meanes that faith is wrought and increaſed in vs, whereby Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts: ſo often it may be ſaid in ſome ſort, that Chriſt commeth vnder our roofe. Thus Auguſtine ſpeaketh of the ſame Centurion, which bare (as he ſaith) Chriſt in his heart, whom he was afraid to admit into his houſe. And this comming of Chriſt into vs, was common with vs vnto the people of God before Chriſt was born: becauſe they beleeued as the Apoſtle doth declare. Neither doth Origen affirme, that hee entreth in at the roofe of the mouth, as you would ſurmiſe. And that he did not ſo much as dreame of your carnall and Capernaticall eating of Chriſt, the ſame place which you alledge, doth manifeſtly declare: where he ſaith, Chriſt commeth vnder the roofe of thy houſe, as often as the Biſhops (meaning the teaching Paſtors, being holy men, and acceptable unto God) enter into it. We know you are bold fellowes, but yet I ſuppoſe you dare not conclude hereupon that our Sauiour Chriſt entreth really and ſubſtancially into his houſe, into whoſe your Biſhop entreth. Neither doth the profeſſion of our vnworthineſſe to receiue Chriſt, helpe your groſſe meaning. For wee are not onely vnworthy of Chriſt to dwell in our hearts by faith; but vnworthy alſo of the outward Sacrament: both which we do openly and vnfainedly profeſſe: which you cannot profeſſe, but with diſſembling lips, that iudge your ſelues as worthy of the kingdome of heauen, as the ſeruant is worthy of his hire. Therfore though we might affoord both Chryſoſtom and Auguſtine ſuch a ſaying without any hindrance to our cauſe: yet is there no ſuch ſpeech in either places. Only the Ieſuits thought of ſome gain to their cauſe: if they could haue fathered the word (Maſſe) of Chryſoſtom. This they cannot do, but by a falſe interpretation, of expounding the word Leiturgie, ſignifying publicke or common ſeruice, or adminiſtration by the word Maſſe: which is all one as to put a Beane into a Monkes Coule: conſidering that the word Adminiſtration is generall, and ſignifieth all manner of diuine ſeruice. Although it ſhall appeare that in thoſe few places of antiquity where this word Maſſe is found, it is found diuorced by the ſpace of heauen and earth, both from the body and marrow bones of the Popiſh Maſſe, as alſo from the jimmers and trinkets thereof. It were too long to purſue the multitude of reaſons to proue that Chryſoſtomes Maſſe is a counterfeit. Let it be ſufficient that it prayeth for the Emperour Alexius, that liued ſome hundred yeares after Chryſoſtom, and for Pope Nicholas the vniuerſall Biſhop, which the Greeke Church did not euer acknowledge, and who alſo liued ſome hundred yeares after Chryſoſtom was dead.

Priests Marriage.

RHEM 4. [14 His Wiues mother] Of Peter specially among the rest it is euident, that he had a wife, but (as S. Ierom saith) after they were called to be Apostles, they had no more carnal company with their wiues, as he proueth there by the very words of our Sauiour, He that hath left wife, &c.* And so in the Latine Church hath been alwaies vsed, that married men may be, and are daily made priests, either after the death of the wife, or with her consent to liue in perpetuall continency. And if the Greeks haue Priests that do otherwise, S. Epiphanius a Greek Doctor, telleth them, that they do it against the ancient Canons, & * Paphnutius plainly signifieth the same in the first Councell of Nice. But this is most plaine, that there was neuer, either in the Greek Church or the Latine, authenticall example of any that married after holy Orders.

Lib. 1. aduersus. c. 14. Mat. 19. 29 Epiph. hæ 59 * Sozom. lib. 1. c. 22. Socrat. l. 1, c. 8.

CARTVV. 4. [14. His wiues mother.] The Scripture foreseeing the frensie of this heresie, made the wall higher and stronger of the lawfull mariage of the Ministery. For besides the places wherein generally it is (without all exception) permitted to all orders of men to marry: it speaketh specially of the lawfull vse of marriage in the Ministers. It speaketh particularly of their wiues, likewise of their children: which we remember not to be done in any other estates, onely of the kings, it is said that they should not marry many wiues. Wherefore the Ministers, hauing not onely the common euidence which all other men haue to hold their wiues by: but also certain specialties, and speciall charters, whereby the quiet and peaceable possession of them is warranted: it is euident that the Popish Court which impleadeth and condemneth them for their wiues, is a lawlesse Court; which vtterly refuseth the triall of the word of God; which word, because it wil not come to fit their purpose, they dragg it by the haire. For to proue that the Apostles forsook the company of their wiues; they alledge (after Ierom) Math 19. 29. He that hath left wife, &c. But answer me (good sirs) is this spoken of the Ministers alone, and not rather of all Christians? Of all Christians certainly. For after that he had told the Apostles what reward they should haue for forsaking all, he declareth, that not they onely, but whosoeuer hath left house, or brethren or sisters, or father or mother, or wife, &c. shall receiue an hundred fold, and inherit life euerlasting. Wherefore if your interpretation be receiued, euery man that giueth his name vnto Christ, must make a diuorce from his wife, and all that he hath. But as here our Sauiour Christs meaning is, that men for his sake ought to forsake whatsoeuer they cannot hold, with the lawfull profession and defence of the truth: so also that the Ministers should leaue whatsoeuer falleth not in, nor frameth not with the execution of their Ministry, And this receiueth light of the comparison of Souldiarsare, whereunto the Ministery is resembled. For he that is pressed to go to warfare, hath no need to leaue all that he hath: but onely that which may hinder his seruice in the warres. And if either Captaine or Souldier defending the wall of his own Citty against the siege of the enemy, haue their wiues in the Cittie with them: I suppose there is no discipline of the warres so seuere, to forbid it as a thing inconuenient. And if you will bite so hard vpon the words: the Minister by the same word whereby he forsaketh his wife, must forsake his brethren and children. Yea, if they will obstinately stick vnto the word, passing by the drift of our Sauiour Christ, the Minister shall be driuen when he hath put away his wife, to marry another, considering that the Euangelist S. Marke reporteth, that our Sauiour Christ promiseth to them that had forsaken wife, and children for his sake: that they should euen in this world receiue children againe.

Mat. 19. 29 Mark, 10. 29. 30. 2. Tim. 2.

And how is it that these Moules do not see euen in this place, that Peter had reserued his house wherein he (at this time) entertained our Sauiour Christ. And if hee retained his house without impeachment of his ministery, much more might he retaine his wife: unlesse you will say hee had a straighter bond with his house, then with his wife. Further to let passe the manifest breach of the law of God, which alloweth no cause of diuorce but onely fornication: obserue what an infamous marke they set upon the Ministery by this meanes, which ascribe unto the Ministery the same effect of dissoluing Marriage, which they ascribe unto adultery. But they will say, this separation is by consent of both parties, when that is often constrained of the one part. It is grauely considered of you, as if it were in their power to untie the knot which God hath knit; or that they can agree of any separation, further then of a certaine time. But heere againe you are taken at unawares: For if hee that is called to the Ministery, to make a lawfull separation from his wife must haue her consent: it followeth that our Sauiour Christ did euill, which simply and without condition commanded his Disciples to follow him: It followeth also, that his Apostle, did rashly, which compounded not the matter, first with their wiues, and obtained their consents before they left all and followed him. For it was no sooner commanded of our Sauiour Christ, that they should follow him, then it was executed of the Apostles. But Christ gaue commandement to follow him, without exception of their wiues consent, and the Apostles obey without conditioning the same: It followeth therefore, that there was no consent heere to bee obtained, and consequently no separation. For wherefore should they bee separate, when euen the bed (in lawfull marriage) is undefiled. But will you euidently behold the filthinesse of this Romish beast, Reade the glosse of their Legantine, where the question being moned whether for Priest-hood sake, the Concubine is to bee put away, answer is made, that it seemeth she ought not: but yet that it is without all controuersie that hee must abiure his wife. That all men may understand (especially considering their practise, agreeable to this Glosse) that this sect is that which S. Paul prophesieth of, which should forbid marriage. For that a Priest should haue company with a woman, they esteeme it lawfull, but with a woman in marriage, they cannot abide it in any sort. So that it is true of these men which Epiphanius saith: They disannll marriage, but not wantonnesse, for chastity is not in price, but onely which is faigned. True also which Augustine obiecteth against the Maniches: That they condemne not the company of a woman, but marriage. Finally, true which their own Bernard saith: That they seeme to speake things in the loue of chastity, where (in deed) they haue deuised them to nourish and encrease filthinesse. Ierome, as for the most part wrongeth marriage, compared with virginity: so in this booke hee is untollerable, condemning not onely the Ministers marriage, but of

of all other men: calling it a worke of the fleſh, and applying thoſe places of the Apoſtle unto it, which are verified of things meerely unlawfull: making the marriage of all (as it is compared with virginity) to bee as chaffe is to the corne, with diuers other unſeemely ſimiltudes. Auguſtine therefore, might heere haue righted you up, if you had not willingly cloſed your eyes: who affirmeth that they grieuouſly ſinne which make ſeparation of thoſe, which married after vow. Now againſt the authority of the Greeke Church, which neuer liked of the maidenleſſe maidenhood of their Prieſts: they anſwer, that Epiphanius a Greek Doctor, telleth them, that they do it againſt order: doe you hold the skales euen? you haue neither skales nor weights of Scripture, nor you dare ſcarce profeſſe to haue any. But in the weighing of earthly authorities, wherein you profeſſe to haue skill: how commeth it to paſſe, that you ſet the iudgement of one or two men onely, againſt the authority of the Church; you eſpecially, who are wont to lay ſo great weight vpon the multitude. But againſt what Order do they? againſt the ancient Canons, you ſay: it is once well, that it is not againſt the Canon of the Scripture, which you here pretend. Howbeit will you ſee, that Epiphanius is rather againſt you then for you. Hee granteth that there was ſuch a Canon, that the Miniſters ſhould liue in ſingle life. But the ſame granteth, that it was not obſerued in his time: wherein there were many, which in their Miniſtery had children in Matrimony. Of whoſe condemnation nor worthines to be depoſed, he hath not a word. But Paphnutius is directly againſt you, and as oppoſite to this your doctrine, as light to darkneſſe. For where the Councell of Nice would haue decreed a ſeparation of theſe Miniſters from the company of their wiues, which had married before their entrance into the miniſtery: Paphnutius (although himſelfe vnmarried) ſtanding vp, withſtood it, affirming that marriage was honorable, and that company of a man with his owne wife, was chaſtitie. We not therefore feare, leſt our cauſe ſhould go alone, without the attendance of antiquity, when as the Ieſuits that are her deadlieſt enemies, doe furniſh vs after this ſort. So therefore you haue for your one Canon, if it made any thing for you, another Canon: and that of that Councell, the credit whereof you doe ſhamefully match with the credit of the word of God. It is well, if you here beleeue it, telling you the truth. Amongſt the Canons aſcribed to the Apoſtles, it is decreed, If any Biſhop, Elder or Deacon, vnder colour of religion or reuerence, put away his wife: let him be ſeparate from his Miniſtery: If he abide in that minde, let him be depoſed. This Canon is of a contrary ſpirit to you. For you ſeuer men from their wiues, that ſeuer themſelues to the miniſtery: and it ſeuereth men from the miniſtery, that ſeuer themſelues from their wiues, vnder pretence of the miniſtery.

Can. 5.

Amongſt the Conſtitutions which are intituled Apoſtolicall, it is ordained; That it was not lawfull for Biſhop, Elder, or Deacon, either to paſſe after their miniſtery receiued, into a new marriage; or to keepe company with other mens wiues, but to bee content with her which they had when they came to the miniſtery. It was yet ordained by another Councel, and that generall, that where in the Church of Rome it hath been a Canon, that thoſe which take the order of Elders and Deacons, ſhould promiſe abſtinence from their wiues: We (ſaith the Councell) following the ancient Canon of the Apoſtolicall Conſtitution, will haue the marriages of holy men from this time forth, to be of force: nothing at all diſſolning their coniunction with their wiues, neither depriuing them of the conuenient comparying with other. And a little after it aſſigneth the cauſe, that none may looſe that which God hath ioyned: and for that marriage is honorable amongſt all, and the bed vndefiled. Where it is worthy to be noted, that the Romiſh Canon decreeing ſeparation of the miniſters from their wiues, is branded by the Councel, with the mark of Newneſſe, as that which was contrary to the old Canon of the Apoſtles. I omit that there is nothing of this matter in the 22. Chapter, but in the 23. of Sozomene: nothing in the eight chapter of Socrates, but in the eleuenth: which beſide your ſpirit of ſlumber, that the Lord hath caſt vpon you, in alledging that for you which is cleane againſt you: argueth your great negligence in ſo great affaires.

Matth. 19. Heb. 13.

In the end they adde, that it is moſt plaine, that there was neuer authenticall example of any that married after holy orders. If there were not, that is not to the purpoſe of maintaining: that Miniſters ought not to be ſeuered from their wiues, which they had before their miniſtery: which is the matter that you here vndertake to vphold. But ſpeake, to whom is this moſt plain? to you and your likes, to whom rough is plaine, and plain is rough. For you haue not plained it yet, either by any commandement out of the Scripture, or by any Canons out of the Councels, by any other antiquity, or finally by the tract and vſage of the Church, conſidering that there are found, that haue married after their entrance into the Miniſterie. But you reply, that there is no authenticall example. What do you eſteeme (I beſeech you) authenticall? is it not authenticall that is confirmed by authority of the Scripture, that is approued by the example of godly and learned men: Finally, that is ſet forth with the commendation of famous men in the elder Church. I know your meaning, that it is not authenticall, becauſe ſuch light and greene heads, as you are, do not authoriſe it. Howbeit, if you look in the writings of the famous learned man M. Iewel: you ſhall find proued againſt all the vain and idle ſhifts of M. Harding, that Enpſychius, a Biſhop and Martyr, married a wife after hee was made Biſhop, and little before hee was made martyr, which thing to haue been done of many moe, it may appeare by the lawes and cuſtomes which the elder Churches vſed in that behalfe. For Pope Stephen himſelfe witneſſeth, that the cuſtome of the Eaſterne Churches was diuers from the Romiſh. For (ſaith he) their Prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons are ioyned in marriage, but ours are not. The Ancyran Councell, which is more ancient then the great Councell of Nice, decreed, that if a Deacon entring into his Miniſtery, did before proteſt vnto the Biſhop, of his unability to remain ſingle: if the ſame after married a wife, that he ſhould not be put from his miniſtery. It was decreed alſo by an occidentall Synod, holden in the Citie of Rome, about the yeare 465. that a Prieſt ought to take a virgin to wife, and not a widow, nor a diuorced woman. Both which Councels leaue ſome liberty of marrying, euen when they were already entred into the miniſtery. Now ſeeing they kept their wiues, (as hath been ſhewed out of Epiphanius) contrary to the Canon: it is like, that when there was not the same restraint, they did multiply their marriages. RHEM. 5. [22 Let the dead.] By this we see, that not onely no worldly or carnall respect, but no other laudable duety towards our parents, ought to stay us from following Christ, and chosing a life of greater perfection.

CARTVV. 5. [22 Let the dead.] This is true in seruing the Lord after that sort that hee hath commanded, and especially in the Ministery of the Gospell. But to warrant your unnaturall and violent rendings of children from their parents bosomes, and seruants from their maisters feet, to draw them into your Cloisters, for which cause you bring it, it maketh nothing. For if these vowes were lawfull, as they are rash and ungodly, yet ought they not to bee made without consent of those under whose obedience they liue that make them: as Moses doth plainely and precisely teach. And seeing the Iesuites themselues otherwhere confesse, that this vow is but a counsell and not a commandement: it is maruaile how they should haue so small iudgement, as not to know that the commandement of obedience unto parents, ought to bee preferred to a counsell, and necessary duties to be set before those that are voluntarie. Numb. 30. 3. 4.

RHEM. 6. [26 Hee commanded.] The Church (heere signified by the boate or ship) and Catholikes, are often tossed with stormes of persecution, but Christ who seemed to sleepe in the meane time, by the Churches prayers awaketh, and maketh a calme.

CARTVV. 6. [26 Hee commanded.] The Arke of Noe, signifieth the Church, and is a figure thereof: but that the boat should signifie it, wee neuer remember: You if you be of better memory, I pray you tell us. Wee deny not but that the Church, may not unfitly bee compared with the boat: but it is one thing to bee compared unto it, and another to signifie it, or to bee a figure of it.

10 And it came to passe as he was sitting at meate in the house, behold many Publicans and sinners came, & sate down with IESVS and his Disciples.

11 And the Pharisees seing it, said to his Disciples: why doth your master eate with Publicans and sinners?

12 But IESVS hearing it, sayd: They that are in health, need not a phisition, but they that are ill at ease.

13 But go your wayes and learne what it is, I will mercie, and not sacrifice. For I am not come to call the iust, but sinners. ☞ Osee 6. 6.

18 * As hee was speaking this vnto them, behold a certaine Gouernour approched, and adored him saying, Lord my daughter is euen now dead: but come, lay thy hand vpon her, and she shall liue.

19 And IESVS rising vp followed, him, and his Disciples.

20 And behold a woman which was troubled with an issue of blood | twelue yeeres came behind him, and touched the hemme

21 For she said within her selfe, If I shall | touch onely his garment: I shall be safe.

22 But IESVS turning and seeing her, said, Haue a good heart, daughter, ‡ thy faith hath made thee safe. And the woman became whole from that houre.

23 And when IESVS was come into the house of the Gouernour, and saw minstrels and the multitude keeping a sturre.

24 He said, Depart: for the wench is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to skorne.

25 And when the multitude was put forth, he entred in, and held her hand. And the maid arose.

26 And this bruit went forth into all that countrey.

27 And as IESVS passed forth from thence, there followed him two blind men crying and saying, Haue mercie on vs: O sonne of Dauid.

28 And when he was come to the house, the blind came to him. And IESVS sayth to them, | Do you beleeue that I can doe this vnto you? They say to him, Yea Lord.

29 Then hee touched their eyes, saying, According to your faith, be it done to you.

30 And their eyes were opened, & IESVS threatned them saing, See that no man know it.

31 But they went foorth, and bruited him in all that countrey.

32 And when they were gone forth, * behold they brought him a dumbe man, possessed with a deuil. Mat.12.22.

33 And after the deuil was cast out, the dumbe man spake, and the multitude marueiled, saying, Neuer was the like seene in Israel.

34 But the * Pharisees said ‡. In the prince of deuils he casteth out deuils. Mat.12.24.

35 And IESVS went about all the cities, & townes teaching in their Synagogues and preaching the Gospell of the Kingdome, and curing diseases, and euery infirmitie.

36 And seeing the multitudes, he pitied them: because they were vexed, & lay like sheepe that haue not a sheepheard.

37 Then he sayth to his Disciples, The haruest surely is great, but the workmen are few.

38 | Pray therfore the Lord of the haruest, that he send foorth workmen into his haruest.

RHEM. 1. [1 Seeing their faith.] Wee see that the faith of one helpeth to obtaine for another. Abat. 2.

Chryſ. vpon this place. Dionyſ. Carth. vpon this place.

CARTVV. 1. [2 Seeing their faith.] It is true, so farre as it moueth to pray for other. But euery man is saued by his own faith: although a man may come to obtaine faith at the earnest suite of him that is already faithfull. Howbeit it appeareth, by the circumstance of the palsey man, who suffered himselfe to bee carried up and downe, and by the forgiuenesse of sinnes; which our Sauiour Christ pronounceth to appertaine unto him, that hee himselfe beleeued, and is included in the number of them whose faith the Euangelist affirmeth, to haue beene seene of our Sauiour Christ: which thing both Chrysostom and your own Monke confesseth.

RHEM. 2. [15 Then they shall.] Christ signifieth that the Church shall vse fasting daies after his Ascension. Epiph. in Comp. fid. Cath. Aug. Ep 80. Popish fasting daies FVLKE. 15. Neither Epiphanius nor Augustine, speake of Popish fasting daies, which consist in abstinence from flesh: But Epiphanius saith, the Apostles appointed the Wednesday and Friday to bee fasting daies, (how truely, let the Papists themselues iudge) and that on those daies, the fasting was appointed untill the ninth houre of the day, which is three houres before night. Augustine Epist. 86. acknowledgeth fasting, but no certaine fasting daies otherwise then the custome of euery Church required, according to the answer of S. Ambrose made unto him concerning fasting on Saturday, which was obserued at Rome, but not at Millaine.

RHEM. 2 [22. Thy faith hath.] Loe her deuotion to the hemme of his garment, was not superstition, but a token of greater faith, so the deuoute touching of holy Reliques. Superstitious touching of Reliques.

FVLKE. 22 Shee had no deuotion to the hemme of his garment, but becausse shee was kept off by the preasse, so that she could not come neere to desire his aide, as others did, she said within her selfe: If I shall but onely touch the hemme of his garment, &c. But the Popish touching of Reliques, which neither haue any vertue in them, nor any promise of God annexed to the touching of them, for health either of body or soule, cannot be excused from superstition. And this is a very blunt comparison of reliques of dead men with the presence of the Sonne of God: Who was willing to shew his diuine power by his Word onely, or by outward signes of touching with his hand, or touching his garment, or annointing with oile, or making of clay with his spittle, and such like: as it pleased him in healing mens bodies. By what word of God are wee certified that hee will do the like, yea grant spirituall holinesse, by touch of reliques? if we haue not Gods word, what faith can wee haue, but a superstitious credulitie. Mat. 14.36 Mark. 6.13 Iohn 6.9.

RHEM. 4. [34 In the Prince.] In the like manner say the heretickes, calling all miracles done in the Catholicke Church, the lying signes of Antichrist.

CARTVV. [34 In the Prince.] When I pray you, hath it euer beene heard of, that your Idols did euer restore a man to his speech: they are able to make a man speechlesse if they fall upon his head: but that they giue speech, which are themselues dumbe, you hardly perswade any, but such as in a meere dotage will beleeue any thing.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. IX.

RHEM. 1 [3. He blasphemeth.] When the Iewes heard Christ remit sins, they charged him with blasphemy, as Heretickes now charge his Priests of the new Testament, for that they remit sinnes, to whom it is said, Whose sins you shall forgiue, they are forgiuen, &c. Iohn 20.

RHEM. [5. Whether is easier.] The faithlesse Iewes thought (as Heretikes now adayes) that to forgiue sinnes was so proper to God, that it could not bee communicated vnto man: but Christ sheweth, that as to worke miracles is otherwise proper to God onely, and yet this power is communicated to men, so also to forgiue sins. Men haue power to forgiue sins.

Rom. 4. Ierom. 31. CARTVV. 1. [3. & 5. He blasphemeth.] It belongeth to him to forgiue sinnes, to whom it appertaineth to iustifie the wicked, and to write the diuine Lawes in the hearts of the elect. But neither of these can any man or Angell doe, but God alone. Whereupon the Lord giueth this Esay. 43. testimony vnto himselfe, That it is I, it is I, that forgiue sinnes, by repetition of the Pronoune, he declareth that none else can do it but he. Wherefore our Sauiour Christ to proue himselfe God, doth speake in this sort. And the Scribes, seeing that our Sauiour Christ at the first sight of the man, without the ordinary triall of his faith, without asking after his repentance, and without requiring any confession of his sinnes, pronounced so confidently that his sins were forgiuen: did so far well conclude, that our Sau. Christ chalenged, that w^ch was proper vnto God alone. Therein was their sinne, that they acknowledged him not to be the eternall God. And if any other Tertul. aduers. Marci. lib 4. Hilar. in 8. Mat. Chrysost. in 1. Cor. Hō. 39. &c. in 2 Cor. Hō. 8 Ministers in the world should haue after this sort pronounced, that a mans sinnes are forgiuen: they might worthily haue cried blasphemy. This our Sauiour confirmeth himselfe, by comparison of the like. For it is the property of God alone, by his onely commandement to giue health. Seeing therefore by his onely commandement he restored health: he concludeth, that he hath also diuine power to forgiue sins. And this doctrine, that God alone forgiueth sin, might be confirmed by infinite testimonies of antiquity. Howbeit the euidence of the cause is such, as is content with a few; especially seeing the modester Papists do confesse euen vpon this place, that it belongeth onely to God to forgiue sinne.

RHEM. 2. [6. The Sonne of man in earth] Christ had power to remit sinnes, and often executed the same, not onely as he was God, but also as he was a man, because he was head of the Church, and our chiefe Bishop and Priest according to his manhood, in respect whereof all power was giuen him in heauen and in earth, Math. 28. 18.

Esay. 48. 11 CARTVV. 2. [6. The Sonne of man in earth.] Vpon the former discourse it is cleare, how grossely the Iesuites fall in this place: for here it is true that the Prophet saith, I will not giue my glory to another. Seeing therefore the humanity of our Sauiour Christ is another thing from his diuine nature: it cannot be that the forgiuing of sinnes, which is proper vnto God, can bee communicated with his humane nature, that as he is man he should forgiue sinnes. This is confirmed, Luc. 23. in that our Sauiour Christ prayeth his father for forgiuenesse of sinnes, in behalfe of his persecutors: in that the miracles, which are written to haue been done of our Sau. Christ, are therefore Iohn 20. written that wee might beleeue that he is the son of God; which they cannot doe, if our Sa. Christ according to his manhood, should haue wrought th^e. And it is too great dotage in the Iesuits of this age, that of that the Sonne of man hath power to forgiue sinnes: they conclude, that hee hath it as he is sonne of man. For by the same reason they might conclude, that forsomuch as God shed his blood, and was crucified, therefore he shed his bloud, and was crucified, as God: where- Acts 20. as through the vnitie of the two natures into one person, it is truly said of whole Christ, that is 1 Cor. 2. 8. proper vnto either of the natures; w^ch cannot be verified of the natures themselues, no further then their naturall properties will feare. And out of this puddle the Iesuites haue set forth another vnsauory opinion, that Christ is our head and Priest according to his manhood. For there is no naked and bare creature able to beare the wrath of God: nor able to bee a middle person to compound the oddes, that through sinne is betweene God and man. Hereupon the Apostle speaking of 2 Cor. 5. the whole office of Christs Priesthood, saith, That God was in Christ, reconciling the world vnto him- Heb. 7. selfe. And therfore he is said to be the true Melchisedeck, which hath neither beginning nor ending. Seeing therefore to beare a figure of Christs Priesthood, it was necessary to haue a shadow of eternity: it must follow, that the truth of the shadow is necessarily incident to the truth of the Priesthood. Of this Priesthood there being two parts, one of teaching the secrets of God, common with the Leuits and Prophets, the other proper vnto the Priests alone, of offering and intercession. Touching them all, it is (if need were) easie to be shewed, that all were, and are perfor- Iob. 1. 18. med of Christ, not onely as he is man, but as he is God. Of his teaching office it is said, that no Mat. 11. 27. man hath seene GOD at any time, but the onely begotten Sonne, which is in the bosome of his Father, hee hath declared him. And for his sacrifice, which he hath once onely made, he offered it vp Heb. 9. 14 vnto God by the eternall spirit. And touching his intercession it is said, that where the Law ap- Heb. 7. 25, pointed men: the word of oath, which came after the Law, appoynteth the sonne, which is conse- 26, 27, 28. crate for euer. Neither doth the power, which he affirmeth to haue been giuen him in heauen and earth, proue that whatsoeuer he doth in the office of his Priesthood, is done as he is man. For the Godhead it selfe being giuen to the man Christ: all must needs be giuen, with all whatsoeuer he hath, but not in the right of the nature of man. Howbeit the things that he according to his power executed, were done according as the properties of euery nature doth require. For notwithstanding this power giuen to Christ, his humane nature did not raise it selfe, but was raised by his diuine nature. Neither did his humane nature giue the holy Spirit, but his diuine onely. Now therefore (Iesuits) heare your iudgement out of the Councels: Whosoeuer attributeth to one of the natures of Rom. 1. 4. Christ, that which belongeth vnto the whole person, is accursed. Dō. 2. 17.

RHEM. 3. [8. Glorified.] The [a] faithfull people did glorifie God that gaue such power to men men for to remit sinnes and to do miracles, knowing that that which God committeth to men, is not to his derogation, but to his glory, himselfe onely being still the principall worker of that effect, men being onely his ministers, substitutes, and working vnder him and by his commission and authoritie.

CARTVV. 5. (8. Glorified.) These are they that chalenge to themselues so sharpe an insight of the Scripture: and yet see not that the people, misled of their guides, do speak this unadvisedly. They had indeed simple hearts, where the Scribes had malicious. And it was true that God had giuen that power to Christ true man. But as their teachers maliciously, so they rudely esteemed of our Sauiour Christ, as of a bare man. Wherefore they darkened his glorious worke, whilest they esteemed it no other, then such a one as God doth effect by a meere man.

RHEM. 4. [8. To men.] Not onely Christ as he was man, had this power to forgiue sins, but by him and from him the Apostles, & consequently Priests. Mat. 28. All power is giuen me, Math. 18. Whatsoeuer you shal loose in earth shal be loosed in heauen, Ioan. 20. Whose sins you shal forgiue, they are forgiuē.

CARTVV. 4. [8. To men] The power which our Sauiour Christ communicateth with the Ministers in the places alledged, is the exercise of the preaching of the word, which is through the working of the Spirit, mightie to conuert those that are appointed to life. Where seeing men do lay hold by faith; the Ministers not able to giue faith, cannot carry remission of sinnes in their sleeues, to giue it to whom they list, and vpon whomsoeuer they pronounce the words of forgiuenesse. Wherfore our Sauiour Christ saith, that the peace of the Apostles shall returne unto themselues so oft as it is giuen unto them that are vnworthy to receiue it. So then it is in the power that the ministers haue, as with the husbandman, who albeit he plant and water, yet he must looke for his increase from heauen. This restraint of their power is further confirmed by the charge that God giueth against the teachers: proclaiming life to those to whom death belonged, and contrariwise death to those to whom life appertained. Last of all, Antiquity giueth her voyce vnto it. And first the Councell which affirmeth, that the Ministers cannot loose before God hath loosed, as the Apostles vndid Lazarus, after he had been raised up by our Sauiour Christ. Further, that the Bishops are taunted of Ierom, that through ignorance of the place (I will giue the keyes of heauen) tooke vnto them the arrogancie of the Phariſes, for condemning the innocent, and loosing the guiltie: when as with God is regarded, not the iudgement of the Priest, but the life of the persons that be guiltie. In Augustines tenth Tome, the booke here quoted, affirmeth, that God hauing committed the office of Baptisme to many, reserued to himselfe alone the power, that is, to forgiue sins. And (saith Augustine upon this) that he gaue the Ministery of Baptisme to his seruants, but reserued the power thereof to himselfe: that the Minister exerciseth the right of no power, to wit, in forgiuing of sinnes.

Acts 26. 2 Cor. 10. Mat. 10. 1. Cor. 4 Ier. 23. 17. Tom. 3. Cō. Aquisgra. cap. 37. Hieron. in Math. 16. August. de scala paradisi, Idem in Iob, vsu. 5.

RHEM. 5. [13. Not sacrifice.] These are the words of the Prophet, who spake them euen then when sacrifices were offered by Gods commandement: so that it maketh not against sacrifice, but he saith that sacrifice onely without mercie and charitie, and generally with mortall sin, is not acceptable. The Iewes offered their sacrifices duely, but in the meane time they had no pittie nor mercie on their brethren: that is it which God misliketh. Eternall sacrifice.

CARTVV. 5. [ver. 13. 5]

RHEM. 6. [14. Fast often.] By the often fasting of his Disciples, wee may easily gather that he appointed them a prescript manner of fasting: as it is certaine he taught them a forme of prayer. Luc. 5. and 11. Fasting.

CARTVV. 6. [14 Fast often.] Who taught you this logique? or what knot haue often, and set or prescript fastes one with another, that they must needs either stand or fall together. The contrarie rather is like, That because they were often, therefore they were not prescript nor set: seeing the Lord that in times past prescribed a set fast vnto his people, prescribed it but once a yeare. And it is no lesse ridiculous, that therefore Iohn had prescribed a forme of fast, because hee prescribed a forme of prayer: as if the one could not bee without the other. Considering that our Sauiour Christ, which prescribed a forme of prayer, is neuer to haue done the like in fast. Neither needed hee, seeing the forme thereof is described in the Law: excepting onely the time, which (setting apart one onely day) being left euen under the schoolemaster ship of the Law, unto the Church to appoint, according to the occurrence of the calamities, and other affaires of the Church: ought much more in the time of the Gospell) which is freer from this yoke of obseruance of daies, then that time was) to bee loose from the bond of a prescript time, which reason standeth up likewise against the prescript forme of fasting, imagined to bee giuen of Iohn. Beside that, it is without all controuersie, that Iohn went about to conforme his Disciples, to the Disciples of Christ, and not to traine them up in such exercises (especially corporall) as might (through a difference in their manner of life) make them further of from Christs Disciples. Neither was Iohn so euilll instructed, as to impose upon his Disciples, weaker then our Sauiours Disciples, and not so well taught as his were, a more straighter kinde of discipline, then our Sauiour would lay upon his. Neither was hee ignorant, that his Disciples either were, or ought to haue beene, the friends of the Bridegroome, for whom fasting was not fit during the time of his presence amongst them: Therefore that Iohns Disciples fasted often, that did they not by any prescript of Iohn, but (by all likelyhood) through a disordered zeale, of an unadvised imitation of their Maister: whose whole life being a kinde of fasting, in regard whereof it is said, that hee came neither eating nor drinking: they also thought it good, in some sort to follow him. Luc. 16. 34 Mat. 11.

RHEM. 7. [17. New wine.] But this new wine, he doth plainely heere signifie fasting and the straiter kind of life: by the old bottels, them that cannot away therewith.

CARTVV. 7. [17 New wine.] Heere Christs Disciples, which hee defended against the quarellous charges of the Phariſes, as defectiue in the exercise of fasting, are by this new kinde of Phariſees recharged againe: whilst, as old casque, they accused to bee unpatient of fasting, as it were of new must; Which accusation, is so much the more unworthy by it as is them, whose fast is fulnesse, and whose abstinence is in the use of no delicacies, then are used in many sober feasts, Whereas the meaning of our Sauiour Christ is nothing else then to shew, that the Disciples hauing want of nothing, nor hurt of no man, but for a time easily and demtily entreated of our Sauiour Christ; the fast was not so fit, which is used either upon some calamity, or some speciall thing whereof men haue need, and that there ought to be a certaine conuenience betweene this corporall exercise, and the estate of the persons that use it.

RHEM. 8. [19. Twelue yeeres.] This woman a Gentile had her disease 12 yeares and the gouernours daughter a Iewe (which is heere raised to life) was twelue yeeres old, Luc. 8. Marke then the allegorie hereof in the Iewes and Gentiles. As that woman fell sicke when the wench was borne, so the Gentiles went their waies into idolatrie, when the Iewes in Abraham beleeued. Againe, as Christ heere went to raise the wench, and by the way the woman was first healed, and then the wench reuiued: so Christ came to the Iewes, but the Gentiles beleeued first and were saued, and in the ende the Iewes shall beleeue also. Hierom. in Mat.

CARTVV. 8, [19 Twelue yeares.] It is first false that this woman was a Gentile, neither hauing testimony of truth, nor of Ierome, And might be manifoldly confuted, if it were worth the confutation. Secondly, the Allegorie where a plaine sense is offered, is needlesse, to speake (for Ieromes sake) as mildely as may bee. And if wee well remember by Ieromes own saying, it is all one as to seeke a knot in a rush, or a knob in a steele stone, howsoeuer he say so or no, it is a sense which neuer entred into the Lords heart.

RHEM. 9. [21. Touch onely.] Not onely Christs words, but his garment and touch thereof or any thing to him belonging might doe and did miracles, force proceeding from his holy person to them. Yea this woman returning home * set vp an Image of Christ, for memorie of this benefit & the hem of the same Image did also miracles. This Image Iulia the Apostata threw down, and set vp his own in stead thereof, which was immediatly destroyed by fire from heauen. But the Image of Christ broken in pieces by the heathen, the Christians afterward gathering the pieces together; placed it in the Church where it was (as Sozomenus writeth) vnto his time.

Reliques and Images. Euseb. lib. 7, c. 14. hist.

Lib. 5. c. 20

CARTVV. 9. [21 Touch onely.] The Lord out of all question, useth a marueilous bountifull hand in bestowing his Spirit: for hee poureth it upon all flesh; men and women, old and yong, masters and seruants: But that hee is so prodigall of his blessed Spirit, as to bestow it upon old raggs and cloutes. wee could neuer learne, but of our new maisters, which sit in the chaire of their owne inuentions: And by how much it is an vnspeakeable humility of the Lord to let downe his glorious spirit into so base cottages, as are the bodies and soules of men: by so much more is the pride of these presumptuous spirits that will pull it downe lower; euen to the least ragge wherewith the nakednesse of the godly hath beene couered. Which if it were not to put a new peece into an old garment, I know not what is. Whereof there is no ground, for the text witnesseth precisely that vertue came out of Christ, not out of the garment, And seeing that the faith of this woman drew it, faith being fastned upon Christ and not upon the garment, the vertue must necessarily come from him, and not from it: And this vertue comming from Christ, passed immediately into the body of the woman, and not first into the garment, and then by the garment into her body. For if it had bene in the garment, it would haue had some effect in others that touched it, amongst whom it was likely there were some, that were troubled with that, or the like disease. And although this vertue of healing were in the garment of our Sauiour Christ, which besides the impiety) is too grosse an errour, imagining a passage of the Spirit from one place to another, and from one subiect to another: yet it followeth not, that it is so in other mens garments, especially when they bee dead: much lesse, that the skirt of an image of stone, &c. should haue such a vertue. But what a fabulous story this is, let it be a little considered. Howbeit first of all. let us grant that there was an image of Christ in that Towne, seeing Eusebius affirmeth that hee saw it: But to beleeue that it was erected by that woman, set before her dore, and famous by so great miracles: I thinke if Pythagoras himselfe had said it, yet would not his scholers (which had seruilely apprentised their iudgements unto his sayings) haue beleeued it. For first of all it tendeth to the cracking of the credite of the Euangelists, which make no mention of this miracle, greater (if it were true) then that which they write of: considering that heere the hemme of the image, had power to heale, not one, but all manner of diseases: and not it onely; but the herbe that grew underneath it. Where it is to bee marked, what great force this vertue hath, being (as leauen) hidden in an image, from which it creepeth to the skirt, from the skirt it getteth into the herbe, from the herbe into the bodies of the sicke. Certainely being communicated with the Apostles, whose Ministery the Lord would magnifie aboue all other Ministeries in the world: It had not been so large a spread, as here is imagined, for it neuer passed from them, but by one middle onely between them. and those which were partakers of it: as by handkerchers and partlettes, that being taken from the bodies of the Apostles, and applyed, healed the diseased persons: And that in token of the wonderfull vertue, wherewith from heauen (and not either from the Apostles, or from the handkerchers) the Lord accompanied their Ministery. But heere an image is found, that hath stained it. And when it is said, that it was set up before the womans dores: it seemeth that it was cleane forgotten, that the Iewes could abide no image set up in the worship of God, much lesse the image of our Sauiour, whose own person they did (for the generall state) deadly hate. And if this woman were a Gentile as they falsely say, the likelyhood is as small, that the Gentiles at that time would beare the image of our Sauiour Christ. After it was broken. Heere I looked that that which had healed so many other should heale it selfe. But it may bee that the skirt wherein the chiefe vertue lay was cleane gone: Therefore the Church taketh it to surgerie, and putteth it together: which would haue beene hard for it to haue done, if the barborous heathen had dealt so dispitefully with the dead image of Christ, as you haue done with the liuely images and members of his body. Now hauing recouered it,

Ioel. 2. Acts 2.

they set it in the Church. Belike there was neuer an Epiphanius aliue: for hee would not haue let so much as the image of Christ to haue had any seate there. Erected up in the Church, what doth it: it worketh no more miracles, yet one would thinke that being set in a more honorable place, it would haue beene more fruitfull then it was before. If therefore wee beleeue this story the common streetes are fitter places for images then the Churches. Now out of Eusebius it is to be obserued, that testifying that hee saw this image, testifieth nothing of the truth of the miracles ascribed unto it. Secondly, hee referreth the counsell of making this image, not unto the Scripture, and the custome of the Church, but unto the custome of prophane men. Last of all, there is not a word of any worship done to it: Although it bee reported, to haue beene so famous by miracles, which is the cheife point the Iesuites would insinuate. Rather hee noteth plainely, that it was made and erected for another end: namely, in imitation of the heathen, to declare her affection towards our Sauiour whom shee loued: euen as the heathen haue counterfeits of those persons, whom they had in in price. Yet who can let the Iesuites in their marginall note, to proclaime as it were by sound of Trumpet their own shame: which let the Diuine worship fall lower then the heathen did, that worshipped the creeping beastes, when as the Apostles, which were the noblest temples of the holy Ghost that euer were, and vessels of the greatest receit of his graces, would not suffer themselues by kneeling unto them, to bee worshipped. Acts 10. 14.

RHEM. 10. [28. Doe you beleeue that I can.] Wee see heere that to the corporall healing of these men he requireth onely this faith, that he is able. Which faith is not sufficient to iustifie them. How then doe the Heretickes by this and the like places plead for their onely iustifying faith; See the Annot, Mar. 5.36.

CARTVV. 10. [28. Doe you beleeue that I can] The iustifying faith, whereby alone we are saued: beleeueth stedfastly the promises of God in such sort, as the Lord hath made them, wherefore in things belonging unto euerlasting life; it beleeueth that both God can, and will vndowtedly giue them, But in promises touching this life, (of which sort is this of recouering a lost sight:) it is enough to beleeue, that God can doe it, because hee hath not simplie declared, that he will doe it: but with this condition, if it be for his glorie, and our good, which if the Iesuites had not been ignorant of, they would neuer so sottishlie cauill against the sufficiencie of faith to saluation.

RHEM. 11. [38. Pray therefore.] Therefore doth the Church pray and fast in the Imberdayes, when holy Orders are giuen, that is, when workmen are prepared to be sent into the harueſt. See Act. 13.2, CARTVV. 11. [38. Pray therefore.] Considering the great force that Ministers haue either to edifie and vphold the Church, if they be good, or to pull it up from the foundation, if they be for their gifts unable, it must needs pull all godly hearts vpon their knees, in prayer and fasting before the Lord, for a mercifull direction in that behalfe. Whereunto the consideration both of the Churches estate, by whose hands the Lord putteth on his, and of the parties themselues, that are to be chosen, ought greatly to whet vs. In the Church, and euen the sufficientest Ministers thereof, vpon whose foresight and triall they are recommended vnto that body of the Church, which is desolate of them: there is first a great remnant of ignorance, and of indiscretion, whereby they are not able so fully to see into mens gifts. Secondly, the minde being often lightned, yet the affection blinded with loue, hatred, feare, and such like, leadeth them from that which they haue rightly iudged. In the parties to be chosen there is often so great hypocrisie, as is very hardly discouered. Against all which dangers in the Ministery, the remedy being in the Lords hand, it is very conuenient that the Prayers which are made to obtaine it, should haue this helpe of fast to make it more earnest, and so to speed it before the throne of grace: whereby it is manifest, how fondly you haue appointed your Imber fastes, at certain set seasons in the yeare, as if all the Churches were destitute of Ministers, at those times of the yeare, more then at others: or that as the corporall so the spirituall harueſt, came at a certaine season of the yeare. Whereas our Sauiour Christ affirmeth, that the spirituall harueſt was ripe, when as yet there were foure moneths to the corporall harueſt. The spirituall harueſt therefore being at all seasons of the yeare, it is euident, that the harueſt should at all times of the yeare be sent out to that part of the Lords field that hath want of them. No maruell then, if your fasts being so disordered, you send forth swarmes of locusts, which in stead of inning the Lords corn into the barne of the Church, deuoure it. And as they were begotten by a fat fast, and by the leane prayers of full bellies: so are they of that greedy vnsatiablenesse, that hauing gotten the third part of the land into their hands, they were yet like vnto the leane kine, that were represented to Pharoh in his dream: wch hauing eaten vp the fat kine, yet remained they in as great desire of eating still, as if they had eating nothing at all. Iob. 4. Gen. 41.

Peter* aboue the other Apoſtles is ſo plainly ſignified in this word Firſt, by the iudgement euen of Hereticks, that Beza, notwithſtanding hee confeſſeth the conſent of all copies both Latine and Greeke, yet is not aſhamed to ſay, that he ſuſpecteth that this word was thruſt into the text by ſome fauourer of Peters Primacie. Whereby we haue alſo, that they care no more for the Greeke then for the Latine when it maketh againſt them: but at their pleaſure ſay that all is corrupted.

CARTVV. 2 [2. Firſt Simon.] But that the Popes primacie had taken lodging in your heads before hand; there were many Firſts, in number, in order, in calling, in gifts, that might haue come ſitlier and trulier into your minds, then this Firſt of yours, which deſerueth to be laſt: whereof alſo your ſelues are the firſt interpreters. Whereas Theophilact doth affirme plainly, that he and Andrew are firſt named, becauſe they were firſt called; which although it bee not altogether true, conſidering that Andrew is therefore ioyned next him, becauſe he was coupled with him in the firſt embaſſage, wherein the twelue were ſent out by two and two: yet in that poynt it may be iuſtified, as touching Peter. For although he were not firſt called to be a diſciple of our Sauiour, wherein he was preuented by his brother Andrew: yet was he firſt noted and marked out by a new name for the Miniſtery of the Apoſtleſhip. For to him it was ſaid, that he ſhould be called Cephas, whereby a promiſe was made vnto him of the Miniſtery, before any like promiſe can bee ſhewed to haue been giuen vnto the reſidue. And Cyprian is alſo of this iudgement, that Peter was firſt called, which is the Popes iudgement alſo. Whereof if any will conclude that he had the preheminence of all the reſt, becauſe he was firſt appoynted to the Miniſtery: he may as well ſay, that Paul is inferiour to all the reſt of the Apoſtles, becauſe he was called after them; who proueth himſelfe to be inferiour to none of them in regard of his office of Apoſtleſhip, no not vnto Peter. And Chryſoſtom doth plainly declare, that in this recitall of their names, there was no regard had to their dignitie. And Ambroſe in the place alledged, doth vnderſtand ſuch a Primacie as is without ſuch preheminence, conſidering that he affirmeth that Paul was not inferiour to the Apoſtles before him, whereof Peter was one, which ſhall eaſily appeare by the diſcourſes following, of this queſtion of Peters primacie. Heere onely the Ieſuites ſhameleſſe forehead is to be ſeene, who affirme that M. Beza ſuſpecteth corruption in this place, who onely mouing the queſtion, leaueth it for other to conſider: and yet vttereth his own iudgement tending to the iuſtifying of the reteining of the word Firſt. And to this end, doth not onely retaine his reading, but confirmeth it: alledging the conſent of all copies; and not that onely, but alſo fenceth it againſt the euaſion of the enemy. For where it might be ſuſpected, becauſe his firſt hath neuer a ſecond following to anſwer vnto it, he bringeth two or three places whereby the ſame ſhould not appeare ſtrange.

Which bleſſing muſt needs be of great grace and profit, when none but worthy perſons (as here we read) might take good thereof: and when it is neuer loſt, but returneth to the giuer, when the other partie is not worthy of it. CARTVV. 4. [12. Peace be to this houſe] If all ſhould be Biſhops that giue this Bleſſing, all ſhould be Biſhops, it being the ſame in effect among the Iewes, that is with vs, God bee heere and peace, that is to ſay the common ſalutation that men vſe one to another, as it is to be ſeene by diuers teſtimonies of the Scripture. But awake for ſhame ye Ieſuites, and conſider how euill patrons you be of the Biſhops bleſſing. For if the Biſhops bleſſing bee grounded vpon this commandement, it ſhall agree vnto euery hedge prieſt of the Countrey, conſidering that the ſame commandement is giuen after vnto the 70 diſciples: whom you affirme to repreſent the Prieſts, as the twelue Apoſtles do the Biſhops. And to let paſſe that the Ieſuites vpon a bleſſing offered by the Apoſtles to a priuate houſe, argueth the Biſhops bleſſing to be offered vnto a whole Citie: that may not be omitted of the great weight they aſſigne to be in this bleſſing, for that it cannot bee communicated, but with the worthy, what marchandiſe is ſo vile, that theſe cunning fellowes cannot make their gain of. For if the Biſhops bleſſing had had force to haue done good euen vnto the wicked: then it ſhould in that regard haue been extolled vnto the ſky. Now it helps none but thoſe that are meet to receiue it: this alſo muſt ſerue to garniſh and ſet forth the vertue of it. Howbeit how great weight their bleſſing hath, themſelues haue ſet it down, when they ſay, it taketh away veniall ſinne, you ſay indeed, amongſt other things, but I ſuppoſe your meaning was, to ſet forth the greateſt effect that it had: which is not worth the comming out of a mans doore, when by knock of breaſt within the houſe, the veniall ſins fall ſtarke dead: well fare therefore a faithfull mans bleſſing by prayer, for it obtaineth remiſſion of all manner of ſinnes, and what other good things ſoeuer belong either to this life, or to the life to come, as often as he ſhall from his heart, and aduiſedly deſire peace at the hand of God for his fellow. The true Biſhop or Miniſter, for that he is the Embaſſador of peace, obtaineth it more largely for them eſpecially, to whom their ambaſſage doth pertaine, which is their meaning, that commend the Biſhops bleſſing, either of him alone, or of other godly ioyned with him, as the ſtory teſtifieth, alledged out of Auguſtine: for of the preciſe order of bleſſing vſed by the Popiſh Biſhops, neither he, nor the other haue a word. RHEM. 6. [15 More tolerable.] Heereby it is euident there bee degrees and differences of damnation in Hell fire according to mens deſerts. Aug. lib 4. de Bapt. c. 19.

RHEM. 7. CARTVV. 5. 6. 7. [v. 14. 15. 18. S.]

RHEM. 8 [19 It ſhall bee giuen.] This is verified euen at this preſent alſo, when many good Catholikes that haue no great learning, by their anſweres confound the aduerſaries.

CARTVV. 8. [19 It ſhall bee giuen.] This is true of the profeſſours of the Goſpell, of the which, from him that cleaueth wood, to her that draweth water, euery one haue anſwered unto your ſophiſticall Diuinity, with ſuch dexterity and readineſſe, that they aſtoniſhed you, and euidently ſhewed forth the truth of this and other promiſes, wherein it is ſaid, that (for knowledge) They ſhould all bee as the Lords Prieſts. As for your ſilly ſoules, wherewith I pray you ſhould they confound their aduerſaries, I ſuppoſing in anſwering to all queſtions and arguments wherewith they are urged; that they beleeue as the Church beleeueth, and that the Church beleeueth as they beleeue: for this is the common circle of their diuinity, wherein, in this one thing they are like unto ſheep, that they can ſonnd nothing but, bea, bea.

RHEM. 9. [25 How much more.] No maruaile therefore if heretickes call Chriſts Vicar Anti-chriſt, when their fore-fathers the faithleſſe Iewes called Chriſt himſelfe Beelzebub.

CARTVV. 9. [25 How much more.] That you are the true ſucceſſours of the faithleſſe Iewes, it is euident, Becauſe euen as they fell away from Chriſt, in going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſſe, ſo do you. That mike is not ſo like milke, as the Pope is Antichriſt, ſhall in place appeare.

Confeſſing of Chriſt and his truth. Acts 9.

RHEM. 10. [32 Confeſſe mee.] See how Chriſt eſteemeth the open confeſſing of him, that is, of his truth in the Catholicke Church: for as when Saul perſecuted the Church, hee ſaid * himſelfe was perſecuted: ſo to confeſſe him, and his Church is all one. Contrariwiſe ſee how hee abhorreth them that deny him before men, which is not onely to deny any one little Article of the Catholike faith commended to us by the Church: but alſo to allow or conſent to hereſie by any meanes, as by ſubſcribing, comming to their ſeruice and Sermons, furthering them any way againſt Catholikes, and ſuch like.

CARTVV. 10. [v. 32 S.]

RHEM. 11. [34 Not peace but ſword.] Chriſt came to breake the peace of worldlings and ſinners: as when the ſonne beleeueth in him, and the father doth not: the wife is a Catholicke, and the husband is not. For to agree together in infidelity, hereſie, or any other ſin, is a naughty peace. This being the true meaning of Chriſts words, marke that the heretickes interprete this to maintaine their rebellions and troubles which their new Goſpell breedeth. Beza in no. Teſt. an. 1565.

CARTVV. 11. [34 Not peace but ſword.] It is maruaile that no man putteth a crowne upon your head, for ſo ſharpe and ſo learned an interpretation, as if the ſword and ſeparation, whereof the wicked take occaſion, went no further then to priuate families, or reached not to multitudes, Cities, Common-wealthes and Kingdomes: whereof they might haue read examples in great plenty: For by theſe words, as by an argument of the greater, our Sauiour ſheweth that there is no knot ſo ſtraight, nor ſo faſt, which the wicked upon occaſion of the Goſpell will not breake. And touching the godly defence of themſelues againſt the cruell tiranny of ſuch as would haue made hauocke of them: It hath ſuch proofe, and that by whole bookes written of their lawfull and duriſull defence, that the Ieſuites by theſe clamorous noiſes do but waſte their winde. Although (God bee prayſed) they were neuer yet found amongſt us, which haue drinched their Kings in a cup of deadly poyſon; none that euer poyſoned Emperour in the cup of the Lords Table, none that bound themſelues by oath to kill their Perſecuting Princes, much leſſe their gratious Soueraignes that haue uſed all clemencie to their graceleſſe Subiects, as you haue conſpired againſt yours. Beza hath no word of the maintenance of rebellion againſt Princes.

Ioh. 7. 10. Act. 14. 4. & 23. 7.

RHEM. 11. [37 More then.] No earthly things, nor duty to parents, wife, children, countrey, or to a mans own body and life, can bee any iuſt excuſe why a man ſhould do or feine himſelfe to do or beleeue any thing, againſt Chriſt, or the vnity, and faith of his Church.

[7 Into the desart.] If the Eremites and Anchorites calling, bee such as you pretend, to liue solitarily: they do not dutifully to flocke unto them, by such multitudes, thereby to break of the course of their solitarinesse, whom notwithstanding you commend for so doing, by your quotation, that they did so to Hilarion: But you say they come for prayers and counsels sake, you should haue said for the Preaching and Sacraments sake, which because they are not administred of your Eremites and Anchorites, it is manifest, that they are followers of Iohn, as apes are of men: which expressing the basest things done by them, cannot once turne their hand to that which is of any good account, But why should not hee being but one man, rather go to the citie to see a thousand, then that a thousand should come out of the Citie to see him: For as for Iohns keeping of those places which hee kept, the apparant and manifest reason hath beene shewed to bee such, as you cannot once pretend. This therefore it is, which fasteneth your feete in the wildernesse, that by this wile, you might satisfie your wild and wandring lusts, set upon mens wiues, drawn by this vaine from their husbands bosomes, and vpon mens daughters and maids taken by this meanes from the watchfull ouersight of their mothers and mistresses. Therefore there was no cause why Hilarion should not haue done his miracles in the Citie rather then in the Desart: If hee had beene able as it is said, to haue made barren women fruitfull, he might verily haue done it with more honesty, and greater commendation of the vertue of God working by him, if hee had giuen this vertue of conception, rather before the husband, then in his Cell in the Wildernesse, As for his raising of a mans sonne from the dead, and casting forth of deuils, especially in such ridculous sort, I leaue it to them, that (in matters of faith) keepe open house to beleeue whomsoeuer and whatsoeuer commeth. But this place of Mathew serueth for you better then you are aware of: For our Sau. Christ chasteneth the people heere for that they went out, rather to see Iohn, and to gaze upon him, then to learne that which hee offered to teach them. And therefore this place was fitly chosen of you, to set forth the light and vaine superstition of your Popelings.

Elias. RHEM. 4. [14 Elias.] As Elias shall bee the messenger of Christs latter comming, so was Iohn his messenger and præcursor at his former comming, and therefore is hee called Elias, because of his like office and like spirit. Luk 1. Greg ho. 7 in Euang.

CARTVV. 4. [14 Elias.] This fable of Elias, the Papists do willingly embrace, not onely for that they are delighted with fables, but because it serueth their turne to hide the hornes of Antichrist, whose comming being imagined to bee conioyned with the comming of forged Elias, their hope is, that to those that they can perswade, that Elias is not yet come, they shall make to beleeue that Antichrist is not Antichrist. Wherein obserue how absurdly they speake, for they say, that the Angell describing Iohns office, saith, that hee should go before the Lord in the same spirit that Elias was to come: Whereby they affirme Iohns office which was not known unto his father, to be described by the office which was not to bee executed untill the end of the world: that is to say an unknown thing, by that which was more unknown; and a thing that was to bee done within thirty yeares, by that which was not to bee done untill almost two thousand yeares should bee expired: then which manner of speech, what can bee more unworthy. Whereas the Angell setteth forth the ministery of Iohn, which was to come by the Ministery of Elias which was already done. But of this fable there will be further cause of speech afterward.

RHEM. 5. [18. Eating and drinking.] The wicked quarrellers of the world misconster easily all the acts and liues of good men. If they be great fasters, and austere liuers, they are blasphemed, and counted hypocrites: if they conuerse with other men in ordinary manner, then they bee counted dissolute.

CARTVV. 5. [18. Eating and Drinking.] But your blindnesse and blockishnesse was here more worthy to be noted; which of this place could not see, that there is not so great holines to be set in an austere kinde of life: seeing our Sauiour (infinitely beyond Iohn in holinesse of life) was yet behind him in straightnesse and abstinence of the body: vnlesse you will say, that Iohn was holier then Christ, because he liued a straighter life then Christ did.

Penance. RHEM. 6. [21. Penance in Sackcloth] By this Sackcloth and ashes added here and in other places, we see euidently that penance is not onely leauing of former sinnes, and change or amendment mendment of life past, no nor bare sorrowfulnesse or recounting of our offences already committed, but requireth punishment, and chastisement of our persons by these and such other meanes as the Scriptures do elsewhere set forth: and therefore concerning the word also, it is rather to bee Penance, as in our translation: then (as the aduersaries of purpose auoyding the word) Repentance or Amendment of life: and that according to the very vsuall signification of the * Greeke word in the most ancient Ecclesiasticall Greeke Writers; who for Pœnitentes (which in the Primitiue Church did publick penance) say, οἱ ἐν μετανοίᾳ ὄντες, that is, Men that are doing penance. And concerning that part of penance which is Confession, the Ecclesiasticall history calleth it by the same Greeke word, and the penitents comming to Confession, τὰς μετανοούντας, Sozom. lib. 7. cap. 16. Socrat. lib. 5. cap. 19.

Μετάνοια.

Dionys. Eccles. hier. c. 3. in initio.

CARTVV. 6. [21. Penance in Sackcloth.] The wearing of Sackcloth was an outward signe of the open profession of repentance: whereby was testified that they were unworthy of the ordinary and common apparrell which men couer their nakednesse with. And the ashes vpon the heads, a signe of their vnworthinesse to liue and walke aboue the ground, as men which deserue to be as farre under it as they are aboue it. It is therfore a signe of repentance, and not repentance it selfe, nor a part thereof: and a signe that may be seuered from it. For a man may weare Sackcloth and ashes, and yet not repent: which he could not do if it were repentance. And likewise, he may repent, although he weare neither Sackcloth nor ashes: which were likewise impossible, if repentance were defined by these, or they were parts thereof, which the Euangelist doth manifestly declare; when, by calling it repentance in sackcloth and ashes, hee marketh out a speciall manner of repentance. And this is manifest, in that this manner of repentance is commanded in the Scripture onely in weighty affaires, or in great calamities present, or like to follow. Which manner of repentance, the iustest men that euer were being called thereunto, haue exercised themselues in publickly; Whereof there are as many examples in the Scripture, as there be publick fasts: and priuatly, whereof Iob and Daniel, men renowned in all ages for their godlinesse, are witnesses. Do you not see therefore what a faire hand you haue made, which haue by this meanes brought the iustest men that euer were, and that in the very same time wherein their holinesse remained with them to your penance, whereunto you cast onely either infidels when they turn from their infidelity; or those which hauing been receiued to the faith, after fell into some great crime, which you terme Mortall sinne. This geere is euill matched with your opinion of merits, & workes of supererrogation with the keeping of the whole law, with many other blasphemous opinions: which the pride of your hearts hath deuised against the Lord, and against his annointed. But what if this your diuelliſh Satisfaction hath not been required of either sort of those notable offenders, which either being of the Church, haue fallen into some grieuous crime; or else haue been turned from their infidelity, to the Gospell. Dauid so soone as euer he confessed his adultery and murther, heard forthwith, that the Lord had remoued his sinnes from him; if the Prophet had known of this Popish diuinity, he would not haue been so sudden to haue pronounced forgiuenesse without conditioning with him of some painfull penance and satisfaction. For that which he threatneth after is the Lords chastisement; neither imposed vpon him by any man, nor yet willingly vndertaken of him, but that which he was (willed he nilled he) to vndergoe. And therefore the Papists are too too absurd, which to maintain such a satisfaction as they describe, are faine to fly to those corrections which he (in duty) to his vttermost did hinder, and ought to haue hindered: and which appoint that to be the meanes of satisfaction for Dauids sinne: whereby a greater number, and more horrible sinnes were committed then by Dauids. Finally, such a satisfaction as for the paiment of Dauids debts alone: diuers were cast into greater debt then euer they were able to come out of: for which they lie at this day (by all likelihood) in the prison of euerlasting condemnation, Peters repentance being diligently noted of the Euangelists,, and that especially for the credit of his Ministery, is for his denying and forswearing the Lord, onely reported to haue wept bitterly; but of satisfaction there is not a word. Those which had their hands red in the bloud of our Sauiour Christ, in the very selfe same day wherein they testified their repentance, forthwith were baptised. Now for three thousand men to do satisfaction and the penance that you imagine in one day, which could not be prescribed nor giuen out (especially according to the proportion, and seuerall circumstance of their sinnes) in many dayes: it is a thing impossible. Which notwithstanding in your practise, in secluding from the Lords Table those which are in penance, ought to haue been done or euer the Apostle should haue sealed vp the remission of their sinnes by the sacrament of Baptisme. The wicked Iaylor, which vnto his cruelty against the holy Apostle and his companion, was ready to haue laid violent hands vpon himselfe: immediatly vpon his profession of faith in Iesus Christ, was pronounced saued, and with his whole household baptised. And in stead of that gronings and sighings that the Popish painfull penance would (by some whip or torture) haue wrung forth: there was triumphing in all the house. Let it bee further noted how they proceed in their old way of making a light matter of sinne; which teach hereby, that the most heynous crimes may be done away by such light ceremonies, as are the putting on of a little Sackecloth and ashes, whereby they make vp matters more easily with the immortall and glorious God, then one mortall and miserable man can do with his fellow: contrary to the saying of the Lord by Elie. Albeit if they hold it for so great a part of satisfaction to weare sackcloth: how commeth it that they haue turned the Sackcloth into a faire linnen sheet? If they say to auoyd the ceremony of the law, they haue barred themselues from that defence, by retaining the Ashes, which also is a Iewish ceremony. That which is alledged here out of the Ecclesiasticall Writers, is idlely done. For to proue the naturall signification of the Greeke word, there are brought places wherin there is an apparant Trope, of the adiunct for the subiect: that is, where the signe of repentance is put for repentance. Secondly, in stead of prouing satisfaction for sin, which we defie, they alledge the Churches censures, wherby they made trial of the truth & vnfainednesse of their repentance, which hauing made profession of the Gospell, fell afterward into some open crime, a thing which we do willingly embrace. For although the hand of the elder Churches were herein too heauy vpon them that had fallen, and the word of their discipline out of measure streight, throwing them from the Lords Table sometimes the space of seuen yeares, sometimes thirty yeares, sometimes all the dayes of their life, what tokens of repentance soeuer there appeared in the poore sinners: yet their meaning was not, to make any paiment vnto God: but by long triall to informe themselues of the truth of their repentance. And therefore Eusebius declareth, that euen the heretickes themselues vpon experience of their repentance, were again receiued into the communion of the Church. And if at any time mention be made of Satisfaction, the same is to be vnderstood of the contentment giuen vnto the Church, and not as you would beare men in hand, of satisfaction vnto God for sinnes.

Aug. Enchirid. ad Laurent. cap. 65. Lib. 3. de vita Constant.

RHEM. 7. [25. Little ones.] These litte ones do not signifie here onely the vnlearned, as though Coblers and Weauers and Women, and Girles had this reuelation, and therefore do vnderstand all Scriptures, and are able to expound them: but here are signified the humble, whether they be learned or vnlearned: as when he saith, Vnlesse you become as little ones, you shall not enter into the kingdom of heauen. And so also the greatest Doctors (who as they were most learned, so must humbled themselues to the iudgement of the Catholicke Church) are these little ones: and hereticks, who although vnlearned, yet vaunt their knowledge and their spirit of vnderstanding aboue all ancient Fathers, and the whole Church, cannot be of these little and humble ones.

Mat. 18. 3.

CARTVV. 7. [25. Little ones.] Christ by these little ones vnderstandeth not the Humble: but those which are rude and ignorant, and in respect of many others, babes not able to speake. And this appeareth by the word it selfe; which the Iesuites haue confounded with the word νηπιος 18. Math. or παιδιον that noteth the tender age of a childe: where this word noteth the unability to speake, which is not onely in children, but oftentimes in growne men. This also is confirmed by the words Wise men, which are opposed vnto them, and not proud men. Thirdly, it is euident by the Apostle Paul, who interpreting this place, sheweth what is done in this behalfe for the most part, and not alwayes, that is, The poore receiue the Gospell: and that not many of the wise, and noble men of the world, are receiued to an effectuall profession: as those which (for the most part) place their felicity in themselues, and in the good gifts which they haue receiued: whereby it appeareth, that keeping the true signification of this word, properly signifying those which are rude and ignorant: yet are not therefore the learned and wise shut out from the knowledge of the truth. Whereas the Iesuites interpretation standing, which interpret Wise men, proud men: the sence must be (according to the rest of the words of the Apostle) that many of the humble shall be saued, but not all, and many of the proud shall be condemned, but not all.

Math. 14. 1. Cor. 1. 27 28.

RHEM. 8. [30. Yoke sweet] What is this light burden, and sweet yoke, but his Commandements, of which S. Iohn saith, 1. Epi. 5. His commandements are not heauy? cleane contrary to the aduersaries, that say, they are vnpossible to be kept.

The cõmandements possible. 1. Ioh. 3. 1. Reg. 8. 1. Ioh. 1. 8. 10.

CARTVV. 8. [30. My yoke is sweet.] If sin be the breach of the Law. 1. Ioh. 3. and there be no man but sinneth, 1. Reg. 8. then euery man breaketh the Law. Now to breake the Law, and to fulfill it, will not stand together. The forme of prayer prescribed of Christ, wherein we craue daily remission of sinnes, proueth this. It is further euident by the diseases and death whereunto all men are subiect, in the greatest flower of their righteousnesse: which notwithstanding could no more lay hold of vs without sin and transgression of the Law either imputed or inherent, then if we were immortall. Finally, this is euident by manifest testimonies of the word, whereby the Law is declared impossible to be kept by us. Hereupon the Commandements are called an heauy and insupportable burthen: so far forth as the measure of our shoulders is considered to beare the weight of them. Howbeit the same burthen through faith is made light. First of all, in that by it, we being united vnto Christ, our Burden is become his, who from vs hath taken it vnto himselfe, to beare it in his own body. Secondly, for that through faith we receiuing the Spirit of Christ, touching that part wherein we are regenerate, take delight in doing the Law of God in part, which before we vtterly abhorred. And in both these respects faith is said to establish the Law, and to procure (through Christ) an obedience thereunto, which without him could neuer haue been performed. Last of all, this is euident upon the place it selfe, where the lightnesse of the burthen, and easinesse of the yoke is assigned to consist in our comming unto Christ; which comming vnto him is nothing else then beleeuing in him, as he doth himselfe in another place manifestly interpret it. I am the bread of life (saith he) and he that commeth to me shall not hunger, and he that beleeueth in me shall not thirst. And there Iohn affirming, as our Sauiour Christ doth, that the Commandements are not heauy, giueth this for the reason thereof: for that by faith we ouercome the world: that is to say, all aduersary power in the world, that standeth vp against our saluation. I omit here, that Bernard expoundeth this yoke of benefits: Bede of the Gospell: and that Ierom vpon this place, affirmeth that the Law cannot be fulfilled; where the Iesuites are utterly without authority to helpe them in this exposition.

CHAP. XII.

The blindnes of the Phariſees about the Sabboth he reproueth by Scriptures, by reaſon, and by myracle. 14 and his death being therefore ſought by them, he meekely goeth out of the way, according as Eſay had prophecied of him. 22 His caſting out of deuils alſo he defendeth againſt them. 31. and ſetteth foorth the danger they ſtand in for their horrible blaſphemie. 38. And becauſe they aſke yet for a ſigne, he ſheweth how worthely they ſhall be damned, 43. foretelling how the deuill ſhall poſſeſſe their Nation, 46. and teſtifying that although he be of their blood, yet not they for this; but ſuch as keep his commandement are deere vnto him.

At

Mar. 2. 23. Luke 6. 1. AT that time *IESVS went through the corne on the Sabboth: & his disciples being hungry, began to plucke the eares, and to eate.

2 And the Pharisees seeing them, said to him. Loe, thy Disciples do that which is not lawfull for them to do on the Sabboth-daies.

1. Reg. 21. 4 3 But hee said to them: Haue you not read what *Dauid did when hee was an hungred, and they that were with him:

4 How he entred into the house of God, and did eate the loaues of proposition which it was not lawfull for him to eate, Lev. 24. 9. Num. 28. 9 nor for them that were with him, *but for Priests onely?

5 Or haue yee not read in the *Law, that on Sabboth-dayes the priestes in the temple do breake the Sabboth, & are without blame?

6 But I tell you that there is heere a greater then the temple.

Ose. 6. 6 † See the annotation chap 9. 13. 7 And if you did know what it is, I will mercie, and not †sacrifice: you would neuer haue condemned the innocents.

8 For the Sonne of man is Lord of the Sabboth also.

9 And when he had passed from thence, he came into their Synagogue.

Mark. 3. 1 Luk. 6. 6. 10 And *behold there was a man which had a whithered hand, and they asked him saying, whether is it lawfull to cure on the Sabboths? that they might accuse him.

11 But he said to them, what man shall there be of you, that shall haue one sheepe: and if the same fall into a ditch on the Sabboths, will he not take hold & lift it vp?

12 How much better is a man more then a sheepe? therefore it is lawfull on the Sabboths to do a good deed.

13 Then hee saith to the man, Stretch forth thy hand, and he stretched it forth, and it was restored to health euen as the other.

14 And the Pharisees going forth made a consultation against him, how they might destroy him.

15 But IESVS knowing it, retired from thence, and many followed him, and he cured them all.

16 And hee charged them that they should not disclose him.

17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esay the Prophet, saying.

Esay 42. 1. 18 Behold my seruant whom I haue chosen, my beloued in whom my soule hath well liked. I will put my Spirit vpon him, and iudgement to the Gentiles shall be shew.

19 He shall not contend, nor crie out neither shall any man heare in the streets his voice.

20 The reed bruised he shall not breake, and smoking flaxe he shall not extinguish till he cast forth iudgment vnto victorie.

21 And in his name the Gentiles shall hope.

22 Then *was offred to him one possessed with a deuill, blinde and dumbe: and he cured him, so that he spake and saw. Luke 11. 14 Luke 3. 32.

23 And all the multitudes were amased, and said, whether this be the Son of Dauid?

24 But the Pharisees, hearing it, said, This fellow casteth not out deuils, but ‖ in Beelzebub the Prince of the deuils.

25 And IESVS knowing their cogitations, said to them. Euery kingdom † diuided against it selfe shall be made desolate: and euery citty or house diuided against it selfe, shall not stand, † Therefore the kingdom of heretickes cannot possibly stand, because it is alwayes full of diuision and dissention.

26 And if Satan cast out Satan, he is diuided against himselfe, how then shall his kingdome stand?

27 And if I in Beelzebub cast out deuils: your children in whom doe they cast out? Therefore they shal be your iudges 28 But if I in the Spirit of God do cast out deuils, then is the kingdom of God come vpon you.

29 Or how can a man enter into the house of the strong, & rifle his vessell, vnlesse he first bind the strong, & then hee wil rifle his house.

30 He that is ‖ not with me, is against me: & he that ‖ gathereth not with me, scattereth.

31 Therefore I say to you, euery sinne and blasphemy shall be forgiuen men, but ‖ the blasphemy of the Spirit shall not be forgiuen.

32 And whosoeuer shall speake a word against the Sonne of man, it shall be forgiuen him: but he that shall speake against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiuen him neither in this world, nor in the world to come.

33 Either ‡ make the tree good, and his fruit good: or make the tree euill, and his fruit euill, for of the fruit the tree is known.

34 You vipers broods, how can you speake good things, whereas you are euill? for of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

35 A good man out of a good treasure bringeth forth good things: and an euill man out of an euill treasure bringeth forth euill things.

36 But I say vnto you, that euery ‖ idle word that men shall speake, thy shall render an account for it in the day of iudgement.

37 For of thy words thou shalt be iustified, & of thy words thou shal be condemned.

38 Then answered him certeine of the Scribes and Pharisees, saying, Master, wee would see a signe from thee.

The Gospell vpon Wednesday the first weeke in Lent.

39 VVho answered and said to them, The wicked and aduouterous generation seeketh a signe, and a signe shall not be giuen it, but the signe of Ionas the Prophet.

Ionas 2. 2. 40 For *as Ionas was in the whales bel-lle three dayes and three nights: so shall the Son of man be in the heart of the earth three dayes and three nights.

41 The men of Niniuee shall rise in the iudgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because * they did penance at the preaching of Ionas. And behold more then Ionas here.

Ion. 3. 5.

42 The * Queene of the South shall rise in the iudgment with this generation and shall condemne it: because she came from the ends of the earth to heare the wisedome of Salomon, and behold more then Salomon here.

3. Reg. 10. 1.

43 And * when an vncleane spirit shall goe out of a man, he walketh thorow drie places, seeking rest, and findeth not:

Luk. 11. 24

44 Then he sayth, I will returne into my house whence I came out, And comming he findeth it vacant, swept with besoms, and trimmed.

45 Then goeth he, and taketh with him seuen other spirits more wicked then himselfe, and they enter in and dwell there: and * the last of that man be made worse then the first. So shall it be also to this wicked generation,

2. Pet. 2. 20

46 As he was yet speaking to the multitudes, * behold his mother & his brethren stood without, seeking to speake to him.

The Gospell upon the day of the seuen brethren, &c. Iulij 10. Mar. 3. 31. Luk. 8. 20.

47 And one said vnto him, Beholde thy mother and thy brethren stand without, seeking thee.

48 But he answering him that told him, said, VVho is my mother, and who are my brethren.

49 And stretching, foorth his hand vpon his disciples, he sayd, Behold my mother and my brethren.

50 For whosoeuer shall do the will of my Father which is in heauen, he is my brother, and sister, and mother. ☞

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [33 Make the tree good.] It is a mans own free will and election, to be a good tree or an euill tree: to bring forth good fruite or bad. S. Augustine upon this place, lib. 2. cap. 4. de actis cum Felic. Manichæo.

CARTVV. 1. [33. Make the tree good.] Our Sauiour Christ that hee might wipe away the blasphemy wherewith the Pharisees went about to charge him, declareth that his miracles, as the fruits, being euen by their iudgement unreproueable; himselfe as the Tree ought not to bee condemned: and therefore that they should iustifie him, with his miracles or condemne him and them together. And this being the true meaning of the place, all men may see that it maketh as much for Free-will, as to proue that a man hath wings. And as this place proueth it nothing, so the next sentence doth quite ouerturne it: wherein it is said, that those which are naught cannot speake the things that are good: yea euen this very verse it selfe, which is alledged, proueth that wee haue no freedome to do that which is good: considering that by nature wee are all corrupt and naughty trees. As for Augustine, the aduersaries with whom hee disputeth, declare sufficiently that his meaning is, to shew what liberty men should haue had, if they had stood in their innocency: contrary to the Manichees, which affirme that the euill which is in man came by tradition: And Augustine himselfe doth expressely shew, that hee will haue all such places of his so understood: For otherwise hee teacheth that they are very vaine, and talke vainely, which say, that thou maist make thy self good, if thou wilt: And that it is the good God that maketh good men of euill, whereas man of his own will cannot heale himselfe.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XII.

RHEM. 2. [24 In Beelzebub.] The like blasphemy against the holy Ghost is, to attribute the miracles done by Saints, either dead aliue, to the deuill.

CARTVV. 2. [24 In Beelzebub.] Although they were true miracles, as they haue bene shewed (in double respect) to bee false, yet should it not follow that hee that speaketh against them should forthwith bee amongst them that sinne against the holy Ghost, but it is your custome to write your gainefull lawes with the bloud of mens soules: For this plot of feined miracles, thtough the dotage of ignorant people, hath bene of great reuenue unto you. And your own Pope Pius Secundus, affirmeth that the Christian faith, although it haue no approbation of miracles ought to bee receiued for the good conuersation thereof.

Platin. cap. Pius secundus.

Neuters in Religion.

RHEM. 3. [30 Not with mee.] They that are indifferent to all Religions, commonly and fitly called Neuters, ioyning themselues to neither part, let them marke these words well, and they shall see, that Christ accounted all them to bee against him and his Church, that are not plainely and flatly with him.

CARTVV. 3. [v. 30. S.]

RHEM. 4. [30. Gathereth not with mee.] Hee speaketh not onely of his own person, but of all to whom hee hath committed the gouernement of the Church, and especially of the chiefe Pastors succeeding Peter in the gouernment of the whole. As S. Hierom writing to Damasus Pope of Rome, applyeth these words unto him, saying of all heretickes: Hee that gathereth not with thee, scattereth: that is to say, hee that is not with Christ is with Antichrist.

Epi. 50.

CARTVV. 4. [30 Gathereth not with mee.] Hee wrote so unto Damasus, as hee might haue done unto any good and Catholicke Bishop, furthering the cause of the Gospell: but hee would not so haue written to Libertine Bishop of Rome, who was an Arrian heretick.

Hierom. in catal. script. Illustr. in fortunatianus.

RHEM. 5. [31 The blasphemy of the Spirit.] Hee meaneth not that there is any sinne so great, which God will not forgiue, or whereof a man may not repent in this life, as some heretickes at this day affirme: but that some heinous sinnes (as namely this blasphemy of the Iewes against the euident workes of the holy Ghost, and likewise Arch-heretickes, who wilfully resist the the known truth and workes of the holy Ghost in Gods Church) are hardly forgiuen, and seldome haue such men grace to repent. Otherwise among all the sinnes against the Holy Ghost (which are commonly reckoned sixe) one onely shall neuer bee forgiuen, that is, dying without repentance wilfully, called Finall Impenitence, which sinne hee committeth that dieth with contempt of the Sacrament of Penance, obstinately refusing absolution, by the Churches Ministery? As S. Augustine plainely declareth by these words: Whosoeuer hee bee that beleeueth not mans sins to bee remitted in Gods Church, and therefore despiseth the bountifulnesse of God in so mighty a work, if he in that obstinate minde continue till his liues end, hee is guilty of sin against the holy Ghost. In which holy Ghost Christ remitteth sinnes. Enchir. 83. Ep. 50. in fine. Final impenitence. Remission of sinnes in the Church.

CAR. VV. 5. [31 The blasphemy of the Spirit.] Blasphemy against the Spirit is when a man doth maliciously and proudly reuile and despite the truth of the Gospell, and word of God which hee certainely knoweth. It is called the blasphemy against the Spirit, because it is against the knowledge, wherewith a man is lightned by the Spirit of God. And therefore Paul holdeth himselfe notwithstanding his blasphemy within the compasse of pardon; for that hee did it of ignorance, whereupon Peter is bold by preaching to offer grace unto those that crucified Christ, because they did it of ignorance. Whereby hee declareth that if there were any that did willingly and wittingly crucifie Christ the Sonne of God, that to them the comfort of this Preaching did not belong. Hereof is it, that our Sauiour Christ praying his heauenly Father for those which had so villanously handled him, addeth this, that they knew not what they did: giuing thereby to understand, that hee would not haue prayed for them, if with knowledge they had so despited him. This sinne our Sauiour Christ affirmeth to bee such as cannot bee forgiuen, and that with so great vehemency, as it is meruaile that there is a mouth to open against it: for to be sure to shut him forth from remission, hee vseth this distribution, that it shall bee forgiuen neither in this world, nor the world to come: For which Marke hath two most plaine speeches, that hee shall neuer bee forgiuen; and, that hee shall bee guiltie of euerlasting iudgement: or, as the old Translator, Cyprian, and one Greeke copie, reades of an euerlasting sinne. Which place when the Iesuites could by no meanes depraue, they haue passed ouer in silence. Now if they or any other will expound cannot bee forgiuen, by can bee forgiuen; Neither in this world, nor in the world to come, by both in this world, and in the world to come; Neuer, by one day; euerlasting, by that which remaineth not alwaies. And if such licentious interpretations may bee receiued, there will bee no euidence of words whereby the truth shall be able to bee maintained against heresie and untruth. Howbeit the Scripture doth ouer and aboue this most cleare and shining light of wordes, furnish us with arguments of diuers sorts, as of the causes or meanes of remission of sinnes, which it remouing from those which sinne in this kind, it must needs follow, that it striketh them from all hope of obtaining forgiuenesse of sinnes; for there being a sinne, for the committers whereof it is not lawfull to pray, it must needs follow, that there is also a sinne which cannot bee forgiuen. Moreouer the Churches censure, whereby it accurseth some, euen untill the Lords comming doth euidently declare, that there is a sin which cannot be forgiuen. Howbeit this light of the truth the Iesuits think to darken with one cloud of Augustines iudgement: so that there is no wall can bee made so high, either with reasons or testimonies out of the word, which these men (vnskilfull in the Lords words) thinke not to skale with the iudgement of an ancient writer. But let vs examine it. They say that this sinne is finall vnrepentance. Tell me, how can that be? When Marke doth precisely affirme, that the sinne of the Pharisees was not (as you say) finall vnrepentance, but that they had said of our Sauiour Christ, that he had an vncleane spirit. I say, that they had said, not that they should say. For that they had already done, not for that they were to do hereafter: for although all other their sinnes, that both went before and followed after, were by reason of this one sin vnpardonable: yet they were not therefore sinnes against the holy Ghost. Againe, our Sauiour Christ going about here to put a difference between the sin against the sonne of man, and against the holy Ghost by the punishment of them both: if the blasphemie of the Spirit be done away by finall repentance, it must needs follow, that the blasphemy against the sonne of man may be done away without finall repentance. Last of all, by this description of yours touching this sinne against the spirit, it must needs be, that this kinde of sinnes may fall into the Turkes, Iewes, and other Infidels, which is absurd. And if the Iesuites would leane here altogether vpon the staffe of Antiquity, why do they not rather vpon Hillar., and vpon Ierom, which plainly affirme, that it shall not bee forgiuen: vpon Chrysostom, who affirmeth that the blasphemy against the Spirit shall not be forgiuen unto them that repent it: meaning for that they cannot repent it as they ought: vpon Beda, which hath the like saying to Chrysostom. But here Augustine pleaseth them, although hee walke alone. I know not for what cause, vnlesse it be that he went furthest from the words and sence of the Scripture: for otherwise they professe in a dissent to follow the greatest part. Their owne glosse also, which Denis the Monke, and Zigerus the Frier, are flat against their exposition: The Frier protesting, that he cannot in any sort allow the interpretation of Augustine vpon this place. Yea, what if their Pope, whom they are sworn to flatter, and to say yea to his yea, and nay to his nay, expound it against them. Let them looke Sixtus, who affirmeth, that those which accuse the Pope, do sinne against the holy Ghost, and shall neuer be forgiuen. As for the sixe kinds of sins against the holy Ghost, they are vnworthy the speaking to: seeing the interpretation falling, whereupon they are gathered, they also must needs go to the ground with it. Looke more of this after. And where vnder the colour of Augustines testimony, they would father their Sacraments of penance, auricular Confession, and satisfaction by workes, the reader is to know, that this language is barbarous to Augustine, as that he vnderstood not.

RHEM. 6. [32. Son of Man.] The Iewes in their words sinned against the Son of man, when they reprehended those things which he did as a man, to wit, calling him a glutton, a great drinker of wine, a friend of the Publicanes, and taking offence because hee kept company with sinners ners, brake the Sabboth, and ſuch like: and this ſinne might more eaſily be forgiuen, becauſe they iudged of him as they would haue done of any other man: but they ſinned and blaſphemed againſt the holy Ghoſt, (called here the finger of God whereby hee wrought miracles) when of malice they attributed the euident workes of God in caſting out Diuels, to the Diuell himſelfe: and this ſin ſhall not be remitted, becauſe it ſhall hardly be remitted, as wee ſee by the plague of their poſterity vntill this day.

CARTVV. 6. [32. Sonne of Man.] If it bee therefore called the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, for that it is done againſt the knowledge which the Holy Ghoſt hath lighned a man with, then this note cannot ſtand. And Iulian hath been eſteemed by the Church then to haue blaſphemed againſt the Spirit, when he malitiouſly, contrary to that which he had learned, taunted our Sauiour Chriſt by his Countrey, calling him Galilean: and by his parents, calling him the Carpenters Sonne, albeit in neither of them he touched his Diuinity.

Purgatory. RHEM. 7. [32. Nor in the world to come.] S. Auguſtine and other holy Doctors gather hereupon, that ſome ſins may be remitted in the next life, and conſequently proue Purgatory thereby. De ciuit. Dei. lib. 21. c. 13. D. Greg. Dial. l. 4. c. 39.

2. Cor. 5. CARTVV. 7. [32. In the world to come.] Euery one ſhall receiue according to that hee hath done in this body. All thoſe that beleeue euen to the very greateſt malefactors, which forſake not their wickednes vntill they forſake their life: ſee not death, paſſe from death to life, are bleſſed, out of hand reſt from their labours. On the contrary part, all that doe not beleeue, are not already condemned. In the old Teſtament by the Law of Moſes, there were no ſacrifices inſtituted for the dead; and in the new no prayers commanded for them; we are therefore bidden to worke while we haue time, becauſe after this life (as in the night) we cannot worke, nor conſequently receiue any comfort which the Lord hath promiſed thereunto. And finally, ſeeing euery page of the Scripture almoſt, carrieth Ordinance and Artillery with it to beat down this bulwarke of Purgatory, ſet vp for defence of the Popes Kitchin: it might ſeeme ſtrange (but that the belly hath no eares) that the Papiſts with ſo ſmall helpe of Antiquity, will ſtand before ſuch a power of the Lords Armie: And how poore they are in this cauſe, this place (which they take for their braſen wall, and Iron pilllar) will declare. Wherein it muſt be firſt obſerued, that ſinnes are ſaid to be remitted in the world to come, by a Trope of Metonimie, wherein the effect is put for the cauſe: namely, for that the chiefe fruit of the remiſſion of our ſinnes, is not receiued, but in the world to come: in which reſpect the laſt day is called the day of our Redemption, becauſe then we receiue the full harueſt of our redemption, whereof in this life we receiued but the firſt fruits. So doth Paul pray that the houſe of Oneſiphorus may finde mercy in that generall day of iudgement; which is not to teach, that then he ſhould begin to taſte of Gods mercies, but that he might enioy the effects of Gods mercy to the full. And I do not thinke that the Ieſuites dare ſay that Oneſiphorus whom the Apoſtle ſo greatly commendeth, was a Purgatorie knight. Neither is this of hauing forgiueneſſe of ſinnes in the world to come, proper to certain ſins, but common to as many as get any pardon. And ſo on the contrary ſide, not to bee forgiuen in the world to come, is not proper to one kind of ſinne, but to all that are not pardoned. For this ſpeech of forgiuing, or not forgiuing, neither in this world, nor in the world to come: is like that of looſing and binding in earth and in heauen: for not forgiuing is nothing elſe but binding, as this world and the world to come, anſwer to earth and heauen: As therefore whatſoeuer is bound in earth is alſo bound in heauen: ſo whatſoeuer ſinne is not forgiuen in this world, ſhall not bee forgiuen in the world to come. And when all men do ſee that our Sauiour Chriſts ſpeech heere, doth (in the vehemency of his Spirit) grow rather and riſe vp higher; by the Ieſuites interpretation, which make the ſmaller ſinnes remiſſible in the world to come it falleth downe lower. For it were all one as to ſay, you ſhall bee puniſhed with euerlaſting fire, and ſhall not finde that grace that leſſer ſinners do: which might as well haue beene ſaid of diuers other ſinners, that ſinne not in this kinde of ſinne, againſt the holy Ghoſt. But what need many wordes; when Mark deliuereth us out of all doubt in this point, who according to his manner, griping in fewer words that which Matthew uttereth in more; for not forgiuing in this world, or the world to come, giueth the ſame weight, ſaying, that it ſhall neuer bee forgiuen. And that there are no ſinnes forgiuen in the world to come, it appeareth further by the Prophet, which deſcribing a ſinne that ſhall neuer bee forgiuen, affirmeth that it ſhall not bee forgiuen vnto death. Whereunto agreeth that of our Sauiour Chriſt, who denouncing certaine deſtruction vnto the Phariſees, ſaith; that they ſhall die in their ſinnes.

Touching Auguſtine in this queſtion, hee is no where: for diuers times, and euen in the ſame booke from whence you haue drawn this iudgement. hee [a] doubteth whether there bee any Purgatory or no: And euen in this place cited by you, granting a temporall puniſhment after this life; hee flatly denyeth that ſinnes can bee purged by ſuffering any puniſhment after this. And in diuers others, making no meane time or place [b] betweene this life of labour, and the other of reward, either of eternall life, or of euerlaſting damnation: the foundation of Purgatory hee doth vtterly ouerthrow. It appeareth therefore, that the Ieſuites were very hungry that would haue ſo faine ſwallowed this morſell, which Auguſtine himſelfe doth ſo manifoldly take from them. Beſides that they deale falſely, in ſaying that Auguſtine vpon this place of the Goſpell gathereth Purgatorie, there being no mention of this place, in the place they haue quoted: Neither was Gregory, which came ſo long after, to bee alledged in this cauſe: ſeeing that in ſome hundred yeares (in which time this cankre had ſpead it ſelfe further) it appeareth by a Councell holden after Gregories time, that this corruption was not ſo generall: wherein mention being made of the diuers waies whereby ſinne is puniſhed, it affirmeth that there is but one puniſſiment in the world to come, when the Iudge ſhall ſay, Goe yee curſed, &c. And why father followed they not heere the expoſition of Athanaſius, Hilarie, Ierome, Theophilact, which haue not a word of Purgatory in expounding this place; which alſo is cleane ouerthrown of Chryſoſtom, that diuiding the puniſhed after after this life, maketh no mention of such as are punished by purgatorie.

RHEM. [36 Idle word.] If of euery idle word wee must make account before God in iudgement, and yet shall not for euery such word bee damned euerlastingly, then there must needs bee some temporall punishment in the next life.

CARTVV. [36 Idle Word.] Thou must (good Reader) imagine heere that thou heerest not men speak but belly; which haue purposed to defend this plat of purgatory, that is gainefull unto them, whatsoeuer become of the iustice of God: And remember the wholesome words of the Apostle, where making mention of foolish and vaine talkers, hee warneth thee, that thou suffer not thy selfe to bee deceiued by their vaine speeches, which make a light matter of them: For this is of that sort of men, if any else. And hee addeth, that for such foolish and idle talke, the wrath of God commeth upon unbeleeuers. For as the most grieuous sinnes cannot hurt the faithfull, which repent them: so the smallest sinnes doe vtterly condemne the unbeleeuers. And euen these slippes and faultes of the tongue are said to proceed from hell, whilst the tongue that vttereth them, is set on fire from thence, whether it is meete they should returne. And Paul compareth all the euill fruites of the tongue, with the poyson of Aspes: The punishment is appointed by Salomon to bee death, not of the body, as the Iesuites themselues confesse, which stretch out the punishment beyond this life: wherefore it is death euerlasting, which may also bee confirmed by this place. For as our Sauiour Christ had before declared, that the condemnation of these blasphemous Pharisees, was certaine and unreuocable: so heere hee declareth what a heauy and horrible condemnation cleaueth unto them by a comparison of the lesse. For if hee shall bee damned in hell fire (without repentance) which speaketh but an idle word, although ignorantly and unaware. How farre greater shall his condemnation be, which speaketh blasphemous words, and that wittingly and with deliberation. Augustine also somewhere citing this place, affirmeth, that wee shall giue an account of our idle words unto God: not (as you suppose) before the day of iudgement, But in the day of iudgement: And, that there is none into whom this sentence would not strike a horrour. But heere the Iesuites forget themselues, which say, that veniall sinnes are taken away by the Bishops blessing: And if there bee so easie remedies for them, as you and your fellowes tell us: what need you make so great a fire, to purge them, as (endurance excepted) differeth not from hel-fire. And as it is false, that idle wordes are not to be punished with hell fire; so hath it no consequence which you conclude thereupon, that therefore they must bee purged in the life to come: For why may they not bee purged by afflictions in this life? know you not your own voyces, that Dauids sinnes, pronounced to bee forgiuen by the Prophet Nathan, were satisfied by the punishments that fell upon him for them? And if satisfaction may be made for so hainous crimes as are murder and adultery, by afflictions in this life: how much more by your doctrine, may there amends bee made for idle wordes?

CHAP. XIII.

Speaking in parables (as the Scripture foretold of him, and as meet was for the reprobate Iewes: He sheweth by the parable of the Sower, that in the labour of the Church, three parts or foure do perish through the fault of the hearers. 24. And yet by the parable of good seed and cockle (and also of the Net) that his seruants must not for all that, neuer while the world lasteth, make any schisme or separation. 31. And by parables of the little mustard seed and leauen that notwithstanding the three parts perishing, and ouersowing of cockles, yet that fourth part of the good seed shall spread ouer the whole world. 44 And withall what a treasure and pearle it is. 53 After all which, yet his own country will not honour him.

THE same day IESVS going out of the house, sate by the sea side.

2 And * great multitudes were gathered together vnto him, in so much that he went vp into a boat and sate: and all the multitude stood in the shore. Mar. 4. 1. Luk. 8. 4.

3 And he spake to them many things in parables, saying, Behold the sower went forth to sow.

4 And whiles he soweth, some fell by the way side, and the fowles of the aire did come and eat it.

5 Othersome fell also vpon rockie places, where they had not much earth: and they shot vp incontinent, because they had no deepenesse of earth.

6 And afterward the sun was vp they parched: & because thy had not root, they withered.

7 And other fell among thornes and the thornes grew and choked them.

8 And othersome fell vpon good ground & they yeelded fruit, the | one an hundred fold, the other threescore, and another thirty.

9 He that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

10 And his Disciples came & said to him. VVhy speakest thou to them in parables?

11 VVho answered and said vnto them, Because | to you it is giuen to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heauen: but to them it is not giuen.

12 For he that hath, to him shall be giuen, and he shall abound: but he that hath not, from him shall be taken away that also which he hath.

13 Therefore in parables I speake to

†When Gods word is preached, they properly haue eares to heare that haue hearts to obey: and they hearing do not heare, which heare by sence of their body, and obey not by consent of their hearts. Aug. de bono perseu. c. 14. Luk. 10. 23 them: because seeing they see not, & †hearing they heare not, neither do they vnderstand:

14 And the prophesie of Esay is fulfilled in them, which saith, VVith hearing shall you heare, and you shall not vnderstand: and seeing shall you see, and you shall not see.

15 For the hart of this people is waxed grosse, and vvith their eares they haue heauily heard, and their eyes ‖ they haue shut: lest at any time they may see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstand vvith their harts, and be conuerted, and I may heale them.

17 But blessed are your eyes, because they do see, and your eares because they do heare.

17 For amen I say to you, that * many Prophets and iust men haue desired to see the things that you see, and haue not seen them: and to heare the things that you heare, and haue not heard them.

18 Heare you therfore the parable of the sower.

19 Euery one that heareth the word of the kingdom ‖ and vnderstandeth not, there commeth the wicked one, & catcheth away that which was sowen in his heart: this is he that was sowen by the way side.

20 And hee that was sown vpon rockie places: this is he that heareth the word, & incontinent receiueth it with ioy, 21 Yet hath he not root in himselfe, but is for a time: and when there falleth tribulation and persecution for the word, he is by and by scandelized.

22 And hee that was sowen among thornes, this he that heareth the word, & the carefulnesse of this world, and the deceitfulnesse ofriches choketh vp the word, and he becommeth fruitlesse.

23 But he that was sowen vpon good ground: this is he that heareth the word, and vnderstandeth, and bringeth fruit, and yeeldeth some an hundred-fold: and another threescore, and another thirtie.

The Gospell vpon the fift Sunday after the Epiphany

24 Another parable he proposed to them, saying, The kingdom of heauen is resembled to a man that sowed good seed in his field.

25 But when men were a sleep, his enemy came and ouersowed cockle among the wheat, and went his way.

26 And when the blade was shot vp, & had brought foorth fruit, then appeared also the cockle.

27 And the seruants of the goodman of the house comming said to him, Sir, didst thou not sow good seed in thy field? whence then hath it cockle?

28 And he said to them, The enemy man hath done this. And the seruants said to him, VVilt thou wee goe and gathered it vp?

29 And he said, No: ‖ lest perhaps gathering vp the cockle, you may root vp the wheat also together with it.

30 Suffer both to grow vntill the harueſt, and in the time of harueſt I will say to the reapers, Gather vp first the cockle, and binde it into bundles to burne, but the wheat gather ye into my barne.

31 Another parable he proposed vnto them, saying, * The kingdom of heauen is like to a mustard seed, which a man tooke and sowed in his field.

The Gospell vpon the first Sunday after the Epiphany Mark. 4. 30 Luke 13, 18

32 VVhich is the ‖ least surely of al seeds: but when it is growen, it is greater then all herbs, and is made a tree, so that the fowles of the aire come, and dwell in the branches thereof.

33 And other parable he spake to them, The kingdome of heauen is like to leauen, which a woman tooke and hid in three measures of meale, vntill the whole was leauened.

34 All these things IESVS spake in parables to the multitudes, and without parables he did not speake to them:

35 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophet saying, I will, open my mouth in parables, I vvill vtter things hidden frō the foundation of the vvorld. Psal. 77. 2.

36 Then hauing dimissed the multitudes: he came into the house, and his Disciples came vnto him, saying, Expound vs the parable of the cockle of the field.

37 VVho made answer & said to them, He that soweth good seed, is the Sonne of man.

38 And the field, is the world. And the good seed? these are the children of the kingdome. And the cokle are the children of the wicked one.

39 And the enemy that sowed them, is the †deuill. But the harueſt, is the end of world. And the reapers, are the Angels.

* Not God then, but the Diuell is the author of all euill.

40 Euen as cockle therefore is gathered vp, and burnt with fire: so shall it be in the end of the world.

41 The Sonne of man shall send his Angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all scandals, and them that worke iniquity:

42 And shall cast them into the furnace of fire, There shall be weeping & gnashing of teeth.

43 Then shall the iust shine as the sun, in the kingdome of their father. Hee that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

The Gospell for virgins and other holy women.

44 The kingdome of heauen is like a treasure hidden in a field, which a man hauing found, did hide it, and for ioy thereof goeth, and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

45 Againe the kingdom of heauen is like to a merchant man, seeking good pearles.

46 And hauing found one precious pearle, he went his way, and sold all that he had, and bought it.

47 Againe the kingdom of heauen is like to a net cast into the sea, and gathering together of all kinde of fishes.

48 VVhich

48 VVhich, when it was filled, drawing it forth, and ſitting by the ſhore, they choſe out the †good into veſſels, but the bad they did caſt out.

† Heere alſo is ſignified good and bad in the Church.

49 So ſhall it be in the conſummation of the world. The Angels ſhal goe forth, and ſhall ſeparate the euill from among the iuſt.

50 And ſhall caſt them into the furnace of fire, There ſhal be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

51 Haue ye vnderſtood all theſe things? They ſay to him, Yea.

52 He ſayd vnto them, Therefore euery Scribe inſtructed in the kingdom of heauen, is like to a man that is an housholder, which bringeth forth out of his treaſure new things and olde. ☞

53 And it came to paſſe: when IESVS had ended theſe parables, hee paſſed from thence.

54 And comming into his own counnry, he taught them in their ſynagogues: ſo that they maruelled, and ſaid, How came this fellow by this wiſdome and vertues? Mar. 6. 1. Luk. 4. 16.

55 Is not this the Carpenters ſon? Is not his mother called MARY, and his brethren, Iames and Ioſeph, and Simon and Iude.

56 And his ſiſters are they not all with vs? whence therefore hath hee all theſe things?

57 And they were ſcandalized in him. But IESVS ſaid to them, there is not a Prophet without honour but in his own countrey, and in his owne houſe.

58 And he wrought not many miracles there becauſe of their incredulitie.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XIII.

RHEM. 1. [8. One an hundred] This difference of fruits is the difference of merits in this life, and rewards for them in the next life, according to the diuerſities of ſtates, or other differences. Of ſtates, as that the hundred fold agreeth to virgins profeſſed, threeſcore fold to religious widowes, thirty fold to the married, Aug. lib. de S. Virgin. c. 44. & ſeq. which truth the old heretick Iouinian denied (as ours do at this day) affirming that there is no difference of merits or rewards, Hiero. l. 2 adu. Iou. Ambr. ep. 82. Aug. Hær. 82. Difference of merits and rewards.

CARTVV. 1. [8. One an hundred.] Wee teach and profeſſe, that there are degrees of piety in this life, according to the meaſure of faith which God hath diſtributed to euery one: and in the life to come, according to the ſame meaſure of faith teſtified by good works: We teach and profeſſe, that there are degrees of reward. But as the difference and degrees of pietie in this life, doth not ouerthrow the free and vndeſerued grace of God: euen ſo the difference & degrees of reward in heauen doth well agree with the ſame vndeſerued grace, and openeth not the leaſt wicket for your blaſphemous Merit to enter in by. And Auguſtine hath not a word in thoſe chapters of the differences of Merits in this life; onely he vſeth in one place the word Merit: but he maketh it of the ſame ſignification with fruit. And thoſe that are but ſlenderly read in the Ancient Fathers, know right well, that the word of merit is oftentimes otherwiſe vſed of them, then the Papiſts vnderſtand. For Auguſtine ſpeaking of the iuſtification by faith which the Thiefe on the Croſſe obtained, ſaith, that he deſerued to heare, This day thou ſhalt be with me in paradice, which is nothing elſe then that he obtained to heare: For Auguſtine himſelfe by and by expreſſely ſetteth forth: that he deſerued not the grace which he had. And you your ſelues, vnleſſe you degenerate from your fellowes: will confeſſe, that the thiefe, which from the Gallowes paſſed by and by into Paradice, came not to this by any deſert of his workes. Neither hath Ierom one word of the degrees of rewards by merit, but onely proueth that there are both degrees in ſinne and in righteouſneſſe: which is that we profeſſe to haue learned, and to teach. But ſo preciſely to marſhall euery profeſſion of men, both here for their profeſſion of godlineſſe, and in heauen for their diuerſity of rewards, and to appoint them their places and formes where to ſit: that, becauſe we haue not learned, we dare not teach. Neither is there any ſo high an hill in all the Scriptures: from whence we eſteeme, that a man can ſee ſo farre. Which may well appeare by the diuerſities of opinions that riſe of ſuch boldneſſe, to determine of things which the Lord hath hidden. For Theophilact aſcribeth the hundreth fold to the Anchorites, the ſixty fold to the Cloyſtermen, or Cœnobites, and the thirty fold to married perſons. Gregory the Pope interpreth theſe three degrees of the diuers increaſes of the minde: proceeding and riſing higher in the exerciſe of the workes of faith. Auguſtine alſo in another place aſcribeth the hundreth to Martyrs, the ſixtie to Virgins, the thirty to married perſons, leauing out widowes. But how commeth it, that you learne not this modeſty of Auguſtine: who in the ſame place which you haue quoted, after he hath ſhewed his minde of the place, giueth it ouer as a thing that he neither will nor can determine: onely he preferreth Virgins vnto others, ſo that they be in other things equall, Which alſo we deny not vtterly: prouided that it be not vnderſtood of your Virgines, which are not to be compared with any of theſe ſorts, but rather with the vnprofitable ſeruant that hid his talent in the ground, where it was profitable for none, but hurtfull, whileſt themſelues being Idle, they delicately liue of the labours of others: alſo with the fooliſh virgins, which making a ſhew of piety, and of attendance of the Bridegroome, haue no light to relieue their own darkneſſe; much leſſe can giue light to others: againſt which ſort of Virgins and Monkes both Auguſtine, Theodoret, and others cry with open mouth. And if you thinke, that this be ſomewhat vnreuerently ſpoken, I will yet ſay more: that your virgines are worthy to be accounted among the ſtewes, and are worſe then they: for being (for the moſt part) filthy fornicators, and vnſatiable in their luſts, they are ſo much the more deteſtable, as it is committed vnder the cloke of holineſſe. And if any happen to keepe themſelues chaſte; or rather, to keepe their bodies from the company of others: they do ſo ſwell with the opinion of merit therefore, that the common ſtrumpets (which are oftentimes ſtricken with the conſcience of their filthines) ſhal go before them into the kingdom of God. As for the place of Ambroſe, it is directly againſt them, Aug. lib. 1. ad ſimplicianum queſt. 2. Homil. 17. in Ezech. Lib. 1. quæſt. Euangel. queſt. 9.

which make no difference between a temperate and an Epicures life, and that take away all reward of chastitie, nothing to the question in hand. The other place of Augustine reproueth Iouinian for making chaste matrimonie and virginitie equall: whereof, although there may be doubt, yet forasmuch as that is not in controuersie, we will not do the Iesuites so much pleasure as to let them go a roguing from their taske.

RHEM. 2. [11. To you is giuen.] To the Apostles, and such as haue the guiding and teaching of others deeper knowledge of Gods word and mysteries is giuen, then to the common people. As also to Christians generally, that which was not giuen to the obstinate Iewes.

CARTVV. 2. [11. To you is giuen.] The comparison is made between the Disciples of Christ and the wicked; and not between the godly Teachers, and their religious Schollers: as both the circumstance of the place, and the opposition of Marke doth declare: which opposeth to these to whom it was giuen to vnderstand the mysteries, such as are without.

Mark. 4. 1.

God is not the author of euill.

RHEM. 3. [15 They haue shut.] In saying that they shut their own eies, which S. Paul also repeateth, Act. 28. hee teacheth us the true vnderstanding of all other places, where it might seeme by the bare wordes that God is the very author and worker of this induration; and blindnesse of other sinnes: * which was an old condemned blasphemy, and is now the heresie of * Calvin: whereas our Sauiour heere teacheth us, that they shut their own eies, and are the cause of their own sinne and damnation, God not doing, but permitting it, and suffering them to fall further because of their former sinnes, as S. Paul declareth of the reprobate Gentiles; Rom. 1.

Iren. apud Euseb. l. 5. c. 19. Calu. lib. 2. Instit. c. 4.

CARTVV. 3. [15. They haue shut.] You are miserable men to sit in iudgement between Scriptures which haue shew of controuersie. Is this to iudge aright? when as of two places, which are both righteous in their causes, the one is cleane ouerthrown, that the other may bee maintained; where, when as the Scripture saith, that God blindeth men, and that men blind themselues: that way ought to haue been found out, whereby both the sentences might haue stood in full possession of the sence, which their words do giue them: which how easily it is performed, without either accusation of the Lord, which as a iust iudge blindeth the wicked; or excuse of the wicked, which willingly or desirously blinde themselues: the reader may consider of that which is said before.

Vpon the 6. chap. v. 13.

But these worthy Interpreters, to make this good, that men blinde themselues, leaue no place to this sentence, that God blindeth them. And this also is their new Logicke, That men doe blinde themselues, therefore God blindeth them not: or it is true that is said in one place, that men blind themselues: therefore it is false that is said in another place, that God blindeth them. Whereas it being in like manner pronounced, that the Lord doth blind men, as that men do blinde themselues: it is as good reason that the truth of the one action should be vpholden as of the other: for the wicked do not more freely blinde themselues wickedly, then God doth iustly. Nay, the Lords action is more free then theirs. For the wicked, though they blinde themselues willingly, and with delight: yet being bondmen and slaues of sinne, they cannot but harden and blinde themselues: whereas the Lord is at his choyce whether he will in iustice harden and blinde, or in mercy soften and open the hearts and eyes of men. That out of Irenæus, of the report of Eusebius, in the 20. and not the 19. chapter, is to shew against Montanus, that God is not the creator of sin, which is put in to paint the Margent, being an heresie that we detest. But Irenæus in his own booke answering the obiection of the Valentinians, asking how one and the same God can harden the infidels, & lighten the beleeuers: answereth (not as our Popish diuines doe) that God permitteth the one, and doth the other; but retaineth the proper signification of the words in both places. And yet that the Lord in stinking the wicked with blindnesse, is no more to be charged, then the bright beames of the Sunne, which annoy the bleared eye. As for the vnworthy charge against the worthy seruant of God M^r Calvin, it hath answer before, where the like is giuen against M^r Beza.

Lib. 4. contra haref. valent. cap. 48.

Vpon the 6. chap. v. 13.

RHEM. 4. [25 Ouersowed.] First by Christ and his Apostles was planted the truth, and falshood came afterward, and was ouer-sowen by the enemy the deuill, and not by Christ, who is not the authour of euill, Tertul. de præscript.

RHEM. [29 Lest you pluck also.] The good must tollerate the evill, when it is so strong that it cannot bee redressed without danger and disturbance of the whole Church, and commit the matter to Gods iudgement in the latter day. Otherwise where euill men (bee they hereticks or other malefactors) may be punished and suppressed without disturbance, and hazard of the good, they may and ought by publicke authority either spirituall or temporall to be chastised or executed.

CARTVV. [ver. 25. & 29. S.]

Good and euil in the Church.

RHEM. 6. [30. Suffer both to grow] The good and bad (wee see heere) are mingled together in the Church; which maketh against certaine hereticks and schismatickes, which seuered themselues of old from the rest of the whole world, vnder pretence that themselues onely were pure, and all other, both Priests and people sinners: And against some hereticks of this time also, which say that euill men were not of, or in the Church.

CARTVV. 6. [30. Suffer both to grow.] Why are not those men named, and the place of their bookes quoted, which say, that the wicked are not in the Church. All men kow, that you do it not to spare their credit; they may therefore know, if they will bee indifferent, that it is omitted, to the end that by hissing after this sort you might goe away vndiscouered in your wicked slanders: We, whom it pleaseth you to call Hereticks, doe frankly confesse, that there are wicked in the Church; but that they be of the Church (as the Iesuites, maugre S. Iohn, doe affirme) we deny: as as we do also affirme, that there are many of the Church which are not in it. And yet that the Church is also taken for the elect alone, if you will not beleeue our Sauiour Christ and his Apostles, at the least beleeue Bernard the Monke, and Gregory the Pope, whereof the one saith, that the Church is the company of the Elect predestinate before the world began: the other affirming, that the elect are within the Church, addeth further, that all the the reprobate are without. And let them ſhew if they can, that any of ours ſaith more herein then theſe doe.

RHEM. 7. [32 The leaſt of all ſeeds.] The Church of Chriſt had a ſmall beginning, but afterward became the moſt glorious and knowne Common-wealth in the earth: the greateſt powers, and the moſt wiſe of the world putting themſelues into the ſame.

RHEM. 8. [55 Carpenters ſonne.] Heereupon Iulian the Apoſtata and his flatterer Libanus tooke their ſcoffe againſt our Sauiour, ſaying (at his going againſt the Perſians) to the Chriſtians, what doth the Carpenters ſonne now? And threatning that after his returne the Carpenters ſonne ſhould not bee able to ſaue them from his fury, whereunto a godly man anſwered by the ſpirit of Propheſie: Hee whom Iulian calleth the Carpenters ſonne, is making a wodden coffin for him againſt his death. And indeed not long after there came newes that in that battell he died miſerably. Soz. lib. 6. c. 2. Theodo. li. 3. c. 18. The very like ſcoffe uſe heretickes that call the body of Chriſt in the B. Sacrament, bakers bread. It ſeemeth indeed to the ſenſes to bee ſo, as Chriſt ſeemed to bee Ioſephs naturall ſonne, but faith telleth us the contrary as well in the one as in the other.

CART VV. 8. [55. Carpenters ſonne.] It appeareth that your vnbloudy Sacrifice hath receiued ſuch a ſtripe of the Goſpell, that it bleedeth euen the very heart bloud of it; For it may eaſily be ſeene by the diligent care of her Surgeons, which ranſack vp euery corner, to ſeek ſome remedy for it, if they could. But conſider I pray you, out of your owne place which you haue alledged: that Chriſt declared himſelfe mightily to be the ſonne of GOD, by his powerfull worke againſt this blaſphemy: which when your breaden God ſhall performe, then will wee ceaſe to call him the worke of the Bakers fingers. But ſeeing on the contrary part, it mouldeth, and cannot deliuer it ſelfe from the teeth of the mouſe: we may as truly call it the Bakers ſonne, as Iulian the Apoſtata did falſely and blaſphemouſly call Chriſt the Carpenters ſonne.

CHAP. XIIII.

Meaning the vnworthy decollation of Iohn Baptiſt by Herode, 13. he taketh him to his vſuall ſolitarineſſe in the deſert, and there feedeth fiue thouſand with fiue loaues. 23 And then, after the night ſpent in the mountaine in prayer, he walketh vpon the ſea (ſignifying the wide world), yea and Peter alſo: whereupon they adore him as the ſonne of God. 35. And with the very touch of his garments hemme hee healeth innumerable.

AT that time *Herod the Tetrarch heard the fame of IESVS:

Mark. 6. 14 Luke 9. 7. 3 19.

2 And ſaid to his ſeruants, This is Iohn the Baptiſt, he is riſen from the dead, and therefore vertues worke in him.

3 For Herod apprehended Iohn and bound him, & put him into priſon becauſe of Herodias, his ‖ brothers wife.

‖ Brother Philip.

4 For Iohn ſayd vnto him, It is not lawfull for thee to haue her.

5 And willing to put him to death, he feared the people? becauſe they eſteemed him as a Prophet.

6 But on Herods birth-day, the daughter of Herodias daunced before them: and pleaſed Herod.

7 VVhereupon he promiſed with an oth, to giue her whatſoeuer ſhe would aſk of him.

8 But ſhe being inſtructed before of her mother ſaith, Giue me here in a diſh the head of Iohn the Baptiſt.

† A wicked & rash oath: & more wickedly fulfilled, becauſe an vnlawfull oath bindeth no man.

9 And the king was ſtroken ſad, yet becauſe of his † oth and for them that ſate with him at table, he comanded it to be giuen.

† S. Iohns Diſciples at this time, had well learned their duty toward Chriſt. Mark. 6. 31 Luke 9. 10.

10 And he ſent, and beheaded Iohn in the priſon.

11 And his head was brought in a diſh: and it was giuen to the damſell, and ſhe brought it to her mother.

12 And his diſciples came & tooke the body, and ‖ buried it: † and came and told IESVS.

13 VVhich when IESVS had heard, * he ‖ retyred frō thence by boat, into a deſert place apart, and the multitudes hauing heard of it, followed him on foot out of the cities.

14 And he coming forth ſaw a great multitude, and pitied them, & cured their diſeaſed.

15 * And when it was euening, his diſciples came vnto him ſaying: It is a deſert place, and the houre is now paſt, dimiſſe the multitudes that going into the towns, they may buy themſelues victuals. Ioh. 6. 2.

16 But IESVS ſaid to them, They haue no neede goe giue yee them to eate.

17 They anſwered him. VVe haue not here, but fiue loaues? and two fiſhes.

18 VVho ſaid to them, Bring them hither to me.

19 And when he had commanded the multitude to ſit down vpon the graſſe, he tooke the fiue loaues and the two fiſhes, & looking vp to heauen he bleſſed & brake: and gaue the loaues to his Diſciples, and ‖ and the Diſciples to the multitudes.

20 And they did all eat, and had their fill, And they tooke, the leauings, twelue full baskets of the fragments.

21 And the number of them that did eat was fiue thouſand men, beſide women & children.

22 And forthwith IESVS commanded his Diſciples to go vp into the boat, & to goe before him ouer the water, till he dimiſſed the multitudes.

24 But the boat in the middes of the sea was tossed with waues, for the winde was contrary.

25 And in the fourth watch of the night he came vnto them walking vpon the sea.

26 And seing him vpon the | sea walking, they were troubled, saying, That it is a ghost, and for feare they cried out.

27 And immediatly IESVS spake vnto them, saying, Haue confidence: it is I, feare ye not.

28 And Peter making answer, said, Lord if it be thou, bid me come to the vpon the waters.

29 And he sayd, Come. And Peter descending out of the boat, | walked vpon the water to come to IESVS.

30 But seeing the winde rough, he was afraid: and when he began to be drowned, he cried out, saying, Lord saue me.

31 And incontinent † IESVS stretching foorth his hands tooke hold of him, and sayd vnto him, O thou of little faith, why diddest thou doubt?

32 And when they were gonne vp into the boat, the winde ceased.

33 And they that were in the boat, came and adored him, saying, Indeed thou art the sonne of God.

34 And hauing passed the water, they came into the countrey of Genesar.

35 And when the men of that place vnderstood of him, they sent into all that countrey, and brought vnto him all that were ill at ease:

36 And they besought him that they might touch but the † hem of his garment & whosoeuer did touch, were made whole.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [31 IESVS stretching] Notwithstanding the infirmity of them that gouern the Church, yet Christ sustaineth them, and holdeth them up, yea and by them whatsoeuer they are, hee upholdeth and preserueth his Church.

Psalm. 5. CARTVV. 1. [31 IESVS stretching.] our Sauiour Christ is heere made the ministes of iniquity; which hath nothing to do with the seat of wickednesse, and to whom iniquity cannot approach. For by these words, (And by them whatsoeuer they are,) is taught that although Alphons. contra hæres. lib. 1. cap. 4. he bee an idiot that is Pope, and unlearned (as the Popes haue beene) yet our Sauiour Christ holdeth them up: Whereas the Lord, by the Prophet saith, that the Aaronites to whom the Priesthood came by descent, refusing knowledge, were refused from doing the office of Priest-hood unto him. Although hee bee an hereticke, as diuers haue bene, although he bee a traitor, yet doth our Sauiour Christ, by these men, hold them up. Whereas the Apostle Paul willeth, that all Church Officers should exercise their charges, so long as they continue blameless, according to the rules that hee giueth. And our Sauiour Christ saith, they are good for nothing, but to bee troden vndermeath the feete: And Peter saith, that Iudas by transgression (not by death onely) fell from his Apostleship. It is further also signified by these palpable Parasites of the Pope, that howsoeuer hee either beleeue or liue, yet those that remaine in his obedience, are through Christ by him as it were holden up by the chinne that they cannot fall: As if they that haue no light in themselues, were yet able to giue light unto others: And that the salt which it selfe hath lost the taste, could season the unsauorinesse of others: or that the Popes estate heerein, were better then Peters, who fallling drew the rest of the Iewes, with Barnabas himselfe into fellowship of the same fall.

RHEM. 2. [3 Because of Herodias.] It is too ordinary in Princes to put them to death that freely tell them such faults: women whom they fancy, especially enciting them to such mischiefe.

CARTVV. 2. [v. 3. 5.]

RHEM. 3. [12 Buried it.] An example of duty towards the dead bodies of the faithfull: Wherein see the difference of Catholicke Christian men and of all Infidels, bee they Pagans, Apostataes, or Hereticks. For whereas Christians had laid the bodie of this blessed Prophet and Martyr * in Samaria with the reliques of Elias and Abdias, by vertue whereof wonderfull miracles were wrought in that place. In Iulian the Apostataes time, when men might doe all mischiefe freely against Christian Religion; the Pagans opened the tombe of S. Iohn Baptist, burnt his bones, scattered the ashes about the fields: but certaine religious Monkes comming thither a Pilgrimage at the same time, aduentured their liues, and saued as much of the holy Reliques as they could, and brought them unto their Abbot Philip a man of God, who esteeming them too great a treasure for him and his, to keep for their priuate deuotion, sent them to Athanasius the Bishop of Alexandria, and hee with all reuerence laid them in such a place (as it were by the spirit of Prophesie) where afterward by occasion of them was built a goodly Chappell. Thod. lib. 3. cap. 6. Ruff. lib. 2. c. 28. 27. Marke heere that the heretickes of our time do as those Pagans, to the bodies and relikes of all blessed Saints that they can destroy: And Catholickes contrariwise haue the religious deuotion of these old Christians, as appeareth by the honour done now to his head at Amiens in France.

Hiero. in Epitaph. Paula. c. 6.

Sacrilege against holy relikes.

CARTVV. 3. [12 Buried it.] Here many things are confusedly heaped: but this is the first in order, that at the Tombe of S. Iohn where there were the relickes of Abdias and Elias miracles were done. I let passe that they haue put Elias for Eliseus, for so Ierome writeth. It must bee first of all noted, that the miracles which were wrought, if it were by vertue of this tombe, it was by S. Iohns bones, for that Eliseus (much lesse Abdias bones) should worke miracles then, which which wrought none but one for many hundred yeares before, is incredible; And that one miracle of Elizeus, the Scripture doth, (for a seale of his doctrine when hee was aliue) diligently report. Now that the trunk of Iohns body should do miracles, which the whole body could not, and that hee should worke miracles being dead, which could worke none when hee was aliue, is not onely unlike, but contrary to the wise and mercifull prouidence of the Lord, who of purpose gaue no such power to Iohn, lest the ministery of our Sauiour Christ should haue beene darkened. For wee see how through the blindnesse of men, the glittering light of his godlinesse dazeled their eies in such sort, as they were ready to cleaue unto him with contempt of our Sauiour Christ, the fountaine of all holinesse. The Lord therefore to moderate his credit, and that they should not bee tempted aboue that they might beare, with-held this power from him. But Ierome reporteth upon the words of a graue Matrone, that there the deuils roared, it is very true, but how? in the bodies of certaine poore men and women that they possessed, And do you call this a miracle of S. Iohns bones? Are you so ignorant, that you know not the practise of the deuils to carry them to solitary places, to graues and to mountaines, there to torment them; So that the graues are the cõmon haunts which the diuels especially chuse, to the further terror of them whose bodies they possesse. I neuer read, that it should bee a miracle for such a mighty spirit as the deuill is, to make a weake man, ouer whom (by iust iudgement of the Lord) he hath power, to roare. It had beene a miracle, if the poore men and women had beene pulled out of the mouth of these Lyons: And surely, if Iohns bones had receiued any such diuine power, as the Iesuites pretend, they would not haue suffered the poore wretches to haue been so miserably tormented, as it were before their faces, and especially in such filthy sort towards the women as is not honest to name, The Iesuites proceed, and not content with this gaine of S. Iohns dead bones, will yet picke them neerer: they say therefore that this graue was broken up by the Pagans, which wee deny not, Secondly, that certaine of the relickes by a great and dangerous aduenture of the Monkes of Ierusalem were reskued out of the hands of the barbarous Pagans, which carrieth small shew of truth: Ruffine onely a Monke saith it, of his fellow Monkes, I will not take aduantage of the light credite which Ierome reporteth him to bee of; for that himselfe being pricked by Ruffine, may easily throw whatsoeuer commeth next him. Onely, let it bee obserued, what likelyhood there is in this tale: For they came not as the inhabitants of Gibeon well appointed for such an enterprise, but they came thither (for Monkes were not in those daies (as now) cloystered) in Pilgrimage: and therefore (belike) as naked men, they set upon those which were armed, a few upon many, strangers upon home-dwellers. Wherefore unlesse the dead bones played the men more then the Monkes, there had beene small hope of their deliuerance: And (indeed) Ruffine so telleth the story, as if it were done miraculously: for that the Pagans, being stricken either with a great daunt, or madnesse of spirit: the Monkes went away with the relickes without touch of breast. But Theodoret writing the same story, maketh no mention of any such reskue: but contrariwise: saith that S. Iohns bones being burnt by the Pagans, their ashes were scattered. After Father Phillip, thinking this great prey, that his Monkes had brought home, too great a treasure for him and his to keepe, to their priuate deuotion, sent them away: As though Ierusalem was not then the most frequented place by the Christians, which were desirous to see the monuments of that circuit. Ierome testifying that they were thought to bee scarce of any account which in those daies came not too see Ierusalem; so that Ierusalem had beene the fittest market for shew of such wares as the Iesuites meane, that was that day in all Asia, or the world either. And heere the Iesuites haue shewed a trick of their profession; for they haue utterly peruerted the wordes of Ruffine, who sheweth that Phillip thinking it aboue his strength, with their own watch and ward, to guard those relikes (belike fearing the violent fetching of them againe by the Paganes) sent them away. And whither trow you? to Alexandria forsooth. And why not rather to Rome? as unto the Ladie Church of all the world, in the Iesuites iudgement. But to whom were they sent; Heere I beseech thee (good Reader) to marke: To the greatest or highest Bishop (saith Ruffine) who then was Athanasius: whereof if the Iesuites had been well aduised, they would rather not haue troubled the dead bones, then in raising them from their ashes, to haue buried the Pope of Rome. I passe ouer the laying them vp in great secresie by Athanasius, as Ruffine reporteth, and the Iesuites doe wisely conceale; it being contrary to the meaning of Father Philip (as the Iesuites giue it out) who sent them away for a more common and publicke vse. Whereby is seene, how small correspondence there is of this tale with it selfe. Now for conclusion, the true Catholicke Church which they are not able to staine with any violence done to the dead; but which hath alwayes comelily and reuerently (according to the examples in the old and new Testament) laid them up in the earth as good seed, there to rest untill the spring commeth of the Lords day; must be matched with these wicked Pagans that brake vp S. Iohns tombe. And the Church falsly called Catholicke, which hath raged against the dead bodies of the Saints, no otherwise then sometimes did the barbarous Gothes and Hunnes, must needs be holden for the Reuerent handlers of the same. Haue you forgot how your fathers dealt with the dead bodie of the reuerend father Paulus Phagius, likewise of that famous man M. Bucer, whom they durst not looke in the face when he was aliue: or how Pope Stephen digging vp the body of Formosus mangled and threw some part (namely two fingers) into the riuer of Tiber. Also Sergius tertius pulled him the the second time, and beheading him as if he had been aliue, cast the trunke of his body into Tiber. (I grant you make more of their ragges, then the true Church would doe of their whole garments, more of their dead bodies, then wee may with (good conscience) doe to their liue bodies) yea more to their counterfait and falsly supposed bodies, then we of their true. And no meruaile; for you make more gaine of their dead bodies, then you can of their liuing doctrine. But doe you not see, how heerein you are the right begotten children, of the old enemies of the Gospell, the Scribes and Pha-riſes in our Saviour Chriſſes time, which made much of the Prophets being dead, whoſe doctrine they contemned, and whom themſelues would haue been the butchers of, if they had liued in their times: howſoeuer they builded them gay and trim Monuments. As for the head of Iohn Baptiſt at Amiens in France, if you beleeue it to be true, it is an euident argument that thoſe that haue no faith to beleeue the truth, haue ſtrong illuſions ſent againſt them, to beleeue moſt palpable lies. And if not beleeuing it your ſelues, you would haue others to doe it: then your caſe is yet more miſerable. Gaunt ſtandeth vp againſt you, affirming that they haue Iohn Baptiſts head with them, it had beene better for your credite therefore, either to haue diuided Iohns head into halues, or elſe to haue vſed a little more of your occaſioned boldneſſe; and ſaid, that Iohn Baptiſt had two heads, whereof thoſe at Amiens in France haue one, and thoſe of Gaunt in Flaunders haue another.

RHEM. 4. [13 Retired.] Chriſt much eſteemed Iohn, and withdrew himſelfe aſide, to giue example of moderate mourning for the departed, and to ſhew the horrour of that execrable murder, as in the Primitiue Church many good men ſeeing the miſerable ſtate of the world in time of perſecution, and the ſinnes that abounded withall: tooke occaſion to forſake thoſe tumults, and to giue themſelues to contemplation: and for that purpoſe retired into the Deſarts of Egypt, and elſe-where, to do penance for their own ſinnes and the ſinnes of the world, whereupon partly roſe that infinite number of Monkes and Eremites, of whom the Fathers and Eccleſiaſticall hyſtories make mention. Hier. to. 2. in vit. Pauli. Ereni. Sozo. lib. 1. cap. 12. 13.

Eremites.

CARTVV. 4. [13 Hee retired.] Hee went to pray as appeareth 23 verſe, where the Euangeliſt marketh out his returne to that exerciſe, that the concourſe of people had either interrupted, or withholden him from. And if the perſecution were the cauſe of ſo many Monkes and Eremites, that cauſe ceaſing, it was meete that the effect ſhould likewiſe haue an end, and that the peace of the Church, ſhould haue brought thoſe into the Cities againe, whom the perſecution carried into the fields. And as for your Monkes, &c. they went not into the deſarts, but into the paradiſe of all the Land; where what penance they did their eies almoſt cloſed up with fat (ſo famous and ſo common, that they were come into a prouerbe) doe manifeſtly declare. And it is well known, that they fed not there of barly loaues, and of a few fiſhes, as they whom you would make their Patrones: but that their deſerts (as you would haue them thought) were able to affoord, that choice and variety of meates and drinkes that the beſt Townes (for the moſt part) were not able to yeeld. But heereof looke before, in Mat. 3. ſect. 1. v. 1. p. 9. 10. 11.

An Abbots face.

RHEM. 5. [19 The Diſciples to the multitudes.] A figure of the Miniſtery of the Apoſtles, who as they heere had the diſtribution and ordering of theſe miraculous loaues, ſo had they alſo to beſtow and diſpenſe all the foode of our ſoules in Miniſtring of the Word and Sacraments, neither may men Lay-men challenge the ſame.

CARTVV. 5. [v. 16. S.]

RHEM. 6. [26 Walking.] When not onely Chriſt, but by his power Peter alſo walketh vpon the waters, it is euident that hee can diſpoſe of his own body aboue nature, and contrary to the naturall conditions thereof, as to go throw a dore, Ioh. 20. to be in the compaſſe of a little bread, Epiphan. in Anc orato.

CARTVV. 6. [26. Walking.] It is apparant, and confeſſed, that our Sauiour Chriſt would here declare himſelfe to be the Lord, and as it were, the high admirall of the ſeas, which hath power to alter the proper nature, and natiue property thereof; which as in times paſt hee declared, by cauſing the water to ſtand ſtiffe like a wall barred with Iron barres, which (as Ariſtotle ſaith) will neuer be ſtaied, unleſſe it reſt vpon another element; and (to vſe his words) in an others bounds: euen ſo he declared it now, in cauſing them, which (through weakneſſe) naturally giue place to all heauier bodies, contrary to their nature, to be as ſolid and as firme vnder foot, as if they had been paued with marble ſtone. Whereupon it followeth, that the alteration was in the ſea, and not in any change of either our Sauiour Chriſt, or of S. Peters body: yea withall it appeareth, that theſe foule feeted Ieſuites make no conſcience of troubling the moſt cleareſt waters of the holy Scripture, which (to vnderprop their breaden God) haue vtterly ouerthrown the meaning of the Euangeliſt. For if this miracle ſtood in any miraculous change of their bodies, then is not our Sauiour Chriſts Empire of the Sea eſtabliſhed out of this place. Beſides, that by this interpretation of theirs, the corrupt opinion of the Apoſtles is ſtrengthened, which iudged of our Sauiour Chriſt that he was a Ghoſt and no true body, which indeed hee had been, if hee had not had the naturall property of a body, which is to preſſe downe, and to weigh heauy vpon the waters; except that our Sauiour Chriſt, by the power of his Godhead, bare vp himſelfe and Peter too; whereby remaineth the property of the bodies ſtill, giuing them no more aduantage then if the miracle were in the waters: conſidering that the weight of the bodies is not taken away, but borne vp and ſuſtained by the power of Chriſt, remaining in his perſon, and not communicated with the ſea, which is his creature: for as it is an Idoll and no God, that hath not the eſſentiall properties of God: ſo is it a Phantome, and no true body that wanteth the naturall properties of a body. And if you can proue out of this place, that either Peter or our Sauiour had a body walking vpon the ſea, and not vpon the ſea at the ſame time, then you ſay ſomewhat: otherwiſe this maketh nothing for your Tranſubſtantiation, which at one time imagine the body of Chriſt in earth, and in heauen. The anſwer to the 20. of Iohn with Epiphanius, the reader ſhall looke for in the proper place, which their beggery hath forced them to preuent.

Hoord. 14. Iſ. 6.

RHEM. 7. [29. Walked.] Peter (ſaith S. Bernard walking vpon the waters, as Chriſt did, declared himſelfe the onely Vicar of Chriſt, which ſhould be ruler, not ouer one people, but ouer all For many waters are many peoples. Bernard lib. 2. de conſid. cap. 8. See the place, how hee deduceth from Peter the like authority and iuriſdiction to his ſucceſſor the Biſhop of Rome.

Peters Primacy.

CARTVV. 7. [29. Walked.] This is a watriſh argument whereupon the Popes Primacy ſtanding ding, must needs sinke. For first of all, that Peters walking vpon the waters, should proue him ruler ouer all the people; hath no manner of coherence or twist of reason. For if the waters do (in a few places) by a metaphor or borrowed speech, signifie the people of the world: it followeth not therefore, that it signifieth so alwayes. And it may be as well said, that God making the seas the third day, thereby signified the making of all people the third day; as to wrest this place, that is spoken of the true waters. And although it were granted, that the waters should signifie the peoples yet it foloweth not, that whosoeuer treadeth vpon them, should thereby be declared to haue rule ouer them: no more then the walking vpon the earth, which (by a Trope) doth oftner signifie the people thereof, then the waters doe, doth argue a speciall dominion belonging unto him that treadeth vpon it. And surely this is higher diuinity then euer Iohn with his Eagles wings could be able to flye vnto; who telleth vs that these miracles proue our Sauiour Christ to bee the Sonne of God, but that they proue Peter to bee ruler ouer all people, hee could tell us no newes of. And albeit, it proued that hee were so, yet hath hee thereby nothing, which is not common to all the Apostles; whose commission was as large in that behalfe, as Peters to Preach the Gospell to all Nations, and in the refusall of whose doctrine, our Sauiour Christ taketh himselfe as well to bee reiected as in Peters Ministery. And last of all, if Peter were heereby the onely Vicar of our Sauiour Christ, yet the same cannot aduantage the Pope of Rome, not able to walke vpon the Seas as Peter did: for not hauing so much as this imaginary signe of rule ouer all: hee can much lesse haue the thing that is signified. But of this uncapacity of the Pope to Peters priuiledges, it shall after largely bee spoken: In the meane season for this place it shall bee enough to note that this is a lying signe and a false seale of the Bishop of Romes rule ouer all people, seeing it is manifest the Nicene counsell tethered him within the territorie of the suburbes. Likewise that the Emperour in purer times walked upon the Pope, and was not (as after when Antichrist had fully possessed that seat) undertroden by him. The case being thus, no mans authority can make these brickle waters of all nations, as it were firme land underneath the Bishop of Romes feet: much lesse Bernard, who although in those times, wherein was the power of darknesse, hee might easily beare the bell of plaine dealing, from all the rout of that Cleargy; yet notwithstanding his neere, both neighbourhood unto the Bishop of Rome, and touch of bloud betweene the Pope and the Abbot, leauing him not the credite which otherwise hee might haue. Augustine saith, that Peter walked upon the waters because Christ commanded: hee saith not, because hee was or should bee the Vicar of Christ, by which reason of Augustine, any other of the Apostles should haue walked upon the Seas if Christ had commanded them.

CHAP. XV.

The Pharisees of Hierusalem comming so farre to carpe him, he chargeth with a tradition contrary to Gods commandement. 10. And to the people hee yeeldeth the reason of that which they reproued: 15 and againe to his Disciples, shewing the ground of the Pharisaicall washing (to wit that meates otherwise defile the soule) to be false. 21 Then he goeth aside to hide himselfe among the Gentiles: where, in a woman he findeth such faith, that he is faine, lest the Gentiles should before the time extort the whole bread, as she had a crum, to returne to the Iewes. 34 Where (all contrary to the Pharisees) the common people seeke wonderfully unto him, and he after he hath cured their diseased, feedeth foure thousand of them with seuen loaues.

THEN came to him from Hierusalem Scribes and Pharisees, saying,

The Gospell upon Wednesday the third weeke in Lent. Mat. 7. 1.

2 VVhy doe thy Disciples transgresse the tradition of the Ancients? For they wash not their hands when they eat bread.

3 But he answering sayd to them: why do you also transgresse the commandement of God for your tradition? For God said, 4 Honour father and mother, and, he that shall curse father or mother: dying let him die.

Ex. 20. 12. Luk. 20. 9.

5 But you say, VVhosoeuer shall say to father or mother, The gift whatsoeuer proceedeth from me, shall profit thee:

6 And shall not honour his father or his mother: and you haue made frustrate the commandement of God for your owne tradition,

7 Hypocrites, well hath Esay prophesied of you, saying.

8 This people honoureth me with their ‖ lips but their heart is farre from me.

Esa. 29. 13.

9 And in vaine doe they worship mee, teaching doctrines and ‖ commandements of men.

10 And hauing called together the multitudes vnto him, he said to them, Heare ye and understand.

11 ‖ Not that which entreth into the mouth, defileth a man: but that which proceedeth out of the mouth, that defileth a man.

12 Then came his disciples, & said to him, Doest thou know that the Pharisees, when they heard this word, were scandalized;

13 But he answering, sayd: All planting which my heauenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted vp,

14 Let them alone: blind they are, guides of the blind. And if the blinde be guide to the blinde, both fall into the ditch.

15 And Peter answering said to him, Expound vs this parable.

16 But he sayd, Are you also as yet without vnderstanding?

17 Doe you not vnderstand, that all that entreth into the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is cast forth into the priuie?

18 But the things that proceed out of the mouth, come forth from the heart, and those things ‖ defile a man.

19 For from the heart come forth euill cogitations, murders, aduoutries, fornications, thefts: false testimonies, blasphemies.

20 These are the things that defile a man but to eate with vnwashen hands, doth not defile a man. ☞

The Gospell vpon thurday the first weeke in Lent.

21 And IESVS went forth from thence & retired into the quarters of Tyre and Sidon.

21 And behold * a woman of Chanaan came forth out of those coastes, and crying out, said to him, Haue mercie vpon mee O Lord the Sonne of Dauid, my daughter is sore vexed of a deuil.

23 VVho answered her not a word, And his Disciples came and besought him saying, Dimisse her because she crieth out after vs:

24 And he answering said: I was not sent but to the sheepe that are lost of the house of Israel.

25 But she came & adored him, saying Lord, helpe me.

26 VVho answering said: It is not good to take the bread of the children, and to cast it to the dogges.

27 But she said, yea lord for the whelps also eate of the crummes that fall from the table of their masters

28 Then IESVS answering said to her O woman, † great is thy faith: be it done to the as thou wilt: and her daughter was made whole from that houre ☞

29 And when IESVS was passed from thence, he came beside the sea of Galilee: and ascending into the mountaine, sate there.

30 And there came to him great multitudes, hauing with them dumb persons, blind, lame, feeble, and many others: and they cast them down at his feete, & he cured them:

31 So that the multitudes marueiled seing the dumme speake, the lame walke, the blinde see: and they magnified the God of Israell.

32 And * IESVS called together his disciples, an saide: I pitie the multitude: because three dayes now they continue with me, and haue not what to eate: and dimisse them fasting I will not, lest they faint in the way. Mark. 8.1.

33 And the disciples say vnto him, whence then may we get so many loaues in the desert as to fill so great a multitude?

34 And IESVS said to them, how many loaues haue you? but they said, Seuen and a few litle fishes.

35 And he commanded the multitude to sit down vpon the ground.

36 And taking the seuen loaues and the fishes, and giuing thankes, hee brake, and gaue to his disciples and the disciples gaue to the people.

37 And they did all eat, and had their fill. And that which was left of the fragments they tooke vp seuen baskets full.

38 And there were that did eate, foure thousand men, beside children and women.

39 And hauing dimissed the multitude, he went vp into a boate, and came into the coastes of Magedan.

† Here we see again, that the people must not be their owne caruers, nor receiue the Sacraments, or other spirituall sustenance immediately of Christ, or at their owne hand but of their spirituall gouernours.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [28 Great is thy faith.] It were a strange case that Christ shou'd commend in this woman a sole faith without good workes, that is to say a dead faith such as could not worke by loue, and which S. Iames doubted not to call the faith not of Christians but of deuils. Aug. de Fid. & Op. c. 16.

CARTVV. 1. [28 Great is thy faith] It were indeed very strange: but it is as strange, that you are so blind as not to see that our Sauiour Christ did therefore commend the faith of this woman, because from it, as from a roote came this earnest and constant prayer. And that you bee so adder deafe, that you cannot heare our Sauiour Christ speaking so loude, that the benefite of health is not ascribed unto any merite of her constant inuocation of his name, but unto her unfained faith, wherevnto her stedfast continuance in prayer gaue testimony.

RHEM. 2. [36 Gaue to.] Heere wee see againe that the people must not bee their own caruers, nor receiue the Sacraments, or other spirituall sustenance immediately of Christ, or at their own hand, but of their spirituall gouernours, CARTVV. 2. [36 Gaue to.] Your gaine is so great, by nursing of the people, that you would alwaies haue them babes, and hold the spoone wherewith they should bee fed in your hands. But you haue both cooked and carued their meates so euill, that unlesse they will bee starueling, they had need take the spoone in their own hand, and to meditate the Law of God at home with themselues, and to exercise themselues in talking thereof, earely and late with their families, which is not contraried by this place, although you were suffered to walk in the broad field of your allegories: For it can proue no more but this, that in publick and open Assemblees the people are to receiue the dispensation of the Word and Sacraments at the hands of their Ministers: which wee doe more precisely both preach and practise then you do: your people in publicke places praying priuately, and in priuate houses administring publique Sacraments,

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XV.

RHEM. 3. [8 With their lippes.] This is to bee understood properly of such as haue euer God in their mouth, the word of our Lord, the Scriptures, the Gospell, but in their heart and all their life bee indeed Godlesse. It may bee applyed also to such as say their prayers without attention or eleuation of minde to God, whether he understand the prayers or no that saith them. For many a poore Christian man that understandeth not the words hee speaketh, hath his heart

neerer to heauen, more feruour and deuotion, more edification to himselfe, more profite in spirit (as the Apostle speaketh) and lesse distractions, then not onely all heretickes, which haue no true feeling of such things, but then many learned Catholikes. And therefore it is not to be understood of praying in unknown tongues, as heretickes sometime expound it, farre wide from the circumstance of the place and Christs intention, speaking of the hipocriticall Iewes. 1. Cor. 14.

CARTVV. 3. [8 With their lippes.] It is true that the hypocrisie and painted holinesse of the Iewes is heere reproued, from which whether wee or you bee further of, let the world iudge, euen your selues our bitterest aduersaries, wee might make iudges of, if you would let your mouthes speake according as your hearts (ouercome by euidence of the truth) doe thinke. And indeed you are, will you nill you constrained to giue us sometimes this testimony, of honest and godly behauiour, or euer you bee aware: which take your marke to discouer a Protestant by giuing thankes unto God before and after his meate, by sobriety in his diet, by his communication void of oathes, and of other riotous and unchaste talke; whereof your hearts being (for the most part) full fraught, must needs haue an issue by the mouth. Howbeit the sentence is yet more generall: For when there are two parts of the soule, which the Euangelist (according to the Hebrew phrase) calleth one the heart, the minde or understanding; the other the will or affection: it is euident, that as the place of the Prophet, made the Iewes guilty, because they were touched with no affection: so it attacheth also the Papists, because they offer a worship unto God, whereat the understanding (a principall part of the soule) is not present. Where- Psal. 103. as the Prophet teacheth, that in thankes-giuing (and therefore in all other prayers) all that is within us must praise the Lord: which is not done by them whose understanding (in prayers) is a sleepe. The Councell was not of your minde, that esteemeth that all men should learne the words of the prayer that our Sauiour taught, and that they should understand the sense of it well: And finally, that it was not lawfull for any Christian to bee ignorant of it. Nor Bernard, which of the three things, required to bee considered in prayer, assigneth this, That a man should consider what hee asketh. The shamelesse abusing of the Apostle to the Corinths shall bee shewed in the proper place. But heere it is to bee obserued, that the common people, whom sometime they cupple with dogges, and yoke with swine, are heere preferred to many of their learned Catholickes, belike being hungry, they haue learned by some gentler speech, to faune upon them whom they haue so deadly bitten: if happily they may get a piece of bread, putting some trust in the prouerbe, that faire words will make fooles (for so they esteeme of the common sort) faine. And in truth they are so much better, or rather lesse euill, then they: as they haue not withstood so euident light of the truth as they do. Tom. 3. concil. Remens. concil. ca. 2.

RHEM. 4. [9. Commandements of men.] Such onely are here called traditions, doctrines or commandements of men, which be either repugnant to Godslawes, as this, of defrauding their parents vnder pretence of Religion: or which at least be friuolous, unprofitable, and impertinent to piety or true worship, as that other sort of so often washing hands and vessels, without regard of inward purity of heart and minde. Let no man therefore bee abused with the Protestants peruerse application of this place against the holy Lawes, Canons, and Precepts of the Church, and our spirituall Gouernours, concerning Fasts, Festiuities, and other rules of Discipline and due order in life, and in the seruice of God. For such are not repugnant, but consonant to Gods word and all piety, and our Lord is truely honoured, worshipped and serued, both by the making, and also by the obseruing of them. * S. Paul gaue commandements, both by his Epistles, and by word of mouth, euen in such matters wherein Christ had prescribed nothing at all, and he chargeth the faithfull to obserue the same. * The Apostles and Priests at Ierusalem made lawes, and the Christians were bound to obey them. ‹ The keeping of Sunday in stead of the Sabboth, is the tradition of the Apostles, and dare the Heretickes deny the due obseruation thereof to be an acceptable worship of God? › They prescribed the Feasts of Easter and Whitsontide, and other Solemnities of Christ and his Saints, which the Protestants themselues obserue. ‹ They appointed the Lent, and Imber fasts, and other, as well to chastice the concupiscence of man; as to serue and please God thereby, as is plaine in the fasting of * Anna, Toby, Iudith, Esther,, who serued and pleased God thereby. Therefore neither these, nor other such Apostolicke Ordinances, nor any precepts of the holy Church, or of our lawfull Pastors, are implied in these Pharisaicall traditions here reprehended, nor to be counted or called the doctrines and commandements of men, because they are not made by meere humane power, but by Christs warrant and authority, and by such as he hath placed to rule his Church, of whom he saith, * He that heareth you, heareth me: he that despiseth you despiseth me. They are made by the Holy Ghost, ioyning with our Pastors in the regiment of the faithfull, they are made by our mother the Church, which whosoeuer obeyeth not, * wee are warned to take him as an heathen. But on the other side, all lawes, doctrines, seruice and iniunctions of Heretickes, howsoeuer pretended to bee consonant to the Scriptures, be commandements of men: because both the things by them prescribed are impious, and the Authors haue neither sending nor commission from God. The differences betweene the Iewish Traditions heere reprehended, and the Churches Apostolicall Traditions. 1. Thess. 2. 15. 1. Cor. 11. * Act. 15. › Aug. Ser. de temp. 251 See 1. Cor. 16. 2. › Epiph. hær. 75. ‹ Hier. ep. 54 ad Marcel. init. Mont. * Luk. 2. 37. Tob. 12. Iudith 8. Est. 4. Luk. 10. 16 * Mat. 18. 17.

CARTVV. 4. [9. Commandements of men.] The Pharises cannot altogether die, as long as you their children, which carry so liuely a representation of them, liue. You are like vnto them in transgressing the commandements of God for your tradition. For a childe may fall from duety to parents; a seruant from the obedience to his master, if hee will take a cloyster of your owne inuention: you ratifie the marriages wherein the children are violently plucked and rent from their parents. And wee demand of you, Whether it is your doctrine, that although the parents should dye in the streets, yet may not their Monkish daughters make a step out of their Nunnery to saue their liues. We suppose your selues mutter some such thing vpon Math. 8. 22. You are seuerer exactors of your traditions, then of the commandements of the Lord: for he scapeth easier with you that deflowreth his neighbours daughters, defileth his neighbours wife: then he that eateth flesh upon Friday: and matching the Pharisaical Iewes in those things, in multitude and swarme of traditions, which our Sauiour Christ casteth them also in the teeth with, you ouermatch them. Your very Masse, which is the crowne of your religion, and the Canon, which is the principall Diamond in your Crowne, being nothing else but a patchment of the traditions and inuentions of men. And as for the friuolousnesse and folly of them, they be so ridiculous that Crassus himselfe, who because he neuer laughed, was surnamed Agelastus, could hardly haue forborne laughter, if hauing neuer seene it before, he had been admitted to such a spectacle. It is granted, that the true Church hath authority in indifferent things, as in the houre and place of common prayers, and such like circumstances, touching the order of that which the Lord commandeth, whereunto the faithfull ought, as vnto Ecclesiastiall, but not as unto diuine lawes, giue reuerence. For euen the orders that the Apostles themselues made, haue not authority alike; as the order of not eating of the strangled, or of bloud, or of that which had been offered vnto Idols, because it was of indifferent things, hath an end; yea euen then when it was first made, it was lawfull for Christians to haue eaten of any of them: so that they eate it without offence of the weak. Of the other side, the order of abstaining from fornication, because it is, and euer was, a constant and vnvariable law of God: remaineth still. And as it tooke not authority by the Apostles, which it had of the law it selfe: so could it not be abrogated by the Apostles themselues if they were aliue. And therefore as the Iesuites mingle heauen and hell together, in comparing their wicked traditions, with all the orders and decrees of the Apostles: so do they confound heauen & earth together, in not seuering the diuine and vnchangeable lawes from those, that according to circumstance) admit alteration.

Platina in Sixto 1. Polydor. virg lib. 5. c. 10. Plin. hist. naural. lib. 7. cap. 19.

1. Cor. 8. & 10. Rom. 14.

The obseruation of the Lords day, hath the same authority which the Saturday had in time past. For as that was ordained to remember the creation of the world: so this was appointed for the remembrance of the instauration and renewing of the world, which is wrought by the resurrection of our Sauiour Christ. For which cause the Apostles seeme to haue ordained the celebration of it in the Churches generally. But the Iesuites esteeming that the Church now hath that authority of making vnmoueable and inuiolable lawes, which the Apostles had, they are grossely deceiued. For their both mouthes and pennes in their Ministery, were so directed of the Lord, that they could not only altogether, but not so much as one of them apart, not only not fall, but not so much as stumble, nor swarue the bredth of an haire from the truth. And therefore in respect of their doctrine, they are called, The foundations of the Church: and that whatsoeuer (without exception) they should bind vpon earth, it should be bound in heauen: and whose sins soeuer they should forgiue, that they should be forgiuen. Whereas the Ministers of the Church now, cannot bee called the foundations of the Church: as those which may either seuerally, or ioyntly in some point erre: and not whatsoeuer or whomsoeuer they should binde generally, but whatsoeuer and whomsoeuer they shall, according to the rule left by the Prophets and Apostles, binde vpon earth, shall be bound in heauen. Hereupon it commeth, that the Apostle to repaire the breach, in the Galatian Church, standeth so long vpon the proofe of his Apostleship: because the proofe thereof was the establishment of the doctrine that either he had taught before, or was to teach after in that Epistle. From thence also it came, that the false teachers which vndermined the building of the Apostle, imployed their forces to ouerthrow his Apostolicall calling, and to bring him in the common ranke of Ministers. Hereupon the Apostle feareth not to pronounce of himselfe that he had the spirit of God: and that with such boldnesse, that he doth somewhat bitingly taxe and entuite the Corinthians which had suffered some doubt thereof, to enter into their mindes, which may appeare manifestly by that which he doth other where more plainly, and without trope set downe. Finally, from thence it came, that the deceiuers to get authority to their errors, fathered their writings vnder the names of the Apostles, because as long as they remained couered vnder the credit of the Apostles writings: they were amongst the Christians not subiect so much as to any inquiry into them. And therefore the Reader may not maruell, if that the Papists would couer their feasts vnder the name of the Apostles, which were neuer cõmanded to be obserued by them; considering that the holy daies which they would bolster vp vnder the credit of the Apostles, are farre mo in number then the Iewes festiuall dayes ordained by the law. So that the Christian Church should in this poynt, be by the Apostles own institution, more ceremonious then the Synagogue it selfe, which if the Iesuites do not blush at, as a thing contrary to the nature of the Gospell, yet Augustines iudgement, whom they will pretend greatly to respect, will make them hide their faces: to whom it seemeth absurd, that the Iewes estate (in such things) should be lesse burdensome then the estate of the Church vnder the Gospell. And albeit there bee great difference between the keeping of the Saints feasts, and the solemnities of our Sauiour Christ, yet that euen those were not of the Apostles tradition, especially of that kinde of tradition that cast any yoke of necessary obedience vpon the Christians neckes: it is euident by that which Socrates writeth, that neither Christ nor his Apostles did institute any holy dayes, but that men did vse first to obserue them by custome, and that as euery man was disposed at home. Whereby it is euident, that these holy dayes came by custome, and not by commandement, by the free choyce of men, and not by constraint. And that there was this freedom in the feast of Easter; and (by the same reason) in the rest celebrated in the honour of our Sauiour Christ, it appeareth by that S. Iohn with the Churches in Asia, is reported to haue kept the Easter, as the Iewes were wont, vpon the foureteenth day of the moneth: which he would neuer haue done, if it had been a set law of the Apostles, to keepe the day which the Churches now kept. And therefore although we keepe these feasts of the Lord, yet we keepe them not as any commanded from the Apostles, with any opinion of the necessary obseruation of them. Epiphanius haref. 75. here cited, maketh no mention of Saints dayes: but onely of Pentecost and Easter, which were then kept farre otherwise then in the Popish Church. Verily Augustine knew not so much as to referre the feasts of our Sauiour to the Tradition of the Apostles poſtles : being in doubt whether they came from the Apoſtles, or ſome generall Counſels: where admitting them to come either from the one, or from the other : he doth yet make a great difference in degree of authority, between them, and thoſe which are comprehended in the ſacred ſcriptures. Ierom alledged to proue the Lent and Ember Faſts, mentioneth onely the Lenton Faſt. For anſwer whereof looke before. And in forbidding all Faſts, that fall in Pentecoſt weeke, hee thereby condemneth the Ember faſts that fall therein. The reſt is nothing but a cage and ſane of words, and come to be conſidered after, where it hath the poore aſſiſtance which the Ieſuits can affoord it. Ibid.

RHEM. [11. Not that which entreth] The Catholickes do not abſtaine from certaine meates, for that they eſteeme any meat vncleane either by creation, or by Iudaicall obſeruation : but they abſtaine for chaſtiſement of their concupiſcences. Aug. lib. de mor. Ec. Cath. c. 33. Vpon the 4. chapt v. 2.

RHEM. [18. Defile a man.] It is ſinne onely which properly defileth a man, and meates of themſelues, or of their own nature, do not defile, but ſo farre as by accident they make a man to ſinne, as the diſobedience of Gods Commandement, or of our Superiours, who forbid ſome meates for certain times and cauſes, is a ſinne. As the Apple which our firſt Parents did eate of, though of it ſelfe it did not defile them, yet being eaten againſt the Precept, it did defile. So neither fleſh nor fiſh of it ſelfe doth defile, but the breach of the Churches precept defileth. Difference of meates. Gen. 3. Catholicke abſtinence.

CARTVV. 5. 11. & 18. Defile a man.] Why do you not know your own Doctor, which ſaith, that therefore choyce is made of fiſh, rather then of other fleſh, becauſe the curſe of God came not vpon fiſh, and thoſe which were preſerued in the flood : where all other things periſhed by water. Therefore herein your doctrine ſauoureth ſtrongly of Manichiſme. Beſides that, I would know of you, wherein you differ from the Iewiſh opinion, in the polution of meates. The Iewes iudged certain meates no otherwiſe common and vncleane, then in that they were forbidden by the Lord : otherwiſe they could well abide to handle them, and to vſe them to other ſeruices; yea to giue them to be eaten vnto the Gentiles, to whom that Law was not giuen. Wherefore the pollution which you eſteeme to be in meates, riſeth vpon that they are by commandement made vnlawfull : it appeareth you keepe the ſame pollution which ſometimes was vnder the Law. Saying that the pollution which the Iewes eſteemed to be in the meates, was grounded vpon Gods commandement, who had authority to make vnlawfull certaine meates vnto his people, as the Lord both of the people, and of the meates, But now the ſame God in Ieſus Chriſt, hath made all things cleane and lawfull to be vſed: what are you which dare preſume to make them vnlawfull and vncleane to the people of God, who are neither Lords ouer the people, nor his creatures. Is your authority here greater then Peters, to whom it was not lawfull to iudge that common or uncleane, which the Lord had cleanſed : nor to make a religion in thoſe meates, the difference whereof (as touching any ſeruice of God) was cleane taken away. Neither did the people of God in any their feaſts, which (vpon occaſion) they proclaimed, euer place the Faſt in diſcerning one kinde of meate from another, but in abſtaining altogether, during the time of the faſt. As for that you pretend, of taming and ſubduing the concupiſcence of the fleſh, it is too ſimple a thing to abuſe children withall; for if it were not diſcouered by the daily practiſe of their filthineſſe. which are the princes of your full faſts, which leaue the monuments of their uncleaneſſe in all places where they come : yet it is euident that the greateſt delicacie and prouocation of the luſts of the fleſh ſtandeth in thoſe things, which you haue largeſt and commoneſt uſe of ; for beſides ſpices, wine, and ſtrange fruites, wherewith in your holieſt and ſtreighteſt faſts your tables are richly decked : the fiſh which you pretend to bee taken to abate the pride of luſt, is known to bee as it were oile put into the fire, to heate the ouen of your concupiſcences hoater, then by uſe of common and uſuall fleſh it would bee. And therefore heerein you play the right Manichies, who making a Religion in eating and drinking uſually with others, uſed notwithſtanding ſuch confections as ſurpaſſed them both in coſt and delicacie : for in refuſing fleſh they would eate of the delicateſt fruites and ſpices that were : And although they held it unlawfull to drinke wine, yet they had other compounded liquours; which were more pretious then the wine, And cited here to proue the uſuall abſtainng from certaine meates, hee doth mention no ſuch cuſtome of the Church, but onely ſheweth that certaine perſons uſed extraordinary faſting two or three daies together, none of them being conſtrained thereunto by any law or cuſtome of the Church : And therefore Auguſtine is heere idlely cited. *Aug. de mo. ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XVI.

RHEM. 1. [13 Whom say men.] Christ intending here to take order for the founding regiment and stability of his Church after his decease, and to name the person to whom hee meant to giue the generall charge thereof, would before by interrogatories draw out (and namely out of that one whom hee thought to make the chiefe) the profession of that high and principle Article, that hee was the sonne of the liuing God. Which being the ground of the Churches faith, was a necessary quality and condition in him that was to bee made Head of the same Church, and the perpetuall keeper of the said faith, and all other points thereon depending.

CARTVV. 1. [13 Whom say men.] The end of these Interrogatories is, that the disciples being confirmed by our Sauiour Christ in the confession, which hee knew they would make of him, might bee the better able to stand under the great weight of that temptation which hee see would lie upon them, by fore-telling of his death; least if they had not beene well setled in the true faith of Christ, they should at so manifest and cleare a declaration of his fearefull death haue shrunke away. And that this is the end of these Interrogatories, and not that which you do so foolishly and ungroundedly imagine: it is euident in this, that all the three Euangelists, doe immediately (to the confession of the Apostles) annexe the fore-sheing of his death: The other Apostles therefore hauing as much need to bee confirmed against this temptation as Peter, it followeth that the confession of faith here specified, with the incouragement that our Sauiour Christ giueth, for continuance and establishment therein, doth as well belong unto the rest of the Apostles, as unto Peter. And to confesse Christ to bee the Sonne of God is a necessary quality and condition, not onely in him that should bee head of the Church, as you imagine, but in euery the lowest member thereof: And therefore it is too great ignorance in you, which esteeme that our Sauiour Christ went here about to make triall of a sufficiency for the head of his Church: when this triall is insufficient to the making of the lowest minister in the house of God. But seeing the same quality and condition of Confessing Christ to bee the Sonne of God was as necessary in the rest of the Apostles which should preach the same faith in all the world, as Peter. it must needs follow that the profession of the same Article was by our Saviour Christ drawn forth by these interrogatories from them as well as from him: Wherefore the foundation of this Primacie being false, it must needs totter which is builded thereon.

RHEM. 2. [14 But they said.] When Christ asked the peoples opinion of him, the Apostles all indifferently made answer; but when hee demanded what themselues thought of him then loe Peter the mouth and head of the whole fellowship answered for all. Chrysost. hom. 55. in Mat.

CARTVV. 2. [14 But they said] All answered to the first question, but they answered by the mouth of one man: otherwise it would haue beene a confused sound and disordered noise, like unto the humming of a sort of Bees. And it is very like that they answered the former question by Peter, by whom they answered the other, But therefore the Euangelist reserued the expresse mention of Peters name to the latter question, to the end that the allusion which our Sa. Christ maketh in the next sentence thereunto, might more cleerely and euidently bee perceiued, which would not in that fulnesse haue appeared, if being placed in the answer of the former interrogatory, it had beene further remoued from the allusion and conformity of sound unto the name of Peter. Now if by this answer in the name of the rest, hee should haue rule and dominion ouer them, it followeth that hee then usurped this authority, when it was not (by the Iesuites own confession) giuen unto him untill after the resurrection of our Sauiour Christ: It must needs bee therefore that by title of head ouer the Apostles, Chrysostome meaneth onely to note the preheminence in gifts and speaking: for that the rest had made him, as in this case, so in diuers others, their mouth. And therefore other where hee communicateth this height and top of Apostleship to Andrew, Iames and Iohn. And in another place hee calleth Paul the chiefe of all the Apostles: but whatsoeuer hee meant, that his meaning was not to make him ruler ouer the rest, it is manifest by that hee writeth of the execution of that office, which was committed unto Peter, where hee willeth all to consider, how S. Peter did all by consent of the disciples that hee did nothing with authority, nothing with rule or commandingly.

Chrysost. hom. 38. in Math.
Chrysost. hom. 3. in Act.

RHEM. 3. [17 Blessed art thou.] Though some other (as Nathanael Ioan. 1. 49.) seeme to haue before beleeued and professed the same thing for which Peter is heere counted blessed, yet it may bee plainely gathered by this place, and so S. Hilary and others thinke, that none before this did further utter of him then that hee was the Sonne of God by adoption as other Saints be, though more excellent then other be. For it was of congruity and Christs speciall appointment, that hee upon whom hee entended to found his new Church, and whose faith hee would make infallible, should haue the preheminence of this first profession of Christs naturall diuinity, or that hee was by nature the very Sonne of God, a thing so farre aboue the capacity of nature, reason, flesh and bloud, and so repugnant to Peters sense and sight of Christs humanity; flesh and infirmities, that for the beleefe and publicke profession thereof hee is counted blessed, as Abraham was for his faith: and hath great promises for himselfe and his posterity, as the said Patriarke had for him and his seed. According as S. Basil saith, because hee excelled in faith, hee receiued the building of the Church committed to him.

Hilar. can. 6. in Mat. & lib. 6. de Trinit.
Chrysost. hom. 55. in in Math.
Basil. lib. 2. adu. Eunom.

CARTVV. 3. [17 Blessed art thou.] Would Christ haue called him a true Israelite that beleeued the Messias to be but a bare and naked man? Would hee haue called that a beliefe, especially such a one, as by a promise annexed he would confirme and establish him in? Are you also so ignorant, that you know neither the force of the Pronoune, nor of the Article? For in that hee saith, Thou art &c. hee appropriateth that title unto him: And in that hee saith not simply, Thou art the Sonne of God, but That Sonne of God, hee noteth, that hee was the naturall Sonne of God. And if the confession of Nathanael will not argue an acknowledgement of the Diuinity of our Sauiour Christ, it will bee hard for you to proue it by this confession of Peter, there being as full speeches to that point in the one as in the other. But if Nathaniel did not confesse him to bee the naturall Sonne of God: Who hath daubed up your eies that you could not see the cleere confession of his Diuinity by Elizabeth the mother of Iohn: by the holy virgin Mary, in her worthy song: by Zacharias Iohns father, in his noble hymne; by the two famous persons, Simeon and Anna, whom he had chosen to beare witnesse of him in Ierusalem: by Iohn Baptist, who went to prepare his waies: and hath more cleere testimonies of his Diuinity, then hee had Sermons: By a Gentile and Souldier, who opposing his estate unto our Sauiour Christs, in that hee was a bare man, and under the power of another, gaue to vnderstand that our Sauiour Christ was more then a man, & unnerneath the power & commandment of none: Besides that confessing himselfe unworthy to receiue him under the roofe of his house hee gaue the same confession of his Diuinity that Iohn Baptist had done before: when hee said, that hee was unworthy (in stouping) to loose the latchet of his shoe.

Luke 1. 43. Luke 1. 47. Luke 1. 69. 76. Luke 2. 38. Iohn 1. 7. 15 26. 27. 29. 30. 34. 36. &c.

Here therefore Peters Primacy receiueth another deadly wound: For if it bee meete that the Primacy ouer all the Church should follow the first confession of the diuinity of our Sauiour Christ, Peter commeth far too late, to weare this crowne, being preuented by numbers, and euen by women, who are the first that wee reade to haue made confession heereof. And seeing that these knew it so well, it is much more like that the Apostles which had companied with our Sauiour Christ so long, did know it: And the Papists which to aduance Peter do openly, (as the Iesuites heere couertly) deny them this knowledge, ought to blush at their ignorance: for seeing our Sauiour Christ forbade them, as well as Peter, that they should not utter it, it is manifest, that they knew it as well as he; for otherwise it had been ridiculous, to haue bidden them to conceale that, which they knew not. And if they say, that now at the last they knew it, by Peters confession;

feſſion: it is abſurd that our Sauiour ſhould ſend his twelue Apoſtles, into all Galile, to preach him vnto the people, before they knew what he was. Moſt vnlikely alſo, that the Apoſtles, (which had not by ſo many famous Sermons, & notable Miracles of our Sauiour Chriſt, profited to the knowledge of him to be the Sonne of God) ſhould ſuddenly, with one word of Peters mouth, know and beleeue the ſame. But what need we trauell in diſputation againſt theſe franticke Ieſuites; when before the time of this confeſſion, all the Apoſtles gaue cleare and open teſtimony, that Chriſt was the ſonne of the liuing God. And the teſtimony of Chryſoſtom, before by you alledged, that Peter here was the mouth of the reſt (which is alſo confirmed by Auguſtine) is manifeſtly againſt you, for they could haue no mouth of Peters to ſpeake it by, vnleſſe in their hearts they had before beleeued it. And Auguſtine doth plainly affirme, that he being one, gaue anſwer for all. Nay it is euident, that they all before this time, had confeſſed that he was verily the Sonne of God; and worſhipped him as his onely begotten ſonne. Neither hath Hilary any thing contrary to this. In the firſt place, he hath nothing of this matter, nor any thing that ſoundeth to the aduantage of the Ieſuites. In the other place he teacheth plainly, that the Apoſtles and others knew before this time, that Chriſt was the ſonne of God, that he was the Meſſias of the world; that all things were giuen vnto him of his Father: which could not be, vnleſſe they had knowne him to be the eternall ſonne of God. Onely he affirmeth, that the Apoſtles knew not before this time ſo diſtinctly the perſon of the ſon, and the maner of his generation, of the ſubſtance of his father before all worlds. Chryſoſtom indeed is of your iudgement in this point of the Apoſtles ignorance vntill now, whoſe opinion I leaue to be conſidered, of that which hath bin alledged, it is enough for vs that if the reſt of the Apoſtles (before this confeſſion) did either not know, or not know ſo diſtinctly the perſon of the ſonne, that Peter himſelfe did not know it: for conſideriug that Peter, being (by Chryſoſtoms owne ſaying) their mouth in all things, which hee here confeſſed, it is neceſſary that the ſame, whatſoeuer, and how much ſoeuer, muſt needs haue been before in the hearts of the Apoſtles, or euer they could make Peter their mouth to vtter it. Beſide that, the ground whereupon Chryſoſtoms ſentence is ſtaied, is vntrue. For to proue that they had not the true faith of the ſonne of God before this time, he alledgeth that they were not pronounced bleſſed before; the contrary whereof is manifeſt. And Chryſoſtome himſelfe is better aduiſed otherwhere: which vpon the confeſſion that the Apoſtles gaue, that he was verily the ſonne of God, affirmeth that their faith in our Sauiour Chriſt, was greatly increaſed by the diuine workes which hee wrought vpon the waters. Now the Ieſuites (I thinke) will confeſſe, that at their firſt comming to him, they had this iudgement of him: that he was the chiefeſt of the ſonnes of God by adoption: and namely of Nathanael they preciſely affirme it: who of ſome is ſuppoſed to haue been one of the twelue, and the ſame which is called Bartholmew: of other ſome one of the 70. If then they or he, had at their firſt comming, this iudgement of Chriſt: their faith afterward, and before this time, greatly increaſing, it muſt needs follow that they beleeued that he was the naturall Sonne of God: for to riſe vp higher in their iudgement of him, they could not but ſo conceiue. Neither could Chryſoſtom in any good language of Canaan, haue giuē their beleefe the name of cōmendable faith in any degree vnleſſe it had embraced morethen the bare & naked humanity of our Sauior Chriſt.

Vpon the ſecond of Ioh.

We paſſe by the hold which we might haue of Denis and others of your coate, which do vtterly miſlike that Nathanaels confeſſion, reached no further then vnto the ſonneſhip which is by adoption. As for Baſil, he is idlely cited: nothing being affirmed by him, which wee doe not willlingly grant, whereas to haue ſaid ſomewhat for you, he ſhould haue ſaid; that to him alone the building of the Church was committed. But here it is by the way to bee noted, that theſe new Diuines, which in other places, and in other men, make ſo light account of faith, denying vnto it the power to make men bleſſed: in this place, and in Peters perſon (but yet for the Popes aduantage) aſcribe vnto it, the vertue of making him bleſſed, and infinite number beſide, which falling before the beaſt of Rome, ſhall bee ſaued: although they knew no more of the true faith, then the man in the Moone, whereas God accepteth not the perſon of any. And Peter himſelfe acknowledgeth like precious faith vnto his in other faithfull, and Saints of God. And S. Iude calleth the faith of all the godly moſt holy.

RHEM. 4. [18. And I ſay to thee.] Our Lord recompenſeth Peter for his confeſſion, giuing him a great reward, in that vpon him hee builded his Church. Theophilactus vpon this place.

CARTVV. 4. [18. And I ſay to thee.] Peter in preſenting the Apoſtles confeſſion as well as his owne, muſt needs be holden to haue receiued reward in theirs as well as in his own name; or elſe Chriſt had rewarded one and the ſame confeſſion with a diuers & differing reward. There was no difference of the confeſſion of Peter, and the reſt, but onely that Peter had the labour of the vtterance of a few words, which any of the Apoſtles would haue eaſily diſpatched, if they had not put their words in his mouth. Wherefore as the fore-man of the inqueſt receiuing praiſe of his iuſt verdict, or ſhame of the contrary, receiueth them not for himſelfe alone, but for the reſidue of the ſworne men with him: euen ſo it is in this caſe. And Theophilact hath nothing to reſtraine the building of the Church vpon Peter, more then vpon the reſt of the Apoſtles. But he interpreting himſelfe by and by, what he meaneth by building the Church vpon Peter, ſheweth and diſcourſeth that it was builded vpon the faith and confeſſion of Peter, as vpon the foundation: and that the keyes were giuen to the reſt of the Apoſtles.

RHEM. 5. [Thou art Peter] Chriſt (in the firſt of Iohn, v. 42.) foretold and appointed, that this man then named Simon, ſhould afterward be called Cephas, or Petrus, that is to ſay a Rocke, not then vttering the cauſe, but now expreſſinng the ſame, videlicet (as S Ciril writeth, For that vpon him, as vpon a firme Rocke, his Church ſhould be builded. Whereunto S. Hilary agreeing, ſaith, O happy foundation of the Church in the impoſing of thy new name, &c. And yet Chriſt here doth not ſo much call him by the name Peter, a Rocke, as hee doth affirme him to be a Rocke: ſignifying by that Metaphor Metaphor, both that he was designed for the foundation and ground worke of his house, which is the Church: and also that he should be of inuincible force, firmity, durableneſſe, and ſtabilitie; to ſuſtaine all the windes, waues, and ſtormes, that might fall or beat againſt the ſame. And the aduerſaries obiecting againſt this, that Chriſt onely is the Rocke or Foundation, wrangle againſt the very expreſſe Scriptures, and Chriſts owne words, giuing both the name and the thing to this Apoſtle. And the ſimple may learne by S. Baſils words how the caſe ſtandeth. Though (ſaith hee) *Peter be a Rocke, yet is he not a rocke as Chriſt is. For Chriſt is the true vnmoueable rock of himſelfe. Peter is vnmoueable by Chriſt the Rocke. For Ieſus doth communicate and impart his dignities, not voyding himſelfe of them, but holding them to himſelfe, beſtoweth them alſo vpon others. RHEM. [18 And vpon this Rock] Vpon that which hee ſaid Peter was, will hee build his Church: and therefore by moſt euident ſequele hee foundeth his Church vpon Peter. And the Aduerſaries wrangling againſt this, do againſt their own conſcience and knowlege, ſpecially ſeeing they know and confeſſe that in Chriſts words ſpeaking in the Syriacke tongue, there was no difference at all between Petrus and Petra: yea and that the Greek wordes alſo though differing in termination, yet ſignifie one thing, to wit a Rock or Stone, as themſelues alſo tranſlate it, Ioh. 1. 42. So that they wich profeſſe to follow the Hebrew or Syriack and the Greek, and to tranſlate immediately out of them into Latine or Engliſh, ſhould if they had dealt ſincerely, haue thus turned Chriſts words, Thou art a Rock, and vpon this Rock: or Thou art Peter, and vpon this Peter will I build my Church: For ſo Chriſt ſpake by their own confeſſion without any difference. Which doth expreſly ſtoppe them of all their euaſions, that Petrus the former word is referred to the Apoſtle: and Petra the latter word, either to Chriſt onely, or to Peters faith onely: neither the ſaid originall tongues bearing it, nor the ſequele of the words, Vpon this, ſuffering any relation in the world but to that which was ſpoken of in the ſame ſentence next before: neither the words following which are directly addreſſed to Peters perſon, nor Chriſts intention by any meanes admitting it, which was not to make himſelfe or to promiſe to himſelfe to bee the head or foundation of the Church. For his father gaue him that dignity, and hee took not that honour to himſelfe, nor ſent himſelfe, nor took the keies of heauen of himſelfe, but all of his father. Hee had his commiſſion the very houre of his incarnation: And though S. Auguſtine ſometimes referre the word (Petra) to Chriſt in this ſentence (which no doubt hee did becauſe the terminations in Latine are diuers, and becauſe hee examined not the nature of the originall wordes which Chriſt ſpake, nor of the Greek, And therefore the aduerſaries which otherwiſe flie to the tongues, ſhould not in this caſe alleage him) yet hee neuer denyeth but Peter alſo is the Rock and head of the Church; ſaying that himſelfe expounded it of Peter * in many places, and alleageth alſo Saint Ambroſe for the ſame in his hymne which the Church ſingeth. And ſo do wee alleage the holy Councell of Chalcedon, Act. 3. pag. 118. Tertullian, de præſcript Origen. Hom. 5. in Exod. S. Cyprian. De vnit. Ec. S. Hilarie, Can. 16. in Mat. S. CARTVV. 5. [18 Thou art Peter, and vpon this Rock.] For our parts wee can affoord you well this ſenſe of the place, that vpon Petra as vpon a Rock the Church of Chriſt is builded, but to ſo little aduantage of yours as the ſame which you would make the anchor of the Anti-chriſtian ſeat of Rome; ſhall be found to be the rocke and ſands, whereat that patched and rotten barke is broken all to ſhiuers.

But leaſt you ſhould thinke that wee are driuen vpon this interpretation by the puffe of your proofes: wee will firſt ſhew the ſmall force and valew that is in your reaſons, and the ſhameleſſe treachery in abuſing the teſtimony of the fathers, not onely in the cauſe, wherein they generally and with one conſent directly fight againſt you, but in the very interpretation which you haue followed, which is almoſt as generally forſaken of them. Againſt them, that ſay that by two words differing onely in termination, the Euangeliſt meant to note out diuers things, whereunto they ſhould bee applyed: you anſwer that both the words ſignifie one thing, which is accorded by thoſe of our ſide. The former being the Attick Dialect, the other being the Common Tongue, whereas you ſhould haue ſhewed that becauſe they ſignifie both one thing, therfore they muſt needs be applied vnto one and the ſame thing: which you being not able to do (your ſelues not daring to deny but that the word Rocke, will agree as well to our Sauiour Chriſt, as to Peter) you fell into this witleſſe anſwer. Indeed two words ſignifying one thing, cannot in proper ſpeech, bee carried to any thing, but vnto that one. But where the ſignification is vnproper (as heere it is, where Simon is called a Rock) there it may agree, to as many things, as haue likeneſſe or kindred, in conditions with a Rock, as Peter hath. Secondly, you flie for ſuccour to the Syrian Paraphraſt, where as of a ſword, which you haue no skill to handle, you cut your ſelues: for notwithſtanding, that hee uſe one and the ſame word in both places, without any difference of termination: yet forſomuch as hee made his paraphraſe long after the time that our Sauiour Chriſt ſpake theſe wotds, being able to ſet downe the ſentence. yet was hee not able to do it in the ſame wordes that our Sauiour Chriſt ſpake. But the Ieſuites ignorant of the riches of the tongue, eſteeme that there was no Syrian word beſides Cepha, wherewith hee might vary his ſpeech, as the Euangeliſt hath done, where they might haue found, that in that tongue Abna hath the ſame ſignification with it, yea, if they had looked well about them they might haue found that the Syrian tongue affordeth the ſelfe-ſame Paranomaſie, and alluſion of words which the Euangeliſt vſeth in the Greek tongue, for in the Syrian tongue Ceph signifieth a stone, as well as Cepha And therefore if there be any place of coniecture, it is very like that our Sauiour Christ, said, that thou art Ceph, and vpon this Cepha: or else Thou art Cepha, and vpon this Ceph will I build my Church: Which thing that the Euangelist might attaine vnto, he vsed the words πέτρος and πέτρα.

There remaineth the best reason of the Relatiue, which being referred to that which goeth next before, cannot be applied to any thing but to Peter. It is true, that the relatiue hath for the most part, relation vnto that which goeth next before. Howbeit if we should set downe all the examples wherein it hath regard vnto that which goeth before further of; yea sometimes (especially amongst the Hebrewes) vnto that which followeth after, it would make a booke of it selfe, as your selues know, if you know any thing. This reason therefore being able somewhat to moue a friend, is not able to force an enemy. Now you being not able to win this Interpretation, especially in that sence, by the words of the text: are much lesse able to get it, either by the scope and drift of our Sauiour Christ, or by that which goeth before, or commeth after, as may appeare in part by that which hath been said, and further shall by that which followeth. And being repulsed of the word, let vs see what shelter you get amongst the Doctors. Cyrill commeth first, who saith, that the Church was builded vpon Peter, as vpon a rocke. The same Cyril saith, the Rocke is nothing else but the strong and vnshaken faith of the disciple, meaning Peter. If therefore you gaine any thing by one sentence, you loose it by another. That both of them stand to the ruine of your cause, it shall appeare afterward. Hilarie followeth, whom you haue manifestly falsified: for hee hauing spoken of the faith & confession of Peter, doth cõmend them and not Peter, to be the happy foundation of the Church, which he proueth by this reason, that the Lord in respect of them, gaue Simon a new name, and called him Peter. This may appeare by other testimonies of the same Father, where he saith, This is the onely happy rocke of faith which Peter confessed with his mouth. And again vpon this rocke of confession is the Church builded. This faith is the foundation of the Church: against this faith the gates of hell are weake: this faith hath the keyes of heauen, bindeth and looseth, &c. After commeth Basil, who as he here calleth Peter the Rocke: so otherwhere he calleth faith the firme foundation, whereupon euery one must be layd. And delareth that, that is the rocke, where we haue couert and protection from the terror of the Lord. And the very place it selfe, which you haue alledged, doth manifestly ouerthrow your whole cause. For Peter being a rocke, as he was a light of the world: it followeth, that that title of the light of the world, being common to all the Apostles, the other cannot be seuerall to Peter alone. In Augustine your impudency is notable, which muster him for your side, that recanteth in plaine words his exposition whereby he had expounded Peter to be the rocke, affirming the rocke, whereupon the Church is builded, to be the confession of Peter, and Peter himselfe to haue that name, in that hee was a figure of the Church, declaring thereby, that euery one of the Church is a Peter as well as he. Finally, hee affirmeth, that hee had most often expounded that place of Mathew otherwise then to make Peter the rock of the Church, as may partly appeare by the places quoted in the Margent. You alledge the Councel of Chalcedon, which of it selfe were enough, if Peter who was dead more then foure hundred yeares before, gaue (as Pope Leo saith) his voyce, and was president there. That Councell saith, that Peter is the Rock whereupon the Church is builded. But that the meaning of the Councell was not to lift up the head of the Bishops of Rome (the supposed successors of Peter) aboue other Bishops, it is euident, by that it decred, That Egypt should hold this; that is to say, that the Bishop of Alexandria should haue power ouer all things there, because the same custome was obserued of the Bishop of Rome, and that the Bishop of Antioche should bee likewise. It was ordered also in the same Councell that the Church of Constantinople, should haue the like dignity or priuileges with the Church of Rome. Look also how the same Councell reserueth all controuersies that rise; not vnto the knowledge of the Bishop of Rome: but vnto the proper Bishop of the Prouince. Touching Tertullians testimonies, I might oppose his doubtfull iudgement hereof in another place, his full opinion that this belonged vnto Peters person, and not to the Church of Rome. But the place it selfe, which you alledge is so beneficiall to vs, in the matter and question in controuersie, that wee may well spare you those helpes: for speaking of the remedy and resistance, which they had against heresies in the authority of the originall and mother Churces, which held the same doctrine or tradition which they had receiued of the Apostles, hee ascribeth no more to Rome, then to any other of the Churches, which were founded by the Apostles.

Origen, confesseth that Peter is the foundation of the Church, but that hee meant not thereby (as you do) to make this proper to S. Peter, you may learne by that hee saith otherwhere. Hee is a Rock. Whosoeuer is the scholler of Christ, and vpon such a Rock, all Church doctrine is builded, if thou thinke that the whole Church is built vpon Peter, what wilt thou say of Iohn the son of Thunder, and of euery one of the Apostles: shall we dare to say, that against Peter onely the gates of hell shall not prevaile: or that the keyes of the kingdom of heauen are committed by Christ to him alone, with diuers other sayings to the same purpose, both before and after. Cyprian also affirming, that vpon Peter the Church was builded: declareth that it was builded as well vpon the rest of the Apostles, as vpon him, when he saith, That the rest of the Apostles were the same that Peter was, equall both in honour and power: and that for this cause, this was spoken vnto Peter being but one: that the Church by that manner of speech might be shewed to be but one. The same testimony of Hilary, which was before alledged: is here in the same sentence, and for the same cause repeated, but yet it is disguised with a new quotation; for vpon his exposition of this place, and the 16 Canon of S. Mathew, which are all one, are here brought in as strangers, which comming out of diuers places and quarters of Hilaries workes, knew not one another, which we would haue passed by, if the same fault had not been committed so often in one Chapter. Wherein, beside Hilary, both Augustine and Cyril are likewise vnfruitfully repeated. But herein it befalleth vnto you, contrary to your profession. For professing worldly pouerty, you commonly abound in all worldly wealth: but making great shew of worldly wealth in antiquity, to relieue the beggery of your cauſe, you are found in that penury, that the rouing and roging ſtagers are: which for want of perſons to furniſh their place, with the turning of a coate, or change of a viſard, cauſe one and the ſame perſon to play diuers parts: Although your iudgement bee not great, yet wee could well affoord you ſome more diſcretion then to make choice of Ambroſe for your ſuccour in this place; for there were other places in him, that had ſome more colour. Wee rather, think that ſome man hath mocked him with it, as that which layeth on load againſt you, as it were with both hands, for hee ſaith, This title of a Rock was communicated vnto Peter, becauſe hee had of Chriſt the rock the ſtedineſſe of faith. And ſpeaking vnto all Chriſtians hee ſaith: Endeauour therefore, that thou maiſt bee the rock: wherefore ſeek not the Rock without thee, but within thee: faith is thy rock, faith is the foundation of the Church, &c. which is alſo confirmed by him otherwhere. Ierome alſo being called to hold up this Popiſh Babylon, bringeth not one ſtone towards the building thereof: For in the ſame places, where hee calleth Peter the rocke of the Churches, hee affirmeth that the reſt of the Apoſtles, were equally rockes as hee was, and receiued the keies of the kingdom of heauen as well as hee, that the ſtrength of the Church was grounded on them equally: onely hee affirmeth that there was one choſen amongſt the reſt, that a head being appointed, the occaſion of ſchiſme ſhould bee taken away, whereby he meant nothing elſe, but that to auoid confuſion in their meetings: hee ſhould propound the matters of conſultation, gather the voices, pronounce the ſentence. This may appeare to bee his meaning, in that hee otherwhere declareth that Peter had the ſame authority ouer the reſt of the Apoſtles, which the Biſhop had amongſt the Elders of the Church, whom hee affirmeth together with the Biſhop to haue gouerned the Church by common Councell. Hereupon it came that the Councell of Epheſus in their letter to the Emperour Theodoſius and Valentinian calleth Cyril the head of the Biſhops that were aſſembled, not for that hee had authority ouer the reſt, but for that hee was preſident in that Councell and gouerned the actions thereof, in the manner which hath beene before alleaged, For touching Peters chiefety otherwaies, Ierome himſelfe doth teach what it was, namely that hee was ſo head of the Apoſtles, as Plato was of the Philoſophers: which is nothing elſe but to haue ſome ſingularity of gift aboue them. And Ierome vpon this place, ſaying: That the Biſhops and Elders notwithſtanding it, take vpon them ſome of the proud lookes of the Phariſes: declareth euidently that the Biſhop of Rome, which challengeth (vnder colour thereof) ſuch an infinite power doth as farre out-runne the Phariſes in a ſwelling pride, as the horſe-men out-goe the footemen: wee might haue ſaid, as the Hare doth the Snaile: but that wee had rather vſe heerin the compariſon of the Prophet. Finally, if you will, of this word, head of the Apoſtles, conclude an abſolute authority, you may get Peter himſelfe a maiſter to rule ouer him, conſidering that Chryſoſtom doth likewiſe call Paul head of the Apoſtles, But Ierome proceedeth further in the place by you alleaged: For asking, why hee did not rather giue this preheminence to Iohn then to Peter: hee anſwereth not (as you) for that hee beleeued in Chriſt or confeſſed him more then Iohn, but becauſe Iohn being very yong, Peter was further ſtricken in yeares: whereby appeareth, that (there being equality in giftes, and ability for the function of the Biſhop) not alwaies the Biſhop of Rome, but (by Ierome) the ancienter in yeares, ought to haue the preheminence amongſt the Biſhops.

Epiphanius commeth next, who affirmeth that the Church was builded vpon Peter: But that his meaning is not thereby to aduance the credit of the Biſhop of Rome, it may appeare in that he affirmeth that the Biſhop of Alexandria had the rule and iuriſdiction of all Egypt, and of the Regions thereabout, euen according as wee haue ſhewed it, to haue beene decreed by ancient Councels, that hee ſhould haue rule of them, as the Biſhop of Rome ouer his Territories. Touching Chryſoſtome hee is expreſly againſt you, expreſly interpreting vpon this rock his faith and confeſſion.

Pope Leo his teſtimony, wee doe not much eſteeme of, as of one that was buſie in his daies to get vnto himſelfe a good part of the vſurped authority which the Biſhop of Rome exerciſeth, as it appeareth in the ſame Epiſtle, by the reſiſtance that was made againſt him by the Biſhops of France, and namely by one Hillary Biſhop of Vienna: and the ſmall valew that hee is to bee eſteemed of, appeareth alſo by the exceſſiue price (which for his own gaine) hee ſetteth vpon Peter: lifting him vp euen into Chriſts throne of royall Maieſty, for when in the ſame Epiſtle, hee affirmeth that hee was receiued into the fellowſhip of Chriſts indiuiſible or inſeparable vnity: and when hee giueth to Peter the power of inſpiring men with the holy Ghoſt after his death, making the holy Spirit, to be the ſpirit of Peter, as it is of the Father and of the Sonne, wee think it high time to ſet him at naught, which to ſet his own chaire in heauen, caſteth the Lord himſelfe down to the earth; matching and mating him with a ſinfull man. As for Pope Gregorie, whether it were of contention becauſe Iohn the Biſhop of Conſtantinople challenged the title of Vniuerſall Biſhop, or whether it were in ſincerity, wee cannot preſcily ſay; this one thing wee may bee bold of, that in this caſe hee is for vs directly againſt you: affirming boldly, that hee is in pride the fore-runner of Anti-chriſt, which calleth himſelfe the vniuerſall Biſhop, or deſireth ſo to be called; alſo that hee is againſt the minde of the Goſpel, againſt S. Peter, againſt the Churches and againſt the Canons; Further, that it is a New, a proud and pompous, a ſuperſtitious and prophane name, with many other reproachfull titles, which being bound together and laid in the neck of it, they would preſſe it downe into the bottomeleſſe pit of hell, from whence it came. And in the very place which you alleaged, hee denyeth flatly that Peter can bee called an Vniuerſal Apoſtle.

Laſt of all vnder the name of Others is brought in Theodoret, as if he had diuers waiting on him, which notwithſtanding commeth ſolilary and alone: Now this other, not Others, what ſaith hee? Hee ſpeaketh of Peter the firſt foundation: if hee bee the firſt, then there was a ſecond and a third at the leaſt: But that ſecond or third cannot bee our Sauiour Chriſt, it followeth therefore that they were ſome other men, that hee ioyneth with Peter in the title of the foundation of the Church. And those (out of all controuersie) Theodoret meant to bee the rest of the Apostles.

Math. 16. Therefore calling Peter the first Foundation, in respect that hee is called the first of the Apostles, which how trimly it feedeth either the authority of Peter ouer the rest, or the Bishops of Romes supremacy, it hath been noted.

Hereupon it may be seene, how amongst these Doctors which are brought in a mummery: the greatest part either expound it of the faith and confession of Peter, or else expound it so to bee builded vpon Peter, as that it is builded equally vpon the other Apostles, as well as vpon him. Also, that those which affirme it to be builded upon Peter: neither affirme it builded vpon him alone, which ought to haue been shewed, nor yet establish thereby any primacy of the Bishop of Rome ouer all the rest. But of the contrary part (Leo onely excepted which began to roare after his prey) they do all vtterly ouerturne the tyrannous vsurpation of the Bishop of Rome. For our part, wee might adde to these testimonies, others which haue expounded faith to be the foundation of the Church, as of Gregory Nissene, and Bernard; but we will take a shorter way, and offer vnto you the testimony of one of the birds of your own feather: whereby your vntruth may the better appeare: Vnderstand therefore, that one Ionas, Bishop of Orleans, in his inuectiue that hee made against Claudius, a Spanish Priest, for that he denied the worshipping of Images, saith after this sort: Many (saith he) and almost all, do expound these words, (vpon this Rock) of the faith of Peter, which faith is common to the whole Church; yea what if the Pope himselfe do so interprete it: I thinke you will beare some reuerence to his interpretation. His words are, That by this rock is meant the soundnesse of faith. You therefore deale ignorantly or unfaithfully, when you adde, for though sometimes they say the Church to be builded vpon Peters faith: in stead that you should haue said, many times, and almost at all times. And now what is your answer to the Fathers in this case? Verily not onely vnlearned, as you giue the charge vpon vs, but very brutish; in such sort, that it seemeth by this disputation of the stone, your selues are, (for want of all iudgement) euen turned into stones: for you say It is not to be vnderstood of Peters faith, separated from Peter, or in any other man, but vpon faith, as in him: Where, who hath pulled out your eyes, that Abacuc. 2.2 Heb. 11. you could not see, that the Prophet so plainly teacheth, that euery one is saued by his owne faith. That the Church under the Law was grounded vpon this faith, as well as the Church vnder
2. Cor. 10. the Gospell: seeing the Apostle sheweth, that by the faith in Christ, they ouercame most dangerous temptations; against the which, as against the gates of hell, they by faith preuailed, and seeing also, S. Paul declareth, that they had the same Sacrament (which are the seales of faith) that we haue. It must needs follow, that they were grounded vpon the same faith that wee are. But they could not be grounded vpon the particular and personall faith of Peter, that was not then borne:
1. Cor. 13. therefore the faith whereupon the Church is builded, cannot be restrained to the speciall faith of Peter. Moreouer, seeing Peters faith is now done away, after he hath obtained that which he beleeued, and continued no longer then in this life: it followeth, that if the Church should be builded upon the speciall and personall faith of Peter: that it is builded vpon nothing, and vpon that which is not extant.

Origen. Ambrose. Ionas. Last of all, the Fathers themselues do manifestly turne vp-side downe, this sottish answer, when they say, partly that euery faithfull man, partly that euery mans owne faith is the foundation and rocke: and that themselues shall be like Peter, if they beleeue as Peter did. And your owne Popish Bishop affirmeth, that the faith of Peter is Common to the Catholicke Church: shewing how euery one by himselfe vnfouldedly beleeueth that which he did, and not confusedly and intricately the same personall faith which was in Peter. Neuertheless, forsomuch as both the name of Peter immediatly going before, and the word of the keyes immediatly following after, doe apparantly note out, the vertue & efficacie of the ministery of the word: the latter being out of all controuer-
Mark. 3. 16. 17. sie, and the former being apparantly marked out by the Euangelist: it may seeme not so proper to refer the word Rock barely & only to the faith of Peter. For seeing it is euident, that the Ministery of Peter is here spoken of, and his head lifted vp aboue the head of numbers in regard thereof; it is not inconuenient that by the word Rocke, should be meant something else then faith, which is common to all Christians. It is not therefore the thing which the truth of this cause lieth vpon, that it may not be thus expounded: that upon this Peter the Church is builded. For whereas vpon this interpretation, there may seeme to rise two inconueniences, one of establishing a primacy vnto Peter, aboue all the rest, and the other, of shaking the faith of the Church, which (by this interpretation) seemeth to be laid upon the brittle foundation of flesh and bloud: it shall euidently appeare that there is no perill in either. And for the forme, it hath been shewed, that Peter making this confession in the name of the rest of the Apostles, he must necessarily receiue this promise, as well in their names as in his own. Wherefore it followeth, that they were rockes, whereupon the Church is builded, as well as he. For when by the rock is meant stableness and vnmoueableness: let them assigne (if they can) any more wauering in the rest of the Apostles, then was in Peter after they were called to that charge. And albeit our Sauiour Christ gaue certaine names in the making of the Apostles, as proper vnto certaine of them: yet the names being proper, the things signified by the names were common to all. Hereupon it commeth, that although
Mar. 3. 17. the name of Thunders was giuen to Iames and Iohn alone; yet the thing it selfe to haue been common, not onely to the Apostles, but also to the seuenty Disciples: it appeareth in that it is shewed, that by their preaching as by a thunder, the Diuell as it were a lightning, did fall from heauen.
Luke 10. 18 And the reason why our Sauiour Christ gaue to Simon rather the name of Peter, then to any of the rest of the Apostles, is in all likelihood, for that hee foreseeing his horrible fall, would giue him Apoc. 21. 14 such a name, as in the comfort whereof he might easilier rise vp againe. Secondly, S. Iohn doth put vs out of all this feare, of setting Peter (by this title) aboue the rest of the Apostles: when he declareth that the twelue Apostles are the twelue foundations of Ierusalem, which is the Citty and Church of God; making the rest of the Apostles foundations as well as Peter. Whereunto commeth meth the expreſſe teſtimonie of the Apoſtle, who affirmeth, that the Church is builded vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles. Thirdly, the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaking moſt honourably of Peter, and noting out the great preheminence that he had in the Church, & the greateſt weight and ſtreſſe that he bare in the ſame, giueth him another title then that which hee giueth vnto Iames and Iohn, whom he calleth Pillars of the Church, hauing regard vnto the bulding of the Temple, the weight whereof ſtood upon Pillars. *Eph. 2. 20. Laſt of all, Paul affirming, that he builded not vpon any other mans foundatiõ: doth plainly declare that there was ſome part of the building, wherof he was (next under Chriſt) the foundation, & that Peters foundation is not ſo large, nor ſo broad as our Sa. Chriſts: ſeeing that a man building vpon the foundation of Chriſt, might notwithſtanding build the foundation of Peter. Wherefore the difference of the foundation of S. Peter from our Sauiour Chriſts, is not onely (as you place it) in that it is vnmoueable in it ſelfe; and Saint Peters vnmoueable by him; but in that our Sauiour Chriſt is a foundation which beareth vp the whole building, whereas Peters foundation hath but a twelfth part of the bredth thereof: the whole number of the Apoſtles anſwering that in the ſecondary and miniſteriall foundation, which our Sauiour alone performeth in the firſt and the principall, which may appeare by another title of the light of the world giuen vnto them. Rom. 15. 20. Math. 5.

Now touching the other difficulty of ſhaking the Church whileſt it is thus laid vpon the Apoſtles, which were but mortall and ſinfull men: it is eaſily avoyded by a Trope and manner of ſpeech vſuall in the Scripture, and all other writings, which vſeth the ſubiect for that which was annexed unto it: when therefore it is ſaid, that Peter is the foundation of the Church, the meaning is, that the doctrine of faith which Peter preached is the foundation thereof. For albeit Peter touching his priuate perſon, were after a ſort a rocke, inaſmuch as he hauing beleeued truely in the Sonne of God, could neuer fall from the ſaluation which is in Chriſt; yet notwithſtanding (in that reſpect) hee was himſelfe onely vnmoueable, but not able to beare vp one poore ſoule in a Church: much leſſe the whole Church. But hauing regard to his publicke Miniſtery, and to the doctrine which he taught in it, he is verily a rocke which beareth up and holdeth many. And therefore the Church is not ſaid to be built vpon Simon, which name hee retained euen ſometime after he had beleeued: but vpon Peter, which name was giuen him when he was ordained vnto the miniſtery of the word. The ſame reaſon there is of the reſt of the Apoſtles, which are likewiſe called foundations of the Church. Of all which, both in Peter and in them, wee haue the Apoſtle Paul a moſt vndoubted Interpreter of S. Iohn: who affirming that his deſire was to preach the Goſpell in thoſe places where Chriſt was not once named before, leaſt he ſhould build vpon anothers mans foundation, declareth manifeſtly, that the doctrine of the Apoſtles was their foundation: conſidering that if he preached where they had preached before, he ſhould therefore haue preached vpon their foundation or firſt Miniſtery, For vpon themſelues, hee could not preach when they hauing left their doctrine behinde, had withdrawn themſelues to ſome other places. This appeareth yet more euidently, when he affirmeth, that the Church is builded not onely vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles, but alſo vpon the foundation of the Prophets. Nothing therefore of the Prophets, being left at that time, wherein he wrote, but onely their writings and doctrine: it followeth neceſſarily, that their doctrine muſt needs bee the foundation wherewith the Church was vnderlaid. Iohn 4. 14. Rom. 15. 20. Epheſ. 2. 20

RHEM. 6. [18. Rocke.] The aduerſaries hearing alſo the fathers ſometimes ſay, that Peter had theſe promiſes and prerogatiues, as bearing the perſon of all the Apoſtles, or of the whole Church, deny abſurdly that himſelfe in perſon had theſe prerogatiues. As though Peter had been the proctor onely of the Church or of the Apoſtles, confeſſing the faith, and receiuing theſe things into other mens names. Where the holy doctors meane onely that theſe prerogatiues were not giuen to him for his own vſe, but for the good of the whole Church, and to be imparted to euery vocation according to the meaſure of their callings: and that theſe great priuiledges giuen to Peter ſhould not decay or die with his perſon, but be perpetuall in the Church in his ſucceſſours. Therefore S. Hierome to Damaſus taketh this Rocke not to be Peters perſon onely, but his ſucceſſours and his Chaire. I (ſaith he) following no chiefe or no principall but Chriſt, ioyne my ſelfe to the communion of Peters chaire, vpon that rocke I knowe the Church was built. And of that ſame Apoſtolike Chaire Saint Auguſtine ſaith, That ſame is the Rocke which the proud gates of hell doe not ouercome. And S. Leo, Our Lord would the Sacrament or myſterie of this gift ſo to pertain vnto the office of all the Apoſtles that he placed it principally in bleſſed S. Peter the chiefe of the Apoſtles, that from him as from a certaine head he might power out his gifts, as it were through the whole body, that he might vnderſtand himſelfe to be an alien from the diuine myſterie that ſhould preſume to reuolt from the ſoliditie or ſtedfaſtneſſe of Peter.

CARTVV. 6. [81. Rocke.] The Ieſuites are here againe conſtrained, to feele the wound, which the auncient fathers haue giuen, to the ſupreme authoritie ouer the reſt of the Apoſtles: whileſt they affirme, that Peter had theſe promiſes, and prerogatiues, as bearing the perſon of all the Apoſtles or of the whole Church, which whileſt they goe about to heale, it appeareth that they make it more incurable, for they ſay, that it is by vs abſurdly thereupon denied that Peter himſelfe in perſon had them, as if that were our concluſion, which is therefore he hath them not to himſelfe alone, but the other Apoſtles as well as he, which is ſo euident vppon that he receiued the prerogatiues for them, as well as for himſelfe: that the deniall thereof, meritoriouſlie deſerueth the ſhuting vp of all ſchoole doores againſt you, which withſtand ſo ſencible and apparant trueth, whereof let your own anſweres be iudge, your firſt is, that ſo Peter ſhould be made a proctor for others, why, doth it ſeeme ſo vile in your eies, that Peter ſhould be a proctor for all the Apoſtles; yea for the whole Church, to the which, ſome of the fathers eſteeme them to haue bin giuen, if to be the Kinges Atturney or procurer, to receiue things in his name, be an honor: do you think Peter diſgraced, if the Lord make him his Atturny, or procurer for all the Apoſtles: whereof euery one of them, was a greater prince in the kingdome of Chriſt, then the greateſt Ceſar that euer liued, or do you think Saint Peter diſhonored, if he be the Churches proctor: the duſt of whoſe feete in reſpect of Chriſt her head, is after a ſort houlden out of the prophet, to be licked by the higheſt potentates in the world, if therefore we had not before, yet now (we may perceiue: that you do but dallie with the world, when you call the Pope the moſt ſeruantlie ſeruant of the Church: ſeeing you diſdaine ſo greatlie, that Peter (to whoſe honour you will haue him ſucceed) ſhould bee the Churches Proctor: Your other anſwer is, of a meaning of the Doctors, which neuer came into their thoughts, whereof there being two branches, the former is, that Peter receiued theſe prerogatiues to the good of the Church to bee imparted to euery vocation, according to the meaſure of their callings: Where the guileſull and ſophiſticall dealing of the Ieſuites is to bee marked, which hauing obiected againſt themſelues our of the Fathers, that Peter receiued prerogatiues in the name of the Apoſtles and Church both, make their anſwer onely of prerogatiues receiued to the behooſe of the Church. Whereas the controuerſie here is eſpecially, whether hee receiued them aſwell in the name of the reſt of the Apoſtles, as in his own. This therefore ſlily paſſed by of the Ieſuites, muſt of us bee taken up and handled more ſubſtantially: Wee therefore with the Fathers affirme, that Peter receiued theſe prerogatiues in the name of the Apoſtles; and of the Church, but of a manner far diuers: for therefore hee is ſaid to haue receiued them to the uſe of the Apoſtles; becauſe by this promiſe, paſſed authority unto them equall with that which theſe wordes conueyed unto Peter, and that as immediately from our Sauiour Chriſt unto them as they came from him unto Peter. This, when on the one ſide, the ſtate of their cauſe did driue them to the deniall of; and of the other ſide, the apparant light of the truth did affray them from: they thought more credite for them, to leaue a blanke (then that by euery word written in deniall of ſo manifeſt a truth) they ſhould make a foule blot in their cauſe: liuing notwithſtanding in this hope, that the partiall or ignorant Reader, would under the name of the Church (helped by Peter) underſtand the Apoſtles alſo, for that the reſt of the Apoſtles receiued their authority as immediately ſtom our Sauiour Chriſt, as did Peter, it is plaine, in that they were all equally choſen by our Sauiour Chriſt, and not Peter onely, which ſhould communicate that authority to the reſt. The conqueſt of the world unto the obedience of God, by Preaching of the Word, was not committed unto Peter alone, that hee ſhould afterward allot euery man his ſhare, but unto all alike. The holy Spirit, whereby they were filled for ſo great a charge, came not down upon Peters head onely, from whence (as from a mountaine) it ſhould runne down unto the othes Apoſtles, as it were vallies undereath him, or ſhoulders. whereupon hee (as their head) did ſtand, but upon the head of all alike. This is confirmed by the conformity of the twelue Apoſtles, unto the twelue Princes of Iſrael: For as none of them were Princes and Rulers ouer other, but gathered all the obedience of one King; euen ſo the Apoſtles, which gathered againe the Iſraelites unto the Kingdom of Chriſt, had no rule one ouer another. Now where it is ſaid, that Peter receiued theſe priuiledges unto the uſe of the Church: thereby muſt needs be meant that by his Apoſtolicall Miniſtery (as by the embaſſage of the reſt of the Apoſtles) the foundations of the Church were laid; for that by Peters Miniſtery onely, the Lord did immediately impart his graces unto his Church, according to the exigence thereof (which the Ieſuites would haue us to beleeue:) it is too much dotage: For whatſoeuer effectuall meanes Peter uſed to communicate theſe promiſes and priuiledges with the Church, the ſame uſed the other Apoſtles, they Preached as well as hee; they miniſtred the Sacraments as well as hee; they prayed as well as hee; they gaue the gifts of the holy Ghoſt by laying on of hands, as well as hee; they ordained Miniſters and Elders, as well as hee: Finally, they decided controuerſies, as well as hee, and communicating theſe graces with the Churches, they communicated them not with the Church of Rome alone; thereby to make it the ſtore-houſe or ſtaple of all the world, from whence the reſt of the Churches ſhould receiue (as it were) at the ſecond hand, but with the reſt of the Churches, as well as with it. And as in this ſaying of theirs, they make Peter guilty of a notable iniury, againſt the reſt of the Apoſtles: ſo do they charge him with a notable treaſon committed againſt Gods own perſon, whoſe ſpeciall Crowne and dignity thy ſet upon Peters head. For to impart the meaſure of giftes according to the need of euery calling, is a thing proper unto God, who as hee onely can giue the giftes of life, ſo onely hee is preſent with all the members of the Church, and onely knoweth their hearts: wherefore as hee that hath not the two former abilities, can giue nothing at all: So hee that hath not the two latter, can giue no iuſt and ſtanderd meaſure, according to the need and exigence of the members.

Matth. 10. Mar. 3. Matth. 28. Matth. 28. Acts 6. Acts 18. Acts 19. 6. Acts 14. Act. 15. 2. &c.

The other branch of this falſe gloſſe of the Fathers minds, is this: That theſe priuiledges ſhould not die in Peters perſon, but bee perpetuall to the Church in his ſucceſſors: Where firſt it may pleaſe thee (good Reader) to underſtand, that Iudas onely excepted, who fell from the Apoſtleſhip before hee had entred into the full poſſeſſion thereof, no Apoſtle had euer any ſucceſſor: And therefore when Iames was cut off by the ſword, the Apoſtles entred not into any conſultation of choſing another in his place, as they had done before in the election of Mathias to ſupply the place of Iudas: for ſeeing to the calling of an Apoſtle, amongſt other things this was requiſite, that hee ſhould haue ſeene and heard our Sauiour Chriſt, it cannot bee; the Biſhops which ſucceeded in the places where the Apoſtles were, can (in proper ſpeech) bee their ſucceſſors. And this is confeſſed by a note upon Cyprian Printed at Rome by Paulus Manutius, where Cyprian ſpeaketh of the equall power which the Apoſtles had with Peters. And if the Biſhops ſhould bee ſucceſſors, unto any of the extaordinary Miniſters which were giuen of God for a time, to the ouercomming of the difficulties that the firſt fallow of the Lords field draweth with it, they are both in reſpect of a greater number, of ſmaller gifts, leſſer territorie, and of immediate ſucceſſe, rather to bee called ſucceſſors of the Euangeliſts (ſuch as were Luke, Phillip, Timothie, and Titus, &c.) then of the Apoſtles, ſuch as were Peter, Iohn, &c. Howbeit, foraſmuch as the ancient fathers diuers times call them ſo, we will not ſtriue about the name: ſo that the office and prerogatiue of the Biſhops be well bounded, and remaine within the precincts of the word of God. For performance whereof it is to bee vnderſtood, that as Peter had not the authority and prerogatiues, which the Ieſuites falſely aſcribe vnto him: ſo no Biſhop hath authority, which wee truly ackowledge Peter to haue had. For no Biſhop hath this prerogatiue to preach in any part of the world, but there onely where he hath the calling of God, by the Church. Whereupon alſo followeth, that to no Biſhop belongeth this prerogatiue, that he can bind or looſe, what man ſoeuer in the world. Neither hath any Biſhop, nor all the Biſhops in the world this prerogatiue, that neither in preaching nor in writing, they can erre from the truth: all which S. Peter had. For although there be by the myniſtery of the Church alwaies the truth preſerued, in the faith whereof it may be ſaued: yet the ſame is not without ſome mixture of ſtubble with pretious ſtones. But what priuiledges ſoeuer Peter had, or whatſoeuer he communicated with his ſucceſſor: it auaileth them nothing, vnleſſe the Biſhop of Rome be his ſucceſſor: as of the other ſide, they thinke his eſtate peereleſſe, if they be able to make good that title vnto him. It followeth therefore to conſider of that matter: where to reſerue the examination of certaine places following, whether Peter were euer at Rome or no; eſpecially for ſo long a time as they imagine. Let vs in the meane ſeaſon admit their ſuppoſition, whereupon we ſee they haue their argument ready framed: that then the Biſhop of Rome is his ſucceſſor. Let it be ſo.

But what getteth he thereby, more then the Biſhops which ſucceeded vnto other Apoſtles: conſidering that it hath been ſhewed, that their authority is equall with Peters? Can you ſhew that Peter had onely a ſtate in fee ſimple of his priuiledges, and that the reſt of the Apoſtles were tenants onely for terme of their liues? Hath Peter made his ſucceſſors ſo rich and ſo mighty, that they haue all, and can do all; where the reſt of the Apoſtles haue left theirs ſo beggerly and ſo impotent, that they haue nothing, nor can do nothing, no further then they are holpen by reward from the Biſhop of Rome? And if there be ſuch orders betweene Peters ſucceſſors, and the ſucceſſors of other Apoſtles; yet tell vs (I beſeech you) how commeth it, that there is ſuch inequality betweene Peters own ſucceſſors amongſt themſelues: for it is knowne, that Peter taught at Ieruſalem firſt, after at Lidda, then at Ioppe, afterward at Antioche, and likewiſe at Cæſarea; laſtly, at Alexandria, before he came to Rome: why are not then the Biſhops of thoſe Cities Peters ſucceſſors as well as the Biſhops of Rome: and ſo much more they then he, as of his being at thoſe Cities there is not the like difficultie and doubt which is of his being at Rome. And if they be his ſucceſſors as well as he: why ſhould they not haue as great prerogatiues from Peter as he hath. Ieruſalem was the ſtrength of the Apoſtleſhip, and (as it were) his firſt begotten. For which cauſe if (in ſucceſſiue poſſeſſion of Apoſtolicall right) there were any equality to be admitted: it were meet that Ieruſalem the eldeſt ſhould haue the preheminence: vnleſſe you be able to proue, that Apoſtolicall authority be holden by the tenure of Borough Engliſh, where the yongeſt enioyeth all. But here I ſee what is anſwered, That Rome gat this bleſſing of Peters from them all, for that he was martyred and crucified at Rome. By what rule is this? Is it by that, that hee gaue bleſſing for curſing? That may be true ſo farre as his prayer for them might procure remiſſion of ſinnes. But yet that it reacheth not ſo farre, as to ſet that Church in the top of the higheſt hill of the world, from whence it might Imperiouſly ouerlooke all others: the words of our Sauiour Chriſt threatning the Cities ſo are that reiect his Ambaſſadors, doe declare. And it were a wonder that innocent blood, which polluteth other places, ſhould ſanctifie Rome: and that the Lord which (in reuenge) threw down Ieruſalem from her priuiledges which ſhe had aboue all the Citties of the world, for ſpilling the bloud of the Prophets that were ſent vnto her; ſhould (in reward) lift vp the head of Rome aboue all other Citties, for ſhedding the bloud of the Apoſtles, which were ſent vnto her. Nay rather, forаſmuch as it was more drunken with the bloud of the Saints vnder the gouernment of the Emperours, then euer was any, and therein hath iuſtified her elder ſiſter Ieruſalem; therefore by the moſt iuſt iudgement of God it is become the ſeat of Antichriſt, which ſhould follow the bloody ſteps of the perſecuting tyrants to whom it ſucceedeth: vntill ſuch time, as hauing filled vp her meaſure of wickedneſſe, there might come vpon that Citty all the bloud which hath been ſhed from the reigne of Tyberius vntill that day, wherein the horrible iudgement of God ſhall ſeize vpon it. Wherefore this cruell murder of Peter putteth a good argument in the mouth of the other Citties: who may well alledge, that forſomuch as Peter, comming ſafe and in peace from them, was at Rome diſpiteſully murthered: that therefore, of all others, it is the vnworthieſt to receiue the benefit of his priuiledges. So that the moſt that Rome can claime by the death of Peter, is but his uppermoſt garment, which is commonly the hangmans fee: Howbeit if the Pope will needs (for his aduantage) priuiledge murder, as he doth fornication, yet cannot Rome gaine the cauſe ſo: ſeeing Ieruſalem, that killed our Sauiour Chriſt, getteth the prize from her. For a drop of his bloud being more precious then all the blood in S. Peters body: Rome muſt needes come ſhort of Ieruſalem; where holineſſe of places is meaſured by the holines of perſons which haue been martyred in them, were it not that Rome had a principall part alſo in the bloud of Chriſt, who was crucified by the authority from Rome. As for the reaſon of the famous faith of Rome in Pauls time, it commeth after to be diſcuſſed.

Amongſt the authorities alledged to proue this ſupremacy of Rome, the firſt is flat againſt you, For firſt Ierome affirmeth, that hee followeth no man as firſt and cheifeſt but onely Chriſt: whereby hee acknowledgeth no head of the Church in earth, but Chriſt alone: Hee ſaith (indeed) that leauing Vitalis and other heretickes, hee ioyned himſelfe to Damaſus, who then held the truth of Religion (which wee ought to doe, in any other Biſhop that holdeth the true faith) as vnto Peters chaire. And therefore, although by theſe words, hee lifteth not Damaſus higher, then to the ſeat of the Catholicke Biſhop; yet hee ſhewing how hee ioyned himſelfe, namely in fellowſhip and fellowlike communion with him, not as vnto his Lord and Prince, doth lop down all that height of the Bishop of Rome, wherewith hee shutteth up, aboue his fellow Bishops. for although hee being an Elder, and the other a Bishop, there was some difference of ciuill honour between them, yet for so much as that difference (as hee himselfe teacheth) rose by custome; and not by the Lords ordinance, hee thought good to match and make himselfe fellow with the Bishop in the Ministry wherewith the face and religion that hee communicated with is maintained. Now if Ierome esteemed an Elder or Minister to bee by Gods ordinance equall with a Bishop: how much more did hee esteeme one Bishop equall with another; yea although hee were Bishop of a very small Citie? Yet hee saith, that hee was of the same worthinesse and Ministery with the Bishop of Rome: And as hee yoketh the Bishop of Rome, with other Bishops, so also doth hee Rome with other Churches, for declaring that the authoritie of the world is aboue the authority of a Citie, meaning Rome: hee giueth to understand, that as euery other Church taken apart, and by it selfe, hath no greater authority then Rome, euen so being ioyned together they are of greater authority then it; and in a matter which is ruled by sway of authority, ought to haue the upper hand of it, whereof hee giueth an example in the Arch-deacons case, whom although the custome of the Church of Rome had lifted up aboue a Minister, yet Ierome is bold to throw him down under that degree, upon the authority of other Churches, which had admitted no such custome.

Augustines authority, maketh as little for you; for after hee used diuers substantiall reasons to confute the part of Donatus. hee addeth as a cast reason the succession of the Bishops of Rome, from Peters seat, which all held the same faith and doctrine that hee did, against the part of Donatus which thing hee declareth by the manner of speech, which hee useth, where hee saith, Number the Priests or Ministers, but from S. Peters seat: As if hee would say, to go no further, but to the consent of so many Bishops which your selues cannot deny to haue beene godly learned men: you haue a great preiudice against your schisme: which thing Augustine doth more cleerely set forth in another place, where speaking of the strength which the truth hath by the succession of godly Bishops, one to another, and more particularly of the succession of Rome in Linus which succeeded to Peter, and Clemens which succeeded Linus, &c. Hee addeth by and by: Although (saith hee) wee do not so much presume of these instructions, as of the holy Scriptures: Declaring that hee taketh the Argument of the succession of Peter for a coniecturall reason. And in the very same Psalme, out of which they haue alledged their testimony, hee saith; That if any man come full of the Catholique faith, wee (saith hee) are wont to giue eare unto him, as unto these holy men: Signifying, that hee regarded the Catholike faith in the Bishops of Rome, and not the authority of the place. And after somewhat, hee opposeth unto Donatus part the Catholike Church, not at Rome (as you would haue it) but in the whole world; calling that Church (not the Romish Church) the mother of the faithfull. More, somewhat after the beginning of the Psalme, hee calleth Donatus request to haue his cause heard at Rome: an iniust request: And sheweth that the Emperour appointed certaine to heare the matter, not the Bishop of Rome: And that hee appointed diuers Bishops or Priests, not the Bishop of Rome alone, which the good Emperour would not haue done, if the Bishop of Rome had beene the onely iudge in Christianity. And in another place hee sheweth how farre hee was, from authorising the doings of the Church of Rome without exception, when hee chargeth it, that by one Falcidius folly, assisted of the pride of Rome, there was endeuour to make Deacons equall with the Priests. Last of all, it is plaine, that Augustine was one of that Affricane Councell, which reproued Cœlestinus Pope of Rome; for his pride and aspiring minde, to haue more iurisdiction then was meete for him. All which doth teach us, that the Bishops of Rome are (oftentimes) rotten and marrish ground, and no rock whereupon the building of God may safely stand; and therefore when it is said, that the proud gates of hell cannot preuaile against Peters seat, by it heere must needs bee understood, the doctrine of Peter, as by Moses chaire the doctrine of Moses.

Io. 21, 15. the foundation stone and other pillars or matter being yet in preparing, and Christ himselfe being not only the supereminent foundation, but also the founder of the same: which is another more excellent qualitie then was in Peter, for which he calleth it my Church: meaning specially the Church of the new Testament, which was not perfectly formed and finished, and distincted from the Synagogue till Whitsunday, though Christ gaue Peter and the rest their commissions actually before his Ascension.

ded that ſame is the rocke which the proud gates of hell doe not ouercome. And in another place, that is it which hath obtained the top of authoritie, Heretickes in vaine barking round about it.

CARTVV. 8. [18 The gates of hell.] It hath beene before ſhewed how untrue it is, that the Fathers do underſtand by the Catholique Church, the Church of Rome. And it is an abſurd thing that the Church of Chriſt, which was promiſed by the Prophets to bee ſtretched out ſo long and ſo large, ſo farre and ſo wide, ſhould bee brought within a narrower pale then was the Church of the Iewes; and that the Church of Chriſt ſhould bee the Church of Rome: whereby alſo followeth, that either Chriſt is the onely foundation of Rome (whom the Apoſtle expreſly affirmeth to haue beene the foundation of the Church of Corinth) or elſe that being a foundation otherwhere, yet there is no Church builded upon him in other places, but at Rome alone: as if the Apoſtles which were the Maiſtes Builders, wrought onely at Rome; or as if the Goſpell went out from Rome and came to it alone: or as if Rome onely were the Bride that was waſhed and made glorious by the bloud of Chriſt, were his doue and onely beloued, were his onely Fold: or if Rome onely had faith whereby ſhee grew into one houſe with the Iewes: or as if ſhe alone, were the Ieruſalem that came down from heauen, and is the mother of vs all: or as if all the Kings daughters could play the harlots, and onely Rome could not: or as if the Churches of the Iewes, which were particularly recommended unto the care and truſt of Peter, might fall away, and onely Rome (of which hee had no ſuch peculiar charge) could not: Finally, as if Rome, which was ſubiect to bee broken of from Chriſt the ſtocke, whilſt Peter was alone, could not bee ſo now after his death. But what ſhould wee diſpute by reaſon, againſt theſe reaſonleſſe men. Let the Reader marke how impudently they pretend the Fathers, when as in the greateſt point of all their Religion, whereupon the reſt hangeth; namely, whether Rome alone bee the Catholique Church or no, they are able to bring but one Father, and out of him but two ſentences, whereof the one hath beene ſet, as it were, upon the bourd, a little before, and is there either diſorderly placed, or heere idlely repeated. And as thou maiſt ſee, how that was wreſted from the minde of the Fathers: ſo obſerue in this, that that which Auguſtine ſaith of the whole Church, and of the Apoſtolicall ſeate generally, they haue ſhamefully wreſted to the Church of Rome, and to Peters ſeat onely. For Auguſtine ſpeaking of the ſtrength that the truth hath againſt errour on this wiſe; That it is confirmed by the fore-telling of the Prophets, by the humanity and doctrine of Chriſt, by the voyages of the Apoſtles by the diſpiteſull gallowſes, bloud and deaths of martyrs, by the commendable life of the godly, by miracles done in all theſe things, both worthy wherewith ſuch things ſhould be confirmed, and fit for the times: he addeth, when therefore wee ſee ſuch aſſiſtance of God, ſo great forwardneſſe and fruit, ſhall wee doubt to lay up our ſelues in the lappe of that Church, which hath gotten the toppe of authority, heretickes in vaine barking round about: Seeing then the things whereby the truth is fortified, neither came to paſſe, nor were wrought in Rome, or for Rome alone, but were through all the Primitiue Churches in the world: It is manifeſt, that it is underſtood of all the whole Church, and not of Rome alone, And for as much as this latter ſentence is a concluſion brought in by the former, the former making mention of the Miniſtery of the Apoſtles, the latter ſentence of the Apoſtolicall ſeat, muſt neceſſarily bee underſtood of the ſeat of all the Apoſtles: unleſſe you will haue Auguſtine to place one thing in the propoſition which proueth, and another thing in the proportion which is proued; which is your ſophiſtry and not Auguſtines. But theſe men are not unlike that idiot, which thought euery ſhip that approached the hauen to be his: For whereſoeuer mention is made of an Apoſtolicke ſea; they by and by arreſt it for Rome. where Tertullian teacheth them, that there bee ſundry Apoſtolicke ſeates, which hee recounting, calleth all the firſt ſeates, as well as hee doth Rome.

RHEM. 9. [19. To thee.] In ſaying, to thee will I giue, it is playne that as he gaue the keyes to him, ſo he builded the Church vpon him. So ſaith S. Cyprian, To Peter firſt of all, vpon whom the Lord built the Church, and from whom he inſtituted and ſheweth the beginning of vnitie, did hee giue this power, that that ſhould be looſed in the heauens, which he had looſed in earth. Whereby appeareth the vaine cauill of our aduerſaries, which ſay the Church was built vpon Peters Confeſſion onely common to him and the reſt, and not vpon his perſon more then vpon the reſt.

CARTVV. 9. [19 To thee.] For as much as the keies follow the foundation of the Church, all the Apoſtles being ſhewed to bee foundations, as well as Peter, it followeth that they haue all keies as well as hee. And this doth Cyprian confirme in the ſame place, that at the very ſame time when the Ieſuites ſuppoſe Peter to haue entred upon the poſſeſſion of the keies, which was after Chriſt his reſurrection, the reſt of the Apoſtles receiued the ſame power of Chriſt which hee had receiued of his Father: Therefore unleſſe you can ſhew that our Sauiour Chriſt, gaue more authority to Peter then hee himſelfe had receiued of his Father; hee can haue no preheminence aboue his fellowes, which were ſent of Chriſt, as Chriſt was ſent of his Father. As for that which is ſaid, that the beginning of the unitie was ſhewed in Peter, neither his meaning nor his words will beare, that therefore the keies ſhou'd belong unto him alone, but onely to ſhew, that there was but one power & authority to open, as he himſelfe doth enterprete it in a like caſe. And therefore Auguſtine ſaith, That the keies were giuen to the body of the Church, and not to Peter onely. But of the equality of all the reſt of the Apoſtles with Peter, who ſetteth him and them together all at a round Table, where there is neither higher nor lower, it hath beene ſpoken before. Gregorie alſo hath nothing againſt us, which confeſſeth that hee had the keies of the Kingdome, and denieth onely, that hee had them alone. But hee doth ſtrike manifeſtly at you, whilſt hee prouing that no Biſhop ought to bee called the Vniuerſall Biſhop, hee alleageth that Peter cannot bee called an Vniuerſall Apoſtle, and affirmeth that which you deny, that the Church is builded upon the confeſſion of Peter.

of making lawes, of calling Councels, of the principall voice in them, of confirming them, of making Canons and holesome decrees, of abrogating the contrary, of ordaining Bishops and Pastours, or deposing and suspending them, finally the power to dispense the goods of the Church both spirituall and temporall. Which signification of preeminent power and authoritie by the word keyes the Scripture expresseth in many places; namely speaking of Christ, I haue the keyes of death and Hell, that is, the rule. And againe, I will giue the key of the house of Dauid vpon his shoulder. Moreouer it signifieth that men cannot come into heauen but by him, the keyes signifying also authoritie to open and shut, as it is said Apoc. 3. of Christ, Who hath the key of Dauid, he shutteth and no man openeth. By which words wee gather that Peters authoritie is marueilous, to whom the keyes, that is, the power to open and shut heauen is giuen. And therfore by the name of keyes is giuen that supereminent power which is called in comparison of the power granted to other Apostles, Bishops and Pastors, plenitudo potestatis, fulnes of power. Bernard. lib. 2. de consider. c. 8.

Esay 22.22.

CARTVV. 10. [19. The keyes.] Herein our Sa. Christ giueth a reason of the unvincible-nesse of the Church, drawen from the effectuall power and vertue of the Ministery, which although it be done by men, yet hath it the same authority as if it were done by God himselfe: and although it be exercised in earth, yet hath it the same vertue, as if it were spoken from heauen. And for the word Keyes here, it is well known to be a borrowed speech, signifying power and authority by the ministery of the word, either to giue entrance into the kingdom of heauen, which is begun vpon earth, and finished in the heauens, to such as obediently receiue the word, or to cast out from thence such as shall obstinately refuse it. This appeareth also manifestly by the vse of the key which the Apostles had receiued before this, towards the Iewes: whom receiuing their word, they gaue peace vnto, as they also bound them that did reiect it, in the same, or more streight bond of condemnation then those of Sodom and Gomorrah. And for this cause Ieremy is said to send out the Iewes, some to death, some to the sword, some to hunger, and other some to captiuity, because that according to the word which he (from the Lords mouth) had published, they came to those ends: which interpretation of the keyes, the Iesuites may (if they list) learne of the ancient Fathers, Ambrose and Augustine. And it hath been before declared, that no Minister whatsoeuer is able to open or shut vnto any the doore of heauen, vnto whom the Lord doth not first either open or shut the same: that is, to whom the Lord hath not first by the ministery of his word, either through faith receiued to his good grace, or through infidelity, left still in his heauy displeasure.

Ambros. de Caino & Abel. lib. 2. Aug. de sanct homil. 27.

That recited out of the Apocalipse, and the Prophet, is directly against you. For the one place giueth example of a Magistrall Key, such as belongeth onely vnto Christ: whose power answereth vnto Dauids, and his sonnes in an absolute authority. The other giueth example of a Ministeriall and conditionall key, in Eliachim, which answereth to the key of the Apostles. For as Eliachim could exercise no authority in his Masters house, but according to his will and pleasure: no more could either Peter, or any other Apostle, vse any power in the Church of God, but onely according to his prescript. The difference between the Apostles and others Ministers, is in that the Apostles could not erre in the vse of the keyes, towards them to whom their ministery appertained, where the Bishops may open to them, to whom the Lord shutteth, and shut vnto them to whom he openeth. Howbeit as it hath been shewed, that there is not a key that Peter had, whereof euery one of the rest of the Apostles had not the like: so followeth it thereof, that there is no Bishop which hath any shutting or opening authority, that other his fellows haue not their part in as deepe as he. And therefore this authority, which the Iesuits do here describe, is not Peters key, but the Popes picklocke, made at the forge of his owne wit and inuention. For besides that hee challengeth the whole right of Peters keyes, which he can no more enioy then he can bee an Apostle of the immediate calling of our Sauiour Christ: he maketh also claime to those things which S. Peter neuer had himselfe. For to haue power of the doctrine of God, is a thing which agreeth not either to Apostle or Angell. For that authority commeth from the highest throne of the Maiesty. But it contenteth not you, that your Pope should for money dispense with the eternall Law of God; as his continuall practise in marriages, between those which touch one another very neerely in blood, and in other cases doth declare: vnlesse you also teach, that the Law of God beareth not sway in matters of faith and religion, which you mutter in these words, and (if you durst) would faine proclaime it: as your master Pighius hath done before you. And as Peter could take away no Law of God, so could hee make none further then the same was agreeable to the written word. But of this, as also of his authority, to gather Councels, and to haue the first voyce, to confirme them, &c. beside that they haue no more strengh then a blast of the Iesuits mouthes can giue them: they haue been partly before, and partly come after to be considered. As for Bernards authority: if we esteemed it greatly in this case, wee might easily take aduantage of it, not onely that in this chapter he casteth down the Pope with one hand as farre as he lifteth him vp with the other, shewing how farre he was in truth from that which he pretended to be: but that in the very place by you alledged, hee affirmeth, that the Pope had this fulnesse by his Owne Canons, whereas you pretend that he hath it out of the Canon of the holy Scripture. Shame you not also at Bernards saying, which hauing compared the Pope with the chiefe of the Prophets, Patriarkes, and Apostles, in the things wherein they were beautified of the Lord, in the end matcheth him with Christ for his annoynting.

RHEM. 11. [19. Whatsoeuer thou shalt bind.] All kinde of discipline and punishment of offenders, either spirituall (which directly is here meant) or corporall so farre as it tendeth to the execution of the spirituall charge, is comprised vnder the worde Binde. Of which sort be Excommunications, Anathematismes, Suspensions, Degradations and other Censures and penalties or penances enioyned either in the Sacrament of Confession or in the exterior Courtes of the Church, for punishment both of other crimes, and specially of heresie and rebellion against the Church and the chiefe pastors thereof.

CARTVV.

CART VV. 11. [19 Whatsoeuer you shall binde.] By binding and loosing are signified the same things that are marked by the Keyes, as appeareth not onely by the affinity of the Metaphors or borrowed speeches, but by the iudgement of all those learned Fathers, that affirme the same power giuen to the rest of the Apostles in the 20. of Iohn, which is here giuen to Peter; and therefore it is too great ignorance that of one and the same thing, making two, you enter vpon new discourses, therby to make your reader turne sicke, that the vnstaidnesse of the Popes authority might by such mazes appeare vnmoueable. Therefore there remaineth nothing here, but to vnsay that which the Iesuits do say; and to deny that which they do affirme. The summe of which deniall is, that the Pope hath nothing, but that all other Bishops, no nor so much (in this vsurpation of his) as others haue: and they nothing, but a ministeriall power to pronounce those bound or loose, whom the Lord by the preaching of the word hath before bound or loosed. Touching the authority Leo, (as hath been shewed) is worthy no credit in this cause: not onely because of his excessiue speeches of Peter, which ouerflow all bankes of the holy Scripture: but because vnder colour of pleading of Peters cause, hee was his own Proctor, thinking to make simple men beleeue that hee ought to possesse whatsoeuer Peter was entitled unto.

RHEM. 12. [19. Loose.] To loose, is as the cause and the offenders case requireth, to loose them of any the former bands, and to restore them to the Churches Sacraments and Communion of the faithfull and execution of their function to pardon also either all or part of the penances enioyned, or what debts soeuer man oweth to God or the Church for the satisfaction of his sinnes forgiuen. Which kinde of releasing or loosing is called Indulgence: finally this whatsoeuer, exempteth nothing that is punishable or pardonable by Christ in earth, for he hath committed his power to Peter. And so the validitie of Peters sentence in binding or loosing whatsoeuer, shall by Christs promise be ratified in heauen. Leo Ser. de Transfig. & Ser. 2. in anniuers. assumpt. ad Pontif. Hilar. can. 16. in Mat. Epiph. in Anchorato prope initium. If now any temporall power can shew their warrant out of scripture for such soueraigne power, as is here giuen to Peter and consequently to his successors, by these words, whatsoeuer thou shalt bind and by the very keyes, whereby greatest soueraigntie is signified in Gods Church as in his family and housholld, and therefore principally attributed and giuen to Christ who in the scripture is sayd to haue the key of Dauid but here communicated also vnto Peter, as the name of Rocke: if I say any temporall potestate can shew authority of the like soueragntie, let him chalenge hardly to be head not onely of one particular, but of the whole vniuersall Church.

Hilar. in Psal. 52. Apoc. 21.

CART VV. 12. [Loose.] Hillary in respect of the keyes committed unto Peter, calleth him Porter of heauen gate. But the same affirming otherwhere, that the keyes were committed unto all the Apostles: declareth, that in the twelue gates of the heauenly Ierusalem, euery one of the Apostles had a heauen gate to keepe, as well as he, onely care is to be taken, that hee bee soberly vnderstood: in that to Peter (and in him to all the Apostles) he ascribeth an opening of heauen gate at pleasure. For it is certaine, that he could not open it to the Diuell, or to any man which remaineth vnbeleeuing, or vnrepentant, as hath been before declared. But it is yet true that he saith in that Peters, and euery one of the rest of the Apostles hearts, in their Apostolicall function, was so masterfully holden by the spirit of God, that their pleasure could not be seuered from the good pleasure and will of God. Of the same kinde it is that he addeth of Peters iudgement, in carrying preiudice against the iudgement of God in heaven; because neither he, nor other the Apostles could giue iudgement in earth, which was not first inacted in heauen: so that the iudgement of God should haue preiudiced it owne selfe, if it had preiudiced the sentence of the Apostles: whereas notwithstanding in proper speech, the iudgement of God in heauen, is the rule of all iudgement vpon earth, and as the first mouer, which turneth and rouleth it round about. For if no man can shut that which Christ openeth, nor open that which he shutteth, it is euident, that Peters iudgement is tied to the throne of our Sauiour Christ, and not our Sauiour Christs iudgement fastened to the Chaire of Peter. The same Hillary with others, doe plainly teach, that the power of the keyes, and of binding & loosing, is all one, and that it is common to all the Apostles. Denys also who you say was Pauls scholler, affirmeth that this sentence spoken to Peter by binding and loosing, is common to all Bishops. The place of Epiphanius being the same that was alledged before, hath the same answer here that it had there. And although the Iesuits haue in this cause neither proportion of faith, course of text, conference of Scriptures, weight of reason, or countenance of Antiquitie, the names onely excepted: although they are entred like naked and vnarmed men, haue vsed the paper-shot of their trifling words, in stead of the bullet of substantiall matter; yea, although the poore Artilery that they haue, be bent and braked against themselues, yet could they not goe in silence out of the field, as becommed such dowmed mice as they are, but they must goe with banner displaied, and as it were, with a high hand, boasting of the peereleesse authority of the Pope in earth. Which how friuolous and ridiculous a brag it is: we leaue to the iudgement of the indifferent reader vpon the matter, which hath been alledged of both parts.

CART VV. 13. [27 Workes.] God rewarding according to workes, here signifieth nothing else then that God will reward him, in whom he shall find the vndoubted signe & marke of the perfect righteousnesse which he hath by faith in Christ. For it is well known, that the word According is a note of order, & of the maner of being, rather then of the cause therof. Augustine is here violently and impudently wrested: for he remoueth the reward from that mercy onely which is purchased after this life; where none can be gotten, valesse by faith it be taken vp before death, which hee declareth manifestly when he addeth in the next words: For here (that is in this life) he is mercifull, and there (that is in the life to come) he is iust. And this interpretation of the place, you might haue read otherwhere in Augustine against your Purgatory, and not against the Iustification by faith, where he saith, That here the sinnes are either bound or loosed: and in the world to come there is nothing but recompence. And Augustine in the very next Sermon to this which you haue alledged, affirming that the grace of God doth away both originall and actuall sinne: declareth how farre hee is from this blasphemous opinion of the Papisticall merit. Touching the places of free-will, drawn from his disputation with the Manichees: they are before answered. Although it may be further added, out of the places, that Augustin vnderstandeth that free wil which is opposed to a violent, constrained, and compelled will, and not that which is opposed to the bondage of will, wherein a man is willingly, desirously, and delightsomly holden vnder sinne, which is the bondage of will that we maintaine.

ANNO-

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XVII.

RHEM. 1. [1 Transfigured.] Marke in this Transfiguration many marueilous points, as that he made not onely his own bodie; which then was mortall, but also the bodies of Moyses, and Elias, the one dead, the other to die, for the time as it were immortall: thereby to represent the state and glory of his body & his Saincts in heauen, By which marueilous transfiguring of his body, you may the lesse maruell that he can exhibite his bodie vnder the form of bread and wine or otherwise as he list. Christ can exhibit his body vnder what forme he list.

CARTVV. 1. [2 Transfigured.] Out of the griffe of transfiguration, it were strange to gather the fruite of Transubstantiation. Heere are (I grant) many miracles, but all these can neither beget, nor nourish your Monster which they do rather ouerthrow; for here Christ communicateth his glory for a time, with his body, that hee taketh away none of the naturall properties thereof: For his body glorified, but not (as you doubtfully say) immortalized, being in the holy Mount onely, and no where else, and retayning still to the sight of those which beheld him, all the measures of a naturall body, declareth that euen now glorified, he is (touching his humanity) at once in one place onely, and sensibly retaineth the proportion of his naturall body, and therefore Peter would haue set vpa Tabernacle for him to dwell in, and not prepare a Pix to put him in. Now it it hath small coherence, that because Christ made his body glorious, retaining the length, bredth, and other measures and qualities of his body; therefore hee will make his body vile, and in forme of bread without length, breadth, and other naturall properties of a body; that is to say, will make his body no body. And if your breaden God, could (as our Sauiour did with Moses and Elias) talke with the Priest when the Priest talketh with him: or if there were either two witnesses sent from heauen, or wee might heare the Father from heauen, witnessing that it is his onely begotten Sonne, which the Priest holdeth between his fingers. Finally, if wee might behold him comming down to the Altar, or going up from the Altar into heauen, as our Sauiour Christ was seene to go up and down from the holy Mount, then wee would endeuour to strengthen our faith that way. Whether Moses and Elias had their own bodies, is not worth the striuing. But that Elias is yet to die, belongeth unto that fable which hath beene partly, and partly commeth to bee refuted.

RHEM. 2. [3. Appeared Moyses.] By this that Moyses personally appeared and was present with Christ, it is plaine that the Saincts departed may in person be present at the affaires of the liuing. August. de cura pro mort. c. 15. 16. For euen as Angels else where, so here the Saincts also serued our Sauiour: and therefore as Angels both in the old Testastent and new, were present often at the affaires of men, so may Saincts. Saints after their death deale with & for the liuing.

CARTVV. 2. [3 Appeared Moses.] The Angels both for the generall gouernement under God, and for the speciall seruice they are to giue to the elect of God, haue beene and shall bee alwaies conuersant amongst men; but the Saints hauing receiued no such charge, cannot bee so thought: unlesse the like causes and effects of appearance be alleaged which be heere. Cause there is not: our Sauiour Christs both person and office, being sufficiently witnessed. Effects also there bee not: for neither are the Saints seene or heard speaking as these were. Therefore untill speciall causes bee proued, the generall rule must stand, that wee shall goe to them that are dead, but they shall not come to us: that they follow the Lambe whithersoeuer hee goeth, whom because the heauens must containe untill the day of the restoring of all things, the Saints also which are his trayne, must needs giue attendance on him. Augustine in both places in the 15 and 16 chapters, maketh directly against you, for first hee teacheth, that the dead know not what is done heere, no further then they haue it of relation, either from the Angels or from the Saints, which (by death) come from the earth unto them. And in another place, vpon that, Abraham knew not the state of the Iewes, hee asketh: Who of the dead shall know what wee shall do or suffer, if our parents know not: On the other part, speaking of one Felix that appeared to certaine: Hee affirmeth that that example was after a diuine manner, and not according to the vsuall orders, so that a man is no more to iudge of other Saints comming down by his, then hee may iudge of the nature of water, by that water which was turned into wine. But granting them that which they cannot proue, that the Saints departed are present with us, yet the taile of inuocation of Saints departed (which the Iesuites would drag after them) will not follow, but is cut off, euen by this very example, which they haue made their ground of this doctrine. For the Iesuites might haue learned, that the three Apostles, neither worshipped these (although they were present before them) nor made them aduocates for promoting their suite that they made to our Sauiour Christ, of their continuall abode in that mountaine. EZech. 1. Heb. 1. 2. Sam. 12. Apoc. 14. 4. Acts. 3. 21. Aug. de cura pro mortu. c. 13. Cap. 16.

RHEM. 3. [9. Mount.] This mount (commonly esteemed and named of the auncient fathers Thabor) S. Peter calleth the holy Mount because of this wonderfull vision, like as in the old testament where God appeared to Moyses in the bush and elswhere to others, he calleth the place of such Apparitions, holy ground, whereby it is euident that by such Apparitions places are sanctified, and thereupon groweth a religion and deuotion in the faithfull toward such places, and namely to this Mount Thabor (called in S. Hierome Itabinum Epist. 17.) there was great pilgrimage in the primitiue Church, as vnto all those places which our Sauiour had sanctified with his presence and miracles, and therefore to the whole land of promise, for that cause called the holy land. See S. Hierom, in Epitap. Paulæ, & ep. 17. & 18. ad Marcellam. Holy places. 2. Pet. 1. 18. Exod. 3. 5. Deuotion and Pilgrimage to the same. The holy land CARTVV. 3. [9 Mount.] Wee confesse, that there hath beene Deuotion to certaine places under the Law, But now the time is, when the true worshippers shall not do so: that is, with deuotion of the place, worship the Father either at Ierusalem, or other where. And Peter calleth it, the holy Mount, that thereby hee might declare that Christ is the most holy one. So we reade, that when Christ did appeare in the old Testament, hee was descerned from man and Angell; by this note and title of holinesse, giuen to the place of his appearance. This sense, the Philistims (in Iohn. 4. 21. Exod. 3. 5. Iosh. 5. 14

(in their superstition) followed, in that they made it unlawfull to tread upon the place where Dagon their God had fallen. Seing therefore, it is the purpose of the Apostle, by this speech of holy Mount to note out a glory seemely alone for the sonne of God, it is euident, that thereby he hath cast down many hilles and hillockes, mountaines and mountainets, from the holinesse whereunto the Papists (upon euery light occasion, as upon the touch of a rotten bone of the Martyrs) haue exalted them unto. Whereupon it is cleere, that this Mount is not called holy (as the Iesuites pretend) for that in holinesse it is made higher then other Mounts: but that thereby our Sauiour Christ might bee mounted into such an incomparable height, whether no creature is able to come, and that by this meanes hee might bee set (as it were) upon the top of a high hill, from whence the glorious Maiesty of his God might bee seene of all. And if by the presence of our Sauiour Christ, the Mount shall receiue any holinesse, whereof (as hath beene shewed) it hath no manner of capacity; yet it followeth not, that any such religious haunt should bee made unto it: unlesse they thinke that more regard ought to bee had unto it, which hath neither life, nor soule, then unto holy men which haue both: or that it should bee rather sought unto that hath no meanes to communicate the holinesse, which it is supposed to haue, then they which haue good and worthy meanes to partake their holinesse unto others. Neither doth Peter call it the holy Mount, in respect of that it was when hee wrote, but onely in respect of the time, that the vision lasted: and therefore wee neuer reade, that the places of such apparitions were afterwards in more reuerence then others, that a man comming unto them should put of his shoes, or shew other tokens of religious respect: these onely excepted, wherein (by the Lords appointment) his worship was established. And thus wee speak, of the place of the Assembly of the estates of the Land; that such and such a thing was enacted, in the most honourable Court, hauing regard to the time of the session and Assembly, and not to that time wherein wee speake when the Parliament is dissolued. Of all which matter, it may appeare, how the Iesuites peruert the straight waies of the Lord: For in stead that Peter in calling it the holy Mount leadeth us to the reuerence of our Sauiour Christ, they thereby would seduce us, to the reuerence of the Mountaine. And marke it well good Reader, that the Land which they so extoll, aboue all other the Lands of the world, is the most prophane, and so farre as ground can bee unholy, the most unholiest; For seeing by the Law, innocent bloud unreuenged by the inhabitants of the Land, defileth it; how much foule and polluted must that Land bee, where not onely the bloud of all the Prophets, and of certaine of the Apostles, but the most precious bloud of the Sonne of God was as lauishly spilt and with as small regard, as if it had beene sheere water? And if the Prophet held the Mountaines of Gilboah so greatly accursed, for that Saul and Ionathans bloud, was (there in a battell) solemnly sought drunke up, how much more is that Land accursed which receiued the bloud of the Lord from the hand of the shedders thereof? As for the haunt of those places about Ieromes times, although in that age the seed of this superstition, upon the harueſt whereof the Papists are entred, began to be sowen: yet that it was rather for contentment of minde then for deuotion, rather a fruit of great and superfluous wealth, then of great religion may appeare by that before obserued out of Ierom. Gregory Nissen, in an oration doth also reproue those that went to Ierusalem in pilgrimage, as a thing not grounded of Gods Commandement. Bernard also dissuadeth a monke from going in pilgrimage to Ieruſalem, for that he ought to seek the heauenly, and not the earthly Ieruſalem.

Barnard. ep. 319.

Elias.

RHEM. 4. [11. Elias shall come.] He distinguisheth here plainely between Elias in person, who is yet to come before the iudgement: and between Elias in name, to wit. Iohn the Baptist, who is come alreadie in the spirit and vertue of Elias. So that it is not Iohn Baptist onely nor principally of whom Malachie prophecieth (as our Aduersaries say) but Elias also himselfe in person.

GARTVV. 4. [11. Elias shall come.] The Scribes by this reason of Elias owne person, preparing the way for the first comming of the Messias: went about to proue that our Sauiour Christ was not the Messias of the world, as one that wanted the Harbenger which the Prophet had foretold, should ride before, to take vp (as it were) our Sauiour Christs lodging in the hearts of the people, wherefore the Disciples, the rather vpon occasion of the appearance of Elias, put forth vnto our Sauiour Christ this difficulty to be answered. In the answer whereof, if our Sauiour Christ by Elias do vnderstand the very naturall person of Elias: it shall follow by his own confession, that the Messias was not yet come into the world, and that he himselfe was not the true Messias: and the word (First) which being in the Greeke Copies, is left out by the Iesuites, maketh greatly to bewray the Popish dotage in this point. For whereas the Disciples had asked how the Scribes say, that Elias must first come into the world: our Sauiour Christ answereth expresly, to that circumstance of time, saying that it is true, that Elias must first come: but yet, that first comming of Elias helpeth not the Scribes, considering that Elias is already come and gone; where, if our Sauiour Christ in the word (First) vnderstand (as the Iesuites doe) that time which immediatly goeth before the second comming, when the Disciples question was moued of the time of his first comming, our Sauiour Christ by this meanes, being asked of one thing, answereth to another. Here also they (with the old Translator) haue changed the time: for our Sauiour Christ saith, that Elias commeth first, in the present time whereby the Scripture setteth forth the short space of sixe moneths, wherein Iohn both in his birth and Ministery preuented our Sauiour Christs, both birth and Ministery also: which cannot be so properly said of the time which they imagine Elias to preuent his second comming; their dreame being of some number of yeares, wherein hee must be pauing the way for the Lords second comming. And if this fable of Elias had had truth in it, what more notable and markeable signe could our Sauiour Christ haue giuen to his Disciples, asking him of the signes of his latter comming, then this is? or what could Paul haue answered more fitly vnto the Thessalonians, whose faith was like shrewdly to haue been hazarded for want want of a land-marke to direct their course in the knowledge of the latter day? or doe we thinke, that he would haue vsed against the enuy and danger that might come vnto the Church, by open naming of the Cittie of Rome, such couert speech as he did: if he might haue described the comming of Antichrist, by a counter-comming of Elias; altogether without any danger to the Church.

RHEM. 5. [19. Why could not we.] No maruell if the exorcists of the Catholike Church which haue power to cast out deuils, doe it not alwayes when they will, and many times with much a doe: whereas the Apostles hauing receiued this power *before ouer vncleane spirits, yet here cannot cast them out. But as for heretickes, thy can neuer do it, nor any other true miracle, to confirme their false faith. True miracles onely in the Catholike Church.

CARTVV. 5. [19. Why could not we.] It were rather great maruell, if by their casting out of any, the Diuell should be diuided against himselfe. It is true, that your Priests are of great acquaintance with the Diuell; and that the Diuell, for whom they doe much, will doe something also for them, and especially for the holy fathers of Rome: to diuers whereof he hath been chiefe patron, which presented them to their seates: but of any diuels that they haue cast forth, or any other miracles they haue done aboue the boord, except your own records, there is no proofe. Therefore it is apparant, that the wonder thereof is in your eyes and eares alone: seeing besides your selues, there is none can either see or heare them, where the miracles done by our Sauiour Christ and his Apostles, receiued testimony of their most venemous and bitterest enemies they had: being done in the openest places, in the cleare light, and in the view of whole multitudes. And therefore when your miracles are done in corners, in the night time before a few: they giue all men good cause to suspect the truth of them. Adde also hereunto, our Sauiour Christs miracles, being done with singular fruit to men in healing their diseases: yours are fruitlesse in the mouing of this Saints head, or that Saints toe, or in sweating in the middest of winter. Howbeit that same miracle may sometimes be done by you, thereby to reuenge the contempt of the Gospell vpon those that will not beleiue it: It may not be denyed you, lest you should loose your part amongst the false Prophets, of whom Moses and our Sauiour foretelleth, that they should doe so great miracles, that the very elect thereby (if it were possible) should be deceiued: whereby it appeareth, that as it hurteth not the credit of our religion, that we do no miracles, making no profession thereof: so it helpeth not yours, if euen that were true, that you report of the Asse kneeling down and worshipping the Sacrament of the Altar, where the Iew passing by, would giue no honour vnto it: and withall it is manifestly false which you say, That the Heretickes can do no miracles to confirme their false faith With: which if you will not learne at the plaine words of our Sauiour Christ, you might haue vnderstood it of Sozomene, who remembreth an hereticke which was famous by miracles. Platina. Christopher. primus. Bonifacius septim. Siluest. secundus. Deut. 13. Math. 24. Sozom. lib. 2 cap. 14.

RHEM. 6. [20. Faith as mustard seede.) This is the Catholike faith, by which onely all miracles are wrought: yet not of euery one that hath the Catholike faith, but of such as haue a great & forcible faith & withal the gift of miracles. These are able as here we see by Christs warrant not onely to do other wonderfull miracles here signified by this one, but also this very same, that is, to moue mountaines in deede, as S. Paul also presupposeth, and S. Hier me affirmeth, and Ecclesiasticall histories namely telleth of Gregorius Neocæsariensis, that he mooued a mountaine to make roome for the foundation of a Church, called therefore and for other his wonderfull miracles, Thaumaturgus. And yet faithlesse Heretikes laugh at all such things and beleeue them not. Gregorius Thaumaturgus.

CARTVV. 6. [20. Faith as a mustard seed.] Whilest these men are busie in remouing mountaines, they doe their best to shake the foundations of the Church of God; whereunto serueth them notably, that they confound the miraculous faith with the iustifying faith: whereas the iustifying faith apprehending nothing but the mercy of God in Iesus Christ, this miraculous faith is an apprehension of the assistance of Gods power for the doing of some miracle according to a mans charge and calling. And this is euident by our Sauiour Christ, who restraineth this faith to the beliefe of the speciall act, that is miraculously wrought. Further, how absurd it is, that by the Catholicke faith onely, miracles are wrought, appeareth not onely that all those that haue true faith, work them not: but in that Iudas, who had it not, but onely a bare profession of it, wrought miracles, as well as the rest of the Apostles, whose faith is commended. So that a man may haue the Popish Catholicke faith, and goe to hell for his labour. But the absurdity thereof doth yet better appeare, in that false Christs, and false Prophets, which do bid open warre against the Catholicke faith, are notwithstanding auouched for workers of great wonders. And if our Sauiour Christ in this place should vnderstand the Catholicke and iustifying faith, it should follow, that none of the twelue Apostles, had as yet, any the least graine of a Catholicke faith: for through want of that faith, which is here spoken of, the Diuell could not be throwne out. As touching the remouing of the mountaine, to make way for a Temple; considering that so great a matter had neuer been done by any of the Apostles, whose ministery the Lord would magnifie aboue the ministery of all other men, it hath no likelihood of truth. Beside that the Lord, who is exceeding bountifull vnto his Church in euident declaration of his power for her necessary assistance: is not wont to be so prodigall, as to lash out so great wonders for so small a matter, as to purchase a little plot of ground, which might haue been (without any great inconuenience) taken otherwhere. But if this, or such miracles were after the Apostles, and Apostolicall mens times, it is manifest, that the same was rare and extraordinary. And therefore the Iesuites should haue remembred, that as one Swallow maketh no Summer: so some such rare miracles proue no ordinary power of working Miracles to bee in the Church. Mat. 10. 18 Mark. 6. 13 Luk. 9. 6. Math. 24.

RHEM. 7. [21. Prayer and fasting.) The force of fasting and praying: whereby also wee may may ſee that the holy Church in Exorciſmes doth according to the Scriptures, when ſhe vſeth beſide the name of IESVS, many prayers and much faſting to driue out Diuels, becauſe theſe alſo are here required beſide faith.

CARTVV. 7. [21 Praying and faſting.] Shee hath I grant, with the coniurers and witches, alſo with Marcus the hereticall ſorcerer, diuers holy names which ſhee prophaneth in her exorciſmes and inchantments. But if their Church faſt and pray ſo diligently at the caſting out of deuils, how commeth it to paſſe, that the deuils (by their own confeſſion ſometimes) keepe their poſſeſſion ſtill: ſeeing the cauſe onely, why the Apoſtles did not caſt out this deuill was, that they had not prayed and faſted: Wherefore it is manifeſt heere by the Ieſuites confeſſion, which otherwiſe is cleerer then the noone daies, that the Popiſh Church hath not the Apoſtolicall power of caſting out deuils, which they brag of. And heerein being contrary to themſelues they are alſo in this directly contrary to our Sauiour Chriſt, when they ſay: Beſides faith, prayer and faſting are neceſſary, to the throwing out of the deuill: whereas our Sauiour ſaith that if they had but ſo much faith as a graine of muſtard ſeed, they ſhould haue done the cure, where therefore it was ſaid, that prayer and faſting was needfull, hee meaneth that by prayer, they ſhould haue asked faith wherewith to haue gotten the upper hand, of their infidelity or ſtaggering in that point of caſting forth the deuil. Which prayer, that it might haue bene more forcible, ought to haue beene accompanied with faſting: ſo that by this latter ſentence, hee requireth faith, euen the ſame which hee did in the former: Onely heere hee further telleth them, how wanting this faith they might haue obtained it, namely, if they had ſought it by prayer and faſting.

Epiphan. 2. part. l. 3. hæreſ. 51.

RHEM. 8. [26. The children free.] Though Chriſt to auoide ſcandall, payed tribute, yet indeed he ſheweth that both himſelfe ought to be free from ſuch payments (as being the kings ſon, aſwell by his eternall birth of God the Father, as temporall of Dauid) and alſo his Apoſtles, as being of his familie, and in them their ſucceſſors the whole Clergie, who are called in Scripture the lotte and portion of our Lord, which exemption and priuiledge being grounded vpon the very law of nature it ſelfe, and therefore practiſed euen among the Heathen (Gen. 42. 27.) good Chriſtian Princes haue confirmed and ratified by their lawes in the honour of Chriſt, whoſe miniſters they are, and as it were the Kings ſonnes, as S. Hierom declareth plainely in theſe words, We for his honour pay not tribute, and as the Kings ſonnes, are free from ſuch payments. Hier. vpon this place.

The priuileges and exemption of the Clergy.

CARTVV. 8. [26 The children free.] God the Father, caſting all the Iewes vnder the obedience of Cæſar, exempted his ſonne from that yoke of ſubiection: and exempting him from the obedience of Cæſar; conſequently hee exempted him from the tribute, which is a branch of that obedience: Whereby it may appeare, that our Sauiour Chriſt being ſubiect as touching his Manhood vnto Cæſar, as vnto his iudge vnder God his holy Father, was not in reſpect thereof free from tole, but onely in reſpect that (being man) hee was alſo the naturall Sonne of God, which Ierome confirmeth, whilſt hee affirmeth that in reſpect of his humanity, hee ought to haue paid it: So Chriſt albeit ſubiect to the tole as touching his man-hood, yet for that the ſame was perſonally united to the God-head of the ſecond Perſon: in it, and for it hee in the whole was free from ſubiection of any creature: further then himſelfe, for the accompliſhment of that which was written of him, would ſubmit himſelfe vnto. For as the virgin Marie, and the whole lynage of Dauid, ſo Dauid himſelfe, if had beene aliue, ſhould haue beene lyable to Cæſars aſſeſſments: Whereby it is euident how proud the Pope is, and the whole rable of his annointed, who exempt themſelues from thoſe duties; & which challenge that vnto them, which our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe doth not, otherwiſe then by his Diuine Nature make claime vnto: And although himſelfe bee free, yet doth hee not entitle his Apoſtles to the fellowſhip of this priuiledge, ſeeing they are not, nor cannot bee the Kings ſonnes heere ſpoken of: neither doth theſe words (leaſt wee offend them) proue any of the Apoſtles partners of this priuiledge. To bee therefore of our Sauiour Chriſts Lot or Cleargy, cannot free them from the tribute. And if it could, yet ſhould the Miniſtery get no priuiledge nor prerogatiue aboue the reſt of the faithfull: which all without exception, are noted vnder the title of the Lords portion and inheritance, of his Lot or Clergy, And therefore to ſhut the people from being of this Lot, is to ſhut them from the kingdom of heauen. As for Pharaohs nouriſhing of the Prieſts, or Princes, or both (the word ſo ſignifying) in the time of the dearth: it is nothing to that in hand, but onely proueth that the Miniſtery ſhould be well prouided for: and that thereunto Princes ſhould (when need is) not onely take nothing from them, but euen giue them alſo of their own reuenew; which thing becauſe it may well ſtand with tribute to Cæſar, where the Miniſters liuing is well able to affoord it; the mention therefore in this place is diſordered. Albeit the Ieſuites haue heere a deeper cogitation then they dare well vtter, which is, that they ought not onely to bee free from Cæſars payments, but that they may alſo vſe exactions vpon Cæſar himſelfe, as the daily practiſe of their holy Father doth declare: It is very meete (indeed) that the Miniſtery before the neceſſary and honeſt ſupports of this life, be throughly prouided for, that being free from the care thereof, they may cleaue more vnſeparably vnto their charges. And if Princes would vſe that for a meane, of their prouiſion and ſecurity againſt the Officers, which often vnder colour of ſuch payments (for their priuate gaine) breed them great diſturbance, and fetch them up from their charges: it ſhould bee the praiſe of their bountifullneſſe and roialty towards them, as yeelding vnto their more commodious intertainement, that which in right they may take of them. The words of Ierome ſeeme to bee ſpoken in deriſion, the wordes are theſe: Wee are miſerable. which are called by the name of Chriſt, and yet do nothing worthy of ſo great a Maieſty: Hee did both beare the croſſe, and pay tribute for vs: wee for the honour of him as the Kings ſonnes being free from tribute pay none. Where alſo is to bee obſerued, that in that hee ſaith, Wee which are called by the name of Chriſt: hee noteth all ſorts of Chriſtians, and not the Miniſters onely: which is yet more plaine for that the tribute which Ierome affirmeth to haue beene paid by our Sauiour Chriſt. was paid as well for all Chriſtians, as for for the Miniſters: So that if this place, proue any freedome and acquitall of tribute, it proueth it as well for all Chriſtians as for the Miniſters: therefore whether it be ſpoken (as hath bene ſaid) in deriſion or no: Let the Reader iudge.

CARTVV. 9. [27 Mee and thee.] Where the words of Auguſtine giue nothing to Peter but that which is giuen to the reſidue of the Church, repreſented by Peter the cheife Paſtor, for which his Churches ſake hee affirmeth our Sauiour to haue paid his tribute: the Ieſuites by a Marginall note, haue picked out of this myſtery, the preheminence of Peter, aboue the reſt of the Apoſtles. Let it therefore be conſidered why our Sauiour paid rather for Peter, then for any other of the Apoſtles: It is firſt of all euident that this tribute was demanded in a houſe of Capernaum; and it appeareth other where that Peter had a houſe there, whereunto hee had before gheſted our Sauiour Chriſt: Therefore as it is aſſured that our Sauiour was in ſome houſe of Capernaum, ſo it is very like, that hee was in Peters houſe, as in a place where hee might bee free from things which might hinder his neceſſary refreſhing and recreation. The Toulner therefore asking tribute houſe by houſe, foraſmuch as they underſtood that our Sauiour had no houſe of his own, together with Peters tribute demanded the payment of it alſo, there in the houſe of Peter, which for the time was his Hoaſt. The tribute therefore, being at that time onely demanded of Peter and of our Sauiour Chriſt: what great meruaile is it if our Sauiour paid it for himſelfe and Peter alone. *Math. 17. & 24.33. 24 And when he began to make the account, there was one presented vnto him that owed him ten thousand talents.

25 And hauing not whence to repay it, his Lord commanded that he should be sold, and his wife and his children and all that he had and it to be repayd.

26 But that seruant falling down, besought him, saying, Haue patience toward me, and I will repay thee all.

27 And the Lord of that seruant moued with pitie, dimissed him, and the debt he forgaue him.

28 And when that seruant was gone forth, he found one of his fellow-seruants, that did owe him an hundred pence: and laying hands vpon him, threatled him, saying, Repay that thou owest.

29 And his fellow-seruant falling down besought him saying, Haue patience toward me, and I will repay thee all.

30 And hee would not: but went his way, & cast him into prison, till he repayd the debt.

31 And his fellow-seruants seeing what was done, were very sorie, and they came, and told their Lord all that was done.

32 Then his Lord called him: and hee said vnto him, Thou vngratious seruant, I forgaue thee all the debt because thou besoughtest me, oughtest not thou therefore also to haue mercie vpon they felow-seruant, euen as I had mercie vpon thee?

33 And his Lord being angry deliuered him to the tormenters, vntill he repayd all the debt.

34 So also shall my heauenly father do vnto you, if you forgiue not euery one his brother from your hearts. ☞

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XVIII.

RHEM. 1. [1. Who is the greater.] The occasion of this question, and of their contention for Superiority among the rest of their infirmities which they had before the comming of the Holy Ghost, was (as certain holy Doctors write) vpon emulation toward Peter, whom onely they saw preferred before the rest in the paiment of the tribute, by these words of our Sauiour, Giue it them for me and thee. Chrysost. hom. 59. Hiero in Mat. Vpon this place.

C.17.v.27

CARTVV. 1. [1. Who is the greater.] Peters primacie can hardly be as it is valued, if it come for so little money as is halfe an English shilling, or thereabout. And if the question of Primacy rose upon the tribute money, it appeareth manifestly, that the Disciples vnderstood of no primacy granted to Peter by the former wordes: Thou art Peter, and vpon, &c. Whereupon you haue so clamorously laid the foundation of his supremacy. For if they had understood of any such thing, the dispute would rather haue risen vpon the words of our Sauiour, then vpon this single act: which hauing direction of no word, sounding to any preheminence of Peter, could not so easily set this question a foot. Now, as by laying hold of this, you haue lost the aduantage of the other; so are you vtterly forsaken of this also. For that this question was moued amongst the twelue, or euer the tribute money was paid, it appeareth manifestly by Marke, who declareth that this matter was debated of in the way, before they came to the house at Capernaum, where the tribute money was demanded, and from whence Peter was sent to the sea to take the fish wherein the peece of money was found, that was giuen in way of tribute. Vnlesse therefore the cause or occasion, come after the effect, the dispute which was before the tribute, could neither be caused or occasioned by that which followed after. Therefore the Iesuites, if not for the truths sake, yet for credit of their learning (which they so busily hunt for) should haue spared this note.

Mark. 9. 33.

Now let it be further obserued, that to lift vp Peter ouer all the rest: the holy Apostles are here cast downe into further degree of ambition then the truth doth driue them to: for it was an infirmity in them to striue for it. But when our Sauiour had (as the Iesuits would beare vs in hand) in plaine tearmes, giuen it to S. Peter, that it was a more heynous sin, tending to apparant contradiction, and rebellion against him: wherein, how vniustly they are charged, it may appeare manifoldly. First of all, that the question was not, whether Peter precisely should be the chiefe of them: but vndeterminately which of them should be the greater, so that this question supposeth the primacy to stand as neere any other of the Apostles, as vnto Peter.

Secondly, being raised, it had been an easie matter to haue ended this question amongst themselues, if the matter had been, as the Iesuites do surmise. For vpon Peters allegation that our Sauiour had ended that controuersie before, giuing him the superiority. All these waues would haue been calmed. Therefore this iudgement, as it chargeth the rest of the Apostles with more shamefull ambition: so it chargeth Peter with greater folly then ought to haue been imputed vnto him: which (for his grace of speech) being otherwhere the mouth, and as it were the prolocutor for the rest, here was dumbe in his owne cause. You will say (peraduenture) that of modesty and humility he forbare to speake that which he might. But what modesty is that to betray the cause of the Church: to whose use this supremacie ouer the rest, was (as it is said) assigned to Peter. Howbeit, if modesty tied Peters tongue from defending of his right: yet could it not hinder our Sauiour to speake it in Peters behalfe.

Thirdly, therefore obserue, that our Sauiour Christ deciding the controuersie amongst them, not onely alledgeth no such thing to cast the supremacy vpon Peter, which (for peace sake) ought to haue been done, if it might haue been done in truth: but also drieth them from the thought of principality, by humbling of euery of them vnto other, where it is to be obserued, that our Sauiour Christs reproouing his Disciples for that dispute, reproueth them all without exception, which had not been without some iniury to Peter: if they had but sought to haue had that which our Sauiour had bequeathed vnto him. That those which thinke this question to haue rose vpon occasion of the tribute, are manifestly deceiued, hath been declared. And albeit that Chrysostom esteeme eſteeme Peter perferred by this payment; yet hee is ſo far from eſteeming him to bee preferred unto the rule ouer the reſt, that hee iudgeth it a curious queſtion to enquire which of them were chiefeſt, which in your Diuinity is the chiefe pillar of your Religion. Hitherto alſo ſerueth againſt you, that Chryſoſtome affirmeth that (this tentation being ouercome) afterward one of them in matter of ſuperiority or primacy gaue place to the other. Ieroms alſo affirming that the Apoſtles eſteemed Peter preferred of Chriſt, by the tribute paid for him, ſaith withall that they were deceiued in ſo thinking: which is flat againſt you.

RHEM. 2. [7. Scandals.] The ſimple be moſt annoyed by taking ſcandall of their preachers, Prieſts, and Elders ill life: and great damnation is to the guides of the people whether they be temporall or ſpirituall, but ſpecially to the ſpirituall, if by their ill example and ſlanderous life the people be ſcandalized.

RHEM. 3. [8, Hand, foote, eye.] By theſe parts of the body ſo neceſſary and profitable for a man, is ſignified, that whatſoeuer is neereſt and deereſt to vs, wife, children, friends, riches, all are to be contemned and forſaken for to ſaue our ſoule.

CARTVV. 2. 3. [7. 8. Scandall, hand, foot, eye.] Heere are meant our euill concupiſcences, fornication, vncleanneſſe, wrath, and ambition, eſpecially that gaue the occaſion of this exhortation. This appeareth by our Sauiour Chriſt in another place, which hauing taught the unlawfulneſſe of ſuch deſires, immediately applyeth his exhortation accordingly, uſing the ſame words which hee doth heere: And therefore of the Apoſtle they are called, our earthly members, becauſe of them (as a naturall body of the parts) conſiſteth our old Adam, which wee bring forth with vs from our mothers wombe. And as our Sauiour Chriſt exhorteth heere, that they ſhould bee cut off, or pulled out and caſt away: ſo the Apoſtle agreeable unto him, willeth that wee ſhould mortifie them, Therefore it is cleere, that the Ieſuites in ſteed of pulling out the eye of their concupiſcence, haue caſt away the eye of all iudgement, in the expoſition of the Scriptures.

Mat. 2. 29. Col. 3. 5.

RHEM. 4. [10. Their Angels.] A great dignitie and a meruellous benefite that euery one hath from his Natiuitie an Angell for his cuſtodie and Patronage againſt the wicked before the face of God. Hierom. vpon this place. And the thing is ſo plaine, that Caluin dare not deny it, & yet he will needs doubt of it, lib. 1. Inſt. c. 14. ſect. 7.

Protection of Angels.

CARTVV. 4. [10 Their Angels.] But it is a greater both Dignity and Benefite, that euery one of the faithfull, hath many Angels appointed out of the Lord for his guard, whereof the proofe is manifeſt out of the Pſalme, which ſetting forth the ſingular protection of the Lord to euery one of the faithfull, ſaith, Hee hath giuen charge to his Angels, (not to one onely Angell) of euery one of them: Likewiſe, that an hoaſt of Angels pitch their Tents round about them. The which promiſe hauing beene ſenſibly executed in our Sauiour as in the head, hath beene in like manner, and is alſo daily (although not ſenſibly) truely performed in his members, according to the place they occupy in his Body, which is his Church: and according to the proportion of temptations wherewith it pleaſeth the Lord to exerciſe them. For this cauſe the eſtates of the faithfull for their ſecurity, is compared with Salomons, which had 60 Eſquires for the body, of the mightieſt and warlikeſt men in Iſrael, with their ſwords ready drawne, to watch euery night, againſt the dangers that might hazard his royall perſon whilſt hee ſlept. For euen as Kings children, and heires eſpecially unto the Crowne, haue the attendance of diuers ſeruants waiting upon them: ſo likewiſe God, hauing giuen unto us this honour that wee ſhould in Chriſt bee his children and heires, giueth us alſo a guard of his holy Angels, according unto the power of ſo mighty and royall a King as he is. And ſeeing there are many reprobate Angels, which ſeeke the deſtruction of one onely man, there can bee no doubt but that the Lord encountreth them by a number of his elect Angels, watching ouer his ſafety and preſeruation: wherefore, as this place hath no one word, which tyeth the Angelicall attendance upon the faithfull to one onely Angell: but is as fauourable to confirme the attendance of many towards euery of the faithfull, as of one alone: So the teſtimonies and reaſons aboue alledged, will not ſuffer it to bee carried away, to the ſenſe which the Ieſuites haue followed. The orginall of which opinion comming firſt from Plato, afterward receiued ſome ſtrength of the teſtimony of the Fathers. As for that they ſay, M. Caluin cannot deny it: they do too much bewray their ſhameleſſe fore-head of auouching untruthes: ſeeing that both heere and otherwhere hee affirmeth plainely, that euery of the faithfull hath not onely one Angell appointed for his ſafety, but many. Therefore Chryſoſtomes iudgement is more like the truth then Ieromes, which affirmeth that by Angels heere are underſtood not the inferiour, but the ſuperiour: ſignifying thereby that euery one hath one ſuperiour Angell alone, but yet that hee may haue diuers other inferiour Angels. Likewiſe the benefite of the Lord in his protection by Angels is abaſed by the Ieſuites, in that it is made to beginne but from the natiuity of the faithfull, as if the ſame attendance and aſſiſtance of their Miniſtery were not as neceſſary from their conception? Or as if they were in leſſe perill of periſhing (eſpecially as touching this life) when they are in their mothers wombs as when they are ſeuered from them. And yet I thinke when the Ieſuites ſhall remember themſelues, and their other mercyleſſe opinions touching yong children, they will repent them of this liberality to them, deferring (with ſome ſome other Papiſts) this protection of the Lord by his Angels, unto the day of their baptiſme.

[17. Not heare the Church.] Not onely Heretikes, but any other obſtinate offender that will not be iudged nor ruled by the Church, may be excommunicated, & ſo made as an Heathen or Publican was to the Iewes, by the diſcipline of the ſame, caſting him out of the fellowſhip of Catholikes, which excommunication is a greater puniſhment then if he were executed by ſword, fire, and wild beaſts. *Aug. cont. RHEM. 7. [18. You ſhall binde.] As before he gaue this power of binding and looſing ouer the whole, firſt of all and principally to Peter, vpon whom hee builded his Church: ſo here not onely to Peter, and in him to his ſucceſſors, but alſo to the other Apoſtles, and in them to their ſucceſſors, euery one in their charge. Hieron. lib. 1. c. 14. aduerſ. Iouin. and Epiſt. ad Heliod. Cyprian. de Vnit. Eccl. nu. 1.

Power to binde and looſe. Mat. c. 16. 19.

RHEM. [19. Shall looſe.] Our Lord giueth no leſſe right and authoritie to the Church to looſe, then to binde, as S. Ambroſe writeth againſt the Nouatians, who confeſſed that the Prieſts, had power to binde, but not to looſe.

CARTVV. 7. [18. You ſhall binde.] The Ieſuites would faine tie this key of excommunication vnto the Biſhops girdle alone: which is againſt the minde of our Sauiour Chriſt, and circumſtance of the place: but if they will ſay ſo, and ſpeake ſo ſtrangely, they muſt warrant it with ſome other places of ſcriptures, where the Church is taken for one, which is as much to ſay, one man is many, one member is a body, one alone is a company. And beſide this ſtrangeneſſe of ſpeech, it deſtroyeth the ſouereignty of the medicine which our Sauiour Chriſt prepared for ſuch a feſtered ſoare, as would neither be healed by priuate admonition, neither with admonition before one or two witneſſes. For as the fault groweth, ſo our Sauiour Chriſt would haue the number of thoſe, before whom he ſhould bee checked and rebuked, likewiſe grow. Therefore from a priuate admonition, he riſeth vnto the admonition before two or three: and from them to the Church; which if we ſhould ſay, it is but one: then vnto a dangerouſer wound, ſhould be layed an eaſier plaiſter. And therefore our Sauiour doth not riſe from two to one (for that were not to riſe but to fall, nor to proceed, but to goe backward) but to many. But Paul is the beſt interpreter, who in a caſe of excommunication, declareth that the ſame is to be done in the preſence, and with conſent of the aſſembly, whereof the partie which is to be excommunicated, is a member. To conclude; Theophilact vpon this place interpreteth, Tell the Church, that is, Many. And becauſe that aſſembly taketh knowledge of this and other things, by their mouthes, which are her Gouernors. It is alſo true that Chryſoſtom ſaith, that to tell the Church is to tell the gouernours thereof. It is therfore to be underſtood, that theſe gouernors of the Church, which were ſet ouer euery ſeueral aſſembly in the time of the Law, were of two ſorts: for ſome had the handling of the word, otherſome watching againſt the offences of the Church, did by common counſell with the miniſters of the word, take order againſt the ſame. Thoſe gouerning Elders are diuers times in the ſtory of the Goſpell made mention of, vnder the title of the Rulers of the Synagogue. And this maner of gouernment, becauſe it was to bee tranſlated vnto the Church of Chriſt vnder the Goſpell, our Sauiour by the order (at that preſent) vſed amongſt the Iewes, declareth what after ſhould be done in his Church. Agreeably hereunto the Apoſtle both declared the Lords ordinance in this behalfe, and put the ſame in practiſe in ordaining to euery ſeuerall Church, beſide the Miniſtery of the word, certaine of the chiefeſt men which ſhould aſſiſt the worke of the Lords building. This was alſo faithfully practiſed of the Churches, after the Apoſtles times, as long as they remained in any good and allowable ſoundneſſe of the doctrine. And being fallen from the Churches, eſpecially from certaine of them, the want thereof is ſharply and bitterly caſt in the teeth of the Church teachers, by whoſe ambition that came to paſſe. I conclude therefore, that to tell the Church, is not to tell the Biſhop or Mininiſter of the word onely; but a company which hath ouerſight of the Church; by whom, or by whoſe mouth, which is the miniſter of the word, the reſt of the body of the Church is to be aduertiſed: to the end that the ſword of excommunication cut not without their priuity and conſent. Whereupon it is euident, that the places of theſe Fathers, which giue power to the Biſhops to binde, and to looſe: doe not reſtraine it vnto them, ſhutting out the reſt of the Church, which might be ſhewed by many teſtimonies out of them, if the ſame were needfull.

RHEM. 1. [6. Not man separate.] This in separabilitie betwixt man and wife riseth of that, that wedlocke is a sacrament. Aug. li. 2. de pec. origine cap. 34. to 7. De nupt. and concupisc lib. 1. cap. 10.

CARTVV. 1. [6. Let not man separate.] Our Sau. Christ saith, that this vnseparable estate of persons married, riseth in that they are conioyned of the Lord: And not therefore (as the Iesuites imagine) that Matrimony is a Sacrament: for although that which men ioyne, may (by men) againe be disioyned: yet that which the Lord ioyneth, cannot be sundred by men, but by the Lord, who onely is able to loose the knot, which himselfe hath tied, And it is a reason drawne from the generall to conclude the particular. For considering that nothing which the Lord hath coupled can be seuered by man: it followeth that Mariage, which is of the Lords coniunction, can by no man be sundred. And therfore not onely persons married, but diuers other things which God hath coupled together, go vnder this rule. As that the Lord hath ioyned the Cup in the Supper with the bread of the same: it is an horrible presumption for men to seuer them. And so much more intollerable in the Papiſts, as imagining ſo ſtreight a knot in matrimony, as nothing (no not a iuſt diuorce) can vndoe, by reaſon of a fained Sacrament, deuiſed of the forge of their owne braine: haue notwithſtanding ſeuered the Cup and the Bread, which the bond of a true Sacrament hath tied and coupled together. God alſo (in his worſhip) coupling the powers of the ſoule, which are underſtanding and affection, they cannot without great ſacriledge bee uncoupled of any. But theſe examples the Ieſuits wil hardly broke, let them therefore take others, as that the Lord requiring heart & tongue in the confeſſion of his name, outward reuerence and inward obedience, in the duty of the Magiſtrate: Whoſoeuer ſhall ſingle and ſort either of theſe from his fellow, ſhall forthwith bee guilty of ſundring that which the Lord hath ioyned. Yet I think you will not ſay, that this inſeparability of duties, is holden by the glue of a Sacrament. It is therefore a ſenſeleſſe thing, to ground a Sacramentall nature of Matrimony upon the ſtrength of the band wherewith the man and wife is ioyned together, In what ſenſe Auguſtine calleth Matrimony a Sacrament, after commeth to bee ſpoken: And for anſwer to thoſe places wherein the ſame things (in effect) is idlely and loathſomely repeated, which hath beene before alledged, the Reader may partly ſee before, and partly after in the next.

Marriage after diuorce vnlawfull. In Epitaph. Fabiolæ.

CARTVV. 2. [9 But for fornication.] The untruth of this aſſertion hath appeared before: In this new ſupply, the place of Rom. 7. is (by ſtrong hand) made to ſerue their turne: for the Apoſtle ſheweth that the wife is bound unto her husband during his life, which is not denied: For ſo long as hee being her huſband liueth; worthily ſhee ſhould bee counted an Adultreſſe in companying with another, But the Ieſuites might remember that it is the queſtion, whether after diuorce hee bee in any reckoning of a husband or no. Beſide, that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of that matter, as it were in paſſing by onely, and not of purpoſe, it was not neceſſary that hee ſhould lay down the cautions and exceptions that might fall into that caſe: euen as ſpeaking of the continuance of Salomons Kingdom to all poſterity, although the conditions of obedience bee not alwaies added, yet it is to bee underſtood. Laſt of all drawing a ſimilitude from the corporall marriage to a ſpirituall: by the law of that argument hee needed to wade no further, then for that point wherein the likeneſſe conſiſted. As for the credite that Auguſtine giueth your cauſe in theſe places, hee doth cleane take it away againe: Where for the doubtfulneſſe and hardneſſe of the matter (as hee ſpeaketh) hee iudgeth that a man without danger may eſteeme indifferently either of the one or the other. Touching Ierome whom they would draw in for them, hee is againſt them: for blaming Fabiola, for marrying againe after diuorce hee doth it with condition: namely, if there were no danger of fornication by remaining ſole, affirming the ſame of her caſe which was a divorced widow, that Paul doth of all perſons unmaried: that is to ſay, that it were better for her to marry then to burne: And addeth further in excuſe for her, that where peraduenture, the yong woman was not able to keepe her widowhood, the Apoſtle willeth that yong widowes ſhould marry. Wherefore if her caſe ſtood ſo that ſhee could not containe, hee calleth it (upon thoſe two teſtimonies of Scriptures) a caſe of Neceſſity. Beſide, that it ought not heere to bee forgotten, that Fabiolas repentance was none ſuch as brought forth any diuorce from her ſecond husband: which both ought to haue bene done, if her ſecond marriage had bene vnlawfull, and ſhould haue beene mentioned of Ierome as a moſt notable fruit of her repentance, if there had beene any ſuch thing, Of like iudgement in this caſe was Origen. for holding it generally to bee againſt the Scripture, for the diuorced to re-marry themſelues, during the life of the parties from whom they were ſeparate: yet in the particular caſe of incontinency, hee holdeth it alwaies unlawfull euen for the woman to marry againe: excuſing the act of certaine Gouernours of the Churches which had permitted ſuch a perſon to marry againe. Tertullian is yet fuller in this cauſe, who without any exception of the danger of incontinency acquiteth the party that ſhall marry againe after iuſt diuorce. Ambroſe alſo for the innocent man maketh no queſtion, but that hee may after lawfull diuorce marry againe. And granting unto the woman which is forſaken of an unbeleeuing husband, that ſhee might marry alſo: there appeareth no cauſe that hee ſhould deny, that benefite and liberty unto a diuorced woman, Vnto theſe teſtimonies of the Fathers commeth the weight of a Councell, that forbiddeth the communion to all which (leauing their wiues without proofe of adultery againſt them) marry other. It leauing therefore ſuch free from the cenſures of the Church as upon due proofe of fornication married againe: declareth thereby the lawfulneſſe of the marriage in men which were lawfully diuorced. But if the authority of the Word and teſtimony of antiquity, haue but ſmall weight with the Ieſuites to make them bow the yron ſinew of their neckes in ſubmiſſion to the truth: yet the Popes authority may make them peraduenture ſtoup. Pope Gregory unto a man whoſe wife could not through infirmity yeeld him due beneuolence; upon his unability to containe, permitteth him to take another wife. Now if hauing a wife not diuorced, a man may (by the Popes iudgement) marry another: how much more may hee doe it upon lawfull diuorce. Pope Zacharie unto one that had defiled his wiues ſiſter, wrote in this wiſe: Seeing thou haſt committed this hainous act, thou ſhalt haue neither of them to wife: And both thou and ſhee whom thou haſt defiled ſhall remaine without hope of marriage. As for thy wife ſhee may marry to whom ſhee will, ſo it be in the Lord.

excluded from this gift, but (as Origen here ſaith) it is giuen to all that aske for it: contrary to our aduerſaries that ſay it is impoſſible, and that for excuſe of breaking their vowes, wickedly ſay, they haue not the gift.

CARTVV. 3. [11. Not all take.] Theſe men ſhame not in the ſight of the Sunne it ſelfe that is to ſay, of the word of God looking vpon them, and (as it is to be feared) they looking vpon it, to deale ſo falſely, as to gather from the ſame place, the ability of euery one to containe, from whence the vnabilitie is euidently eſtabliſhed. For our Sauiour ſaying, that all haue not capacity thereunto. And after that he which is able to take, and not he that will take, doth directly ſet down the contrary of that they ſuppoſe. This he confirmeth by an argument of the cauſe: foraſmuch as it is giuen of God, and that not vnto all men, as is the gift of ſpeech or reaſon: nor vnto all godly men, as is the gift of faith: but unto certaine onely, whereupon Paul calleth it, a proper gift of God, which ſome haue, and ſome haue not. Wherefore not all the faithfull that pray for it, and ſeeke after it, finde it: for conſidering that it is a thing not neceſſary vnto ſaluation, we haue no further promiſe of obtaining of it, then the ſame ſhall ſeeme good to Gods wiſedome: who knoweth for whom, when, and how long the ſame is expedient for vs, to his glory and our good. For as the gifts of the tongues, propheſie, and ſuch like, as profitable to the edifying of the Church, as is the gift of continence, and more too; are not giuen to euery one that ſeeketh after them: ſo is not this to euery one that followeth after it. And therefore your owne Frier holdeth it to be a peculiar gift of God, and that all are not able to come to the height of this perfection. Therefore the Apoſtle, euen in the ſame place, where he exhorteth to a ſolitary life, for the auoiding of the incommodities which the iniquitie of thoſe times caſt vpon married perſons: knew no remedy but that they ſhould marry, if they did not conteine: Where, if he had been ſo wiſe as the Ieſuits, he could haue found out a means to haue gotten this gift. And therefore it is a very ſtrange accouplement which they haue made here of Mans free Will, and Gods gift together: things as vnconioynable (in that ſence which the Ieſuites follow) as light and darkneſſe. The Scripture ſaith here, and otherwhere, that it is the gift of God: where ſaith it, that it is the gift of our free will? From the fountaine of our will come forth the ſoure and bitter waters of fornication, and of adultery: and doth there flow from the ſame fountaine the ſweet water of chaſtity and continencie. And what need is there, that thoſe whoſe hearts are begun by faith to bee purged from their naturall corruption, ſhould aske the gift of God, if they themſelues can giue it vnto themſelues. Or with what earneſtneſſe or feeling can they ſeeke it without, if they haue it within, And that the gift of continence is a thing that euery mans hand cannot reach, hath a great eccho and conſent of antiquity. Ierom willeth men to examine themſelues whether they bee able to obſerue the precepts of virginity, and that a man is to conſider his ſtrength, that hee take it which is able to take it. And in another place he ſaith, That he which is not able to refraine, muſt needes chooſe one of thoſe, either to marry, or to go to ruine. Which neceſſity ſhould be none, if it were alwayes at the hand of him that prayeth for it. Hilary affirmeth, that our Sauiour Chriſt admoniſheth vs to be virgines: but yet ſo (ſaith he) if we be able. Epiphanius, We exhort him which can, and we impoſe no neceſſity to him that cannot. Auguſtine ſpeaking ſomewhere upon this place, ſaith, She that cannot take it, let her take it: but ſhe that doth not contain herſelfe let her marry. And in another place he confeſſeth, that not knowing his owne ſtrength he ſometime thought it to be a thing within his power. And againe, he affirmeth it to be a Pelagian error to eſteeme a ſolitary life is within our owne choyce. Whereby it is euident, that Auguſtine affirming that this is ſo of the gift of God, that it is alſo of our free will: meaneth thereby, (as in the reſidue of that whole booke) that no man is by the grace of God, compelledly conſtrained, or conſtrainedly compelled to do the good that he doth; but that the grace of God maketh him willing of vnwilling.

Touching Origen, of all other you ſhould haue ſpared his teſtimony in this caſe: who ſeeking for continency by ſuch an extremity as was the gelding of himſelf: doth ſtronglier by his deed confirm our part, then yours by his word. It had been a great madneſſe to haue digged ſo dangerouſly, and broken vp his owne ground with hazard of life: if of it owne accord it would haue ſhot forth from the root of his free will. Beſide that to ſuppoſe of him, that hee fell to this extremitie before hee had aſſayed what hee could obtaine by prayer: is a harder iudgement of him then the ſtory doth inforce. And therefore in ſaying that this gift is obtained by prayer, it muſt needs bee vnderſtood of ſuch, as the Lord thinketh it meet for, not onely to make him agree with the experience that he felt in himſelfe, but alſo with his owne words and iudgement, who that he held it not in the power of euery one to liue a virgin life: it appeareth by that he complaineth of the tyranny in commanding virginity as of a thing that is aboue mans power.

Vow of chaſtity.

CARTVV. 4. [12. Gelded themſelues.] To go with fewer and eaſier ſteps vnto the kingdom of heauen, it is lawfull to vow with this condition, ſo long as the Lord ſhall uphold vs in the ſtrength of being able to forbeare marriage. Otherwiſe, as his mouth maketh his fleſh to ſinne which delaieth and deferreth the vowes which he hath made vnto God: ſo it doth when it haſteneth a fooliſh and a raſh vow. And although the vow were lawfull, yet it followeth not, that it is of greater reward, or as you (in the tongue of Babel and Egypt) loue to ſpeake, of greater merit. Rather it may be ſaid, that as forbearing of meat doth no more commend a man vnto God, then the eating thereof, no further then it is uſed to a better end: euen ſo is it betweene him that abſtaineth from the company of a woman, and him that liueth with her in the eſtate of wedlocke. Wherefore, as to ſome man it is better by circumſtance of time and place, to take meate, then to abſtain from it: ſo to ſome (for diuers conſiderations) it is more acceptable that hee liue in marriage, then

Ier. 5. 8.

Counſels not precepts. Auſt. ſer. 6. de temp.

RHEM. 5. [12. He that can.] It is not ſaid of the precepts, keepe them who can, for they be neceſſarie vnder paine of damnation to be kept: but of Counſels onely (as of virginitie, abſtaining from fleſh and wine, and of giuing all a mans goods away to the poore) it is ſaid, Hee that can attaine to it, let him doe it: which is counſell onely, not a commandement. Contrary to our Aduer. that ſay, there are no Counſels, but onely precepts.

CARTVV. 5. [12 Hee that can.] The people of God being oftentimes charged by the Prophets for not keeping the word of the Lord generally, for not regarding the mouth of the Lord without exception, is thereby tied neceſſarily to obſerue whatſoeuer proceedeth from the Lord, according to the nature of the things that are ſpoken: For touching the promiſes they are neceſſary to bee beleeued, the threates to bee feared, the commandements to bee obeyed. And therefore his counſels, becauſe they proceed from his mouth, haue the ſame bond of neceſſary obſeruation. But theſe men not conſidering the Maieſty of God, ſpeake as vilely and baſely of his counſels, as they would doe of the counſell of a mortall man: For if Salomon with his ſages were aliue to giue counſell, hee ſhould hardly eſcape the reproach of folly, that ſhould not reſt in their graue aduiſe. And do they think that God, which is onely wiſe, ſhall giue any man a counſell, that hee may either leaue or take at his pleaſure, without the manifeſt marke of iniquity? Wherefore the Ieſuites might haue learned that in the Scripture a counſell and a commandement are all one. Whereupon the Prophet Dauid oftentimes in one Pſalme calleth the ſame things Commandements and Counſels: Whereupon alſo the Prophet in another place, as the Lords Atturney Generall, inditing the people of Iſrael, for their diſobedience againſt the Lord; layeth the ground thereof in that they keepe not the Lords Counſels. Wherefore although this bee no commandement to all, yet is it a commandement to him to whom it is directed; for if hee that hath this gift, ſee that the ſtate of marriage will bee a ſnare, or let unto him in the better ſeruice of the Lord, from the which a ſingle life will free him, to him it is ſuch a counſell, as if hee follow not, ſinne will follow him. And heerein the reſemblance of wine and fleſh, which you your ſelues do bring, doth manifeſtly convince you: for as hee that abſtaineth not from fleſh when the ſame ſhould bee a ſtumbling blocke to his weake brother, or forbeareth not wine, when the ſame is fit, for the ſubduing of his body, unto a chaſte and cleane keeping of his veſſell, ſinneth: euen ſo it is in this caſe. According to this doctrine Baſil ſaith: That wee muſt obſerue all things without omittance, whatſoeuer are delinered of the Lord by the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles. Againe, the conſtitution called Apoſtolicall, ſaith: Wee ſay that there are two waies, the one of death, the other of life, which the Law preſcribeth And after giueth example in thoſe things, which your Church accounteth for counſels, that men may leaue or chuſe: As that wee bleſſe thoſe that curſe us, loue our enemies, which thing thoſe that do not, our Sauiour Chriſt holdeth no better then Heathen men; where you hold them for good Catholickes: The conſtitution adiudgeth to euerlaſting death, where you ſay not ſo much, as blacke is their eye. As for Auguſtine hee is heere ſet to paint your Margent, who ſpeaketh nothing good or bad pertaining to this matter. It is not out of ſeaſon to put you heere in minde of your accuſtomed malapertneſſe, in that you dare by vow make that neceſſary, which you confeſſe to bee free by counſell from the Lord: preferring thereby the deuiſe of your idle heads, unto the high counſell of the Lords wiſedom, which ought to bee an Oracle in all Chriſtian ſocieties.

RHEM. 7. [17. If thou wilt enter.] I see not (saith S. Augustine) why Christ should say, If thou wilt haue life euerlasting, keepe the commandements: if without obseruing of them, by onely faith one might be saued. Aug. de fid. & op. c. 15.

CARTVV. 7. [17 If thou wilt enter.] This Marginall Note, in the Annotations upon the tenth of Luke is sung againe with a longer & higher Note, where the Reader shal look for answer.

RHEM. 8. [21. If thou wilt be perfect.] Loe, he maketh a plaine difference between keeping the commandements, which is necessarie for euery man: and being perfect, which he counselleth onely to them that will. And this is the state of great perfection which Religious men do professe, according to Christes counsell here, leauing all things and following him. The religious state of perfection.

CARTVV. 8. [21 If thou wilt be perfect.] The whole doctrine giuen under the Law, is a perfect doctrine: for which cause it is commanded, that nothing should be added unto it, or diminished from it: And for the same cause it is able to instruct the Minister of God to all purposes, and to make him perfect to the performing of any duty: to direct the Church towards the attainement of the highest felicitie, whereunto it is called. And therefore it is a leud and a false doctrine, that esteemeth our Sauiour Christ to haue taught any new doctrine; which was not giuen by Moses and interpreted by the Prophets. And as the whole Scripture maketh a perfect body of doctrine, wherein there is not a ioynt too much or too little; so is euery member of this body so perfect as all addition or detraction doth cause a deformity. Hereupon it riseth that the ten Commandements bee a perfect rule of all holinesse and righteousnesse, so that no good worke can possible bee done, which is not within the walk and compasse of one of them. And if any man were able to fulfill it, it would make him perfect, and procure the heaped measure of all manner of blessings, both of this life and of the life to come, both written and not written. And therefore this yong man asking after the rule of good workes, is sent by our Sauiour Christ to the Law, in the perfect obseruation whereof hee should bee sure to come to the top of all felicitie: And therefore it is false that our Sauiour Christ understandeth some other worke by distribution of our goods unto the poore, then is contained in the commandements: false also that any man can clime a higher staire of perfection then is attained unto by keeping of the Law; if so bee there were any able to keepe it. This is manifest by the 23 and 24 verse, where our Sauiour Christ saith, that it is hard, yea impossible for a rich man (comprehending especially the rich yong man, upon whose occasion hee spake) to enter into the Kingdom of heauen: whereas the way to the Kingdom of heauen had beene both easie and sure for him: if according to the profession made of himselfe, hee had fulfilled the Law. Wherefore it is euident that hee was deceiued when hee thought himselfe to haue fulfilled the Law, considering that the Apostles which verse 27 did the same which they were bidden to do, in leauing all to follow Christ, confessed themselues to bee sinners, that is transgressours of the Law, according as their foule falles enrouled by the Euangelists do declare: Considering also that Paul, which beside the burning light of his holy life (which would haue easily bewrayed the dimnesse of this mans godlinesse) becomming poore, and to haue nothing for Christs sake, confesseth notwithstanding that hee had not attained unto perfection. And to the end that our Sauiour Christ would let him see, how hee was deceiued, hee commanded him to sell. &c. by which commandement hee did (indeed) discouer him for not resting in his word of following him, whom hee acknowledged to bee a teacher from God, hee uttered his small loue unto God: And in that hee would not part with his mony to relieue the poore, hee was conuicted to haue had but a cold loue to his neighbours. Now that it was a Commandement and not a Counsell, in that sense which you meane, it is euident: First, by the words of commanding, and more certainely by the example of the Apostles, comparing their obedience with the disobedience of this yong man. Vnlesse therefore you will say that the Apostles were at their choise, whether they would follow Christs calling or no, you shall bee euen heere also constrained to confesse a commandement as well as there. And for this height of perfection, whereby you would exalt your Votaries aboue all other degrees, it is euident that the same is commanded by our Sauiour Christ, unto all kind of persons. And in Luke our Sauiour Christ, requiring of euery one that commeth unto him, not onely to leaue his gaine and pleasure, but euen to hate his father and mother, his wife and children, brethren and sisters, yea and his own life: which notwithstanding must bee necessarily understood with this condition, if hee cannot hold the loue of them, with his dutifull obedience unto Christ. Theophilact interpreting (in this place) the word Perfect, saith that it is as much as my Disciple and a Christian. And both our Sauiour Christ exhorteth all Christians to perfection, and the Apostle auoucth them so to be.

RHEM. 9. [21. Follow me.] Thus to follow Christ is to be without wife and care of children, to lacke proprietie, and to liue in common and this hath great reward in heauen aboue other states of life: which S. Augustine saith, the Apostles followed, and himselfe, and that he exhorted others to it as much as lay in him. Aug. ep. 89 in fine, & in psal. 103. Concil. 3. post. med.

CARTVV. 9. [21. Follow me.] That the Apostles did not leaue all which they had, but that alone which they could not retaine with the obedience of Christ, whom they by a speciall calling were bound to follow: it hath been before declared; whereby also it is euident, that this yong man who was bidden to do that with the Apostles: was not commanded to sell all that he had. For which the testimony of Augustine here alledged, is so flat contrary, as argueth a maruellous extremity that the Iesuites are brought unto, which are driuen to chuse that for their hauen which is their rocke: for speaking here of forsaking of goods, he approueth onely such a kinde of forsaking, when the contrary retaining is the loosing of Christ. If (saith he) the case stand so, thou canst not without the forsaking of Christ enioy thy goods. Seeing then he is no true Christian which abando- Aug. Epist. 89.

ning Christ doth saue his goods: it followeth that the pouerty which Augustine speaketh of, and exhorteth others vnto, serueth to the making vp of the lawfull measure of Christianity, and not (as the Iesuites make it) to serue for a surcrease or ouerplus of righteousnesse and merite more then a Christian man is bound vnto. For although the leauing of all that a man hath, seeme to you to bee very much, yet in such a case, it is but the sycle of the sanctuary, that euery man is bound to giue, to approue himselfe a lawfull subiect of the Lord. Further, Augustine vpon the Psalme here alledged, speaking against those which contemned such as forsooke not all, affirmeth that the Apostles themselues did it not, yea (saith he) they forsook not that which they had, but that which they desired to haue: declaring thereby, that that which they had gotten and earned before their calling, they retained, willingly giuing ouer the hope of that further gaine which their trade of liuing would haue, in all likelihood brought them to. This is yet further to be vnderstood, by the practise of Augustine himselfe, whom the Iesuites would hooke into the order of wilfull beggars, for his houshold stuffe, and his ordinary table or diet, neither too costly or gorgeous, neither yet too vile or base, together with the choyce of his table company, being to the commendation of his modesty, temperancie, and Christian loue, left in writing, proueth that he had a property in those things, for the discreet use whereof he is so highly commended. It is also to bee obserued of the former of those places cited out of Augustine, that although he set vp a further mark of perfection then the selling of that which a man hath, namely, if hee also maintaine himselfe with the labour of his owne hands, rather then of the benevolence of others; yet those slow bellies, and euill beasts are so fare from pricking at that marke, that they will not once so much as aime at it. So farre as the forsaking of nothing to get somwhat will make them perfect: they are content to seeke after perfection. But the perfection which commeth not with great ease, these painfull Penancers will suffer to lie in the streets, to be taken vp of any rather then of themselues. Possidonius in vita Aug.

RHEM 10. [26. All things possible. This of the camell through a needles eye, being possible to God, although he neither hath done it, nor by like will doe it: maketh against the blasphemous infidelitie of our Aduersaries that say, God can doe no more then he hath done or will doe, we see also that God can bring a camell through a needles eye, and therefore his body through a doore, and out of the sepulchre shut, and out of his mother a virgine, and generally aboue nature and contrary to nature doe with his body as he list.

CART VV. 10. [26. All things possible.] It is a shamelesse vntruth that we affirm that God can do nothing but that which he hath or will do. Whereof if they will cleare themselues, let them shew any approued writer on our side which hath so spoken. We affirme that it is impossible for him to doe any thing which is contrary to the truth; and the Apostle affirmeth as much; for which cause it is impossible for his humane nature, to be in many places at once, for so he should giue his glory, which is proper to himselfe alone, vnto another: if he should communicate a diuine propertie with his humanity, which is a creature. Againe, our Sauiour is declared to bee in all things like unto vs, sinne onely excepted. Forasmuch therefore as man in the state of his innocency could not be in two places at once, nor in any one place, without the measure of the place answerable to the measure of his body: it followeth that our Sauiour Christ as touching his humanity, can be neither. And if God had in his word reuealed, that a Camell should neuer be brought through a needles eye: we would not feare to say also, that that were impossible for God to doe; whereby it is euident, how vnaptly this case of the Camell is compared with the matter of Transubstantiation. Neither is there any note of vnability ascribed vnto the Lord, considering that it would argue a great vnability and insufficiencie in the Lord, if hee could bee contrary unto himselfe, as of the other side it proueth a soueraigne power, that he cannot doe any thing which is euill. *2. Vow of poverty in respect of reward.

CART VV. 11. [27. Left all.] It is answered before. And so to vow the leauing of all, as they haue been shewed to haue done, is not onely lawfull, but a necessary vow, as it is necessary for all other men to vow the obseruation of all other the commandements of the Lord to their vttermost.

RHEM. 12. [27. What shall we haue.] They leaue all things in respect of reward, and Christ doth well allow it in them by his answer.

CART VV. 12. [27. What shall we haue] It is false that they did in respect of reward. For then they should haue been hirelings: wherefore the loue of God constrained them thereunto; which loue would haue holden them in dutiful obedience vnto our S. Christ, although they should haue (if it had been possible) been condemned, as it appeareth in the examples of Moses and Paul. And although laying down before, the faithfull loue of God, for the ground of our obedience, it be lawfull to stirre up our dulnesse with a representation of the promised reward: yet this place is not the fittest to proue that, wherein the Apostles question is out of all controuersie of worldly honours which Princes giue to their most trusty and seruiceable subiects. And therefore our Sauiour Christ doth not in his answer allow of that which they sought after in their question: but called their mindes from the loue of earthly, to the desire of heauenly things. Exod. 32. Rom. 9.

RHEM. 13. [28. You also shall sit.] Note that not onely Christ, who is the principall and proper iudge of the liuing and the dead, but with him the Apostles and all perfect Saints shall iudge: and yet that doth nothing derogate to his prerogatiue, by whom and vnder whom they holde this and all other dignities in this life and the next. Aug. in Psal. 121.

CART VV. 13. [28. You also shall sit.] There is therefore (according to the Iesuits) somthing vnperfect in the kingdom of heauen, some perfect Saints, and some vnperfect, contrary vnto the Apostle, which both teacheth that all imperfection shall then be done away, and that the Saints (without exception) shall iudge the world. They mutter also, and munt out of this place, the 1. Cor. 13. 10. 1. Cor. 6. 2.

the mediation of Saints for us. But the concluſion is ſo looſe, and ſo lazie, that they durſt not ſet it downe. For how followeth it, that becauſe the Saints being ſet in an honorable place, ſhall (as the Angels do) approue, and as it were hold up their hands in the righteous iudgement of our Sauiour Chriſt, that therefore they are mediators between God and us, whereas it followeth on the other ſide, that forſomuch as not knowing the hearts of men, they can giue no iudgement of them, although they bee preſent before them, untill our Sauiour Chriſt haue firſt pronounced the ſentence: that they are much leſſe able being abſent from us, to know what is needfull for us. And if being intitled to the iudgement of the world, they haue no further intereſt in it, then an honorable approbation of the fore-iudgement of our Sauiour Chriſt: how much leſſe, hauing no title of Mediatorſhip giuen vnto them, may they preſume to ſet further foote into it, thereto allow and magnifie the grace of God in it? Laſt of all it followeth not, that if the Saints in heauen bee partakers of the honour of Chriſt in iudgement againſt the wicked, whom hee hath caſt underneath their feete; that therefore hee partaketh his honour with them in ſhewing mercy to the Saintes in earth, whom hee hath ſet already in the heauens with them, and made fellow heires of the ſame Kingdom.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XX.

RHEM. 1. [1. In the morning.] God called some in the morning, that is, in the beginning of the world, as Abel, Enoch, Noe, and other the iust and faithfull of the first age: at the third houre, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and the rest of their age: at the 6. houre of the day, Moyses, Aron, and the rest: at the 9. houre, the Prophets: at the eleuenth, that is, at the later end of the world, the Christian Nations, Aug. de verb. Dom. ser. 59. briefly, this calling at diuers houres signifieth the calling of the Iewes from time to time in the first ages of the world, and of the Gentiles in the latter age thereof. It signifieth also that God calleth countries to the faith, some sooner, some later: and particular men to be his seruants, some yonger, some elder, of diuers ages.

CARTVV. 1. [1. In the morning.] This parable is taken to set forth the last sentence of the former chapter, That many that are first shall be last, and the last first. And therefore the end of the parable is concluded with the repetition of the same sentence: noting thereby the application of the parable. Hereof it commeth that to those which were last called into the vineyard, the reward is first giuen: and to those that came first, payment was made last. Hereof also are the first called brought into the parable, repining against the master of the house. Of this preferment of the latter, the cause is assigned to be Gods election, and the cause of the election, Gods good pleasure, which is argued further in that our works are not the cause of the reward. Therefore this parable doth so manifestly ouerthrow the blasphemous doctrine of the merit of works, as nothing more. For euen as it is not giuen here to euery one according to the measure of labour, that he which laboured more had more, & he that laboured lesse had lesse, but onely according to the good pleasure of the master of the houshold, euen soit is in the obtaining the kingdom of heaue. For although the Lord giues vnto euery one according to the measure of his works, wherby he testifieth his measure in faith, yet the same is by promise of grace, & not wages for the work. Neither doth the Lord giue the reward as a debter, but only becaule he is faithful. This being the drift of the parable, with so great light, as when the Sunne sheweth it selfe in his strength, the Iesuits notwithstanding go groping and feeling about expounding parables by allegories, and those not onely impertinent, but also vntrue: for it is knowen that by the kingdom of heauen is meant the time of the reuelation of the sonne of God in the flesh, and the time of the Gospell onely, which had the beginning by Iohns preaching: and therefore cannot comprehend Abel, &c. which were many ages before. Againe Abel, Abraham, and Moses are by this interpretation brought in enuying and repining at the calling of the Gentiles, whose saluation they thirsted after: whereas our Sauiour Christs meaning is, to charge the Iewes of his age. Finally, by these meanes these worthy Fathers are placed amongst those which are not elect, that is reprobate: which is most absurd.

Math. 11.

RHEM. 2. [9. Peny.] The peny promised to all, was life euerlasting, which is common to all that shall be saued: but in the same life there be degrees of glory, as *betwixt starre and starre in the element. Aug lib. de virginit. c. 26.

1 Cor. 15. Diuersity of glory in heauen.

CARTVV. 1. [9. A Peny.] The circumstance of the disputation which the Apostle handleeth, proueth that the comparison is of the difference between the bodies, as they shall be in heauen from those which are now vpon earth, and not of the difference of glorified bodies one with another.

1. Cor. 15.

RHEM. 3. [16 Few elect] Those are elect which despised not their caller, but followed and beleeued him: for men beleeue not, but of their owne free will. Aug. lib. 1. ad Simplic. q. 2.

CARTVV. 3. [16. Few Elect.] If by free will be vnderstood (as the Iesuites do) a power to take or leaue it: it is false, and refuted by infinite places of the Scripture; As, that that it is impossible for the elect to perish, and therefore impossible not to beleeue in that they beleeued, as many as were ordained to life, &c. And as the election of God shutteth out this free will, so doth the estate of our calling, wherein none commeth vnto Christ, but such as the father draweth. But if by free will be vnderstood, as Augustine often doth a willing & vnconstrained obedience of faith, whilest the vnwillingnesse and rebellion, that is by nature in vs, is (by grace) changed into a willingnesse and readinesse to beleeue: then it is true that men beleeue not but of free will. As for Augustine here alledged, he is directly against you for he affirmeth precisely, that the effect of Gods mercy is not in the power of man, as if the Lord should shew mercy in vaine, if a man will not receiue it, because if he would haue mercy euen of them that will not, he could vse such a calling as should bee fit for them to be moued with. With diuers other things tending to ouerthrow the Popish free will, and nothing so much as once countenancing it.

Math. 24. Act. 13. 48 Rom. 8. 30. Ioh. 6.

RHEM. 4 [23. In whom is prepared] The kingdom of heauen is prepared for them that are worthy of it and deserue it by their well doing, as in holy Scripture it is very often, That God will repay euery man according to his works, and Come ye blessed, possesse the kingdom prepared for you. Why? be- cause I was hungry and you gaue me meate: thirstie, and you gaue me drink. &c. Therfore doth Christ say here, It is not mine to giue, because he is iust and will not giue it to euery man without respect of their deserts: yea nor alike to euery one but diuersly according to greater or lesser merits, as here S. Chrysostom maketh it plaine, when our Sauiour telleth them, that although they suffer martyrdom for his sake, yet he hath not to giue them the two chiefe places. See S. Hierom vpon this place. & li. 2. adu. Iouin. c. 15. This also is a lesson for them that haue to bestow Ecclesiasticall benefices, that they haue no carnall respect to kinred, &c. but to the worthines of the person. Difference of merits and reward. Chrysost. hom. 66. in Mat.

CARTVV. 4. [23. To whom it is prepared.] This note is not onely against the parable before touched, but directly contrary to the words, from whence it is forcibly pulled, for to maintaine the Iesuits glosse of merites, our Sauiour Christ should not haue said to them, To whom it is prepared: but to them who haue prepared it to themselues, neither should hee haue said, before the foundation of the world: but after they were called, to the knowledge of the truth. Last of all, he should not haue said, It is not mine to giue, but vnto them, &c. But it is not mine to sell, to exchange, to barter, or to pay but vnto them, &c. Heere is therefore the Lords preparation to shut out our purchase: his decree to shut out our free will: his councell before all times, to shut out our workes which are done in time. Finally, his gift to shut out our desert. And therefore this is a notable Burglary to breake downe so many walles, to steale away the manifest sence of this place from the people, with certaine perill of their soules. And as the merit of men cannot binde the handes of God, from bestowing life euerlasting vpon whom he thinketh good: so can it not restraine him from opening his hand in degrees of felicity.

The quotations out of the Scripture, are & shall be answered in their proper places. Touching the fathers, Chrysostom in this place hath not so much as one word of merit, or of degrees of happines. Ierom in the first place affirmeth, that it is prepared for thē that be worthy, which we deny not: so that our worthines be expounded out of the word, which is a worthines by imputation, which standeth in that by faith, they embrace the doctrine of the Gospel sent vnto them. Finally, which is the worthines of a blind, halting, maimed, and euill fauoured beggar to come vnto a Princes table because he is bidden. Nay verily, our worthines is yet lesse; for the beggars being bidden, come of their own free will, which we cannot do: no further then our wil, which is a slaue to sin, is first loosed of the Lord as hath been shewed. In the other place he extolleth fasting, saying, that it bringeth men to paradice, frō whence excesse of eating draue them. When as it was not gluttony which draue Adam out of Paradice, but a generall rebellion against the rules of the righteousnesse of God, which he had grauen in his heart, both in that he had not the loue of God, whose commandement he set so light by; nor the loue of his neighbour, whilest he cast all his posterity into condemnation. And if it had been gluttony that had thrown him out, a moderate and a sober diet, which is as contrary to gluttony as fasting is, may as well bring him to paradice againe as fasting: neither do we deny, but that sober diet, and fasting also, so farre forth as it is vnderstandingly applied to the fitting of vs to other good workes, are a part of that way which God hath prepared for men to walke in: thereby to returne againe to paradice from whence they were banished. But I suppose the Iesuites are not so forsaken of reason, as of the way to eternall life, to conclude the proper cause thereof. It is said indeed, that the way bringeth a man to the place whereunto the wayfaring man pretendeth. But it is sayd vnproperly: for the cause is the life and strength of the man which taketh the iourney. But we confesse, that as without a way a man cannot gaine the place he goeth vnto: so without good workes no man can come into the kingdom of heauen. And that Ieromes words are here wrested from his minde, it is euident, in that hee (otherwhere) vtterly ouerthroweth this merit of worke, saying, That a man possesseth his full perfection of grace, and not of merit. Also, that it is a mans true wisedome to know that he is vnperfect, and that the perfection of all that be iust in this flesh, is imperfect. Luke 20. 35 Math. 10. 13. 14. Math. 22. 8 9. 10. Luke 14. 21. 23. Hier. in Ezek. lib. 14. Contra Pelagian. lib. 1.

RHEM. 5. [28. As the sonne of man.] Christ himselfe as he was the Sonne of man, was their and our Superiour, and Master, and Lord, notwithstanding his humilitie: and therefore it is prideand haughtinesse which is forbidden, and not Superioritie or Lordship, as some Hereticks would haue it. Ioh. 3. 13.

CARTVV. 5. [28. As the Sonne of Man.] It is false, that Christ is our Lord as hee is Man, when as neither the Angels, nor any other creature can haue any Lordship or Mastership ouer the Church, but God alone, who onely can command in his house. But hee is our Lord and Master as hee is the Mediator, which is (as hath been shewed) as hee is both God and Man. And if wee consider the humanitie of our Sauiour Christ alone, and as hee was the seed of Dauid: he was himselfe both borne a subiect, and a seruant of Cæsar. Now if it were necessary for our Sauiour Christ both God and Man for the executing of his Ministery to humble himselfe vnto the forme and state of a seruant: how much more is it meet that his Ministers to execute their charge, should forbeare all Lord-like and State-like condition in this world. If our Sauiour laid aside that which he had, how much more ought they not to take that which they haue not? Heb. 13.

And whereas the Iesuites affirme that pride and hautinesse is heere forbidden, and not superiority: it is euident that hee forbiddeth them the authority and stately port, which in Princes (according to the proportion and quality of their Kingdom) is lawfull. Truth it is, that hee reproueth their pride and ambition: but that could he not deliuer better, then in telling them that they desired things not meete for their calling: Howbeit he putteth a difference betweene the Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall Function, and that both in respect of the office of gouernmens, and titles of honour: it is most euident, the distinction of the office, hee noteth in these wordes: The Kings of the Nations haue dominion ouer them, and the Princes exercise authority ouer them, but it shall not bee so with you: Whereupon the Argument may thus bee gathered. That wherein the Ciuill Magistrate is seuered from the Ecclesiasticall Officer, doth not agree to one Ministers ouer another: But the Ciuill Magistrate is seuered from the Ecclesiasticall Officer by bearing dominion and principality: therefore bearing dominion and principality, doth not agree to one Minister ouer another. Touching the outward shew and appearance of greatnesse, beseeming the Ciuill Gouernours of the Common-wealth in their rule and dominion, either by traine, apparell, &c. it appeareth to bee noted of Mark in that hee saith, they appeare: whereof the signification is to bee seene in other good Authors, The example is set down in Agrippas, it being therefore a thing wherein the Ministers differ from the Ciuill Magistrate, it followeth, that pompe and shew of authority agreeing unto the one it agreeth not to the other. Touching their names and titles, hee putteth a difference in these words, And they are called gratious Lords, but it shall not bee so with you: So therefore the argument may bee framed as before: That forsomuch as they are seuered in titles, and that to the Ciuill Magistrates doth agree the title of gratious and bountifull Lords, therefore to the Ecclesiasticall Minister the same doth not agree. For as it is fit, that those whose offices carry an outward pompe and Maiesty should haue names agreeable to their magnificence: so it is meete, that those whom hee hath remoued from that pompe and outward shew, should likewise bee remoued from such swelling and lofty titles as do not agree with the simplicity of that Ministery, which they exercise. Neither doth it follow, that because Christ the Lord and Maister of the Apostles, had rule ouer them: therefore they being fellow seruants and schollers, should haue rule one ouer another. But it followeth rather that forsomuch as hee (being their Lord and Maister) did humble himselfe to do them the basest seruice: that therefore they should bee ashamed to bee Lords and Maisters one ouer another. And thus Cyprian (as hee is alledged of Gratian) doth expound this place, not of pride and ambition, but of the seuerall actes, and distinct honours between both the Powers.

31 VVhich of the two did the fathers will? They say to him, The first, IESVS saith to them, Amen I say to you, that the Publicans and whoores go before you into the kingdom of God.

32 For Iohn came to you in the way of iustice: and you did not beleeue him, but the publicans and whoores did beleeue him: but you seeing it, neither haue ye had repentance afterward, to beleeue him.

33 An other parable heare ye: A man there was an housholder who * planted a vineyard, and made a hedge about it, and digged in it a presse, and builded a towre and let it out to husbandmen: and went forth into a strange countrey.

34 And when the time of fruites drewe nigh, he sent his seruants to the husbandmen to receiue the fruits thereof.

35 And the husbandmen apprehending his seruants, one they beat, another they killed, another they stoned.

36 Againe he sent other seruants mo then the former: and they did to them likewise.

37 And last of all he sent to them his son, saying, They wil reuerence my sonne.

38 But the husbandmen seeing the son, sayd within themselues, This is the heire come, let vs kill him, & we shall haue his inheritance.

39 And apprehending him they cast him forth out of the vineyard, and killed him.

40 VVhen therefore the Lord of the vineyard shall come, what will he doe to those husbandmen?

41 They say to him, The naughty men he will bring to naught: and his vineyard he will let out to other husbandmen, that shall render him the fruit in their seasons.

42 IESVS saith to them, Haue you neuer read in the Scriptures, The stone which the builders reiected, the same is made into the head of the corner? By our lord this is done, and it is marueilous in our eyes. Psl. 118. 22.

43 Therefore I say to you, that the kingdome of God shall be taken away from you, & shall be giuen a nation yeelding the fruits thereof.

44 And he that falleth vpon this stone, Es. 8. 14. shall be broken: and on whom it falleth, it shall all to bruise him.

45 And when the chiefe Priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, they knew that he spake of them.

46 And seeking to lay hands vpon him, they feared the multitudes: because they held him as a Prophet. ☞

MARGINALL NOTE.

RHEM. 1. [12 Iesus went into the Temple.] How much the abuse of Churches by Merchandising, walking or other prophane occupying of them, displeaseth God, here we may see.

CARTVV. 1. [12 Iesus went into the Temple] It is your ignorance to match the temple of Ierusalem with the Churches now, it hauing a holy Sacrament, for which cause it was not lawfull to carry a vessell through it, not onely while the worship of God was in hand, but afterward. Whereas our Churches are to be compared with the Iewes Synagogues: of which no further benefite was sought then to haue a comely place for the assembly of the Church in Gods seruice. And although it bee not comely and conuenient that it should bee a market place: yet there are some things, as teaching of children and such like, that may conueniently bee used there, after the Church assembly bee ended: which was not lawfull in the Temple.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XXI.

RHEM. 1. [2. You shall finde.] Christ by divine power both knew where these beasts were, being absent, and commanded them for his vse, being another mans, and suddenly made the Colt fit to be ridden on, neuer broken before. Hier. in Mat.

RHEM. [7. The Asse and the Colt.] This Asse vnder the yoke signifieth the Iewes vnder the Law, and vnder God their Lord, as it were his old and ancient people: the yong Colt now first ridden on by Christ, signifieth the Gentiles, wilde hitherto and not broken, now to bee called Aug. lib. 12. cont. Faust. cap. 42.

called to the faith, and to receiue our Sauiours yoke. And therefore the three last Euangelists writing specially to the Gentiles, make mention of the Colt onely.

CARTVV. 1. [v. 2. 7. 8.]

Procession on Palme sunday with the B. Sacrament. All denote offices in that kind, exceeding grateful.

RHEM. 2. [8. Garments in the way.] The offices of honour done to our Sauiour extraordinarily, were very acceptable: and for a memory hereof, the holy Church maketh a solemne procession euery yeere vpon this day, specially in our Countrey when it was Catholicke, with the B. Sacrament reuerently carried, as it were Christ vpon the Asse, and strawing of rushes and flowers, bearing of palmes, setting up boughes, spreading and hanging up the richest clothes, the quire and queristers singing, as heere the children and the people: all done in a very goodly ceremony to the honour of Christ, and memory of his triumph vpon this day. The like seruice and the like duties done vnto him in all other solemne processions of the B. Sacrament, and otherwise, be vndoubtedly no lesse gratefull.

2. King 9. 13.

CARTVV. 2. [8 Garments in the way.] This manner of doing was drawn from that people, which gaue unto one, whom they suddenly acknowledged to be their King, this honour of spreading their garments under his foote: when therefore they suddenly acknowledged Christ to bee their King, and being in the way had nothing to testifie their honour unto him, beside these things, they thought good to take that which came next to hand. And of this act (as of all other good duties to him) our Sauiour Christ teacheth the remembrance, to bee by preaching of the Gospell. Your Remembrance therefore by such Aperies is Iewish, or rather Paganish in as much as it is the inuention of your blind heart, without either commandement of our Sauiour Christ, or example of the Apostles. And therefore it is no maruaile, if your Synagogue, hauing such remembrancers, as are these dumbe ceremonies, haue lost the doctrine of the humility of Christs Kingdom, and in stead thereof hath brought in a stately Maiesty, and Brauery of an earthly Kingdom. For your Priest to bee the Asse, it will be easily granted, who for his brutish rudenesse will for the most part, euen without a paire of Asses eares, easily passe in that account; But that your Cake is Christ, which is guided and carried of the Asse, in stead that the Asse should be guided, it will not bee so easily yeelded unto. Thereof rather is manifestly proued, that it is (according to the Prophet) no better then a Babilonicall Idoll: which not being able to goe, is borne of his worshippers; whereas our Sauiour Christ doth beare those that worship him. A goodly Ceremony you say, No maruaile if it seeme a Cygnet unto you, which is but Crow-bird, considering that it is of your own hatching. And last of all when you confesse that it is a song now onely of certaine children skilfull in musicke, which was heere sung by the whole multitude; you haue with your own hand, pulled away the rag wherewith you would haue couered your shame. For the principall reason of your goodly ceremony standing in the Apish imitation of that act: it must needs follow, that either it is in one part euill followed, or in the other euill forsaken. And if the imitation of the people of God do iustifie you, the swaruing from it, especially in that which is of most importance, will condemne you,

Matt. 26. 13.

Esay 46. 1. 2. 3. 4.

Hosanna.

RHEM. 3. [9 Hosanna.] These very words of ioyfull cry and triumphant voyce of gratulation to our Sauiour, holy Church useth alwaies in the preface of the Masse, as it were the voyce of the Priest and all the people (who then specially are attent and deuoute) imediatly before the consecration and eleuation, as it were expecting and reioycing at his comming.

CARTVV. 3. [9 Hosanna.] You may well expect his comming: but hee is wary enough for comming into your hands, untill such time as hee come fearefully to bee auenged of all your mockeries of him.

RHEM. 4. [13 House of prayer.] Note heere that hee calleth externall sacrifice (out of the Prophet Esay) prayer, For hee speaketh of the Temple which was builded properly and principally for sacrifice.

Iob. 2. 21. 1. King. 8. Dan 6. Luk. 1. Apoc. 8. 3. Heb. 13.

CARTVV. 4. [13 House of prayer.] Children know that heere is a trope, wherein by part the whole is signified: And the Temple tooke name of prayer, rather then of any other part of Gods worship: First, that it being known that the Temple shadowed out our Sauiour Christ, wee might also know that wee haue onely him for our Mediator, to offer up our prayers unto God: euen as all prayers were made, either in or towards the Temple: Secondly, because the offerings both sacrifice and incense were figures of prayer, and referred unto it, as the shadow unto the body.

Prayers not understood of the party, are acceptable.

RHEM. 5. [16 Mouth of infants.] Yong childrens prayers, proceeding from the instinct of Gods Spirit, bee acceptable: and so the voyces of the like, or other simple folke now in the Church, though themselues understand not particularly what they say, be maruellous gratefull to Christ.

Deut. 13. Luk. 2. Esay 11.

CARTVV. 5. [16 Mouth of Infants.] Of this place it is euident, that euen under the Law, not men and women alone, but euen children were also well exercised in the Scriptures, and did understandingly sing prayses to the Lord. For that the children understood not that which they sung in their mother tongue, especially being taught by their parents of the meaning of the Law, according as the Lord in that behalfe had giuen commandement, it is without any likely-hood or shew of truth; wherein also the age of the children, that went up to Ierusalem to worship, not under twelue yeares, standeth against the Paraly prayers of the Iesuites. Lastly, how understandingly the children did it, appeareth manifestly: that they did not onely rehearse the words, but applyed them skilfully to our Sauiour Christ to whom alone they did belong. Now therefore to draw the people underneath the Gospell, upon whom the Lord powreth the Spirit of knowledge and understanding, which did but drop down upon the Iewes, to such a sottish and witlesse kinde of worship of God, and that out of the same place, from whence it hath so apparant a barre: becommeth well the shameleſſe forehead of the Iesuiticall sect. And if our Sauiour Christ had opened the mouth of the Asse whereupon hee rode, as hee had done to Balams Asse before, or had (as hee was able to doe) put the sound of those words in the stones, that were underneath his feete: It were to bee feared least these men would affirme that both Asse and stones shou'd haue performed such a good seruice unto God, as they should thereby haue purchased unto themselues life euerlasting. But this the Iesuites at unawares do confesse truely (which Socrates did sometime of his Country men (that the body of their Snagogue is alwaies childish, which the Apostle in matter of knowledge and understanding doth not allow. Math. 21. 1. Cor. 14.

RHEM. 6. [22. Beleeuing.] In respect of our owne vnworthinesse, and of the thing not alwayes expedient for vs, we may well doubt when we pray, whether we shall obtaine or no: but on Gods part we must beleeue, that is, we must haue no diffidence or mistrust either of his power, or of his will, if we be worthy, and the thing expedient. And therefore S. Marke hath thus: Haue yee faith of God. Mar. 11. 22

CARTVV. 6. [22. Beleeuing.] In this one sentence of the Iesuites they haue two contrary iudgements, so irreconcileable as their bloud (if they had any) would not be mingled together. But this clouen tongue is the iust reward of such as sell it for a little gaine. For both these blasts are blowne as it were with one winde: That we must not looke that our prayers shall be heard if we respect our owne vnworthinesse: and that wee ought not to doubt of the hearing of them, if so be we bee worthy: which indeed is as much to say, as wee must alwayes doubt, considering that no man, but such a one as is senseless of his wretchednesse, can enter into any thought or dreame of his owne worthinesse; especially considering that Daniel, a man full of good workes, and renowned for the fruits of righteousnesse, did not present his praiers in any trust of his owne righteousnesse: and our Sauiour Christ refuseth not to be found of any that seeke him, or to open to any that knock at his doore, nor to giue to any that asketh of him, whosoeuer he be. Dan. 9. Mat. 7. 7. 8

RHEM. 7. [23. In what power] The heretickes presumptuously think themselues in this point like to Christ, because they are asked in what power they come, and who sent them: but when they haue answered this question as fully as Christ did here by that which he insinuateth of Johns testimony for his authority, they shall be heard, and till then they shall be still taken for those of whom God speaketh by the Prophet, They ran, and I sent them not. Heretickes ran, not sent.

CARTVV. 7. [23. In what power.] With a little change of words we may answer you as our Sauiour Christ did the Pharises, in demanding of you from whence are the Actes of the Apostles, and the first Epistle to Timothy: Are they from Heauen, or of men? For if you answer, from heauen: we conclude, that our calling in the choyce of the Church, compassed by the Canon of the Apostles, through the sufficiency of him that is chosen, is from heauen. In the meane season you declare your selues to be the right successors of the Pharises: which esteeme no man lawfully called, but such vpon whose heads you haue layd your greasie hands, and in whose face you haue blowne the Easterly winde of your vnsauoury and vnwholsome breath, euen as they reiected the calling of our Sauiour Christ, because they came not through their hands.

RHEM. 8. [28. The first.] The first sonne here is the people of the Gentiles, because Gentility was before there was a peculiar and chosen people of the Iews: and therefore the Iewes here as the latter, are signified by the other sonne.

CARTVV. 8. [28. The first.] Cleane contrary to Moses, which calleth Israel Gods first begotten sonne. Contrary also to our Sauiour Christ, who expounding himselfe, compareth the Pharises to the elder and more honorable sonne, which pretending great obedience, were rebels against the Lord: and the Publicans and Harlots to the yonger sonne, which making in a manner a profession of pillage and filthinesse, by repentance come vnto the obedience of the Lord. Exod. 4. 22

CHAP. XXII.

Yet by one other parable he foreshewth the most deserued reprobation of the earthly and persecuting Iewes, and the gratious vocation of the Gentiles in their place. 15 Then he defeateth of the Pharisees and Herodians about paying tribute to Cæsar. 23 Hee answereth also the inuention of the Sadducees against the Resurrection: 34 and a question that the Pharisees aske to pose him: turning and posing them againe, because they imagined that Christ should be no more then a man: 37 and so he putteth all the busie Sectes to silence.

AND IESVS answering, spake againe in parables to them, saying:

The Gospell vpon the 19. Sunday after Pentecost.

2 The kingdome of heaueh is likened to a man being a king, which made a marriage to his sonne.

3 And he sent his seruants to call them that were inuited ro the marriage: & they would not come.

4 Againe he sent other seruants, saying Tell them that were inuited, Behold I haue prepared my dinner: my beeues & fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come ye to the mariage.

5 But they neglected: and went their wayes, ‖ one to his farme, & another to his merchandise:

6 And the rest layd hands vpon his seruants, and spitefully intreating them, murdered them.

7 But when the king had heard of it, hee was wroth, and sending his hostes, destroyed those murderers, and burnt their citie.

8 Then he sayth to his servants, The mariage indeede is ready: but they that were inuited, were not worthy.

9 Go ye therefore into the high wayes: and whosoeuer you shall finde, call to the mariage.

10 And his seruants going forth into the wayes, gathered together al that thy found. ‡ bad and good: and the mariage was filled with ghestes.

‡ Not onely good men be within the Church, but also euil men, against the heretickes of these daies.

11 And the King went in to se the gestes:

and he saw there | a man not attired in a wedding garment.

12 And he saith to him, Friende, how cameſt thou in hither not hauing a wedding garment? But he was dumbe.

Mar. 12.13 Luk. 20.20

15 *Then the Phariſees departing, conſulted among themſelues for to intrappe him in his talke.

16 And they ſend to him their Diſciples with the Herodians, ſaying, Maſter, wee know that thou art a true ſpeaker, and teacheſt the way of God in trueth, neither careſt thou for any man; for thou doeſt not reſpect the perſons of men.

17 Tell vs therefore what is thy opinion, is it lawfull to giue tribute to Cæſar, or not?

18 But IESVS knowing their naughtines, ſayd, what do you tempt mee Hypocrites?

19 Shew me the tribute coine. And they offered him a pennie.

20 And IESVS ſaith to them, VVhoſe is this image and ſuperſcription?

21 They ſay to him, Cæſars. Then hee ſaith to them, Render therefore the things that are Cæſars, | to Gæſar: and the things that are Gods, to God.

22 And hearing it they marueiled, and leauing him went their wayes.

25 And there were with vs ſeuen brethren: and the firſt hauing married a wife, died: and not hauing iſſue, left his wife to his brother.

26 In like maner the ſecond & the third euen to the ſeuenth.

29 And laſt of all the woman dyed alſo.

28 In the reſurrection therefore whoſe wife of the ſeuen ſhall ſhe be? for they all had her.

29 And IESVS anſwering, ſayd to them, You do erre, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God.

30 For in the reſurrection neither ſhall they marrie nor be maried: but are | as the Angels of God in heauen.

Mar. 12.35 Luk. 20.41

41 And the *Phariſees being aſſembled, IESVS asked them.

44 The Lord ſaid to my Lord, ſit on my right hand, vntill I put thine enemies the foote ſtoole of thy feete?

45 If Dauid therefore call him Lord, how is he his ſonne?

46 And no man could anſwere him a word: neither durſt any man from that day aske him any more. ☞

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XXII.

RHEM. 1. [2. Marriage.] Then did God the Father make this marriage, when by the myſterie of the Incarnation, hee ioyned to his ſonne our Lord, the holy Church for his Spouſe. Greg. hom. 38.

RHEM. (3. Seruants) The firſt ſeruants here ſent to inuite, were the Prophets: the ſecond were the Apoſtles: and all that afterward conuerted countries, or that haue and do reconcile men to the Church.

Worldly excuſes againſt reconciliation

RHEM. (5. One to his farme.) Such as refuſe to be reconciled to Chriſts Church, alledge often vaine impediments and worldly excuſes, which at the day of iudgement will not ſerue them.

CARTVV. 1. [v. 2. 3. 5. 8.]

The Church conſiſteth of good and bad

RHEM. 2. [11. A man not attired.] It profiteth not much to be within the Church, and to be a Catholicke, except a man be of good life, for ſuch an one ſhall be damned, becauſe with faith he hath not good workes: as is euident by the example of this man, who was within, and at the feaſt, as the reſt, but lacked the garment of charity and good works. And by this man are repreſented all the bad that are called, and therefore they alſo are in the Church, as this man was at the feast: but because he was called, and yet none of the elect, it is euident that the Church doth not consist of the elect onely, contrary to our Aduersaries.

CARTVV. 2. [11 A man not attired.] By faith we are made the sonnes of God, because by faith whereof Baptisme is the seale, we put on Christ as it were a costly robe, & mariage garment, wherewith our nakednesse and filthinesse is couered. This therefore of the marriage garment, may be fitly applied vnto faith, although good workes, which (as handmaids) do alwayes giue their attendance vpon a true and liuely faith: are not shut out, but onely in the very act of Iustification. The other poynt here mentioned, is an impudent and shamelesse vntruth, as hath been said. Gal. 3. 26. 27.

RHEM. 3. [22. To Cæsar.] Temporall duties and paiments exacted by worldly Princes, must be paid, so that God be not defrauded of his more soueraigne duty. And therefore Princes haue to take heed how they exact: and others, how they giue to Cæsar, that is to their Prince, the things that are due to God, that is, to his Ecclesiasticall Ministers. Whereupon S. Athanasius reciteth these goodly words out of an Epistle of the ancient and famous Confessor Hosius Cordubensis to Constantius the Arian Emperour: Cease, I beseech thee, and remember that thou art mortall, feare the day of iudgement, intermeddle not with Ecclesiasticall matters, neither doe thou command vs in this kinde, but rather learne them of vs. To thee, God hath committed the Empire, to vs he hath committed the things that belong to the Church: and as he that with malicious eyes carpeth thine Empire, gain-sayeth the ordinance of God: so do thou also beware, lest in drawing to the Ecclesiasticall matters, thou be made guiltie of a great crime. It is written, Giue yee the things that are Cæsars to Cæsar: and the things that are Gods, to God. Therefore neither is it lawfull for vs in earth to hold the Empire: neither hast thou (O Emperour) power ouer incense and sacred things. Athan. Ep. ad Solit. vitam agentes. And S. Ambrose to Valentinian the Emperour (who by the ill counsell of his mother Iustina an Arian, required of S. Ambrose to haue one Church in Millan deputed to the Arian Hereticks) saith: We pay that which is Cæsars to Cæsar, and that which is Gods, to God. Tribute is Cæsars, it is not denied: the Church is Gods, it may not verily be yeelded to Cæsar; because the Temple of God cannot be Cæsars right, which no man can deny but it is spoken with the honour of the Emperour. For what is more honourable then that the Emperour be said to be the sonne of the Church? For a good Emperour is within the Church, and not aboue the Church. Amb. lib. 5. Epist. Orat. de Basil. trad. Neither must temporall Princes exact, nor their subiects giue vnto them Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction.

CARTVV. 3. [22. To Cæsar.] This cited out of Athanasius and Ambrose is true, so that it be rightly vnderstood, and not Popishly. For although the administration and gouernment of the Church, do belong to Ecclesiasticall persons, as to the most skilfull in those cases: yet it belongeth to Princes in their seuerall iurisdictions to commend them in their well doing, and to punish them for the contrary. And not that onely, but to reforme things in the Church, as often as the Ecclesiasticall persons shall either through ignorance or disorder of the affection of couetousnesse or ambition, defile the Lords sanctuary. For which cause not onely the people are bidden to pray for them, that by their meanes we may liue godlily: but they themselues are also commanded to read and meditate diligently in the Law of God, that by skill therein they being inabled to discerne between truth and falshood, may with discretion beare the sword accordingly. The practise of which authority is to be seene in the good king Ezechias. But how is it that you which teach Princes, do not learne your selues to abstaine as well from the rights and priuiledges of Cæsar, as you would haue Cæsar hold his hands from yours: for both the Scripture commandeth, that Cæsar should haue his, and Athanasius thinketh it as vnlawfull for you to take the sword of Princes, as it is for Princes to set foot into the possession of the authority committed vnto Ecclesiasticall persons: wherein if you would haue giuen any eare, both the Pope should haue lost the one of his swords, and his Bishops their temporall Lordships, wherein they haue incroched vpon the proper and seuerall of Princes. 1. Tim. 2. Deut. 17.

RHEM. 4. [30. As Angels.] As Christ proueth here, that in heauen they neither marry nor are married, because there they shall be as Angels: by the very same reason is proued, that Saints may heare our prayerrs and helpe vs, be they neere or farre of, because the Angels doe so, and in euery moment are present where they list, and need nor to bee neere vs, when they heare or helpe vs. The Saints heare our prayers.

CARTVV. 4. [30. As Angels.] How out of time these things are haled to Saints departed, and seuered from their bodies, appeareth for that the estate of Saints here described, shall be after the resurrection, at what time they being conioyned with their bodies, shall not for all that be ioyned in marriage: without which consideration of resuming their bodies, our Sauiour Christs answer to the Sadduces cleaueth not together. Againe, our Sauiour Christs words are retched and drawen beyond his meaning: for his will is not to declare hereby, that the estate of the Angels and godly men shall bee in euery point alike? but as to that and such like poynts as were in question. For it is certaine, that the Angels shall neuer haue this honour to be members of our Sauiour Christ. And as they are here vnseasonably and impertinently mentioned: so there is no truth in either part of the argument: For first it is false, that the Angels are present where they list, considering that they go no whither but where they haue the commandement of God to direct them. Secondly, it is rashly said, without all testimony of the Scripture, that the Angels in a moment are present at the places of their seruice. For although the Scripture witnesse that they bee spirits of passing swiftnesse, yet howsoeuer the Iesuites take vpon them the postmastership of Angels, they are not able to tell how many miles they goe in a minute of an houre. And that they be able in the minute of an houre as well to ouercome 2 1000. miles as 100. (which their speech doth import) is vtterly false: considering that of the mouing of all things which are created, and not infinite, time is the measure: so that according to the quantity and space of place whereunto it is moued, the endurance of time must needs bee applied. Thirdly, Heb. 1. Zach. 1. 10. Ezec. 1. 14.

that Angels heare and helpe as well when they are farre remoued, as when they be neere vnto vs, is moſt falſe: for the Angels that are appointed to aſſiſt the godly in Iewry, are ſent into Iewry. And thoſe that are ordained for the reliefe of the godly in Babylon, are ſent into Babylon, which ſhould be altogether without cauſe, if farre or neere they were able to helpe alike. Againe, the Angels which execute the Lords vengeance againſt them which iniury and outrage the godly, are ſaid to purſue after the wicked, to pitch them vpon their noſes. But to what end ſhould they purſue them, if they haue ſuch long armes to reach them a farre off as when they are neere them. This alſo is to bee ſeene in the example of Daniel, who beeing throwne downe to the ground with the bright beames of glory which appeared in the Angell with whom he had conference, is not liſted vp but by a neerer approch of the Angell vnto him. If therefore being within the ſight and hearing of an Angell, the Angell could not ſet him vp vnleſſe he approched neerer vnto him, how much leſſe could he do it, being remoued ſo great a ſpace as the Ieſuites imagine? And for their approch to heare vs, the Angell is bidden of Chriſt to approach neere vnto Zachary, that the Prophet may heare him. So Daniel, to make himſelfe heard of the Angell, approcheth neerer vnto him. To what end? But that Daniel did well know, that the Angell being further remoued from him, could not vnderſtand him, vnleſſe hee had made a neerer approch vnto him. And if the Angels can doe none of theſe things which the Ieſuites here inable them vnto, much leſſe can the Saints, (neither by creation nor by calling ſo fit for theſe things) be able to performe them. And although all theſe things were granted them, that they haue here ſet downe, and whereof they are able to make no proofe in any one of them, yet followeth it not that therefore we ſhould pray vnto the Saints, there being herein neither promiſe nor commandement, nor example to be found in the Scripture.

RHEM. 5. [30. As Angels.] Not to marry nor to bee married, is to bee like to Ange's: therefore is the ſtate of religious men and women, and Prieſts, for not marrying, worthily called of the Fathers an Angelicall life, Cyp. lib. 2. de Diſcipl & hab. virg. ſub finem.

Religious ſingle life, Angelicall.

CARTVV. 5. [30. As Angels.] It is but a ſlender praiſe to bee like vnto the Angels in that they neither marry nor are married. For ſeeing the Angels haue no aptneſſe nor ability vnto the company of women, as thoſe which haue no bodies, it can be ſmall praiſe vnto them to abſtaine. But the thing that is moſt commendable in the Angels, and wherein they are ſet vp for patternes vnto vs, is, their prompt and ready obedience vnto the Lords will, wherein becauſe wee know married perſons haue not been inferior vnto virgins, as is richly witneſſed by the examples of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, Moſes, Dauid, Ezechiel. Peter, and other the Apoſtles: it is euident, that in the true Angelicall life they came not behinde the virgines. Another commendable quality in the Angels, is their wiſedom and knowledge of things, wherein it is expreſly affirmed of Dauid, a married man, that he was like an Angell of God: which wee read not of any virgin. And although there were ſome virgins in this behalfe after a ſort Angelicall, yet there neither is, nor hath been any of them ſo well winged, as to flye ſo high that way as did Salomon, who liued in the eſtate of Matrimony. It is not to be denied but that virginity is aduanced by a good part of Antiquity, to a further height then whereupon it can haue any ſure and ſteady footing. And was done eſpecially in reſpect of the perſecuted times: wherein that gift had a large and a ſingular vſe, in making them light to flye, which had not ſtrength to abide the brunt of the trials whereunto Chriſtians were then put. But as for the Popiſh virgins, how virgin-like they be, the grates and Cloyſters wherein (asbirds) they be caged, or rather as ſtaliones they be ſhut vp from their luſtes which they ſo thirſtily deſire, ſufficiently declare.

2. Sam. 14.

RHEM. 6. [32 Of the dead.] S. Hierome by this place diſproueth the Heretick Vigilantius, and in him theſe of our time, which to diminiſh the honour of Saints, call them, of purpoſe dead men.

CARTVV. 6. [32 God is not the God of the dead.] Our Sauiour Chriſt denyeth not but that the godly departed are dead, for ſo himſelfe calleth them in the verſe before. And it is of neceſſity that either they are dead or tranſlated: Onely hee denieth them to bee dead in the ſenſe of the Sadduces, which eſteemed that there was no other life after this, but that death made a man equall with a beaſt. Whereupon it is euident, how vnworthily this cauill is againſt vs, which giue to the full as much to the Saints departed as the Scripture doth. But indeede the matter they are angry with vs for, is becauſe wee will not put that Crown vpon the Saints head, which the Father prepared for his onely begotten ſonne, and which onely will fit his head. Or rather becauſe the ſweete ſauour of gaine, which they pick out of their vnſauory bones, is by the moderate and lawfull eſtmaion of the dead Saints, taken from them.

RHEM. 7. [40 On theſe two.] Hereby it is euident that all dependeth not vpon faith onely, but much more vpon charity (though faith be the firſt) which is the loue of God and of our neighbour, which is the ſumme of all the Law and the Prophets: becauſe hee that hath this double charity expreſſeth here by theſe two principall commandements, fulfilleth and accompliſheth all that is commmanded in the Law and the Prophets.

Not onely faith.

CARTVV. 7. [40 On theſe two commandements.] The Ieſuites ſeeking in euery hedge, and under euery buſh for an interpretation, whereby they may eſtabliſh the righteouſneſſe of workes, haue at the laſt found out one, which is as farre aboue their meaſure, as the other are ſhort: For whereas the meaſure wherewith they meete the iuſtification by workes, doth ſo fauour workes, that in the cauſe of righteouſneſſe, it ſhutteth not out the faith of Gods mercy in Chriſt. In this place they giue ſo much to workes that they leaue no place at all vnto faith: if therefore it bee true that the righteouſneſſe of a Chriſtian man doth conſiſt (as they ſay) of faith and workes: This place and ſuch like, which aſcribe all vnto workes and charity, can make nothing for them. It is true therefore if the queſtion bee how a man may haue a righteouſneſſe of his own, that not onely all is not in faith, but not a whit, and not onely much is in charity, but but all the whole: But forſomuch as none is able to come to righteouſneſſe that way, the Lord ordained another, which is by the faith of Chriſt, whereby the whole Law is perfectly fulfilled. And this Auguſtine, with whom they are often buſie, would haue taught them, who affirmeth that all the Commandements may well bee ſaid to pertaine to faith alone, ſo that wee underſtand a true, and a liuely faith, which worketh by loue. *Rom. 8. ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XXIII.

The See of Rome preserued in truth.

RHEM. 1 [2 Chaire of Moses.] God preserueth the truth of Christian Religion in the Apostolicke sea of Rome, which is in the new Law answerable to the Chaire of Moses, notwithstanding the Bishops of the same were neuer so wicked of life: yea though some traytor as ill as Iudas were Bishop thereof; it should not bee preiudiciall to the Church and innocent Christians, for whom our Lord prouiding, said, Do that which they say, but doe not as they doe. August. Ep. 165.

The dignity of the Sea of Rome, notwithstanding some euill Bishops thereof. Contra lit. Petil. lib. 2. cap. 51. Contra lit. Petil. lib. 2. cap. 61.

RHEM. [3. Whatsoeuer they shall say.] Why (saith S. Augustine) dost thou call the Apostolike Chaire the chaire of pestilence? If for the men, why? Did our Lord Iesus Christ for the Pharisees, any wrong to the Chaire wherein they sate? Did he not commend that Chaire of Moses, and preseruing the honour of the Chaire, reproue them? For hee saith: They sit vpon the Chaire of Moses, that which they say, doe yee. These things if you did well consider, you would not for the men whom you defame, blaspheme the See Apostolike, wherewith you doe not communicate. And againe he saith: Neither for the Pharisees (to whom you compare vs, not of wisedome, but of malice) did our Lord command the chaire of Moses to bee forsaken, in which Chaire verily he figured his owne, for he warneth the people to doe that which they say, and not to doe that which they doe, and that the holinesse of the chaire be in no case forsaken, nor the vnity of the flock diuided for the naughtie Pastors.

CARTVV. 1. [2.3. Chaire of Moses.] The chaire of Moses, is no speciall place in the Land of Iewry, whether Moses neuer entred. But (by a trope) the doctrine which both hee in his time, and the Ministers after him did, sitting in a chaire or Pulpit teach unto the people of God, as it appeareth by the conclusion in the next verse. And this Chaire was sometime in the Wildernesse, other sometimes in Iewry, at other times in Babylon, euen wheresoeuer Gods people were. Whereby appeareth how unfitly Rome is matched with Moses chaire, a substance with no substance, a carnall thing with a spirituall, a locall place with that which is not circumscribed by place. Secondly, the chaire of our Sauiour Christ, being in extent of territory a hundred fold aboue the Chaire of Moses, it is easie for all men to discerne how basely the Papists esteeme of our Sauiour Christs Chaire, which haue incloſed it within the walles of Rome, where Moses Chaire was not so pinioned. Thirdly, if place were compared with place, as Italy with Iewry, and Rome with Ierusalem: yet shall not the whole band of Italian aduocates and Romish proctors, bee able to shew such priuiledges for their Clients, as are to be shewed for Iewry and Ierusalem, which are called the places of his Loue, his Rest, his Dwelling, his Presence, his most holy Mount, his Hill lifted vp aboue all Hils in the world: For albeit the Churches of Christ in generall haue fuller promises then the Churches under the Law: yet there is no one particular Church or Nation in the world, which hath the promises of continuance of Religion with them, so long as the Iewes had, from whom the Law could in no sort depart untill the Messias should bee reuealed. And last of all, if the chiefe teachers of that place, which had peereleſſe priuiledges and prerogatiues, sate diuers times besides the Chaire, how much more may they sit upon the stoole of their own inuentions, cleane beside the Chaire of the heauenly doctrine, which teach in places not so defensiue against heresies, as these were? And heere the Iesuites in so apparant shew of all wickednesse, as is to bee seene in the chiefe rulers in the sea of Rome, will not sticke with us, but that their holy Father may bee a wicked person, euen to the treason of Iudas: onely in the teaching and maintaining the truth hee is (forsooth) so masterfully upholden that neither his tongue nor his pen can go awry: Wherein it seemeth strange that hee will spare to betray the truth of his Gospell which will not spare to betray our Sauiour Christ, the Author thereof. Paul taught farre otherwise that the precious Iewell of the truth in doctrine cannot bee preserued, but in the Casket of a good conscience, and that men through couetousnesse, chasing away a good conscience made shipwracke of the sincrere faith and doctrine of the sonne of God. And it is a common thing to punish one sinne by another, the blindnesse of the mind with inordinate affections; of the other side, inordinate affections with a blindnesse of minde. The practise hereof in the Pope hath already in part, and after shall more appeare. And the examples of the Iewish rulers laid hold upon, to proue the uprightnesse of Rome in doctrine, is directly against them? for it is euident that the chiefest of them all, which was the high Priest, fell shamefully in the matter of doctrine, and the lawfull seruice of God. Urias the high Priest, casting aside the lawfull Altar of the Lord, tooke in stead thereof an Altar made unto the patern of an Idolatrous altar of Damascus. The chiefe Priest under whom our Sauiour Christ suffered, meeting with other his complices in a Church councell, wherein they would inquire of our Sauiour Christ and his doctrine, gaue sentence of condemnation against him. To what end also should our Sauiour Christ bid his Disciples beware of the leauen of the Pharisees and Sadducees: a part whereof stood in false doctrine. If they had not erred (much lesse if they could not erre) in doctrine. And euen against the same whom hee willeth heere to bee heard, hee obiecteth diuers grosse errours that they published. beside diuers other wherewith hee had charged them in the first chapter, So that our Sauiour Christ should haue made a very sory prouision for the safety of his people against errours: If hee had (as the Iesuites pretend) commanded to heare them absolutely and without exception. Whereupon it is euident that our Sauiours meaning is that so farre as their doctrine had testimony of the Law, it should be willingly followed. Augustine helpeth you not, for the Churches in Africa being out of credit with the Donatists, what Church in the world could he so fitly alledge as the Church of Rome, which was the next neighbour unto the African Churches. But what saith hee of it? That in that succession of Bishops there was neuer a Donatist. A great matter; as if he might not haue said the same of the Church of Antioch, Alexandria, and Constantinople. If the Donatists could as well haue knowne their doings as Romes, considering that one of the letters of those heretickes, was in Affrick about the age wherein Augustine liued, and said this of Rome. And what maruell is it if a man, whose wickednesse goeth no further then to the corruption of manners, sitting in that seat, hurt none, which follow not his wicked steps: which is that which Augustine saith, is the prerogatiue of Rome, which is common vnto the Bishops seat of Eugubium, that the wickednesse of the Bishop cannot hurt them which suffer not themselues to be defiled with the pitch of his euill conditions. The Iesuits should haue shewed that Augustin holdeth, that no Bishop sitting at Rome can erre in doctrine, or in the gouernment of the Church, which had been contrary to Augustines owne iudgement in the Affrican Councell, where the Bishop of Rome is condemned as an vsurper vpon the right of other Churches. The Iesuites also should haue shewed that Augustine meaneth to appropriate this place of hearing the euill Bishops vnto the Bishop of Rome onely, which is cleane contrary to the words and meaning of Augustine, who vnderstandeth it, yea and expresseth it as well of all other Bishops of scandalous life, as of him, although he gaue the example of him for the causes aforesaid: who also in the other place by you alledged, mentioneth other Bishops as well as the Bishop of Rome. And that Augustines meaning was not in the second allegation, to tie the truth to any locall chaire: it appeareth in another place, where speaking of those words of Christ, he saith, That sitting in Moses chaire they teach the law, but if they teach any thing of their owne, then they may not be heard nor followed. Yea and the Donatists in this second testimony alledged by the Iesuits, notwithstanding their hatred to the African Churches, call the Bishops thereof Pharisees sitting in Moses chaire: acknowledging thereby that the seate of Moses was as well in Affrick as in Rome. And Augustine laying hold of their words, as vpon the hornes wherewith they would haue goared the godly Bishops of Affricke, turneth them against the Donatists, for that they forsook the chaire of Christ in Affricke, for the supposed disorders in the African Bishops whom they accounted for Pharisees. And in the same Epistle which they haue alledged, he sheweth the insufficiency of that triall of truth whose credit is fetched from the authority of any place. For hauing magnified the succession of Peter, he concludeth after this sort. Although (saith he) wee doe not so much presume of these proofes, as of the holy Scriptures: as it hath been before alledged: whereby hee granteth, that the stay that is fetched from the place, hath no ground of the Scriptures: but onely serueth to induce him that is already perswaded of the truth of the doctrine maintained in that place. Beside that, whereas the Iesuites would draw the title of the Apostolicke Church vnto the Church of Rome, it is a shamefull inclosure of the common of the Church. For seeing the Churches are all builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles: and seeing they all hold their faith and doctrine: it is euident, that they all are to be entered in the records and roules of Apostolicall Churches. Whereupon Tertullian pronounceth that those Churches which hold the doctrine which the originall and mother Churches receiued of the Apostles, the Apostles of Christ, Christ of his Father: are as well to be holden Apostolicke, as the mother and originall Churches themselues. For although they were neither gathered by either Apostles, or Apostolical men, yet for the blood and consanguinity of doctrine, they are no lesse to be accounted Apostolicall then the other. Others speaking somewhat otherwise, notwithstanding stretch forth this honorable title of Apostolicall Church, to sundry Churches beside Rome. Wherefore if Rome were in the traine of Gods daughters: yet can shee haue but a fisters part in this inheritable title of Apostolike Churches.

CARTVV. 2. [v. 6. S.]

RHEM. 3 [8. One is your Master.] In the Catholike Church there is one Master, Christ our Lord, and vnder him one vicar, with whom all Catholike Doctors and teachers are one, because they teach all one thing. But in Arch-heretikes it is not so, where euery one of them is a diuers Master, and teacheth contrary to the other, and will be called Rabbi and Master euery one of their owne Disciples: Arius, a Rabbi among the Arians, Luther among the Lutherans, and among the Caluinists, Calvin

Many masters are many Arch heretickes.

CARTVV. 3. [8. One is your Master.] That in the Church there is one onely master, Christ our Lord, we acknowledge to be his sentence: but that he hath also vpon the earth one vicar, the Pope of Rome, is of the Iesuites farcing in, not onely without all warrant of the word, or otherwise, but euen directly against our Sauiours words here, who proueth his onely Mastership amongst the teachers of the Church by their brotherhood and equality amongst themselues: which could not haue stood if the residue of the Apostles had had Peter for their vndermaster.

master. And if our Sauiour Christ asketh who supplieth his place vpon earth: his answer is well knowne, that he would send his holy Spirit, which should supply unto them whatsoeuer disaduantage they should feele by his departure from them. In which respect Tertullian calleth the Holy Ghost the Vicar of Christ vpon earth. Now where you charge us as mastered of Luther and Caluin, euen to the calling of our selues after their names, it cannot come but from a face of flint, both to forget your selues in the thing wherein you are so notoriously marked, and to remember vs, which cannot be stained therewith. For you haue first your Pope for such a Rabbi vpon earth, that although he dispense against the law of Nature, although against the rules of the Apostles; yet the eare of your obedience is so nailed to his Schoole doore, that yee bee much liker to his drudges and slaues, then vnto his schollers. Where also the ancient Fathers haue any thing for your purpose, there without all resistance, without all examination of their iudgements by the rule of the word, you are led prisoners to beleeue whatsoeuer they shall say. And could you forget your Magistri nostri of Sorbona, how Magistrally they teach, and how seruile they are, (or at least haue been) beleeued: whereas the world witnesseth with vs, that wee take neither Wicliffe, Luther, nor Caluin for Masters of religion; but onely as the Lords seruants, by whom we haue beleeued, whom also we receiue no further then they can approue out of the word, the doctrine they teach to be of God. Neither thinke we it a lawfull thing, to draw the name of our profession of religion from any man, as to be called, Lutherans, Caluinists, Zuinglans, wherein your Synagogue is notably infamous, as that which is rent into the profession of the Basilans, Ambrosians, Augustinians, Bernardines, Benedictines, Dominicans, Iacobins, Carthusians, with a number moe, who haue chosen to take the names of their profession from men rather then from Christ, and from the Disciple rather then from the Master himselfe: and here the Papists charge vs with the inuention of these names which their owne malice against the Gospell hath deuised.

RHEM. 4. [10 Maisters.] Wickliffe, and the like hertickes of this time, do heereupon condemne degrees of Schooles and titles of Doctors and Maisters: where they might as well reproue S. Paul for calling himselfe Doctor and Maister of the Gentiles: And for saying, * that there should bee alwaies Doctors in the Church, and whereas they bring the other words following, against Religious men who are called Fathers: as well might they by this place take away the name of carnall Fathers, and blame S. Paul for calling himselfe the onely spirituall father of the Corinthians: but indeed nothing is heere forbidden, but the contentions, diuisions and partiality of such as make themselues Ring leaders of Schismes and Sectes, as Donatus, Arrius, Luther, Caluin.

CARTVV. 4. [10 Maisters.] The Iesuites thinke it good pollicy, to sow their slanders thicke, in hope that some of them will take: And therefore they feare not to giue out this, which the common practise of the reformed Churches doth manifestly confute, where are both Maisters of Art, and Doctors of Law and Physick, yea of Diuinity also: albeit they bee not with so full consent of all the godly. For there bee certaine who think that there ought to be a greater restraint in matters which concerne the Church, then in those which are Ciuill. Considering therefore that the Doctorship in the Church is of Christs own institution they esteeme that for the cheise, for the ordination, for the execution, for the honour thereof: it should be directed by the Lawes which our Sauiour Christ hath left in that behalfe. Heereupon they thinke it not so meete, that hee which is by office a Pastour, should seek to haue the name of a Doctor; nor that hee which already, according to the Apostles rule, hath obtained the office of a Doctor, should seeke for the name of his Office from some other fountaine: As if the institution of Christ which giueth the office, gaue not also the name withall: especially seeing it is an acknowledgement of the authoritie of our Sauiour Christ in his Church, that euery office bee knowen by the same name that hee hath giuen it, and that there bee strength enough in the institution of Christ, which conferreth the office to conferre the name also. But to proceed further with you in the same sense wherein our Sauiour Christ forbiddeth this Rabbinisme in his Church, hee forbiddeth likewise this kinde of fatherhood, which was nothing else but Maister-like authority, whereby the Teachers require and the Schollers giue faith to that which is spoken, without inquiring into the grounds of their commandements whether they bee of God or no. And from this sacriledge cannot the Iesuites deliuer themselues, wihch sweare unto their Fathers absolute obedience in what thing soeuer they shall bee commanded by him, leauing themselues no more liberty to debate of the lawfulnesse or expedience of their Fathers commandement, then if they were brute beastes, made to bee taken at the pleasure of the hunter.

CARTVV. 5. [13 Scribes and Pharises.] The name of a Scribe is honorable, both in the new and old Testament: Notwithstanding our Sauiour spareth it not; And the Prophets which spake by the Spirit of Christ reproued the Priests by the name and title of Priests. Wherefore it is euident that our Sauiour Christ reprouing them by the name of Scribes and Pharises rather then of Priests, sought in a generality of words, for the shorter speech: comprehending under the title of Scribes and Pharises the Priests, whereas the title of Priests would not haue comprehended the Scribes and Pharises, albeit the Priesthood then enduring, which now by Christs onely Priesthood enduring for euer, hath an end. There was good cause that then it should bee honorably respected, which is now worthy to bee spit at: Which Cyprian doth apparantly note, when hee saith, that hee preserued the Priests honour unto the day of his passion. And the holier the estate is, the lesse ought they to bee spared which abuse and profane it: And if the Iesuites read Nonnius, they shall finde most reproachfull names applied euen to those Priests whose office and calling was lawfull: how much more ought the Popish Priesthood be vile unto us, whose ointment stinketh when it is sweetest and most regularly made.

RHEM. 6. [14 Praying long prayers.] They are not reprehended here for the things themselues, which for the most part are good, as long prayers, making Proselites, garnishing the Prophets sepulchres, &c. but for their wicked purpose and intention, as before is said of fasting, prayers, almes, Math. 6. The intention.

CARTVV. 6. [v. 14. S.]

RHEM. 7. [15 Double more.] They that teach that it is enough to haue onely faith, doe make such Christians, as the Iewes did Proselites, children of hell far more then before, Aug. lib. de fid. oper. cap. 26. Not only faith.

CARTVV. 7. [15 Double more.] When the Pharises had drawen some Gentile, unto a liking of the profession of the Iewes, what were the things trow you wherewith they cast them afterward into so deepe a condemnation? Verily in seeking, you shall finde nothing so powerfull hereunto as their false doctrine, wherewith they poisoned them: whereof the leauen of iustification by workes noted expresly by our Sauiour Christ, was the chiefe. Although therefore the Popish conuerts from Iudaisme, &c. can hardly attaine unto the height of wickednesse, which their peruerters are come unto: yet when the whole batch of the Popish Synagogue is knodden with the same sowre leauen of Iustification by workes, which they were: A man may well say that it is worse with them being graffed into the rotten stock of the Popish Synagogue, then when they grew upon the wilde Oliue of their Iudaisme, &c. And although it bee of dangerous consequence, to teach faith onely, considering that good workes are necessary to bee taught, as a way which the Lord hath prepared to walke by unto life: yet it is a mater of great safety to teach that by faith onely wee bee iustified, which to bee Augustines meaning, not onely the place which I alleaged before out of this booke, and other places where hee teacheth that wee are first iustified by faith, and then that good workes follow, as effects of faith, and as the fruites of a iustified man doe declare: but euen this place heere alledged, where hee saith; It is to bee taken heed unto wee make not men secure, saying that they shall come to life euerlasting, if they bee Baptized in Christ, howsoeuer they haue lined in that faith. Luk. 18. Aug. Epist. 120.

RHEM. 8. [19 Sanctifieth.] Note that donaries and giftes bestowed upon Churches and Altars, bee sanctified by dedication to God, and by touching the Altar and other holy things, as now especially the vessels of the sacrifice and Sacrament of Christs body and bloud, by touching the same, and the Altar it selfe whereupon it is consecrated. Whereof Theophilact writeth thus upon this place: In the old Law Christ permitteth not the gift to bee greater then the Altar, but with us the Altar is sanctified by the gift, for the Hostes by the diuine grace are turned into our Lords body, and therefore is the Altar also sanctified by them. The Altar is sanctified by our Lords Body thereupon. Theophil. Math. 23.

CARTVV. 8. [19 That sanctifieth.] The holy Supper of the Lord, being a Sacrament of Christ already come, as the Altar was of Christ to come, doth no doubt sanctifie the vessels, for the sanctification whereof it is ordained. But those are not the dishes, and cuppes, the table-cloathes, &c. which are upon the Table, but our bodies and soules, which are the truth and the body of those vessels which were wont to bee used in the seruice of the Altar, and of other parts of the Temple. And if there were yet an Altar, it must needs by our Sauiour Christs words sanctifie the giftes that are upon it, as in times past it did: especially considering that there is none of the ordinances under the Law which by the authority of Christ are translated unto the Gospell that haue lost any part of their former strength, which they haue rather increased. And so by the Iesuites consequence, our Sauiour Christ whom they pretend to offer upon their Altar must receiue sanctification from the Altar: where the contrary is true, that Christ being now once offered, leaueth no place for any Altar after him. As for the rest of Theophilacts words, although they are none such but may bee answered: yet being so late a Writer, wee haue him in no such account as to spend time in the according and tuning of him, with the ancient fathers, whom wee haue in full consent and harmony, against the late forgery of Transsubstantion. Esay 52. 11 2. Cor. 6. 17 1. Thess. 4. 4

RHEM. 9. [21 By him that dwelleth therein.] By this wee see that swearing by creatures, as by the Gospell, by Saints, is all referred to the honour of God, whose Gospell it is, whose Saints they are.

CARTVV. 9. [21 By him that dwelleth therein.] And withall wee may see, that as no man euer worshipped or called upon the Altar, or upon the booke of the Bible, because hee sweareth by them, euen so they shall deceiue both themselues and others to, if upon the confidence that the Saints may bee sworne by, they shall conclude that they may bee worshipped or prayed unto.

RHEM. 10. [28 Appeare to men.] Christ might boldly reprehend them so often, and so vehemently for hypocrisie, because hee knew their hearts and intentions: but wee that cannot see within men, may not presume to call mens externall good doings, hypocrisie; but iudge of men as wee see and know.

CARTVV. 10. [28 Appeare to men.] Christ able to reproue them of their bare thoughts, heere notwithstanding doth it of their open workes, which might appeare to those of good iudgement: For euen in the building of the Sepulchres of the Prophets there was a grosse and palpable hypocrisie, in that our Sauiour Christ, the end of all the Prophets, they dispised: and persecuted their doctrine, whose dead corpse they would seeme to beare honour unto. So the Papists pretending to worship Paul, &c. persecute his doctrine in those that professe it.

RHEM. [29 Garnish.] Christ blameth not the Iewes for adorning the Sepulchres of the Prophets, but enwyteth them of their malice towards him, and of that which by his Diuine knowledge hee fore-saw, that they would accomplish the wickednesse of their fathers in shedding his bloud; as their fathers did the bloud of the Prophets. Hilar.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [23. Here is Chriſt] Whoſoeuer draweth Chriſt or his Church from the communion and fellowſhip of all nations Chriſtened, to one corner, towne or Country, beleeue him not. Aug. de vnit. Ec. c. 3.

CARTVV. 1. [23. Here is Chriſt.] Wherefore the Papiſts drawing Chriſt and his Church from the communion and fellowſhip of all nations, to one corner and Citty of Rome, are not to be beleeued.

RHEM. 2. [30. The ſigne of] The ſigne of the ſonne of man is the holy Croſſe, which then ſhall appeare to the Iewes to their confuſion, Chryſ. in Mat. hom. 77. It ſhall be no leſſe confuſion to heretikes that cannot abide the ſigne thereof.

CARTVV. 2. [30. Then ſhall appeare the ſigne of the Sonne of Man.] It is a manner of ſpeech borrowed from the warres: for our Sauiour by euident tokens of his glorious appearing, as by the diſplaying of a banner, will gather his Saints together from all the corners of the earth. It is therefore groundleſſe to affirme, that the ſigne of the Sonne of Man is the Croſſe, there being no aſſiſtance of other places in the Scripture, whereby this is proued. And for ſo much as all markes of the ignominy of Chriſt ſhall then be aboliſhed, there is no likelihood of the appearance of the Croſſe, which ſhould refreſh the infamie that is done away. But it is no maruell though the Papiſts, which take pleaſure in priſoning him (as they imagine) in a penny pix, in hanging him in a halfe peny cord, in renting and tearing his fleſh with their teeth, in imbruing themſelues with his blood: and finally, craſhing his bones aſunder, do take pleaſure to behold the Croſſe, which was the inſtrument of the moſt cruell and horrible death of the Sonne of God; for euen thus it hath pleaſed the Lord to bewray their hypocriſie, whereby pretending loue they are notwithſtanding his deadly haters. The Lord ordained in the Law the Beaſt which ſhould be the inſtrument to ſhed the bloud of an innocent man, in token of deteſtation, ſhould forthwith be killed, and the fleſh (howſoeuer otherwiſe apt to be eaten) ſhould not be taſted of. For as a naturall and kinde father cannot behold with patient eyes ſo much as the knife that took away life from his ſonne; euen ſo the Lord, to declare his loue towards the ſonnes of Adam, would that euen the faultleſſe creatures ſhould after a ſort be deteſtable, which ſhould be imployed in the ſpilling of innocent blood. The Papiſts therefore which make ſo much of the wooden croſſe, which was the knife wherewith the Iewes tooke away life from him that is the Lord of life; do manifeſtly bewray how vnnaturally they are affected towards him, and that if they had the ſame power ouer him that in time paſt was giuen vnto the Iewes and Romans, it ſhould not be long before he ſhould taſte of the ſame entertainment that they gaue him. The elder Churches that followed the times of the Apoſtles, haue ſome defence for their vſe of the Croſſe, and eſtimation they had it in, liuing amongſt the heathen men, which caſt them in the teeth that they beleeued on a man that was nailed on the croſſe, they thought that it ſhould be a fit meanes to avow their faith in Chriſt crucified, if they carried that about with them, as a badge of their profeſſion. But as for the Papiſts which liue amongſt them, which place their life & glory in the death and ignominie of the ſonne of God, they are vtterly naked of all ſuch defence. And hauing no ſuch cauſe as the elder Churches had to aduance the credit of the Croſſe, yet do they dote after it more by the hundreth part, then they did: for albeit in proceſſe of time they fell into ſome ſuperſtitious vſe of it, as it commeth to paſſe when things are enterpriſed by tradition; without warrant of the word; yet they condemned the worſhipping of it as a heatheniſh errour, and a vanity of vngodly men.

Doest thou see how whatsoeuer hee hath built, no man shall destroy, and whatsoeuer he hath destroyed, no man shall build: Hee builded the Church, and no man shall be able to destroy it: he destroyed the Temple, and no man is able to build it, and that in so long time, For they haue endeuoured both to destroy that, and could not: and they haue attempted to build vp this: and they could not doe that neither, &c, Heretickes seduce vnder faire titles.

RHEM. [4. Seduce.] The first and principall warning, needfull for the faithfull from Christes Ascension to the very end of the world, is, that they be not deceiued by heretikes, which vnder the titles of true teachers and the name of Christ and his Gospell, will seduce many.

CARTVV. 4. [v. 3. 4. S.]

RHEM 5. [5. I am Christ.] Not onely such as haue named themselues Christ, as Simon, Menander, and such like: but all arch-heretickes be Christs to their followers, Luther to the Lutherans, Caluin to the Caluinists: because they beleeeue them, rather then Christ speaking to his Church.

Bonauent.

CARTVV.5. [5. I am Christ] We beleeue Christ speaking in his Scriptures, and his Church we beleeue so farre as she speaketh by their warrant. And whosoeuer speaketh without them (although an Angell from heauen) we would hold accursed. There is therefore small shew of truth in this accusation, that we take vpon vs to be Christs, because wee beleeue our selues rather then him. But you are more blasphemous then either Magus or Menander: for you glory your selues to be in effect better then our Sauiour Christ, whom you say you are the creator of: euery Popish Priest being the creator of his Creator.

RHEM.7. [14 Shall be preached] The Gospell hath been preached of late yeers, and now is, by holy religious men of diuers Orders, in sundry great countreys which neuer heard the Gospell before, as it is thought CARTVV.7. [14 Shall be preached.] Although the Disciples, verse 15. esteemed that they asked but one question, supposing that the end of the Temple should haue beene with the end of the world: yet the questions were diuers and seuerall. And therefore our Sauiour Christ answereth them seuerally and apart, And to the first question, wherein they asked when the Temple should be destroyed amongst other points: he answereth, the Gospel of the kingdom must first be preached through the world, or euer the consummation of the temple could be; which the Apostle declareth to haue been fulfilled by his and his fellow Apostles ministery, This was necessary to to be done, to the end that the prophesies might be verified, which foretold, that out of Ierusalem, and out of Sion should sound forth the doctrine and Law of God into all places. Whereupon it followeth, that there is no warrant in this place, that there shall be a generall preaching of the Gospell throughout the whole world before the second comming of our Sauiour. Wherefore it is false that there are Countries which neuer heard of the Gospell before they receiued it by men of the Iesuiticall disorder: who (poore cattell) are as fit to preach the Gospell as an Oxe to flye.

The abhomination of desolation. The abolishing of the holy Sacrifice of the Masse by Antichrist and his Ministers.

RHEM.8. [15. Abomination of desolation.] This abomination of desolation foretolde, was first partly fulfilled in diuers prophanations of the Temple of Hierusalem when the sacrifice and seruice of God was taken away, but specially it shall be fulfilled by Antichrist and his precursors, when they shall abolish the holy Masse, which is the sacrifice of Christs body and bloud, and the onely souereigne worship due to God in his Church: as S. Hippolytus writeth in these words: The Churches shall lament with great lamentation, because there shall neither oblation be made, nor incense, nor worship gratefull to God. But the sacred houses of Churches shalbe like to cottages, and the precious body and bloud of Christ shall not be extant (openly in Churches) in those dayes, the Liturgie (or Masse) shall be extinguished, the Psalmodie shall cease, the reciting of the Scriptures shall not be heard. Hippol. de Antichristo. By which it is plain that the heretickes of these dayes be the speciall fore runners of Antichrist.

CARTVV. 8. [15. Abhomination of Desolation.] To proue that the abhomination which Daniel spake of, is accomplished in them, that shall take away the Popish Masse, here is brought in Hippolytus, a worthy couer for such a cup, a booke neuer heard of in the world, vntill about 47. or 48 yeares agoe, in speech a babe, in knowledge a very ideot, of whose absurdities and heresies let the reader looke further in the answer of the Bishop of Sarisbury against Harding. And withall let him consider in what a forlorne case the Pope of Rome is: which against Antichristian colours cleauing so fast vnto him, can get no stronger water, nor no better Niter to waſh them off then this is: which is rather as oyle to make them ſtick faſter on. For the diſcouering and vncaſing of Antichriſt we ſhall haue a better place: for in this place, as the Prophet, ſo our Sauiour Chriſt looked to nothing leſſe then vnto Antichriſt. But by the Abhomination of Deſolation, or by the deſolation which ſhall be executed by abhominable men: the Prophet meaneth, and after him our Sauiour Chriſt, the deſtruction of Ieruſalem. For the Prophet hauing ſhewed that by the onely oblation of the Sonne of God, the Iewiſh Sacrifices vnder the Law ſhould haue an end: doth for a token of the accompliſhment thereof, forthwith forerell the vtter deſtruction of Ieruſalem, and of the Temple, neuer to bee re edified againe: where the Sacrifices of the Law can onely (in the iudgement of the Iewes themſelues) be offered. And that this is the meaning of the place, it is euident both in the next verſe, which ſpecifieth the flight of the Iewes upon this occaſion: and out of Luke, who for theſe words of Matthew, and Marke, When you ſhall ſee the abhomnation of deſolation, hath theſe as words of the ſame weight and value: When you ſhall ſee Ieruſalem beſieged of an Army. This interpretation is confirmed by Auguſtine. Epiſt. 80. ad Eſychium.

RHEM. 9. [22. Shall be ſhortned.] The reigne of Antichriſt ſhall be ſhort, that is, three yeeres and a halfe. Dan. 7. Apo. 11. Therefore the heretickes are blaſphemous and ridiculous, that ſay, Chriſt Vicar is Antichriſt, who hath ſitten theſe 1500. yeeres. Antichriſt.

CARTVV. 9. [22 Shall bee ſhortned.) Yet is continued the ſpeech of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, which although it were of all former deſtructions the moſt horrible, yet the Lord for the elects ſake amongſt the Iewes in theſe parts (that otherwaies ſhould haue beene conſumed) promiſeth to abridge the daies of the ſiege, and other calmities of the warre. Where in the latter day Peter teacheth that the Lord delayeth, and after a ſort protracteth his comming, that none of the elect ſhould periſh, but that all might be gathered whom the Lord hath written up to life. But touching the continuance of Antichriſt, as of the reſt of his whole eſtate, wee ſhall haue better opportunity to ſpeake of upon the 2. Theſſalonians 2. Here onely I would know of the Ieſuites how this three yeares reigne and a halfe may ſtand with the teſtimonie of this Hippolitus: who telleth that in his time Ieruſalem ſhall be builded vp againe of the Iewes. Doth hee thinke that that Citty is like to a Muſſitum that riſeth vp in ſo ſhort a ſpace. Salomon with all his wiſedom, wealth, and authority, wherein he paſſed all thoſe that went before him, or ſhould come after him with his beſt and moſt poſſible ſpeed, could not in leſſe then ſeuen yeares build vp the Temple onely, and that in the deepeſt peace that euer any Prince enioyed. And do they thinke that their clouted and forged Antichriſt whom they would ſo faine ſet up, to turne away mens eyes from the true Antichriſt, which is of Rome, ſhall be able to rebuild the whole Citty of Ieruſalem in three yeares, hauing neither the wiſedom, nor the meanes, nor the peace which Salomon had. To paſſe by the apparant conuerſion of the Iewes, which ſhall be before the end of the world, briefly noted in this chapter by our Sauiour Chriſt, and ſet out more at large by Paul Rom. 11. where it is plaine, that the Iewes at that time ſhall be farre from the deſire of reuiuing their ſacrifices. Thus it is euident, that the Ieſuites need ſolder to make their fables to cleaue together. For as for the ſeuenth of Daniel, there is neither made mention of three yeares and a halfe, but onely three yeares and a peece of a yeare: which peece the euent of the Story ſheweth to haue been about ten dayes, and whatſoeuer is there ſpoken, it had the full and perfect accompliſhment in Antiochus, the Syrian perſecutor of the Church. Which perſecution is manifeſtly alſo appropriated vnto the Church of God vnder the Law, and before the comming of our Sauiour Chriſt. As for that of the Apocalipſe it commeth to bee conſidered in the proper place. 1. Reg. 7.

RHEM. 10 [24. Great ſignes) Theſe ſignes and miracles ſhal be to the outward appearance onely, for S. Paul calleth them *lying ſignes, to ſeduce them onely that ſhall periſh. Whereby we ſee that if heretickes could worke fained and forged miracles yet wee ought not to beleeue them, much leſſe when thy cannot ſo much as ſeeme to do any. 2. Theſſ. 2.

CARTVV. 10 [24 Great ſignes.] Although wee bee little beholden to the Ieſuites, yet are wee much beholden to their brutiſh ignorance, whereby they oftentimes free us when they go about to charge us: For this is now the ſecond or third time, that they affirme of us, that we cannot ſo much as ſeeme to do any miracle, whereby they beare us witneſſe, that wee haue no part in the Anti-chriſtian doctrine: For if we were the Miniſters of Antichriſt to teach his doctrine, wee ſhould by the Apoſtles ſaying, bee his Miniſters to confirme the ſame with ſignes and wonders. If wee had their wordes, wee ſhould haue their ſeales. Now wee haue not their ſeales (as the Ieſuites teſtifie with us) nor once moue finger towards them, or put any endeuour unto them (as the whole world witneſſeth for us:) it followeth then that wee haue none of his doctrine. Of the contrary part, if wee were not able to proue, that they haue the Antichriſtian doctrine, as the Apoſtle do expreſly and euidently declare. Yet becauſe they haue the lying ſignes and ſeales of Antichriſtian doctrine, the waxe of theſe ſeales will cleaue ſo hard to their fingars, that by it, it would bee eaſie to finde the doctrine in their boſome. And when we call them lying ſignes, our meaning is (euen as the Apoſtle interpreteth himſelfe) that they are lying in reſpect that by them men are drawen to beleeue lies. For although the Popiſh miracles are almoſt all ſuch as were wrought by ſleight and leger de main, there ſtanding ſome verſet behind, when the image either ſwet or nodded before: yet hath it beene ſhewed, that the Lord (to reuenge the contempt of the Goſpell, by an effectuall illuſion) giueth power as to Sathan himſelfe ſo to his miniſters, to do things aboue the courſe of nature. And this is euident of this place, both by the greatneſſe of the ſignes which is aſcribed unto them, and by the mighty effect and operation they haue, which no wiſedom, learning, ſharpneſſe of wit, or other ſufficiency, but onely the election of God (which is as it were an unmoueable rocke) is able to withſtand. And Iohn ſpecifieth particularly that the falſe Prophet ſhall after the example of Elias bring down fire from heauen. 1. Tim. 4. 2. Pet. 2. Iude. Apoc. 13.

The ſecret conuenticles of heretickes. Catholicke Chriſtians ſecret aſſembling in time of perſecutiõ. * Act. 1. 13

RHEM. 8. (26. In cloſets.) Chriſt hauing made the Churches authority bright and cleere to the whole world, warneth the faithful to take heed of hereticks and ſchiſmatikes, which haue their conuenticles aſide in certaine odde places and obſcure corners, alluring curious perſons vnto them. Aug. li. 1. q. Euang. q. 38. For as for the comming together of Catholikes to ſerue God in ſecret places, that is a neceſſary thing in time of perſecution, and was vſed of Chriſtians for three hundred yeeres together after Chriſt, * and the Apoſtles alſo and Diſciples came ſo together in Hieruſalem for feare of the Iewes. And Catholickes doe the ſame at this day in our Countrey, not drawing religion into corners from the ſocietie of the Catholicke Church, but practiſing ſecretly the ſame faith, which in all Chriſtendom ſhineth and appeareth moſt glorioufly.

CARTVV. 8. [26 In Cloſets.] When mens hearts are through confuſions in the Common-wealthes moued, then deceiuers are buſied to worke their enterpriſes of leading the people into errour, For the people being affrighted, or oppreſſed, will readily giue eare to ſuch as will promiſe them liberty or ſafety againſt their feares. Our Sauiour Chriſt therefore fore-ſeeing that there would bee in that hurly burly of the ouerthrow of Iewry, certaine that would giue out themſelues to be Chriſt our Meſſias, and to that end endeuour to draw them into ſecret places or wildernesſes, fore-warneth them to take heed thereof, whereunto hee alleadgeth, that at that time of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem the Goſpell ſhould (according to his former ſaying) bee ſounded forth out of Ieruſalem into all the parts of the world, whereby foraſmuch as the extent of his ſpirituall preſence in his Church ſhould bee from one end of the earth unto the other, hee commandeth that they ſhould not hearken unto theſe ſeducers which would tell them of a Chriſt, whoſe Aſſemblies ſhould bee in Iewry alone, much leſſe in a corner or deſart of that Countrey Whereby it is euident that it is untrue which the Ieſuites affirme, that our Sauiour Chriſt had made the Churches authority ſo cleare, &c. For hee had not yet made it, but would ſo doe before the razing of Ieruſalem. And therefore in Luke is added in the next verſe, that it behoued our Sauiour Chriſt to ſuffer many things of the Iewes, ere that could bee brought to paſſe, Secondly, heereby wee haue warning of the Roman Antichriſt, which defineth the Church of Chriſt by the Church of Rome, and calleth men to Italy to finde Chriſt, as theſe called them into Iewry; and into a little angle of Italy, as they did to a Deſart or Cloſet of Iewry, as if hee were no where in the world to bee found but onely there: whereas the glorious comming of our Sauiour Chriſt, in the Preaching of the Goſpell, was from the Eaſt vnto the Weſt. Whereunto alſo ſerueth that the Church compared unto Eagles, is ſaid to take her flight, not unto Rome, or Alexandria, or Ieruſalem, but to what place ſoeuer ſhee underſtandeth our Sauiour Chriſt to bee preſent by the Preaching of the Goſpell: which had beene but a very ſimple watch word, if our Sauiour Chriſt could (in truth) haue ſaid, what ſtirres and controuerſies ſoeuer riſe of the way of ſaluation, let men take their flight to Rome, being aſſured that there they ſhall finde Chriſt. Laſt of all, it is to bee obſerued, that our Sauiour doth not heere deſcribe the perpetuall and conſtant eſtate of his Church; For although it is neuer brought into one corner of the world, yet is it not alwaies in that ſightly eſtate and glorious beauty, that it was in forty yeares after our Sauiour Chriſt aſcended. And although the firſt thouſand yeares after his Aſcenſion, during which time the deuill, after a ſort, was tyed up, there were retained ſome draftes of that glory wherein the Apoſtles had trimmed it by their Preaching, yet neither was the ſame without ſome apparant markes of declining, neither were the times which followed, wherein the deuill was (by the iuſt iudgement of God, for the contempt of the Goſpell) let looſe, comparable with the eſtate of the Church which it ſucceeded. For the Church of Chriſt hath her eclipſe, her full, and her wane, according to the approach of the Sonne in the beames of his Goſpell. Heereupon the Church ſeeking for our Sauiour Chriſt in the Citie, and that of the watchmen, could learne no newes of him; likewiſe that ſhee is driuen to flee into Cant. 1. the wilderneſſe, where who there ſeeking Chriſt is ſure to find him, conſidering that the Eagles reſorting thither, argueth euidently that the dead body is there to bee found.

Apoc. 12. RHEM. 9. [29 Immediatly.] If the latter day ſhall immediatly follow the perſecution of Antichriſt, which is to endure but three yeares and a halfe, as is aforeſaid: then is it meere blaſ-Antichriſt. phemy to ſay Gods Vicar is Antichriſt, and that (by their own limitation) theſe thouſand yeares almoſt.

CARTVV. 9. [29 Immediatly.] Hitherto our Saviour hath anſwered the firſt queſtion concerning the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, and of the Temple: there followeth anſwer to the other queſtion, touching the ſignes going before the end of the world, whereof this is the firſt, that the affliction of the Iewes muſt firſt bee ended, eſpecially the moſt dreadfull and horrible affliction of all others, which is their reiection from being the people of God. As ſoone there-Luk. 21. 24 fore as Ieruſalem, that is to ſay the Iewes, ſhall ceaſe to bee troden under the feete by the Gentiles, which then ſhall bee performed when by a fulneſſe or mighty encreaſe of the Gentiles added unto the profeſſion of the Goſpel, the Iewes liuing amongſt them, ſhall bee prouoked to a godly iealouſie of following them: So ſoone (I ſay) as this ſhall come to paſſe, then ſhall follow ſignes in the Sunne and Moone. Now this being euidently the meaning of our Sauiour Chriſt, it appeareth manifeſtly, that for any thing heere ſpoken by our Sauiour Chriſt, the Antichriſt mentioned by him, may haue continued from the deſtruction of Ieruſalem untill this time: albeit it is not this place whereby wee endite the Pope of his Anti-chriſtianity, no further then by weakning of the Church through a rent and diſtraction from the truth, hee hath certaine things in common with theſe Antichriſts, which were his fore-runners, and helped to make him way to his ſtoole of Apoſtacie.

CHAP. XXV.

Continuing his Sermon, he bringeth two parables, of ten Virgins, and of Talents, to ſhew how it ſhal be in Domeſday with the faithfull that prepare, and that prepare not themſelues. 31 Then alſo without parables he ſheweth that ſuch faithfull as do works of mercy, ſhall haue for them life euerlaſting: and ſuch as do not, euerlaſting damnation.

The Goſpell for holy virgins.

THEN ſhall the kingdom of heauen be like to ten ‖ virgins: which taking their ‖ lamps went foorth to meet the bridegom and the bride.

2 And fiue of them were fooliſh, and fiue wiſe.

3 But the fiue fooliſh, hauing taken their lamps, did not take ‖ oile with them:

4 But the wiſe did take oile in their veſſels with the lamps.

5 And the bridegrom tarying long, they ſlumbered all and ſlept.

6 And at midnight there was a clamour made, Behold the bridegrome commeth go ye forth to meet him.

7 Then aroſe all thoſe virgins: and they trimmed their lamps.

8 And the fooliſh ſaid to the wiſe, Giue vs of † your oile: becauſe our lamps are going out.

9 The wiſe anſwered, ſaying, Leſt peraduenture there ſuffice not for vs and you, go rather to them that ſell: and buy for your ſelues.

10 And whiles they went to buy, the bridegrome was come: and they that were ready entred with him to the mariage, and the gate was ſhut.

11 But laſt of all come alſo the other virgins, ſaying: Lord, Lord, open to vs.

12 But he anſwering ſayd, Amen I ſay to you, I know you not.

13 VVatch yee therefore, becauſe you know not the day nor the houre. ☞

Luke 19. 12 The Goſpell for a confeſſor that is a Biſhop.

14 For * euen as a man going into a ſtrange countrey, called his ſeruants, and deliuered them his goods.

15 And to one he gaue fiue talents, and to an other two, and to another one, to euery one according to his proper facultie: and immediatly he took his iourney.

16 And he that had receiued the fiue talents, went his way, and occupied with the ſame, and gained other fiue.

17 Likewiſe alſo he that had receiued the two, gained other two.

18 But he that had receiued the one, going his way digged into the earth, and hidde his Lords money.

19 But after much time the Lord of thoſe ſeruants commeth, and made a count with them.

20 And there came he that had receiued the fiue talents, and offred other fiue talents, ſaying, Lord fiue talents thou didſt deliuer me, beold ‡ I haue gained other fiue beſides.

21 His Lord ſaid vnto him: VVell fare thee good and faithfull ſeruant, becauſe thou haſt been faithfull ouer a few things, I will place thee ouer many things: enter into the ioy of thy Lord.

22 And there came alſo he that had receiued the two talents, and ſaid, Lord two talents thou didſt deliuer me: behold I haue gained other two.

23 His Lord ſaid to him, VVel fare thee good & faithfull ſeruant: becauſe thou haſt been faithful ouer a few things, I wil place thee ouer many things, enter into the ioy of thy Lord. ☞

24 And he alſo that had receiued the one talent, came foorth, and ſaid, Lord, I know that thou art a hard man, thou reapeſt where thou diddeſt not ſowe: and gathereſt where thou ſtrawedſt not:

25 And being afraid I went, and hid thy talent in the earth: behold lo here thou haſt that which thine is.

26 And his lord anſwering, ſayd to him: ‡ Naughtie and ſlothfull ſeruant thou didſt know that I reape where I ſow not, and gather where I ſtrawed not.

‡ A terrible example for all ſuch as do not employ the very leaſt gift of God to his glory.

27 Thou oughteſt therfore to haue committed my money to the bankers, and comming I might haue receued mine own ‖ with vſurie.

28 Take yee away therefore the talent from him, and giue it him that hath ten talents.

29 For to * euery one that hath ſhallbe giuen, and he ſhall abound: but from him that hath not, that alſo which ‖ he ſeemeth to haue, ſhall be taken away from him.

Math 13. 12 Luk. 8. 18.

30 And the vnprofitable ſeruant caſt yee out into the vtter darkeneſſe. There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

31 And when the Sonne of man ſhall come in his maieſty, and all the Angels with him, that ſhall he ſit vpon the ſeat of his maieſtie:

The Goſpel vpon Munday the firſt week of Lent.

32 And all nations ſhall be gathered together before him, and hee ſhall ‖ ſeparate them one from an other, as the paſtour ſeparateth the ſheepe from the goats:

34 Then ſhall the king ſay to them that ſhall be at his right hand, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, poſſeſſe you the kingdome ‖ prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

35 For I was an hungred, and ‖ you gaue me to eat: I was a thirſt, and you gaue me to drinke.

36 I was a ſtranger, and you took me in, naked, and you couered mee: ſicke, and you viſited me. I was in priſon, & you came to me.

37 Then ſhall the iuſt anſwer him, ſaying: Lord when did we ſee the an hungred, and fed thee: a thirſt, and gaue thee drinke?

38 And when did we ſee thee ‖ a ſtranger & took thee in? or naked, and couered thee?

39 Or

39 Or when did we ſee thee ſicke or in priſon: and came to thee?

40 And the king anſwering, ſhall ſay to them, Amen I ſay to you, as long as you did it to one of theſe my leaſt brethren, you did it to me.

41 Then he ſhall ſay to them alſo that ſhall be at his left hand, Get ye away from mee curſed into to fire euerlaſting, which was prepared for the Deuill and his angels.

42 For I was an hungred, and you gaue mee not to eat: I was a thirſt, and you gaue mee not to drinke.

43 I was a ſtranger, and you tooke mee not in: naked, and you couered mee not: ſicke, and in priſon, and you did not viſite mee.

44 Then they alſo ſhall anſwer him, ſaying, Lord, when did we ſee thee an hungred, or a thirſt, or a ſtranger, or naked or ſicke, or in priſon: and did not miniſter to thee?

45 Then he ſhall anſwer them, ſaying, Amen I ſay to you, as long as you did it not to one of theſe leſſer neither did you it to me.

46 And theſe ſhall goe into puniſhment euerlaſting: but the iuſt, into life euerlaſting.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [8. Your Oyle.] If wee bee not in the fauour of God, and haue not our owne merites, wee ſhall not bee holpen by others mens deſerts at the day of iudgement.

Free-will. RHEM. [20 I haue gained.] Free-will with Gods grace doth merit.

RHEM. [34 Prepared for.] This Kingdome then is prepared for thoſe onely that doe good workes? As Chriſt alſo ſignifieth elſe-where, ſaying that it is not in his power to giue it otherwiſe. See the Annot. ch. 20. 23.

CARTVV. 1. [34 Prepared for.] It is indeed prepared for thoſe that do good workes: but the good workes are not the cauſe of obtaining the Kingdome, which hath ſufficient teſtimony of this place. For in that, they receiue it at Gods hand, as from the hand of their father, Ioh. 1. it is euident that they haue it onely for Chriſts ſake, by whom through faith they are made his children. In that alſo they receiue it as an inheritance deſcended unto them from their father, it is plaine that they haue it not by purchaſe. Laſt of all, ſeeing it was prouided for them from αλογησια. the foundations of the world, when as yet they were not, nor had done good or euill; it is euident that the good workes that came ſo long after the purchaſe and preparation of the Kingdom, cannot bee any part of the price thereof: Vnleſſe the Ieſuites will ſay, that the Lord making a greater purchaſe then hee was able to make preſent payment for, tooke (as men ſometimes do) day of the payment thereof untill hee ſhould haue gotten in all the rents and reuenewes of mens good workes: whereof wee would bee glad to learne what is the Ieſuites Diuinity, But I cannot meruaile enough how it falleth out that they which are ſo diligent rakers of all that may ſerue their turne, to bury the remembrance of the merite of Chriſt, haue omitted the aduantage of this word (For) which might ſeeme to aſſigne the cauſe of our entrance into the Kingdom, to the workes which are reckoned up. Howbeit let the good Reader underſtand that theſe wordes (For, Becauſe, and ſuch like) bee generall notes of ſetting forth the knot and coherence of any one thing with another in what ſort ſoeuer, whether it bee knitting the cauſe with the effect, or the effect with the cauſe; whether it bee in knitting the place with the body which is in it, or the body with the place wherein it is contained; or whether it bee in inferring the time upon the thing which is done, or inferring the thing which is done upon the time wherein it was done. Whereas to proue that which is in controuerſie, the Papiſts muſt ſhew that the ſaluation and iuſtification is knit and conioyned with good workes, as the effect unto the cauſe. The cleane contrary whereof is true, conſidering that it hath beene manifeſtly ſhewed, that good workes are the effects and fruites of our Iuſtification, and therefore not the cauſes. This may the Reader underſtand by other examples. Wee ſay it is ſpring time, For or Becauſe the trees bud, or beginne to bloſſome. Heere all underſtand that although this word (For or Becauſe) doth conioyne the budding and bloſſoming with the ſpring time, and argueth it: yet the budding or bloſſoming is not therefore the cauſe of the ſpring time, But rather the ſpring time is the cauſe of the budding and the bloſſoming.

ANNOTATIONS CHAP. XXV.

RHEM. 2. [1 Virgins.] Theſe virgins fiue wiſe, and fiue fooliſh, ſignifie that in the Church militant there bee good and bad: which bad ſhall be ſhut out at the latter day, although Good workes neceſſary. they haue lamps (that is faith) as the other, becauſe their lamps are out, that is their faith is dead without charity and good workes to lighten them. Greg. hom. 12.

RHEM. [1 Lamps.] Theſe lamps lighted, bee good workes, namely of mercy, and the laudable conuerſation which ſhineth before men. Aug. Ep. 120. ca. 33.

Right intention. RHEM. [3 Oyle.] This oile is the right inward intention directing our workes to Gods glory, and not to the praiſe of our ſelues in the ſight of men. Aug. Ep. 120. ca. 33.

CARTVV. 2. [v. 1. 2. 3.] Our Sauiour expoundeth himſelfe v. 13. where by prepared lampes, he ſheweth to be meant watchfull mindes, alwaies lifted up in attendance for the comming of our Sauiour Chriſt. Therefore this Allegory where the ſenſe is plaine is nothing elſe then to ſeek a knot in a ruſh. And although to the cauſe in controuerſie it maketh neither hote nor cold, ſeeing the iuſtifying faith cannot bee ſeuered from the light of good workes no more then the light and heate of the Sunne from the body thereof; yet hath this allegory ſmall coherence either with it ſelfe, or with other doctrines of Popery: For it appeareth that the fooliſh virgines had oyle, oyle, and therefore a good intent to direct their workes to Gods glory and not to their own: So that belike their good intent of seeking Gods glory found not such reward as the Papists otherwhere beare us in hand. Secondly, it appeareth that their lampes were lighted, although by long tarrying of the Bridegroom they were afterward quenched, so that they were by this meanes shut forth, not because they had no good workes, but because they had not enough: which would make foule worke in the Popes purgatory, a middle house of men, neither very bad nor very good. Thirdly, it is meruaile how amongst these fiue wise virgines, where the Popes Geldings and professed Votaries are written up, haue not so much as one good worke to spare for the other: considering that their vessels are vaunted otherwhere to bee so full, that they bee able of their superfluity and ouer-running measure to supply the want of others. Last of all it standeth not with the word of God, that these sooliſh virgins hauing gotten both oile and light, which is (as is said) both good intents and good workes, should notwithstanding bee reiected from the Kingdom of heauen.

Good and bad in the Church.

RHEM. 3. [32 Separate.] Loe here is the separation, for in the Church Militant they liued both together. As for hereticks they went out of the Church before, and separated themselues, and therefore are not to be separated here, as being iudged already.

1. Cor. 6. 2. Pet. 2.

CARTVV. 3. [32. Separate.] The Turkes, the Iewes, and Diuels themselues shall bee iudged in the last day, notwithstanding that they be separate, much more the heretickes. And beside that, it is some ignorance in the Iesuites to esteeme, that heresie separateth a man Ecclesiastically from the Church, without the censure thereof; it is yet a fouler ouer-sight, that they cannot distinguish between Ecclesiasticall separation of the Church, and the diuine separation which our Sauiour Christ shall make in the later day, when all the wicked rout both of hypocrites and heathen shall be ranged vpon the left hand of our Sauiour Christ, to receiue their iudgement accordingly. For the iudgement of the Church doth not hinder the sententiall iudgement of our Sauiour Christ, but rather draweth that after it: considering that our Sauiour Christ bindeth in heauen whatsoeuer the Church bindeth vpon the earth.

Math. 13. Act. 17. 21. Rom. 3. 6. Math. 18.

Heauen is the reward of good workes, and hel of the contrary.

RHEM. 4 [34. Come ye. 41. Get ye away] It is no incongruity that God should say, Goe into euerlasting fire, to them that by their free will haue repelled his mercy: and to the other, Come yee blessed of my father, take the kingdom prepared for them, that by their free will haue receiued faith, and confessed their sins, and done penance, Aug lib. 2. act. cum Fel. Manich. cap. 8.

Gen. 6. & 9 Iohn 8.

CARTVV. 4. [34. Come ye. 41. Get ye away.] The whole frame and cogitation of mens hearts is onely euill at all times: and we are all by nature, and before wee be freed by the Sonne, seruants and drudges of sinne, doing as necessarily the euill concupiscences of our flesh, as the slaue that is at the commandement of his master, serueth his pleasure. Wherefore by free will cannot here be meant free choyce of leauing good, and choosing euill, which Augustine doth declare to haue been onely in Adam before his fall. But that both the good & euill do that which they doe, not forcedly nor compelledly, but with liking and consent: and that neither the wicked are bound with such chaines of wickednesse, as the grace of God cannot loose them from, nor yet that the godly are alwayes so masterfully vpholden in the continuall practise of good workes, but that sometime they may giue a slip from the former vprightnesse; which is euident to all that vnderstand the state of the disputation between Augustine and the Manichies, euident also of his own words, wherein he opposeth vnto the will of man in sinning, the compulsion or constraint of nature. For they affirmed, that by the first creation a man hath two soules, one of the substance of God, and another of the substance of the Diuel, and that both the soules continue still in their seuerall operations of good and euill, without all possibility of alteration. For otherwise Augustine is most cleare in this case, That man vsing his free will euelly, lost both himselfe and it. And that free wil being thralled, hath power to do nothing but to sinne.

RHEM. 5. [35 You gaue me.] Hereby we see how much almesdeedes and all works of mercy preuaile towards life euerlasting, and to blot out former sinnes, Aug. in Psa. 49.

CARTVV. 5. [35. You gaue me.] The cause why our Sauiour Christ will say in the latter day, Enter into the kingdom, &c. for you haue giuen me to eat, rather then to say, for you haue beleeued in me, is, for that it is more fitting for the nature and condition of iudgements to take the euidence whereupon the sentence shall be pronounced, from such things as are most notorious. The workes therefore, good or euill, being known both to men and Angels, whereas faith which hath her seat in the heart, is onely seene of the Lord: it is more conuenient for iustifying the truth of the iudge before all the world, that those things should be giuen in euidence which fall into the knowledge of the standers by; especially when the godly themselues shall bee admitted into part of the honour of our Sauiour Christs iudiciall sentence against the reprobate. This is yet more manifest, by the choyce of workes which our Sauiour Christ hath made: for whereas the leauen of hypocrisie sticketh easilier vnto the worship of God, then to the duties which wee owe vnto our neigbours, and that the Temple is a greater thicket to hide a thiefe in, then other places which are ordained for the mutuall offices of one man with another: our Sauiour Christ amongst good workes picked out not the noblest and worthiest, but the most notorious workes, whereas if he had meant to haue meten out the kingdom of heauen by the pole of good workes: he would rather haue said, For you haue worshipped me reuerently, called vpon me continually, kept my Sabboth religiously; then to say, For you gaue me, &c. Vnlesse peraduenture the Iesuites will say, that the Lord making his Debters an acquittance of the paiment, that they made him for his kingdom which they haue (forsooth) redeemed with their good workes, hath put in the receit of pence, concealing his receit of pounds. Whereby also it is euident how the workes of mercy, as they are tearmed, cannot preuaile to the blotting out of sinnes, no further then that they be testimonies that our sinnes are forgiuen. And therefore Augustine speaking of this place, ſheweth that God is debter to none, but onely in reſpect of his free promiſe, not in reſpect that he hath receiued any thing, or hath borrowed any thing of vs, which he more plainly vttereth in another place, when he ſaith, That God the promiſer is made debter of his owne goodneſſe, not by our giuing any thing before hand. And ſpeaking of it in another place, he ſaith after this ſort; This he ſayd to thoſe of the right hand which did good workes, and to thoſe of the left hand, becauſe they would not doe them. Where by the cauſal note vſed only in the latter part of the ſentence, he ſeemeth to note apparantly, that the euill works being the cauſe of the ſentence of condemnation, the good notwithſtanding are not the cauſe of the contrary. Finally, hereunto agreeth that which Auguſtine hath, ſpeaking of this laſt day, that God will crowne not ſo much thy merits as his gifts. That of Auguſtine out of the Pſalme, asking who are iuſt, anſwereth, that they be the liuing, which out of faith do the workes of mercy. Whereby he noteth, that good workes are the fruits of faith, contrary to the Ieſuites. And therefore the reward which he declareth after to be giuen to theſe good workes, muſt needes bee vnderſtood properly and cauſally to belong to faith, whereof good workes are good and obedient witneſſes.

*To the councell of the Iewes, Iudas by occaſion of Mary Magdalens ointment, doth ſell him for little. 17 After the Paſchal lambe, 26 he giueth them that bread of life (promiſed Io. 6.) in a myſticall Sacrifice or Separation of his Body and Blood. 31 And that night he is after his prayer 47 taken of the Iewes men, Iudas being their captaine: and forſaken of the other eleuen for feare. 57 Is falſely accuſed, and impiouſly condemned of the Iewes Councell, 67 and ſhamefully abuſed of them: 69 and thriſe denied of Peter: All, euen as the Scriptures and himſelfe had often foretolde.

Holy Weeke.

The Paſſion according to S. Matthew in theſe two chapters, is the Goſpel at Maſſe vpon Palme-ſunday.

Tenebre Wedneſday. Marke 14.1 Luke 22. 1

AND it came to paſſe, when IESVS had ended all theſe wordes, he ſaide to his Diſciples.

2 You know that after two dayes ſhall be Paſche, and the Son of man ſhall be deliuered to be crucified.

3 Then were gathered together the chiefe Prieſts and Ancients of the people into the court of the high Prieſt, who was called Caiphas.

4 And they conſulted how they might by ſome wile apprehend IESVS, and kill him.

5 But they ſaid, Not on the feſtiuall day, leſt perhaps there might be a tumult among the people.

Mark. 14.3 Iohn 12.3.

6 And *when IESVS was in Bethania in the houſe of Simon the Leper,

7 There came to him a woman hauing an alablaſter-boxe of precious ointment, and powred it out vpon his head as he ſate at the table.

8 And the Diſciples ſeeing it had indignation ſaying, whereto is ‖ this waſte?

9 For this might haue been ſolde for much and giuen to the poore.

10 And IESVS knowing it, ſaid to them: why do you moleſt this woman? for ſhe hath wrought ‖ a good work vpon me.

11 For the poore you haue alwayes with you: but me ‖ you haue not alwayes.

12 For ſhe in powring this ointment vpon my body: hath done it to burie mee.

13 Amen I ſay to you, whereſoeuer this Goſpell ſhall be preached in the whole world, that alſo which ſhe hath done, ‡ ſhall be reported for a memorie of her.

Mar. 14. 10 Luk. 22, 3.

14 *Then went one of the Twelue, which was called Iudas Iſcarioth, to the chiefe Prieſts.

15 And ſaid to them, what will ye giue me, and I will deliuer him vnto you? But they appointed vnto him thirtie pieces of ſiluer.

16 And from thenceforth he ſought opportunitie to betray him.

Maundie Thurſday. Mar. 14. 12 Luke 22. 7.

17 And *the firſt day of the Azymes the Diſciples came to IESVS, ſaying, where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eate the Paſche?

18 But IESVS ſaid, Goe ye into the citie to a certaine man: and ſay to him, The maſter ſaith, My time is at hand, with thee doe I make the Paſche with my Diſciples?

19 And the Diſciples did as IESVS appointed them, and they prepared the Paſche, 20 But when it was euen, he ſate down with his ‖ twelue Diſciples.

21 And while they were eating, he ſaid: Amen I ſay to you, that one of you ſhall betray me.

22 And they being very ſad, began euery one to ſay, Is it I Lord?

Pſal. 40. 10

23 But he anſwering ſaid, *He that dippeth his hand with me in the diſh, he ſhall betray me:

24 The Son of man indeed goeth as it is written of him: but wo be to that man, by whom the Son of man ſhalbe betrayed It were good for him, if that man had not been borne.

25 And Iudas that betrayed him, anſwering ſaid, Is it I Rabbi? He ſaith to him, Thou haſt ſaid.

1 Cor. 11. 24.

26 And *whiles they were at ſupper, IESVS ‖ tooke the bread, and ‖ bleſſed, & brake: and he gaue to his Diſciples, and ſayd, sayd, Take yee: and eat: This is | my | Body.

27 And taking the chalice, | he gaue thanks: and gaue to them, saying: Drinke ‡ ye all of this.

Thursday night. The Nocturn of Matens in the Churches service, answereth to this night part of our Sauiours passion, and so consequently the other Canonicall houres to the rest.

30 And a hymne being sayd, they went forth vnto Mount-oliuet.

31 Then IESVS saith to them, All you shal be scandalized in me, in this night, For it is written, I will strike the pastour, & the sheepe of the flocke shalbe dispersed. Zach. 13. 7.

32 But after I shall be risen againe, I will goe before you into Galilee.

33 And Peter answering, said to him, Although all shall be scandalized in thee, I will neuer be scandalized.

34 IESVS said to him; Amen I say to thee, that in this night before the cocke crow: thou shalt denie me thrise.

35 *Peter saith to him, Yea, though I should die with thee, I will not denie thee, Likewise also said all the Disciples. Ioh. 13. 38.

36 Then IESVS commeth with them into a village called Gethsemani: and he said to his Disciples, Sit you here till I go yonder and pray.

37 And taking to him Peter and the two sonnes of Zebedee, he began to waxe sorrowfull, and to be sad.

38 Then he saith to them: My soule is sorrowful euen vnto death: stay here, and watch with me:

39 And being gone forward a little, he fell vpon his face, praying, and saying, My father, if it be possible, let this chalice passe from me, neuertheless | not as I will but as thou.

40 And he commeth to his Disciples, and findeth them sleeping, and he saith to Peter, Euen so? Coulde you not watch one houre with mee?

41 | VVatch ye, and pray that ye enter not into tentation. The spirit indeed is prompt but the flesh weake.

42 Againe the second time he went, and prayed, saying, My father, if this chalice may not passe, but I must drink it they will be done.

43 And he cometh againe, and findeth them sleeping: for their eyes were become heauie, 44 And leauing them he went againe: and he praied the third time, saying the selfe same word.

45 Then he commeth to his Disciples, and saith to them: Sleepe ye now and take rest beholde the houre approcheth, and the Sonne of man shalbe betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46 Rise, let vs go: behold he approcheth that shall betray me.

47 *As he yet spake, behold Iudas one of the Twelue came, and with him a great multitude with swords and clubs, sent from the chiefe Priests and the Ancients of the people. Ioh. 18. 3.

48 And he that betrayed him, gaue them a signe, saying, VVhomsoeuer I shall kisse, that is he, holde him.

49 And forthwith comming to IESVS, he said, Haile Rabbi. And he kissed him.

50 And IESVS said to him, Friend, whereto art thou come? Then they drew neere, and laid hands on IESVS, and held him.

51 And behold one of them that were with IESVS, stretching forth his hand, drew out his sword: and striking the seruant of the high Priest, cut off his eare.

52 Then IESVS saith to him, Returne thy sword into his place: for all that take the sword, shall perish with the sword.

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot aske my Father: and he will giue me presently more then twelue legions of Angels?

54 How then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that so it must be done?

55 In that houre IESVS said to the multitudes: You are come out as it were to a chiefe with swords and clubs to apprehend mee: I sate dayly with you teaching in the temple: and you laid no hands on me.

56 And all this was done, that the Scriptures of the Prophets might be fulfilled. Then the disciples all leauing him, fled.

57 But they taking hold of IESVS led him to Caiphas the high Priest, where the Scribes and Ancients were assembled.

58 And Peter followed him a farre off, euen to the court of the high Priest. And going in, he sate with the seruants that hee might see the end.

59 And the chiefe Priests and the whole Councell sought false witnesse against IESVS, that they might put him to death.

60 And they found not, whereas many false witnesses had come in. And last of all there came two false witnesses:

61 And they said, *this man sayd, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and after three dayes to reedifie it. Ioh. 2. 19.

62 And the high Priest rising vp, sayd to him: Answerest thou nothing to the things which these do testifie against thee?

63 But IESVS held his peace, And the high Priest said to him: I adiure thee by the liuing God, that thou tell vs if thou be Christ the Sonne of God.

64 IESVS saith to him, Thou hast said, neuertheless I say to you, hereafter you shal see *the Sonne of man sitting on the right hand of the power of God, and comming in the clouds of heauen. Dan. 7. 13.

65 Then the hie Priest rent his garments, saying, He hath blasphemed, what need we witnesses any further? behold, now you haue heard the blasphemie.

66 How thinke you, But they answering said, He is guiltie of death.

67 Then did they spit on his face, and buffeted him, and other smote his face with the palmes of their hands.

68 Saying, Prophesie vnto vs O Christ: Who is he that strooke thee?

69 But Peter sate without in the court and there came to him one ‖ wench, saying: Thou also wast with IESVS the Galilean.

70 But he denied before them all, saying I wot not what thou sayest.

71 And as he went out of the gate, an other wench saw him, and she saith to them that were there, And this felow also was with IESVS the Nazarite.

72 And againe he denied with an othe, That I know not the man.

73 And after a little they came that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art of them: for euen thy speech doth bewray thee.

74 Then he began ‖ to curse and to sweare that he knew not the man. And incontinent the cocke crew.

75 And Peter remembred the word of IESVS which he had sayd, Before the cocke crow, thou shalt deny me thrise. And going forth, ‖ he wept bitterly.

To this time the Lauds doe answer in the Churches seruice.

MARGINAL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. (13. Shall be reported.) Hereby we learne, that the good workes of Saints are to be recorded and set forth to their honour in the Church, after their death. Whereof rise their holy dayes and commemorations.

CARTVV. 1. (13. Shall be reported.) We learne it indeed, but neither by holy daies, nor yet by secret whisperings of Priests in the Masse: but by the preaching of the Gospell. Mat. 26. 13

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XXVI.

Cost vpon Churches, altars, &c.

RHEM. 2. (8. This waste.) Cost bestowed vpon Christs body then aliue, being to the same not necessary, seemed to the Disciples lost and fruitlesse: so the like bestowed vpon the same body in the Sacrament, vpon Altars, or Churches, seemeth to the simple lost, or lesse meritorious, then if the same were bestowed vpon the poore.

Reliefe of the poore. Amb. lib. 2. Offic. c. 28.

RHEM. (10. Good worke.) Cost bestowed for religion, deuotion, and signification, is a meritorious worke, and often more meritorious then to giue to the poore, though both be very good, & in some case the poore are to be preferred: yea in certain cases of necessity, the Church will breake the very consecrated vessels and iewels of siluer and gold, and bestow them in works of mercy. But we may remember very well, and our fathers knew it much better, that the poore were then best relieued, when most was bestowed vpon the Church.

Math. 8.

1. Cor. 2. 13

CARTVV. 2. (8. & 10. This waste) Cost bestowed upon Churches to make them fit & comly for the preaching of the word, and for administation of the Sacraments, is an acceptable worke, as in times past was the building of a Synagogue to the like vses. Wherein, as in the Sacraments, and in all other Church cost, must be a correspondent between it and the simplicity which the Apostle requireth in the preaching of the Gospel, far remoued from all pompous & glittering shew of worldly wealth. To build Altars, is not to anoynt Christ with precious oyntment: but (as much as men may) to pierce him, and to run him through afresh. To bestow cost upon his body in the Sacrament, is not onely to go about to bury him again; but to offer vp to Bell, where that which your Bell cannot eate, you that be his Priests do cosume: and that which your dead born child cannot swallow, you that be his Nurces deuoure. Therfore you prouide well for your selues in magnifying the Corban wherewith your Idols table is maintained. The true Church hath not spared nor spareth not her pretious things for the preseruatiō of the more pretious Iewels, euen the poore members of Iesus Christ. But as for you, more then your fragments, (which if they had not fallen to the lot of beggars, had been the portion of the dogges) or that which you gaue by constrained authority of your foundation, hath not been seen to come from you: untill the reuenging hand of God, which could no longer beare your Sodomiticall fulnesse, caused you to vomit vp in an houre almost all that you had for some hundred yeares crammed in. Neither did you feed so many poore, as you made needlesse beggars. For your relefe not cast secretly into the bosom of the poore, by sending it home to their houses, but giuen at your houses, and at your gates, to further shew and vaunt of liberality, as it were by sound of trumpet: serued not to help the modest poore, which would rather endure extreame penury, then to seeke an almes at a gate: but it serued for a lure to toule all the vagabonds and idle rogues of the countrey to forsake their labours, wherein they should haue been profitable to the Common-wealth. But this false painted almes of yours is otherwhere set forth in his liuely colours: whither I will referre the reader.

Mr Walter Trauers against the supplicatory Epistle of G. T.

Christ alwayes with vs in the B. Sacrament.

RHEM. 3. (11. Haue not.) We haue him not in visible maner as he conuersed on the earth with his disciples, needing relefe like other poore men: but wee haue him after another sort in the B. Sacrament, and yet haue him truely and really the selfe same body. Therefore he saith they should not haue him, because they should not so haue him, but after another maner, as when he said, Luc. 24. as though he were not then with them, When I was with you.

CARTVV. 3. [11. Haue not.] This of the visible manner is your glosse, without ground of the word: and is also contrary to the words of our Sauiour Christ, who making his argument that this cost was to be borne with, forasmuch as it was the last which should be bestowed vpon his person: declareth euidently, that that liberality which is now pretended to be done to himselfe, is done to an Idoll, and not to him. And if we could now in any sort shew liberality vnto his person in such lauish wise as the Papists do to their Idol: he should haue said nothing to the appeasing of the indignation of his Disciples: who (Iudas excepted) were pacified, and thought it reason that he should for his last farewell, haue this entertainment. But their indignation should haue been further kindled, and their complaint iust, if now when hee hath lesse need then he had then, he should haue notwithstanding more cost bestowed vpon him: and if for the pretious oyntment powred vpon him in one onely house of Iewrie, he should now haue it powred in all the townes and Cities of the world: there should be nothing spared for the poore by his ascenson, considering that in stead that he then visibly and sensibly receiued with one hand, the value of a few pounds, he should now with ten thousand hands (behinde the curtain of a round cake) consume great masses of goods, that might be imployed to the benefit of the poore; where also they say, that Christ is not now vpon earth, needing reliefe, as other poore men, they are taken againe in the words of their owne lippes: for our Sauiour Christ maketh no opposition here betweene cost rising vpon his want and pouerty, and that whereof he should haue no need, considering that euen at the time wherein this grudge rose, our Sauiour Christ had no need of the oyntment wherewith he was annoynted. So that this maketh no difference between the cost which was then bestowed vpon our Sauiour Christ, and that which the Iesuites imagine, may now bee bestowed vpon him. And therefore giuing the reason why this should be the last Largis vpon him, he doth not assigne it (as the Iesuites suppose) for that he shall haue no more need of it, but that he shall not be here to receiue it. Although if the case be so poore with him as you make it, I see not but that he hath as much need of attendance now, as hee had when hee was here in the dayes of his flesh, and more too. And that the godly in the latter day need not to make it so strange a thing as they do in Mathew, when our Sauiour Christ shall acknowledge so good duties done vnto him by them, for to visit him being in the small case of the pixe to wash and wring his Corporas and other cloutes, but especially to keepe him from moulding, and from the lying in wait of the Mouse, are things wherein there is greater weakenesse and pouerty bewrayed, then euer did cleaue vnto him in the dayes of his infirmity. But yet that they may seeme to haue something to say, they haue brought out of Luke, which in the conscience they had of the impertinency of it, they durst not once so much as apply it, or make an offer to frame any argument of it; for our Sauiour Christ distinguishing there his mortall presence before his passion, from his immortall presence after his resurrection, they could not bee ignorant how their argument would be so euill girt, that it should finde no roome in any of those places where lawfull arguments are lodged. For how followeth it, that because the destinction of Christs mortall body from his immortall body (in both which all the essentiall properties of a body are retained) will stand: therefore the destinction of his body visible and inuisible, sensible and insensible, measurable and without measure (which destroyeth the essentiall properties of a body) will hold likewise.

Math. 25. 37. 38. 39.

RHEM. 4. (20, Twelue.) It must needs be a great mystery that he was to worke in the institution of the new sacrifice by the maruellous transmutation of bread and wine into his body and blood. Whereas he admitted none (although many present in the city) but the twelue Apostles, which were already taught to beleeue it without contradiction, Io. 6. and were to haue the administration and consecration thereof by the Order of Priesthood, which also was there giuen them to that purpose. Whereas at the eating of the Paschall lambe all the family was woont to be present.

A wonderful mystery in the institution of the B. Sacrament.

CARTVV. 4. [20 Twelue.] As is the Sacrament of Baptisme, so is this of the supper, a great and most holy Mystery: which it may well be, without this fained miracle of the change of bread and wine into the body and bloud of our Sauiour Christ. To the proofe whereof is set (as it were in the front of the battell) that our Sauiour Christ had none present but the twelue: so that this is the frame of the argument. Our Sauiour Christ had a few onely present, therefore hee wrought a great miracle: The contrary whereof is most commonly true, that the greatest miracles were wrought in the most publicke and fullest Assemblies. And I nothing doubt but if our Sauiour Christ had of purpose made a great Assembly, the Iesuites would haue made their aduantage of that: Now it is cleane otherwise, yet it serueth them as well. If yee aske why; there is no other reason but that they leade the holy Scriptures in such a string of obedience, that they will follow them at a beck, and not onely as the waters which are turned and winded at the pleasure of him that will draine them: but as a nose of wax, or a leaden rule they follow (forsooth) the tuiche of their interpretation. And if it had beene done onely (as the transfiguration) in the sight of the three chiefe Apostles: it is like the miraculous change that gayneth so much by the small number of lookers on, would haue beene by all likelyhood more, miraculous, and in stead of Christs body and bloud, under the forme of bread and wine wee should haue had (as sometimes the Priest and his boy) it sensibly naked without the vaile of bread and wine. But what will they say, was not the operation in the Supper, as miraculous when it was celebrated by the Corinthes, where both minister and people, men and women met together in the Lords Supper. But there is yet further weight, to set forward this miraculous change, In that these twelue were already instructed in Ioh. 6. to beleeue Transubstantion in the Supper. First, it is an vntruth that they beleeued any such thing, as that which was neuer taught them. For proofe whereof wee haue Iohn the Euangelist himselfe. who giuing testimony of the person of Christ by all the senses whereby knowledge might bee had of him doth in his own, and in all the rest of the Apostles names, speake after this sort. That which was from the beginning, which wee haue heard, which wee haue seene with our eyes, which wee haue stedfastly beholden, and with our hands haue handled touching the word of life: Hee saith not which wee haue tasted, or which wee haue eaten, which hee would haue said, if hee could haue said truely, as that which pertained to the strengthning of the faith of the elect, if by that sense also hee had beene comprehended. And our Sauiour Christ speaking of all manner of his gratious presences heere vpon earth, where-Pighius controuers.

Ioh. 14. 15. 16. with hee might comfort his Diſciples ſorrowfull for his departure: and turning that argument of his preſence of euery ſide, for three whole chapters together, neuer maketh any mention of his corporall preſence in the Sacrament: which notwithſtanding (if euer) ought then to haue beene laid down as that which might greatly haue ſtayed their griefe which they conceiued of his corporall abſence from them. Laſt of all, there is in that chapter not a word properly intreating of the ſupper, as in that place ſhall appeare. Now let them tell us whether this be here their third reaſon, to proue their miraculous change, that the Twelue were there preſent: which Were to haue the adminiſtration hereof by the order of Prieſthood. If it bee, it is very fooliſh and fond: For if the power of God in making it a Sacrament, doth not depend upon the faith of the communicants, much leſſe doth it depend upon the diuerſity of the calling: ſeeing that it skilleth more whether the communicants beleeue or not beleeue, then whether they bee miniſters or no miniſters. Vnto this they adde, that at this time was giuen unto the Apoſtles the order of Prieſthood to adminiſter the Sacrament, which is another untruth, conſidering that the ſame commiſſion that inabled them to the Preaching of the Goſpell and gratious promiſes of the Lord, muſt needs authoriſe them to adminiſter the Sacraments, which are nothing elſe but ſeales annexed to the promiſes. And if hee had beere made them Prieſts, it ſeemed that he little eſteemed of this Prieſt-hood, which neither held any ſolemne faſt or prayer before hee came to giue this order; neither uſed any ceremony in the ordination of it, accuſtomed in the diſtribution of all Church offices. Or (to ſpeake after your guiſe) how commeth it to paſſe that hee neither ſhaueth their Crownes, nor greaſeth their fingers, nor furniſheth them with other trinkets which the Church of Rome holdeth neceſſary, for thoſe that ſhall come upon the ſtage, to play a part in this maske. Their reaſon, whereof they would build this ſacrifice, becauſe facere ſignifieth to ſacrifice is too ſottiſh; for if it ſo ſignifie in Latin, yet in Greeke wherein the Euangeliſt wrote, it hath no ſuch ſignification. And when it hath in Latine, yet hath it no other conſtruction then this place admitteth. And if they will ſay that it is an Hebraiſme, Beſide that there are no ſteps of it in this place: it is to bee underſtood, that euen in the old Teſtament where it hath this ſignification, yet it hath it not but where it is ioyned and conſtrued with ſuch a word as will ſuffer it to haue no other ſignification then of ſacrificing: as when it is ſaid, that they muſt make or do a Lambe or a goate, &c. which words ſhould haue an abſurd ſenſe if this, of ſacrificing, were not taken. Now as wee ſay that there is no coherence of this ſignification of ſacrificing with this place, and the circumſtance thereof: ſo wee eſteeme that they themſelues will yeeld us thus much, that there is another ſenſe which theſe words will well and conueniently beare. Laſt of all (to returne to the ſuppoſed miracle) when the ſame twelue (which were at the participation of the Lords Supper) were at the eating of the Paſſeouer, where there was no miracle: it is euident that the ſole preſence of the twelue argueth no more a miracle in the Supper, then it doth in the Paſſeouer. Now if a man aske what then ſhould bee the cauſe, why Chriſt inſtituted his Supper among the twelue alone; it may bee anſwered, that (as other things) ſo this holy Sacrament ſhould not come to the Church, but by the hands and miniſtery of the Apoſtles. And that as Chriſt was the firſt miniſter of his Father, to deliuer it to his Apoſtles: So the Apoſtles ſheuld bee the firſt miniſters of Chriſt, to deliuer it unto the Church.

The holy Euchariſt is both a ſacrifice & a Sacrament.

RHEM. 5. (26. He tooke bread.) Here at once is inſtituted, for the continuance of the externall office of Chriſtes eternall Prieſthood according to the order of Melchiſedec, both a Sacrifice and a Sacrament, though the Scriptures giue neither of theſe names to this action: and our aduerſaries without all reaſon or religion accept in a ſort the one, and vtterly deny the other. A ſacrifice, in that it is ordeined to continue the memory of Chriſt death and oblation vpon the Croſſe, and the application of the generall vertue thereof to our particular neceſſities, by conſecrating the ſeuerall elements, not into Chriſts whole perſon as it was borne of the virgin or now is in heauen, but the bread into his body a part, as betrayed, broken, and giuen for vs: the wine into his blood apart, as ſhed out of his body for remiſſion of ſinnes and dedication of the new Teſtament, which be conditions of his perſon as he was in ſacrifice and oblation. In which myſticall and vnſpeakable maner, he would haue the Church to offer and ſacrifice him daily, and he in myſtery & Sacrament dieth, though now not onely in in heauen, but alſo in the Sacrament, he be indeed per concomitation (as the Church calleth it, that is, by ſequell of all his parts to ech other) whole, aliue, and immortall. Which point becauſe
Mat. 22. 29 our aduerſaries vnderſtand not, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God, they blaſpheme, and and abuſe the people to their damnation. It is alſo a Sacrament, in that it is ordeined to be receiued into our bodies and to feede the ſame to reſurrection and immortality, and to giue grace and ſaluation to our ſoules, if we worthily receiue it.

CARTVV. 5. [26. He tooke bread.] The Sacrament we confeſſe to be holy, and of Chriſts owne inſtitution. Likewiſe, that it is (as other ſeruices wherewith the Lord hath commanded him ſelfe to be worſhipped of euery Chriſtian) a ſacrifice of a thankfull heart. But that it ſhould be, as here is meant, a propitiatory ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead, that wee affirme to be prophane, and the inuention of mans idle braine, which if it had beene hidden before, will now appeare by the Ieſuites monſtrous birth. Wherein, becauſe the end of this Sacrifice that ſhould haue been laſt, is by the Ieſuites offered firſt to be conſidered of: we will alſo follow their order. One difference therefore of the Sacrifice from the Sacrament, is placed in the remembrance of the death of Chriſt. But this is barely ſaid, without any ſtay of reaſon, and therefore your aduerſaries ſhould be gentlier vſed at your hand, if they will not lend their faith, which is ſo precious, without receiuing from you ſome pledge of proofe. I know well you would (if you had durſt) haue alledged the words Doe this, that is (as your companions out of the Poet Virgil haue interpreted it) Sacrifice this; but you durſt not (as it ſeemeth) conſidering that there is not a word mentioned by the Euangeliſt of any oblation which our Sauiour Chriſt made: who immediatly mediatly after he had bleſſed, brake; and immediatly after he had broken, gaue the bread to bee eaten. Seeing therefore our Sauiour had made no oblation of heauing vp of the conſecrated bread, neither by word (which ought to haue come to the inſtitution) nor yet by action or geſture: it followeth that the words Doe this, can carry no ſacrificing ſence with them, conſidering that the ſence neceſſarily implyeth an offering made by our Sauiour Chriſt, which the Apoſtles are commanded to follow. Secondly, the manifeſt and plain words of the Apoſtle, ſtood ſo vpright againſt this imagination of yours, that it could no ſooner ſee light then looſe life. For the Apoſtle doth both apply theſe words to the whole Church of Corinth (to whom the office of ſacrificing could not belong) and doth expreſſely ſhew how this commandement of ſetting forth the Lords death, is fulfilled: namely (ſaith the Apoſtle) As oft as you ſhall eate this bread, and drinke of this cup; not as the Papiſts ſay as oft as you ſhall ſacrifice this bread and this cuppe. Seeing therfore the eating & drinking wherby the nature of a Sacrament is defined of the Ieſuits themſelues, refreſheth vnto vs the remembrance of Chriſts death, it followeth that the diſtinction of the ſacrifice from the Sacrament, fetched from this end, is vnaduiſedly aſſigned. There followes an other end of application of the generall vertue of Chriſts death to our particular neceſſities, whereby againe riſeth (as you ſay) another property upholding the nature of a Sacrifice: if in ſeeking how this application ſhould be performed by the Maſſe, we happily miſſe of your meaning, you are too blame your ſelues, which ſet vs vp no certaine marke to ſhoote at. But if your Diuinity be not (as it is often in reſpect of other Popiſh ſectes) of yeſterdayes forge, I think you muſt anſwer, that the death of Chriſt is applied to euery one by faith, which becauſe your dumbe maſſe cannot ingender, it is euident that there can be no application of the death of Chriſt in the Sacrifice of the maſſe. Now that faith cannot be grounded by the Maſſe, the Apoſtle declareth: which ſaith that it commeth by hearing. Your Maſſe therefore firſt neither heard nor ſo much as ſeene of the dead: the dead cannot poſſibly ſucke any reliefe from it: and therefore it were much that this plaiſter of yours ſhould heale a dead man, although it were applied. Impoſſible therefore that it ſhould doe them good to whom it cannot be ſo much as laid. As for the liuing, although when the Maſſe is chaunted, the outward ſound thereof commeth to the eares of the ſtanders by, yet foraſmuch as the ſame is not vnderſtood of them, the ſame Apoſtle will not vouchſafe it the name of hearing, which is ſo receiued by the eare, as it vaniſheth without any further tranſport of the ſence to the minde. And we alſo confeſſe, that the Sacrifice of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe is applied to euery one of us by faith. But the meanes to come by faith is the preaching of the Goſpell. And therefore the Apoſtle hauing ſpoken of the offering which our Sauiour Chriſt made vpon the Croſſe, to declare how the ſame is applied, he addeth immediatly that he came (by his Miniſters) and preached peace to thoſe which were farre, and to thoſe which were neere. And the writer to the Hebrewes ſheweth, that our Sauiour Chriſt being conſecrate a high Prieſt, is made the author of eternall life vnto all thoſe which doe obey. Which obedience the Apoſtles note to come by faith through the miniſtery of the Goſpel: whereupon Auguſtine affirmeth, that then euery one offereth the Sacrifice of Chriſts paſſion for himſelfe when he is dedicated in the faith of Chriſts paſſion. And another ſaith, That the propination of Chriſt commeth to euery one by the way of faith. Now becauſe the Sacrament of the Supper is a ſeale of the righteouſneſſe that is by faith, it followeth, that it hath a ſingular force in the application of the death of Chriſt to euery one that ſhall haue any part in his death. And conſequently, that this difference of the application of the death of Chriſt, is fondly aſſigned by the Ieſuits to ſeuer the Sacrifice from the Sacrament, conſidering that their ſuppoſed ſacrifice hauing no ſuch vertue of applying his death, the Sacrament is found to haue great force thereunto. Againſt this prophane ſacrifice, it may alſo out of the inſtitution of the Supper bee reaſoned of the analogy and proportion of the old ſacrifice: wherein the bloud was firſt offered unto God for attonement, or euer the body of the Sacrifice could be acceptable. Whereupon alſo our Sauiour Chriſt, the truth of thoſe Sacrifices, began his Croſſe with bloud, whether the clots or buttons of bloud in the garden, or the bloud which came from his nailed hands and feet be conſidered. But in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe the body is firſt offered, and then the bloud, &c. Of the contrary part, there is in the ſacrament manifeſtly the analogy of a Supper, where men vſe firſt to eate, and then to drinke. Now that it is euident, that there is no ſacrifice let it be ſhewed, that if there were a ſacrifice, yet it cannot be that which the Ieſuites imagine. It hath been ſhewed, that the Prieſthood ſtandeth of both the natures. And therefore the repreſentatiue ſacrifice, conſidered one'y in the body apart and the bloud apart, cannot be a true repreſentation of the ſacrifice of Chriſt. Againe, this ſacrifice excludeth the ſoule of Chriſt, which chiefly was croſſed: it being pained or trauailed vnto death, which hee alſo offered up unto his father, when he commended it into his handes. Moreouer, where they ſay the other commeth neceſſarily by Concomitance, although it ſhould be there ſo, yet it being not there by way of ſacrifice, it followeth, that the blood which (they ſay) is taken in the bread by Concomitance, is no ſacramentall bloud, the ſame being after the matter of their Sacrament, which was of their Sacrifice. And therfore their ſhift wherewith they would excuſe their ſacriledge towards the people, is here manifeſtly ouerthrowen. And they doe ſhamefull wrong vnto the Church, to father this new fangled word of Concomitance of it: ſeeing the Church of Chriſt neuer knew it, as that which is the birth of their vpſtart Synagogue: which haue forged it, thereby to couer and to diſguiſe their horrible ſacriledge of the cup taken from the people, as if our Sauiour Chriſt were not frugall and ſparing enough in ordaining as few outward ceremonies as might well bee, but that he muſt doe that by two which might haue been compaſſed by one: or as if hee would haue the Miniſters receiue his body and bloud ſuperfluouſly, that is to ſay, both in the bread, and in the cup too, which was ſufficiently receiued in either of them. Likewiſe, that of Chriſts daily dying in a myſtery or Sacrament: it is that which helpeth not you, which are enforced will you nill you, to a true and proper death of Chriſt daily in the Sacrament, whileſt his true body is imagined to be broken of you, and his bloud truely shed, contrary to the authour to the Hebrewes, which saith, that as wee dye but once, so Christ was once offered. For as for your breaking of the colours and shewes, and tearing them with teeth onely, it is hissed at all that haue but a graine of reason. There are many other things which might be said against this horrible sacrifice; But because the treatise thereof will be proper in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, I content my selfe here with that confutation which the place it selfe ministreth.

Heb. 9. 27.

The blessing of Christ referred to the creatures and working an effect in them.

RHEM. 6. (26. Blessed.) Our Aduersaries for the two words that are in Greeke and Latin, benedixit, and gratias egit, he blessed, he gaue thanks, vse onely the latter, of purpose to signifie that Christ blessed not, nor consecrated the bread and the wine, and so by that blessing wrought any effect vpon them, but gaue thankes onely to his father, as we doe in saying grace. But the trueth is that the word Dulogeyein, signifieth properly to blesse, and is referred to the thing that is blessed, as Luc. 9. of the fishes, Dulogesen autos, benedixit eis, he blessed them, and thereby wrought in them that wonderful multiplication. So the blessing of God is alwayes effectuall: & therefore here also he blessed the bread, and by that blessing, with the words following: made it his body. Amb. li. de his qui initi. myst. c. 9. Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulinum. Now whereas taking the cuppe it is said, he gaue thanks. We say that it is all one with blessing, and that he blessed the cuppe, as before the bread: as it is euident by these words of S. Paul Calix cui benedicimus, the cuppe which we blesse and therefore he calleth it, Calicem benedictionis, the cuppe of blessing vsing the same Greeke word that is spoken of the bread. But why is it then said here, he gaue thankes? because we translate the wordes faithfully as in the Greeke and the Latin, and because the sense is all one, as we are taught by S. Paul before alleaged, and by the fathers, which call this giuing of thankes ouer the cup or ouer the bread, the blessing thereof, S. *Iustin. in fin. 2. Apol. Panem Eucharistiatum. S. Irenæ li. 4. c. 34. Panem in quo gratiæ actæ sunt. S. Cyprian. de cœn. dom. Consecration.

Ton arton eucharistethenta.

CARTVV. 6. [26 Blessed.] If as you say eulogein and eucharistein bee all one, what cause haue you to complaine of your Aduersaries for translating them by one and the same word of Thankesgiuing, wherein the wrangling waywardnesse of these Iesuites is to bee noted: For before they haue quarrelled with vs, for translating two Greek words signifying one thing, by two seuerall English words: And here they fall out with vs, for translating two Greeke words which signifie one thing, by one English word, that in their iudgement giueth the iust weight of them both. And if the Reader will haue a proofe of our sincere and guileless dealing heerein, Let him turne to the 1. Corinth. 16. 16. where hee shall see how wee haue vsed the word of blessing the cup as fully as themselues haue done, which would not haue beene done if wee had feared that that translation had fauoured your sorcerous coniuring of the creatures. And whereas as of all other places it carrieth the greatest shew of directing the words of blessing vnto the bread and wine; yet there was so great trust put in the euidence of the matter, and of the truth it selfe, that this translation was left naked without any mitigation of exposition, which might haue bene set in the Margent and backed with that authority whereunto you pretend great reuerence. But let vs see, how euenly they carry themselues in this matter where there are two words eucharistein and eulogein: It liketh the Iesuites to expound eucharistein by eulogein, rather then eulogein by eucharistein. But it liketh them vnskilfully and vnlearnedly, for let them turne their bookes and shew in any authenticall writer of the Greeke tongue that eucharistein signifieth to consecrate: Wee are able to shew them more then an hundred places where eulogein signifieth to giue thanks. Seeing then eucharistein neuer signifieth to consecrate, and eulogein often signifieth to giue thankes, it was against all reason that you should expound Eucharistein by the signification of consecration; rather (in all equity) you should haue interpreted Eulogein to giue thankes. But because you knew that all men would abhorre from this, that our Sauiour Christ should giue thankes to the bread or to the cup, therefore you chose to wrangle after this sort, for maintenance of your magicall enchantment. But let vs come neerer to the ground of the reason, which is for that the word Blessing doth goueme this word Cup, and is conioyned and construed with it, and consequently with the Bread: whereupon you thinke that some new nature and substance is conueyed into the bread, &c. But this is to bee too much vnexrcised in the word: For you might haue read that Samuel or euer the people tasted, was accustomed to blesse the dinner or the feast: where (by the Iesuites interpretation) because the word Blessing is construed with the meate of the feast, that meate must needs receiue some strange nature and substance: whereas Samuels prayer was, not for any change in the meate, but that the same that was prepared and brought to the table, might bee wholesome to the guests. The Apostle saith, that our meate is sanctified by the word and prayer: yet is there no man of vnderstanding that therefore will conclude, that the meate is changed from the former substance, or hath gotten thereby a new nature: but onely that by this meanes the vse thereof is made lawfull vnto vs. According to which Analogie of the Scripture wee may truely say that the bread of the Supper through thankesgiuing and blessing which wee (according to the Lords institution) doe vse, is made a powerfull and effectuall instrument to seale his glorious promises vnto those which beleeue, and to feede their soules to euerlasting life. Chrysostom although hee vseth not the same words, yet hee hath to the same effects: especially hee vtterly crusheth in sunder your interpretation, when hee saith, That therefore it is called the cup of blessing, because that after wee take it into our hands. wee praise God, mernailing and astonished at his vnspeakeable gift and mercy in the death of the Sonne of God for vs, Oecumenius affirmeth, that therefore wee are said to blesse the cup because that praysing God, or giuing thankes wee so prepare it to bee a Sacrament. Thus all your glosses either in this place or that, haue lost their glosse, whereby colourably you go about to deceiue the ignorant: And thereby it is euident why Iustine calleth it, Eucharised bread, that is, the bread whereby wee giue thankes. And as for that out of Irenæus and Cyprian the former doth so fully agree with Chrisostomes, and the latter with Oecumenius interpretation, as if they had taken them them from thence: Both which when they vtterly ouerthrow your magicall inchantment of the bread and wine, you would haue beene aſhamed to haue brought the fellowes and matches of them for you, if you had not by ſome ſlight of tranſlation put a colour of them, and therefore you haue tranſlated in quo, which properly ſignifieth wherewith, upon it.

That out of Luke maketh nothing for you: Firſt, for that it well admitteth the ſignification of the former places of Scripture, that is, that our Sauiour Chriſt ſanctified the Table by prayer, which is confirmed by one of the Euangeliſts, which uſeth the word of Thankeſgiuing. Secondly, for that it is more uſuall vnto our Sauiour Chriſt, to vſe to work his miracles rather without prayer, as the Almighty, then with prayer as did the Prophets and Apoſtles. Thirdly, notwithſtanding the conſtruction of the bleſſing, with the fiſh, yet there is no new nature and ſubſtance wrought, which you would conclude. Laſt of all, there was a miraculous worke in the fiſh, which is againſt the nature of the Sacramentall element to admit: For then ſhould it ceaſe to bee a true repreſentation of the heauenly things which are exhibited therewith vnto the faithfull, which thing Auguſtine alſo ſomewhere doth affirme. Luk.9. Ioh.6.

Lib.3. de Trin.c.10.

Ambroſe indeed affirmeth, that through the bleſſing, the nature of the elements is changed, but that hee heere meaneth not, the matter of the bread and wine, but onely that the bread which was before common, is by that meanes a heauenly bread ordained for a heauenly uſe, it appeareth by another word whereby hee expoundeth the former, ſignifying that the elements are after the conſecration of another kinde or forme then before, namely celeſtiall, where before they were terreſtriall. And in this very chapter ſpeaking of the mighty worke of Chriſts wordes in the Supper; hee ſaith that after conſecration, by the Sacrament the body of Chriſt is ſignified: noting out what is the change that commeth by this bleſſing: namely, that where before it was no Sacrament, now it is one: And where before it was vnfit to ſignifie the body of Chriſt, now it was fit to ſignifie it. This is further cleared in that (of the miraculous examples wherewith he maketh his proofe) there are diuers wherein the ſame ſubſtance remaineth, As touching the preſence of our S. Chriſt in the Supper, whereof hee ſpeaketh heere much, he expoundeth himſelfe to meane no other then the ſpeciall preſence which hee hath promiſed in all the holy exerciſes of the Church, which hee proueth, for that there muſt bee firſt a preſence of Chriſt, or euer there bee any operation. Alſo that if hee bee preſent, whereſoeuer two or three bee gathered in his name, much more in the Church, at the celebration of the miſteries. Wee confeſſe therefore frankly, that Chriſt crucified, buried, &c. is by his eternall ſpirit preſent in the ſupper, euen as hee is alſo preſent in the water of Baptiſme. And if you will further ſee how farre this good father is from this fat and groſſe opinion of the Sacrament. Vnderſtand that Ambroſe affirmeth, That Chriſt the bread of the Sacrament doth not paſſe into the body of the receiuer. Likewiſe hee ſaith, That the bread before the bleſſing of the holy wordes is called another kinde, but after conſecration the body of Chriſt is ſignified. The like whereof is found in Auguſtine: where it is manifeſt that they make Chriſt a ſeuerall bread from the elementall bread of the Sacrament. As for Auguſtine hee is idlely cited, conſidering that it is confeſſed, that through uſe of the prayers of the Church, there is a change in the Elements touching their uſe and names giuen in ſuch reſpect: for they are after called by the Apoſtle, The Table of the Lord: And how religiouſly our men ſpeake hereof, and how wee refuſe not the word of conſecration, Let the Reader iudge by our writings.

Tranſubſtantiation.

CARTVV. 7. [26 This is.] Ambroſe hath bene anſwered. And the Ieſuites might reſt in it, if they knew what a great change it is of common bread and wine to bee made the Bread and Cup of the Lord. And the ſame anſwer is to Cyprian, who alſo cleereth his wordes from the groſſe and fleſhly vnderſtanding of the Papiſts, ſo plainely as the Ieſuites may be aſhamed to alledge him of their ſide, for hee addeth, That the eating of the fleſh of Chriſt is not to any coniunction of the ſubſtance of Chriſt with our ſubſtance: but to the ſetting forth of the vnitie of a moſt naturall ſociety with him. And that our coniunction with Chriſt, mingleth not our perſons with his, nor uniteth not our ſubſtance with his (as the Popiſh eating doth) but knitteth our affections and willes with his, Further hee ſaith, That it is Angelicall bread which wee receiue in the Sacrament: Which hee could in no ſort ſay, if hee eſteemed that the bread in the Sacrament were the fleſh of Chriſt. Finally, hee ſaith, That wee ſhall eate the ſame bread in heauen more manifeſtly without Sacrament. which wee doe heere vpon earth with Sacrament: Whereupon vnleſſe the Ieſuites will ſay that being in heauen wee ſhall ſwallow with our throates the glorious body of the ſonne of God, they ſhall (will they nill they) be conſtrained to confeſſe that in the Sacrament heere, there is no carnall eating of Chriſts fleſh, but onely that by this eating, is ſealed up vnto all the faithfull the moſt entire coniunction between Chriſt and us, euen as the bread and wine being eaten and drunken become one with us, and wee with them.

RHEM. 8. [26. My Body.] *He ſaid not. This bread is a figure of my body: or, This wine is a figure of my blond: but, This is my body, and, This is my blond. Damaſc. lib. 4 cap. 14. CARTVV. 8. [26. My Body.] In that he called the bread, which was the Sacrament of his body, His Body, he did it according to the receiued and vſuall ſpeech of the Scripture in the ſacraments, which calleth the ſigne by the name of the thing that is ſignified. So the tree in Paradice is called the tree of life, which was a Sacrament of life onely. So Circumciſion, which is the ſacrament of the couenant of Adoption, is called the Couenant. Likewiſe the Lambe is called the Paſſeouer, whereof onely it was a remembrance. Our Sauiour Chriſt therefore was carefull in inſtituting this Sacrament, not to depart from that manner of teaching, which hee knew to be vſed in the Scripture, whereupon it came to paſſe that the Diſciples were not amazed Ioh. 6. in that he called the bread his body, whereas ſpeaking of the eating of his fleſh, and drinking of his bloud, without conſideration of the Sacrament, they were ready to haue been offended vntill our Sauiour Chriſt called them to a ſpirituall vnderſtanding of that doctrine. And let it bee obſerued, that the Papiſts which will not admit this Trope, or borrowed ſpeech ordinary in all writers, and cuſtomary to the Scriptures, do for the maintenance of their fleſhly and carnall feeding, ſtraine and racke the words of the Euangeliſt, not onely to many unproper and borrowed ſpeeches, but alſo to diuers that are irregular and vnwarrantable by example of any good authors, holy or prophane; As that they ſay the Pronoune This is a rouing word, ranging abroad without reſtraint to the bread whereunto it is ioyned, cleane contrary to the nature of it, which is to note out that thing whereunto it is tied in ſuch euidence, as the reader ſhould not bee ſuffered to looke upon any thing elſe but that wherewith it is coupled. Secondly, the word (is) they affirm to ſignifie, is tranſubſtantiate, a ſignification neuer read of, nor hath (as ſhall be ſhewed) any kindred with thoſe ſpeeches of the wine made water, or of the ſtaffe made a Serpent, which are called for the avowing of it. Likewiſe, for He brake the bread, they expound, he brake the accidentes and ſhewes of bread. Againe, theſe words, Doe this, they expound ſacrifice this: beſide other tropes, as is broken, for was broken; and the turning vpſide downe theſe words of our Sauiour Chriſt, whileſt for Take yee, eate yee, this is my body, declaring that the ſacrament is not otherwiſe his body, then it is receiued, they turne it, This is my body, take yee, eate yee, with a number of more incongruities, and abſurdities of ſpeech, which they haue inuented to Phyſick their Tranſubſtantiation, if it were poſſibly curable. As for Theophilact, Damaſcene, and your Popiſh Councell of Nice, they want ſome gray haires to beare witneſſe in this caſe, eſpecially the ſecond Councell of Nice ought not to haue been alledged, wherein the groſſeſt Popery is moſt lewdly and lowdly auowed. And we ſuppoſe that your ſelues will not be ruled by this Councell, nor by Damaſcene in the matter of the Supper, who to avoyd the impoſſibility of the nature of a Sacrament with Tranſubſtantiation: hold that the bread is a ſeale and holy token onely before the words of conſecration. And therefore before the bread and wine be conſecrated, they doe offer the ſame, for remiſſion of ſins, as well of the liuing as of the dead: and the Prieſt doth pray, that God would accept that offering of bread, and through it deliuer him from euerlaſting death. The reaſon they vſe to proue Tranſubſtantiation, becauſe Chriſt ſaid, This is my body, and ſayd not, This is the figure of my body, is inſufficient. For they conclude, that becauſe Paul ſaith, The Rock was Chriſt, that therefore it is not the figure of Chriſt. Verily, unleſſe it haue this figuratiue vnderſtanding, there muſt bee two Chriſts in the Supper, one breaking and another broken, one eating, and another eaten, or elſe if he breake himſelfe, and eate himſelfe being but one, it followeth that there was no Sacrament for the Apoſtles to eate that night: no ſacrifice for Chriſt to offer the day following. But the Ieſuites haſting to the buriall of the figure of the body of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the ſupper with their authorities, which (in compariſon) were but from yeſterday; are conſtrained to ſeele a reſcue by moe and farre ancienter witneſſes, which affirme that the bread is a ſigne of the body of Chriſt, wherein they make ſuch an anſwer as if all the world were in a dead ſleepe. For they ſay, that when the Fathers call this Sacrament a ſigne or a figure, they meane the outward formes. But how pittifully miſerable are theſe men, which beſides that they make the ſacrament nothing elſe but accidents without a ſubiect, and our bodies to be nouriſhed by qualities without ſubſtance: ſhame not to vſe ſuch open violence vpon the Fathers. Tertullian proouing the truth of

Adu. Marc. 3. 26. the humanitie of Chriſt by the ſacrament of the ſupper, interpreteth theſe words, This is my body, that is, to ſay, the figure of my body. Where, if by the figure of Chriſts body be vnderſtood nothing elſe but the formes and outward ſhapes, the heretick ſhall be much beholden vnto you, who upon your words will conclude, that the figure of his body is nothing but a bare form & ſhape of
Aug. de doct. Chri. l. 3. 16 a thing, therefore he himſelfe was nothing elſe but a ſhew of a body, and no body. Auguſtine ſaith, that to eate the fleſh of Chriſt being an heynous thing in the proper ſignification, yea more heynous then to kill him, muſt neceſſarily be a figure; where if you ſaid, that the figure is nothing elſe but accidents of bread, it followeth that that which our Sau. Chriſt calleth the eating of his body, and drinking of his bloud in the ſupper, is nothing elſe but accidents and qualities without ſubſtance: for that (whatſoeuer it be) hee calleth a figure. And if theſe words will ariſe no further then to bare qualities without ſubſtance, I maruell what words you haue to ground your Aduerſ. Adamanto. fleſh vpon. And in another place he affirmeth, that the Lord doubted not to ſay, This is my body, when hee gaue a figure of his body. Here againe it is manifeſt, that the ſame thing is called the figure of his body in the ſacrament, which he calleth his body. And if that which he calleth his body be nothing but accidents without a ſubiect, what words of the inſtitution are ſo ſtrong as to make a ſubſtance. Therefore the Ieſuits are deceiued, if they thought by ſuch a fond ſleight of words, without Scripture Reaſon, or Authority, to haue bereaued vs of ſo many and ſo rich teſtimonies of antiquity againſt the new ſtart vp opinion of their Tranſubſtantiation.

And therefore it was no maruell if the Euangeliſtes both in a certaine thing, and in a matter that was forth-with to enſue, did uſe the preſent time, when the Scripture uſeth it ſo often upon one onely of thoſe cauſes. And this manner of ſpeech is uſed of Luke and others, in this and the like caſes. And themſelues in their Canon of the Maſſe, expound the gift which wee offer by the future time, which wee ſhall offer. Moreouer, this truth of referring the giuing of the body and ſhedding of the bloud to the time of the paſſion, the old Tranſlator did ſee, who uſing the liberty of a Paraphraſt, rather then of a Tranſlator, ſaith: This is my body which ſhall bee giuen for you: Hee ſaith, ſhall bee giuen, and not is giuen, as the Ieſuites (unskilfully biting upon the word) do wrangle: Wee can well allow of a myſticall ſhedding of Chriſts bloud in the Supper; for when the wine is powred out of the cup into the mouth, thereby miſtically and Sacramentally is ſhed the bloud of Chriſt out of his bleſſed body unto the earth, that is, the ſhedding of it is ſignified. The force of the propoſition is not to bee paſſed, which ſignifieth a ſhedding forth of his bloud, a thing which as it cannot bee in the Supper, ſo doth it ouerthrow your unbloudy ſacrifice.

RHEM. 10. [29. Fruite of the vine.] S. Luke putteth theſe wordes before he come to the conſecration, whereby it ſeemeth that he ſpeaketh of the wine of the Paſchall lambe, and therefore nameth it, the fruit of the vine, but if he ſpeake of the wine which was now his bloud: hee nameth notwithſtanding wine, as S. Paul nameth the other bread, for three cauſes: firſt becauſe it was ſo before: as Eue is called Adams bone, and, Aarons rod deuoured their roddes: whereas they were not now roddes, but ſerpents. And He taſted the water turned into wine: whereas it was now wine and not water: and ſuch like, ſecondly, becauſe it keepeth the formes of bread and wine, and things are called as they appeare: as when Raphaell is called a yong man Tob. 5. and, Three men appeared to Abraham Gen. 18. whereas they were three Angels, thirdly, becauſe Chriſt in this Sacrament is very true and principall bread and wine, feeding and refreſhing vs in body and ſoule to euerlaſting life.

The elements after conſecration called bread and wine. Gen. 2. Exod. 7. Ioh. 2.

CARTVV. 10. [29 Fruit of the Vine.] Who ſeeth not that the Ieſuites ſeek to turne away their faces from the truth, which had rather referre this ſentence to the cup of the Paſſeouer which is not once mentioned by any of the two Euangeliſts that ſpake of the fruit of the Vine, then to the verſe going immediatly before where the cup of the Lords Supper is ſpoken of, whereof alſo it rendreth the reaſon: For hauing ſaid that his bloud is ſhed in the preſent time hee yeeldeth a reaſon of that ſpeech: For that it was the laſt wine that hee ſhould drinke with them in this life. Beſides this the Ieſuites ſhould heere haue remembred the force of the relatiue which they hotely urged ere-while, ſpecially when there is here no other antecedent neither before nor after. Now they feele their Tranſubſtantiation by this ſo plaine and euident a ſpeech wounded, they apply plaiſters buſily, but there groweth no Baliſame in Gilead, or in any part of the land of Canaan for them. Howbeit, firſt it is to bee noted that beſide the deſperateneſſe of the wound they haue bewrayed their unskilfulneſſe in their Art: Their firſt confirmation being a flat begging of that in controuerſie; for to proue that notwithſtanding the cup is called the fruit of the Vine, yet there is no wine in it, but onely that it is called wine, for that it was: they alledge that Paul calleth alſo the Sacrament Bread which is no bread, but is ſo called becauſe it was bread. Let all thoſe that haue any knowledge iudge whether theſe men are worthy to bee whipt out of ſchoole dores or no, to take that for anſwer unto an argument, which is of the ſame force againſt them that is that whereunto they frame their defence. Eue as ſhee was called Adams bone, ſo was ſhee indeed the very ſubſtance of Adam being in her, and ſo alſo appearing to bee. Their next anſwer is much after the ſame rate, for as if they had proued their tranſubſtantion, they uſe the examples of the Scripture, where there is a conuerſion of one ſubſtance into another. Beſide that, your compariſons are not ſo ill fitted to your purpoſe, for there is an apparant reaſon in Aarons rod, why when it was a ſerpent, it is called a rod, not onely for that the rod was the originall, and that which was before it was a ſerpent, but alſo becauſe it returned unto a rod againe: Where I ſuppoſe you will not ſay that your fleſh returneth to bread againe. And in the conuerſion of Aarons rod there was a ſenſible change, which is not in your Sacrament. And as for the rods of the Enchanters they were roddes indeed, and in ſhew onely (by a deluſion of the ſenſes) ſerpents: And therefore it is no maruaile if Moſes called them roddes. In the other example hee doth not call the wine water ſimply, as heere in the Sacrament hee calleth it ſimply the fruit of the Vine, and Bread; but hee called it water turned into wine: which is as much to ſay as wine plainely. And ſeeing the Lord in ſuch a matter as this, ſpake ſo cleerely, if it had beene ſo in the Sacrament wee need not to doubt but that hee would in ſo weighty a matter haue uſed the ſame cleereneſſe of ſpeech, and haue ſaid, the bread which is turned into my Body, and the fruite of the Vine which is turned into my bloud: Which becauſe hee ſaith not, this example of yours proueth that there was no ſuch conuerſion. Touching Angels called men for the ſhew of men which they cary with them; It is apparant that the Scripture therein ſpeaketh not according to the outward ſhape, but according to the iudgement that godly men had of them, for that which outwardly appeared. But this you will not ſay (wee ſuppoſe) of your Sacrament that the godly eſteeme it to bee bread onely; And therefore you ſee that this example helpeth you not. You may remember alſo the diſputation that Auguſtine hath ſomewhere in his bookes de ciuitate Dei, that Angels take for the time of their Miniſtery true bodies of men, whereupon they eate and dranke, walked and led by the hand. Now if you will grant as much of the true ſubſtance of the bread in the Sacrament, as was of the true nature of man in the Angels for the time wherein they were so sent: your fellows will cun you litle thank therefore ‡ Beside that there was in the Angels euident markes whereby it appeared unto those that had eyes that they were not men, but (as they were indeed) celestiall Angels, where there is no shew in your Sacrament of any thing but of bread.

Your last answer argueth some distraction of your wits: For albeit Christ may bee well called wine and bread for the causes by you alledged: yet it was neuer heard, before you tooke boldnesse to speake thus, that hee should bee the fruit of the vine, for the one signifieth his effect, that hee is that to our soules which wine is to the body: the other noteth whereof hee sprung, which was of the holy virgin, he being the fruit of her wombe, and not of the vine. And you might as well haue said in the other part of the Sacrament, that he is the bread that came out of the eare of wheate, which groweth in the fields. Augustine saith, That there was wine in the mystery of our redemption. And Ierom saith, that Christ in the figure of his blond offered wine and not water. Whereas if the difference had been in the colour and forme onely, it might haue been as well water as wine, there being wine which in colour differeth not from water.

Vigils and Nocturnes.

RHEM. 12. [41. Watch and pray.] Hereof came Vigils and Nocturnes, that is, watching and praying in the night, commonly vsed in the Primitiue Church of all Christians, as is plaine by S. Cyprian and S. Hierom: but afterward and vntill this day, specially of Religious persons.

* Adu. vigilant. ep. 13.

CARTVV. 12. [41. Watch and pray.] Your Vigils haue a rotten foundation, which are laid vpon the peruerting of this place, that beareth no such stuffe. For this waking was but vpon a speciall and extraordinary cause, whereof if you will establish an order and set forme of watch vpon certaine dayes in the yeare, not knowing whether there will be any such extraordinary cause, you are vnworthy to be Constables, to set watch in the City of God, where (as in all well policied Common-wealthes) the watch is kept according to the exigent of the times and other circumstances. And it is all one, as if the people hauing cause once to set a fire their Beacon, should euer after vpon the same day of the yeare, without either the same or the like cause, set it still a fire. Cyprian hath nothing for the confirmation of your part, who hauing noted out the fittest times of the day to pray in, addeth that the darknes shall bee no hinderance to them that pray in the night time, And because watchfulnesse is requisite in all prayer, he requireth also that we should watch in our prayer, which we make when the night is come. Finally, hee exhorteth that we should pray alwayes. So that it appeareth that he speaketh of that watch and prayer that is ordinary. The other of Ierom, touching Nocturnes, hath been answered.

If it be spoken in fauour of free will, let them vnderstand that wee are not able to thinke a good thought, no further then the same is giuen of God, and that Repentance is called expressely the gift of God. And therefore when either the Scripture or the Fathers speake after this sort: it is to note unto vs, that the repentance which the Lord alone giueth, is notwithstanding (through his grace towards vs) wrought willingly by vs. In which respect the Lord (for our better hartening to godlinesse) imparteth with vs this honour, that we should be said to haue done that which he hath done in vs: As if the father taking his childes hands, holding his bow and shaft, and shooting fairely at the mark, should encourage the childe saying, that he had shot a faire shot; where in the childe there is nothing but a good will, that his father should vse his hands to the shot, which we also haue not, but of the Lord.

CHAP. XXVII.

The cheefe of the Iewes accuse him to Pilate the Gentill (his betrayer, and the Iudge, and the Iudges wife, testifying in the meane time manifoldly his innocencie:) 20 and perswade the common people also not onely to preferre the murderer Barabbas, but also to cry, CRVCIFIGE: (All, to the reprobation of their whole nation, and nothing but fulfilling the Scriptures.) 27 After many illusions, 31 he is crucified by the Gentiles. 38 which the Iewes seeing, do triumph as if thy had now the victory. 45 But euen then by many wonderfull workes he declareth his might, to their confusion. 57 Finally being buried, they to make all sure, set souldiars to keepe his sepulcher.

AND when morning was come, all the cheefe Prieſts and auncients of the people conſulted together againſt IESVS, that they might put him to death.

2 And they brought him bound and deliuered him to Ponce Pilate the Preſident.

3 Then Iudas that betrayed him, ſeeing that he was condemned, ‖ repenting him, returned the thirtie ſiluer peeces to the chiefe Prieſts and ancients.

4 Saying I haue ſinned, betraying iuſt bloud. But they ſaid, what is that to vs? looke thou to it.

5 And caſting downe the ſiluer peeces in the temple, he departed: and went and ‖ hanged himſelfe with an halter.

6 And the chiefe Prieſts hauing taken the ſiluer peeces, ſaid, It is not lawfull to caſt them into † the Corbana: becauſe it is the price of bloud.

† This Corbana was a place about the Temple which receiued the peoples gifts or offerings. See Mar. 12 v. 42.

7 And after they had conſulted together, they bought with them the potters field, to be a burying place for ſtrangers.

8 For this cauſe that field was called Haceldama, that is the fielde of bloud, euen to this preſent day.

9 Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Ieremie the Prophet, ſaying, And they tooke the thirtie pieces of ſiluer, the price of the priced, whom they did price of the children of Iſrael. Zach. 11. 12.

10 And they gaue them into the potters field, as our Lord did appoint to me.

11 And IESVS ſtood before the Preſident, and the Preſident asked him, ſaying, Art thou the King of the Iewes? IESVS ſaith to him, Thou ſayeſt.

12 And when he was accuſed of the cheefe Prieſts and ancients, he anſwered nothing.

13 Then Pilate ſaith to him, Doeſt thou not heare how many teſtimonies they alleage againſt thee?

14 And he anſwered him not to any word: ſo that the Preſident did maruel excedingly.

15 And vpon the ſolemne day the Preſident had accuſtomed to releaſe vnto the people one priſoner whom they would. Hora tertia of the Churches ſeruice.

16 And he had then a notorious priſoner, that was called Barabas.

17 They therefore being gathered together, Pilate ſaid: whom will you that I releaſe to you, Barabbas, or IESVS that is called Chriſt?

18 For he knew that for enuie they had deliuered him.

19 And he was ſitting in place of iudgment, his wife ſent vnto him, ſaying: Haue thou nothing to doe with that iuſt man, for I haue ſuffered many things this day in my ſleepe for him.

20 But the chiefe Prieſts and ancients perſwaded the people, that thy ſhould aske Barabbas, and make IESVS away.

21 And the Preſident anſwering, ſaid to them: whether will you of the two to be releaſed vnto you? But they ſayd, Barrabas.

22 Pilate ſaith to them, what ſhall I do then with IESVS, that is caled Chriſt? They ſay all, let him be crucified.

23 The Preſident ſaid to them, VVhy what euill hath he done? But they cried the more, ſaying, Let him be crucified.

24 And Pilate ſeeing that he nothing preuailed, but rather tumult was toward: taking water he waſhed his hands before the people, ſaying, I am ‖ innocent of the bloud of this iuſt man: looke you to it.

25 And the whole people anſwering, ſaid, His blood be vpon vs, and vpon our children.

26 Then he releaſed to them Barabbas, and hauing ſcourged IESVS, deliuered him vnto them for to be crucified.

27 Then the Preſidents ſouldiers taking IESVS into the Palace, gathered together vnto him the whole band:

28 *And ſtripping him: put a ſcarlet cloake about him. Ioh. 19. 2.

29 And platting a crowne of thornes, put it vpon his head, and a reede in his right hand. And bowing the knee before him, they mocked him, ſaying, Haile king of the Iewes.

30 And ſpitting vpon him, they took the reede, and ſmote his head.

31 And after they had mocked him, thy tooke off the cloke from him, and put on him his own garments, and led him away to crucifie him.

32 And in going they found a man of Cyrene, named Simon: him they forced to take vp his Croſſe.

33 And they came into the place that is called Golgotha, which is, the place of Caluarie. Hora ſexta of the Churches ſeruice.

34 And they gaue him, wine to drinke mingled with gall. And when he had taſted, he would not drinke.

35 And after they had crucified him, they deuided his garmẽts, caſting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophet, ſaying: They deuided my garments among them: and vpon my veſture they did caſt lottes. Pſal. 21. 19

36 And they ſate and watched him.

37 And they put ouer his head his cauſe written, THIS IS IESVS THE KING OF THE IEVVES.

38 Then were crucified with him two theeues: one on the right hand, and one on the left.

39 And they that paſſed by, blaſphemed him, wagging their heads.

40 And ſaying, Vah, thou that deſtroyeſt the temple of God, and in three dayes doeſt reedifie it: ſaue thine own ſelfe: ‖ if thou be the Sonne of God, come down from the Croſſe.

41 In like maner alſo the chiefe Prieſts with the Scribes & ancients mocking, ſaid:

42 Hee saued other: himselfe he cannot saue: if he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the crosse, and wee will beleeue him.

Psal. 21. 9. Sap. 2. 18. 43 *He trusted in God: let him now deliuer him if he will: for he said, That I am the sonne of God.

44 And the selfe same things the theeues also that were crucified with him, reproched him withall.

45 And from the sixt houre, there was darkenes made vpon the whole earth vntill the ninth houre.

46 And about the ninth houre IESVS cried with a mighty voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lamma-sabacthani? that is, My God, my God | why hast thou forsaken me?

47 And certaine that stood there and heard, said, He calleth Elias:

48 And incontinent one of them running, tooke a sponge, and filled it with vinegre: and put it on a reed, and gaue him to drinke.

49 And other said, Let be, let vs see whether Elias come to deliuer him.

50 And IESVS againe crying with a mighty voice, yeelded vp the ghost.

Hora nona in the Churches seruice. 51 And behold the vaile of the temple was rent in two peeces, frō the top euen to the botome, and the earth did quake, and the rockes were rent.

52 And the graues were opened: and many bodies of the sancts that had slept, rose.

53 And they going forth out of the graues after his resurrection, came into the holy Cittie: and appeared to many.

54 And the Centurion and they that were with him watching IESVS, hauing seene the earth-quake and the things that were done, were sore afraid, saying, Indeed this was the sonne of God.

55 And there were many women a farre off, which had followed IESVS from Galilee, ministring vnto him.

56 Among whom was Mary Magdalen, and Marie the mother of Iames and Ioseph, and the mother of the sonnes of Zebedee.

Hora vesperarum, or euensong. 57 And when it was euening, there came a certaine man of Arimathæa, named Ioseph, who also himselfe was disciple to IESVS.

58 He went to Pilate, and asked the body of IESVS. Then Pilate commanded that the body should be deliuered.

Hora completorij, or Compline. 59 And Ioseph taking the body, | wrapt it in cleane sindon, 60 And laid it in his own new monument, which he had hewed out in a rocke. And he rolled a great stone to the doore of the monument, and went his way.

61 And there was there Marie Magdalene, and the other Marie, sitting ouer against the sepulchre.

Saturday called Sabbatum sanctum. 62 And the next day, which is after the Parasceue, the chiefe Priests and the Pharisees came together to Pilate.

63 Saying, Sir, we haue remembred, that that seducer said yet liuing, after three dayes I will rise againe.

64 Command therefore the sepulchre to be kept vntill the third day: lest perhaps his disciples come and steale him, and say to the people, He is risen from the dead: and the last errour shall be worse then the first.

65 Pilate sayd to them, You haue a gard goe, gard it as you know.

66 And they departing, made the sepulchre sure: sealing vp the stone with watchmen.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XXVII.

Horrour of conscience. RHEM. 1. [3. Repenting him.] Note how speedily the plague of God falleth after sinne, and specially men must note what torment of conscience and desperation often followeth the shedding of innocent bloud.

Desperation. RHEM. [5. Hung himselfe.] If hee had rightly repented, notwithstanding his horrible treason, he might haue obtained mercy: but by hanging himselfe hee tooke away all meanes of mercy and saluation, because he died finally impenitent.

They that execute lawes against their conscience, are like to Pilate. RHEM. [24. Innocent of his bloud.] Though Pilate was much more innocent then the Iewes, and would haue been free from the murder of our Sauiour, seeking all the meanes that he could (without offending the people and the Emperours lawes to dimisse him: yet hee is damned for being the Minister of the peoples wicked will against his owne conscience; euen as all officers be, and specially the Iudges and Iuries which execute lawes of temporal Princes against Catholicke men: for all such be guilty of innocent bloud, and be nothing excused by that they execute other mens will according to the lawes which be vniust. For they should rather suffer death themselues, then put an innocent man to death.

RHEM. 2, [40. If thou be the Sonne.] Maruell not, when thou hearst our Sauiour in the B. Sacrament mocked at, or seest him abused of wicked men, that hee straight reuengeth not such blasphemies: or that he sheweth not himselfe there visibly and to the senses, when faithlesse Heretikes will say, let me see him, taste him, &c. for he suffered here the like on the Crosse when he might at his will haue come downe with as much ease as he rose when he was dead.

Christ deided in the B Sacrament euen as vpon the Crosse. CARTVV 2. [40. If thou be the Sonne of God.] Your God can hardly reuenge the wrongs which you suppose done vnto him, seeing that he heareth them not, and therefore there is no grammercy to his patience; of whose deafenesse this may be an argument vnto you that bee his Baalists, that crying continually for vengeance against vs, and as it were calling for fire to bee sent from him, can get no reuenge at all. Our Sauiour Christ abstained altogether from reuenge of his owne contempt, as Dauid did from pursuite of his iniuries against Shimei, which was partly because it was the time of his humiliation and suffering. But we see, that after glory as a Salo- mon he executed iudgement against the aduersaries by the hands of the Apostles, and of the Romans. This therefore cannot couer the weaknesse and nakednesse of your God, whom you imagine in his ruffe and royall Maiesty, when you make him daunce about the chalice. And although as touching the power of our Sauiour Christ, he was able to come downe from the Crosse, yet both the counsell of God, that had disposed of the purchasing of mans saluation by that onely meanes which the Euangelist recordeth to haue been executed, and our Sauiour Christs office, which he willingly submitted himselfe unto, hee could not come downe from the Altar of the Crosse, vntill the time that he was taken downe. And therefore it is vntrue that hee could at his Will haue come downe from the Crosse, with as much ease as hee rose from the dead. For the one was against the counsell of God, and against the dispensation of our Sauiour Christ: where the other, that is, his resurrection, was agreeable to both.

RHEM. 3. [46. Why hast thou forsaken me?] Beware here of the detestable blasphemie of Caluin and the Caluinists, who thinking not the bodily death of Christ sufficient, say, that he was also here so forsaken and abandoned of his Father, that he sustained in soule & conscience the very feares and torments of the damned. And to take away the Article of his descending into Hell after his death, (which was with triumph and not with paine) they say that his descending was nothing els, but that his soule suffred the very paines of Hell vpon the Crosse, whereas indeed by these words out of the Psalme, our Sauiour will signifie no more but that his paines) being now so long on the Crosse and ready to die) were very great, and therefore according to the infirmity of his humane nature, for very anguish (as before in the garden when he was but toward his passion) he saith he was forsaken, for two causes, first because it was the will of God not to deliuer him, but that he should die: secondly, because his diuine nature did so represse it selfe for the time that he felt no comfort thereof at all, but was left to die in extreme pains as a mere man.

Catechis. Cal. & Instit. lib. 2. 16

Caluins blasphemy.

CARTVV. 3. [46. Why hast thou forsaken me.] Whilest the Iesuites take pleasure in raging against Caluin and the Caluinists, as it pleaseth them to speake, they foame out their ignorance against themselues, and their poyson against Christ & his Church. For in esteeming that the bodily death of Christ, such as other men endure, is a sufficient ransome for vs, they are found ignorant of the Scripture, which affirmeth that he bare our iniquities, and that the correction of our sinnes was vpon him: that he went vnder the curse of the law, which is not onely a bodily curse, but the curse of the soule. Now if he bare the punishment of our sins: we hauing deserued hell fire, it followeth that he endured it, so that whatsoeuer we should haue suffered for euer in hell, that did our Sauiour Christ vndergo in the time of his passion: in which respect he was our pledge, setting himselfe in our place, to answere and to pay for vs, whatsoeuer could in the iustice of God be exacted. Of which iustice these men are vtterly ignorant; for if they considered that it cannot be satisfied but with a full and perfect reuenge of all iniquity, they would neuer assigne the appeasement of it, in a bodily death: whereunto the iustice of men oftentimes (and that for lawes of their owne making) doth not without cause proceed. Yet is there as great difference betweene the diuine iustice of God, and the ciuill iustice of men, as is betweene his Maiesty, and their base estate. Wherefore it should be against reason to satisfie an infinite iustice with a punishment that is within measure. Thirdly, they are ignorant of the nature of sinne, whose deserued wages is all the curses of the law, both written and not written, both of body and soule, both of this life, and the life to come. Their poyson that commeth from this ignorance is shamefull blasphemy against our Sauiour Christ, and detestable sacrilege to the Church. The blasphemy against our Sauiour Christ is apparant, who notwithstanding that he was the sonne of God, and indued (as touching his manhood) with such a spirit of fortitude as was neuer (by many degrees) neither in man nor angell: yet is he of the Iesuites mastered in courage, and value of minde by many miserable men, for by a drop of that spirit which he receiued without measure, they haue endured with great quietnesse, and countenance vnchanged, most cruell and exquisite torments greater then those which our Sauiour Christ suffered to the outward eye, yea sometimes they endured them with apparant tokens of their heart truly and vnfainedly ioyfull, as appeareth by the story of the Martyrs in the primitiue Church, and sithence: where our Sauiour Christ when he was scarce entred into the porch and suburbes of his sufferings, through anguish of his soule had clots rather then drops of bloud, streaming downe his blessed body. A thing which neuer was either heard or seene, either before or sithence. And do the Iesuites thinke that any bodily paine which other men may endure, could driue our Sauiour to such an extremity: vnlesse (which is especially the hell fire that scorcheth) he had deeply apprehended the wrath of God against our sins, which hee had charged vpon his back. And if drinking then of the uppermost of the cup of Gods anger, he were so tormented: what helly pangs (think you) did he endure, when he was now come towards the bottom & dregs thereof. Hereupon therefore I say proceedeth this fearfull (and yet faithfull) cry of our Sauiour Christ, not as the Iesuites say, vpon the feare of a corporall death. Againe, the glorious victory of our Sauiour Christ vpon the Crosse, which the Apostle doth so magnifically extoll, reaching it not to the outward suffering onely, but to his conflict which he had upon the crosse, as it were hand to hand with the Diuels, which were his tormentors, the Iesuits deface, making that noble conquest, as it were a stickling with a bodily death alone. And that which the Apostle speaketh in plaine words, Dauid the Prophet had in most pleasant Metaphors of of Dogges, of fat Bulles of Basan, Vnicornes and such like before shadowed.

Psal. 22.

Last of all the detestable sacrilege committed heere against the Church, is the defrauding of her and euery member of her, of the strong comfort that it sucketh from this crosse of Christ: which when they are ready to bee ouerlaied with the hainousnesse of their sinne, forth-with are stirred with this meditation; that their sinnes are not more outragious, then were the sufferances of Christ passing all measure, according to the length, bredth, depth, and height of the exceeding ding loue wherewith Christ loued them. Beware therefore of the Iesuites poyson which they hold forth unto thee; And know that as thou art lifted up by so much higher into heauen, as Christ upon his Crosse cast himselfe down lower into hell: euen so according to the measure of his abasement, himselfe also was after heaued up into glory, aboue euery name that is named in heauen or in earth. So that this iudgement of our Sauiour Christs throwing down into hell is not dishonourable unto him, but followed with unspeakeable glory: whereas the Iesuites carrying him no further then to a bodily and ordinary death, leaue him here wandring still upon earth, stopping him up the passage to the throne of glory, which necessarily must haue beene before paued by the sufferings which were fore-told of the Prophets.

Reuerent vsing of our L. Body. Corporals.

RHEM. 4. [59. Wrapped.] This honour and duetie done to Christs body being dead, was maruelous gratefull and meritorious. And this wrapping of it in cleane syndon may signifie by S. Hierome, that the body of our Lord is to bee wrapped not in golde, precious stones, and silke, but in pure linnen. And so in the whole Church it is obserued by * S. Siluesters constitution, that the Corporall whereupon our Lords body lieth on the altar, must be pure and plaine linnen.

*S. Hier. in hunc locum, Tom. 1. Concil.

CART VV. 4. [59 Hee wrapped it in, &c.] Whereby a man may know that your God of the Altar is dead, and needeth a winding sheete. Ierome maketh flat against you; for upon the simplicity of Christs buriall, hee exhorteth to a plainenesse and simplicity both in funerall and Church furniture, wherein you exceed all measure. The Churches of the Gospell do (indeed) obserue this, that the Sacramentall body (whereof Ierome speaketh) is couered onely with a faire napkin: this counterfeit Siluester I acknowledge not, albeit the decree it selfe standeth well with the singlenesse which ought to bee in the Church, but if it bee not meete for the body of Christ to bee wrapped in silke: How commeth it to passe that the Priest must be clad in veluet and cloth of gold. You are certainely proud seruants, that will be gayer then your Maister and your God.

CHAP. XXVIII.

He riseth againe the third day, and (the blind most obstinate Iewes by briberie working to their owne reprobation) hee appeareth to his Disciples in Galilee (as both before his passion hee foretolde them Mat. 26. and now after his resurrection, first the Angel, then also himselfe appointed by the women) 18 and sendeth them to all nations to build his Church among the Gentiles.

The Gospell for the night Masse of Christs resurrection, which is now vsed to be said on Easter eue in the morning. Easter day, Mar. 16. 1. Luk. 24. 1. Ioh. 20. 1.

AND in the euening of the Sabboth which dawneth on the first of the Sab-Sabboth, came Marie Magdalen, and the other Marie | to see the sepulchre.

2 And beholde there was made a great earth-quake. For an Angell of our Lord descended from heauen: and comming, rolled backe the stone, and sate vpon it.

3 And his countenance was as lightning, and his garment as snow.

4 And for feare of him, the watchmen were frighted, and became as dead.

5 And the Angell answering sayd to the women, Feare not you for I know that you seeke IESVS that was crucified.

Mar. 16. 6. 7

6 He is not here: for he is risen * as he sayd, come, and see the place where our Lord was layd.

7 And going quickly, tell ye his Disciples that he is risen: and beholde he goeth before you into Galilee, there you shall see him, loe I haue foretold you.

8 And they went foorth quickly out of the monument with feare and great ioy running to tell his Disciples.

9 And beholde IESVS mette them, saying, All haile. But they came neere and tooke hold of his feete, and adored him.

10 Then IESVS said to them. Feare not, goe tell my brethren that they go into Galile, there they shall see mee.

11 VVho when they were departed, beholde certaine of the watchmen came into the cittie, and told the chiefe Priests all things that had beene done.

12 And being assembled together with the auncients, taking counsell, they gaue a great summe of money to the souldiers.

13 Saying, Say you: That his disciples came by night, and stole him away when we were a sleepe.

14 And if the President, shall heare of this, we will perswade him, and make you secure.

15 But they taking the money, did as they were taught. And this word was bruited abroad among the Iewes euen vnto this day.

16 And the eleuen Disciples went into Galilee, vnto the mount where IESVS had appointed them.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. XXVIII.

The holy Sepulcher and Pilgrimage thereunto.

RHEM. 1. [1. To see the Sepulcher.] The deuoute women came to visite our Sauiour CHRISTS Sepulcher, and for their deuotion first deserued to know the Resurrection, and to see him risen. The honour of the which Sepulcher and the Pilgrimage thereunto in the Primitiue Church, S. Hierome declareth in these words, The Iewes sometime honoured Sancta Sanctorum rum because there were the Cherubs, and the Propitiatorie, and the Arke of the Testament, Manna, Aarons rod, and the golden altar. Doth not the Sepulcher of our Lord seeme vnto thee more honourable: Which as often as we enter into, so often do we see our Sauiour lie in the sindon: and staying there a while, we see the Angell againe sit at his feete, and at his head the napkin wrapped together. The glory of whose Sepulcher, we know was long prophesied before Ioseph shewed it out, by Esay saying, And his rest shall be honour: to wit, because the place of our Lords buriall should be honoured of all men. And at this present, notwithstanding the Turkes dominion, yet doe the Religious Christian Catholike men by Gods mighty prouidence keepe the holy Sepulcher, which is within a goodly Church, and Christians come out of all the world in Pilgrimage to it:

In Ep. 17. Paul. & Epitoch. ad Marcel to Esa. 11.

CARTVV. 1. [1 To see the Sepulcher.] Touching Deserts or merits it hath been often spoken of, and therefore heere it is enough in a word to deny, which they in a word do affirme. Concerning pilgrimage to our Sauiours Christs sepulchre, out of Ierome, neither is there any mention in Ierome of pilgrimage, nor in those times was there any such Idolatrous pilgrimes as Popery maintaineth. There were diuers wealthy, and oftentimes, godly men, that went to see the Sepulchre of our Sauiour Christ: as who would not see such a famous monument, so far as his calling would suffer him, if the truth of it were known? comming thither, where also was a place of prayer, what meruaile if they worshipped? But that they worshipped the Sepulchre thereof hath Ierome no word: he proueth that we ought to haue it in honour or good respect: whereof as a man may doubt (considering that it is (by the resurrection of our Sauiour Christ) an empty cask containing no part of that most pretious treasure which sometimes it possessed) so shall it not bee the question betweene you and us, whose difference is of an other kinde of honour then that which Ierome speaketh of. Now where they alledge Ierome that the commers thither first saw Christ wrapped in Syndon or Cambrick, and a little after the Angell standing at his feet, and then the kerchiefe at his head, and alledge him without any caution to the Reader: It appeareth that they take pleasure in mocking their Readers being content as it might seeme, that they should understand all this corporally and substantially, where Ierome meaneth to set forth that the sight of the Sepulchre brought them to a meditation and representation of these things: For if you will haue it understood of your Sacrament, which you use to lay in the Sepulchre once a yeare: shew us in what part of your Cake, is his head, and where his feete bee: if of the true body of Christ with the length, bredth, and other dimensions, how maintaine you his ascension into heauen, which make him present to all commers into the Church wherein the Sepulchre was seated. That I speak nothing of the glory of the Angell, that would with the beames of his Angelick brightnesse haue laid (as it were for dead) the stoutest that were there.

RHEM. 2. [19 Going then.] Commission to baptize and preach to all Nations giuen to the Apostles, and grounded vpon Christes soueraigne authoritie, to whom was giuen all power in heauen and in earth.

The Catholicke Church to bee gathered of all Nations, and Christs continual protection of the same Church.

RHEM. [20. With you all dayes.] Here Christ doth promise his concurrence with his Apostles and their successors, as well in preaching as ministring the Sacraments, and his protection of the Church neuer to cease till the worldes ende: contrary to our Aduersaries, saying that the Church hath failed many hundred yeeres till Luther and Caluin.

CARTVV. 2 [20 I am with you alway.] Name the authors, note the places, else shall you bee taken still (as you are) men to whom it is all one to gaine by truth or by falshood. Wee hold that the Church may bee eclypsed, and lease much of that beautifull light of the truth wherein shee hath shined; wee hold also that sometime her tent is enlarged, and her cords stretched out, and other sometime that shee is more barren, and trauaileth seldome: but that the Church faileth or ceaseth to be somewhere in the world, cannot bee shewed out of any approued Writer of our part. And if, as immediatly after the fall of Adam, there should in some instant of time bee not so much as one person in the world, which as yet by effectuall calling did professe the name of God: yet should not follow thereof the absurdies the Papists do imagine, considering that the Church is rather defined by the election of God, then by a continuall course of succeeding, without interruption.

THE PVBLISHER TO THE READER.

VNderstanding that D. Fulke vpon this subiect is reprinting in the former manner, I thought it needlesse to proceed with the Rhemists Text, since also the Author dealeth onely against their Annotations: and their Translation is so absurd, troublesome, and fruitlesse; and also since it is not likely, that many will desire the same, but such as neither will nor neede, bee without D. Fulkes answer, which may more boldly beare the charge then this.

THE ARGVMENT OF S. MARKES GOSPELL.

RHEMISTS.

SAint Markes Goſpell may be well diuided into foure parts.

The firſt part, of the preparation that was made to the manifeſtation of Chriſt: *chap.*1. in the beginning.

The ſecond, of his manifeſting himſelfe by preaching and Miracles, and that in Galilee: the reſidue of the 1. chap. vnto the 10. chap.

The third, of his comming into Iurie, towards his Paſſion: *chap.*10.

The fourth of the Holy weeke of his Paſſion in Hieruſalem; *chap.*11. to the end of the booke.

Of S. Marke and his conuerſation with the two Apoſtles S. Paul and S. Barnabee, we haue at large *Act.*12. and 15. ſomewhat alſo *Col.*4. and 2. *Tim.*4. and to Philemon. Moroeuer his familiaritie with the Prince of the Apoſtles S. Peter. wee haue 1. *Pet.*5. For ſo it pleaſed our Lord, that onely two of the Euangeliſts ſhould be of his twelue Apoſtles, to wit S. Matthew and S. Iohn. The other two, S. Marke and S. Luke, he gaue vnto vs, of the Diſciples of his two moſt principall and moſt glorious Apoſtles S. Peter and S. Paul. Whoſe Goſpels therefore were of Antiquitie counted as the Goſpels of S. Peter and S. Paul themſelues. Marke the diſciple and interpreter of Peter (ſaith S. Hierome) according to that which he heard of Peters mouth, wrote at Rome a briefe Goſpell at the requeſt of the Brethren (about 10. or 12. yeeres after our Lords Aſcenſion.) *Which when Peter had heard, he approued it, and with his authoritie did publiſh it to the Church to be read, as Clemens Alexandrinus writeth, lib.*6. Hypotypoſ.

In Catal. Script. Eccleſiaſt.

In the ſame place S. Hierom addeth how he went into Egypt to preach, and was the firſt Biſhop of the chiefe Cittie there, named Alexandria: and how Philo Iudæus at the ſame time ſeeing and admiring the life and conuerſation of the Chriſtians there vnder S. Marke, who were Monkes, wrote a booke thereof, which is extant to this day. And not onely S. Hierom (in Marco and in Philone) But alſo *Euſebius Hiſt.*li.2.*ca.*15,16,17. Epiphanius Secta 29. *Nazareorum, li.*1. to 2. Caſſianus de *Inſtit. It is alſo to be noted, that in reſpect of S. Peter, who ſent S. Marke his ſcholer to Alexandria, and made him the firſt Biſhop there, this See was eſteemed next in dignitie to the See of Rome, and the Biſhop thereof was accompted the chiefe Metropolitane or Patriarch of the Eaſt, and that by the firſt Councell of Nice, Whereof ſee S. Leo ep. 43. CARTVRIGHT.

You do great wrong vnto Mark and his Goſpell, that you make it a part of the Argument of his Goſpell, that hee made Monkes, whereof hee ſpeaketh not a word in his Goſpell. And therefore Preaching (as yee ſay) upon the Goſpell that himſelfe wrote, hee could not ſpeake for Monks, but he muſt needs do it beſides his Text. Now whereas the Ieſuits would make us beleeue, that the Monkes haue beene walking in all ages of Chriſtianity; the Reader may underſtand that theſe heere mentioned, are ſcarce the ſhadowes of thoſe which they ſeeke for. Philo Iudæus from whom the other writers, as Euſebius, Sozomen, and Nicephorus take the light of their ſtories, doth not once name them Monkes, but ſaith expreſly that they had an other title whereby they were named: that is Men-healers or Women-healers (if wee may ſo ſpeake) becauſe with their kinde of Phyloſophy they healed thoſe which came vnto them, of their lewd and diſordered affections, &c. Hee ſpeaketh indeed of their Monaſteries, but (which of purpoſe, and as a peece of their profeſſion they had) ſuch, as are contrary to the Popiſh Monaſteries. For firſt they were ſituate in the fields and gardens; then, there was no coſt nor workemanſhip beſtowed on them: After this, euery one had his houſe apart, a good great ſpace from his companion, and came not out: for the daily ſacrifice of the Maſſe was not then hatched. Which things as they haue no agreement with the Chriſtians either of thoſe or theſe daies liuing ſociably: So haue they no affinity or bloud with the Popiſh Monkes which liue in the moſt peopled Townes, and dwell in the beſt ſeeld houſes: And for the reſt of their behauiour, it hath ſmall conformity with thoſe of our time: for they kept home for the ſpace of ſixe daies, onely they met at night at a common Table, the ſeuenth day they had a Lecture, and other exerciſes of learning and Religion, and that not as the Chriſtians, the firſt day of the weeke, but as the Iewes on the Saturday. There were diuers that are ſaid to haue faſted nothing, ſome in three, ſome in ſix daies, And albeit they were of Markes gathering to the Goſpell, yet it followeth not, that whatſoeuer they practiſed was of Markes teaching. For if the Apoſtles themſelues were compelled to beare with ſome things in the Churches which they planted, It is no maruaile if Mark that executed but the office of an Euangeliſt amongſt them of Alexandria was conſtrained to endure θεραπευτὰς καὶ θεραπευτρίδας.

dure ſomethings extraordinary. Neither ought it to ſeeme ſtrange, if the leauen of ſuperſtition and ſuperfluous ceremonies, partly cleaued to theſe men, after their conuerſion to the Goſpell: For by all likelyhood by nature they were Iewes, by ſect Eſſees, as Philo reporteth, addicted much to corporall exercises, rather then to piety, and by education they were Egyptians, as ſuperſtitious a people as was in the world. And what patterne of ſincere reformation is (thinke you) to bee taken from them, which in the morning worſhipped towards the Eaſt, and in the euening towards the Weſt, which as Ierome reporteth, thought it not lawfull to poſſeſſe any thing of their own, a point of Anabaptiſtry, as well as of the Popiſh Monkery; which thought it unmeete for a Chriſtian to eate in the day, but onely in the night time? That I paſſe by their new name, which they tooke upon themſelues, chooſing rather to be called Healers then Chriſtians, whereof it commeth after to bee conſidered. Neither is Philo his teſtimony of any great authority, touching the commendation hee giueth them, as one which being no Chriſtian, could not iudge of true Chriſtianity: For euen Ierome himſelfe confeſſeth that hee found place in his Catalogue onely, becauſe he had ſpoken ſomewhat well of the Chriſtans. And if hee may bee ſuffered therefore to ſit in iudgement of Chriſtianity, there is no cauſe why Ioſephus the Iewiſh Prieſt, ſhould not enioy the ſame Priuiledge, that prayſeth our Sauiour Chriſt as much as Philo doth the Chriſtians. And Ierome affirming that Philo commended theſe Chriſtians, becauſe hee ſaw that they Iudaized, or followed the ceremonies of the Iewes, doth euidently declare that the Monckery which hee commended in thoſe Chriſtians was farre more fitting and comely for the Schollers of Mount Sinai in Arabia, without the Borders of the Church, then for Mount Syon which is in the holy Land of Canaan: more meete for the Phariſees, which were the counterfeit followers and diſciples of Moſes, then for the true Diſciples either of Moſes or of Chriſt: For Ierome ſheweth that Philo meant not thereby to commend the Chriſtians as the Iewes to whom they were like. Euſebius iudgement is heere of more weight, which brandeth this Church, for that which Philo and the Ieſuits crowne it: ſaying, that they liued ſomewhat Iewiſhly, retaining their old manners and cuſtomes in this new profeſſion. Againe, it is to bee obſerued, that it was all one in that Church and that time (by Ieromes iudgement) to bee in ſuch a Monaſtery, and to bee a Chriſtian: for it appeareth manifeſtly out of him, that all that were turned to the Goſpell, men, women and children, took this yoke upon them as a neceſſary thing ioyned with their profeſſion: for ſo hee ſaith, that as Luke noteth that thoſe which beleeued, in Ieruſalem had all things common, ſo Philo wrote what hee ſaw at Alexandria. And therefore it is unskilfully alledged, to ſettle a degree of perfection in Chriſtianity aboue all others: conſidering that the Chriſtians in thoſe parts commonly uſed this. Laſt of all, theſe men kept their wiues ſtill, which were alſo partakers of their ſtudies, and of their new Titles of healing (with their Philoſophy) the women that were laden with diuers luſts: as their huſbands did healing the men. And thoſe that liued a ſolitary and ſingle life did it not by any conſtraint, but frankly and voluntarily, not for further merite, but in deſire of further knowledge. If wee will beleeue the Ieſuites, it is better and more honourable to haue beene Peters diſciple, then our Sauiour Chriſts: for his Apoſtles which were taught of his own ſacred mouth, could not haue this priuiledge, that the Churches which they builded might haue any preheminence aboue others: but Alexandria, becauſe it was taught of S. Marke, S. Peters Diſciple, muſt needs bee preferred to all other, Rome excepted. Howbeit if it ought ſo to be, how commeth it that the Councell decreed otherwiſe, that Conſtantinople ſhould bee, not the ſecond in dignity unto Rome, but that throughout, it ſhould inioy the ſame priuiledges with it. The councell of Nice maketh not for you, for what dignitie ſoeuer it giueth to Alexandria, it groundeth it upon a cuſtome, and not upon Markes inſtruction. And that cuſtome of the ſuperiority that Alexandria had roſe upon the ſame occaſion that the preheminence of Rome and Conſtantinople did: for euen as it had her ſpeciall priuiledges aboue other like unto thoſe of Rome, becauſe it was the ſeat of the Empire: euen ſo (no doubt) had Alexandria the ſecond place, not becauſe Marke ſate there, but becauſe it had beene the mother Citie of the Grecian Empire. But ſeeing your deſire is to aduance the credite of the Church of Alexandria, wee will help you in bringing to your remembrance *Ierom*s iudgement that there is the ſame merit (which before hee called authority of the Biſhop of Alexandria) that there is of the Biſhop of Rome. Wee hope alſo that the eſtimation you haue of Alexandria will cauſe you to giue the better reſpect to the Councell holden there, which gaue ſo little to the Biſhop of Rome, that it appointed Aſterius a Biſhop in Arabia to haue the ouerſight in the Eaſt Churches, and Euſebius the ouerlooking of the Weſterne. Of the ſtrange tranſlations of the dead bodies, after diuers hundreth yeares, it hath beene once or twice ſpoken, which may ſuffice for all the reſt, conſidering there are but few, which do not eaſily ſmell out theſe fraudes. Linus the Popes authority againſt the Councell of Calcedon, is of no value, which Councell aſſigneth the cauſe of the dignity of the Churches, to haue riſen of the ſeat of the Empire: where the Pope placeth it, in that Marke Peters ſcholler taught there, wherein notwithſtanding hee doth not obſerue his owne rule: for if the dignity of the Churches ſhould depend upon the authority of them that taught in them: Antioche which the Pope ſetteth in order after Alexandria ought to haue beene preferred to it: Conſidering that Peter the Maiſter ſitting in their opinion at Antioche, Marke the ſcholler ſate at Alexandria. Gregory hath nothing of the preheminence of Alexandria (lib.5.epiſt.60. & lib. 6.37.) aboue all other Churches Rome excepted. But writing to the Biſhop of that place, hee ſheweth that there is a neerer bond of loue betweene them two, then others; foraſmuch as they ſucceded the one to the maiſter, and the other to the ſcholer. But of the equality of the Biſhop of Rome with the Biſhop of Alexandria, Gregory in the ſame place leaueth no ſmall marke, when he ſaith, it ſeemeth to him that for Peter the Maiſters ſake, hee ſhould haue the gouernment or preſidentſhip ouer Alexandria: and the Biſhop of Alexandria for Marke the Schollers ſake, ſhould haue the gouernment or preſidentſhip of the Church of Rome: aſcribing to the Biſhop of Alexandria as much intereſt in Rome, as to the Biſhop of Rome in Alexandria. In the other place alſo hee mentioneth Alexandria, but not to that purpoſe as heere hee is alledged. It being onely ſaid, that Peter adorned Verſ. 4. Iohn * was in the deſart baptiſing, and preaching the baptiſme of penance ‡ vnto remiſsion of ſinnes.

Mat. 3. 1. Luk. 3. 4. Iob. 1. 15.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [4. Vnto remiſsion.] Iohns Baptiſme put them in hope onely of remiſſion of ſinnes as a preparatiue to Chriſts Sacrament by which ſinnes were indeede to be remitted. Aug. lib. 5. de bapt. c. 10.

Math. 3.

CART VV. 1. [4. Vnto remiſsion.] The Ieſuites vpon theſe words Into remiſsion of ſins, fooliſhly conclude, that by Iohns Baptiſme the preſent remiſſion of ſinnes was not ſealed, but onely a preparation made to receiue remiſſion of ſinnes by Chriſts baptiſme that ſhould follow. For Iohn affirmeth, that by receiuing his baptiſme duly, they eſcaped the wrath to come; which when it could not be without remiſſion of ſinne, it is euident that thoſe that worthily communicated into Iohns baptiſme, were alſo freed from their ſinnes. And ſeeing they themſelues hold that Iohns baptiſme ſealed repentance: let them anſwer what manner of repentance that can be which is without remiſſion of ſinnes, but either a meere hypocriſie, or elſe an vtter deſpaire and downfall of him that ſo repenteth.

Act. 2. 38.

And where, by theſe words they would conclude this abſurd opinion: let the reader vnderſtand, that the Euangeliſt Luke vſeth the very ſame words in ſpeaking of the baptiſme of Chriſt, which was miniſtred after his aſcenſion. So that if theſe words ſhut forth remiſſion of ſinnes from Iohns miniſtry, they ſhut it alſo from the miniſtery of the Apoſtles.

Touching certaine of the auncient Fathers iudgement in this part, it hath been before ſpoken. And ſeeing Auguſtine groundeth his opinion of that commandement of Paul, that thoſe which were baptiſed with Iohns baptiſme, ſhould be rebaptiſed, (whereof there is not onely not a word in Luke, Act. 19. 3. 4. 5. but the cleane contrary, as ſhall appeare) all men may ſee the feebleneſſe of his opinion in that point, which ſtandeth vpon ſuch grounds.

ANNOTATIONS. CHAP. I.

Confeſſion.

RHEM. 3. [5. Confeſsing their ſinnes.] A certain confeſſion of ſins there was euen in that penance which Iohn preached, and which was made before men were baptized. Whereby it is cleare that Iohn made a preparation to the Sacrament of Penance, which afterward was inſtituted by Chriſt as well as he did by baptizing prepare the way to Chriſtes baptiſme.

Particular confeſſion.

RHEM. [5. Their ſinnes.] He doth not ſay that they confeſſed themſelues to be ſinners, which may be done by a generall confeſſion: but that they confeſſed their ſinnes, which is a particular confeſſion.

CART VV. 3. [5. Confeſsing their ſinnes.] The Ieſuites follow that Law in writing their notes, which they teach the poore people in praying; namely pattering ouer one thing oftentimes. For the 5. 6. 8. 12. are the very ſame which they haue had, in Math. 3. where the reader hath anſwer. Onely in the eight verſe they haue alledged out of S Iohn to proue that a man cannot be ſaued vnleſſe he be baptiſed: for that he muſt be baptiſed with water and the holy Ghoſt. And why did they not alledge out of Math. 3. that he is to be baptiſed with the holy Ghoſt and with fire, whereupon there are which baptiſe with fire at this day. But as Mathew doth ſet forth the power of the holy Ghoſt in the property of fire: ſo doth Iohn in the quality of water. As hereby also may be gathered that many diseases come for sinne, and therefore cannot be healed till the sinnes he remitted.

CARTVV 3. [5 Thy sinnes.] It is but your dreame of your prophane oyle, and of your dead God, which you cary to visite the sick: for you haue not a word in the Text that giueth occasion to moue men to call for the Sacraments: There is occasion giuen to speake of the Minister to bee called for, to comfort the sicke by the doctrine of the remission of sinnes, as our Sauiour Christ doth, and likewise of praying for the sicke that his sinnes may bee forgiuen him, Iam. 5. 14. in steed that our Sauiour Christ said they were forgiuen: And the fruite of both these in a mans sicknesse is notably and at large set forth in Iob: But of calling for the Sacraments in sickenesse the Scripture hath not a word: It was used, or abused rather, of some not euill disposed, in the elder Churches: But as it was against the dignity and honour of the true Sacraments, which being publicke, and the Churches, require a publicke administration, and in the Churches presence: so was the issue of it dangerous, as that which made way to the abhomination and sacriledge of priuate Masses. And it is manifest this to haue beene the iudgement of the ancienter Churches, which marked with some infamy those that were priuate in priuate houses, although it were in the extremity of sickenesse. And in one Councell which hath a proper treatise of visiting the sicke, there is not a word made of ministring the Sacraments. Not onely Many, but All diseases come for sinne: for the iustice of God will not suffer any punishment to come, where sinne hath not first set open the gap for it to enter by. It falleth out sometimes that there are other more principall motiue causes of certaine diseases. In which respect it is said, that neither the blinde borne, nor his parents had sinned, but that it was to shew the glory of God, which forthwith appeared in that our Sauiour restored him to his sight. Howbeit let the Iesuites learne, that sinne is alwaies in some degree a cause of what disease soeuer. The Marginall note here as in the most places are meere Battologies, or loathsome repetitions, arguing that with their great desire of scribbling much there was little strength to performe their desire: Wee passe them by therefore unlesse there be any new.

[10. In earth.] This power that the Sonne of man hath to remit sinnes in earth, was neuer taken from him, but dureth still in the Sacraments, and ministers, by whom he remitteth sinnes in the Church, and not in heauen onely. For concerning sinne, there is one court of conscience in earth, and another in heauen: and the iudgement in heauen followeth and approoueth this on earth: as is plaine by the wordes of our Sauiour to Peter first, and then to all the Apostles. Whatsoeuer you shall bind vpon earth, shall be bound in heauen: Whatsoeuer you shall loose vpon earth, shall be loosed in heauen: whereupon S. Hierome saith, That Priests hauing the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, iudge after a sort before the day of iudgement. And S. Chrysost. lib. 3. Sacerd. paul. post. princip. more at large.

Spiritual kindred and holineſſe preferred before carnall and worldly. The B. Virgin without ſinne Heb. 4. 14.

CARTVV. 7. [33 Who is my mother?] Heere the Ieſuites mate our Sauiour Chriſt with his mother in the proper Garland of his humanity, which is, that in all things he was like unto other men, ſinne onely excepted. And their faces are harder, that they haue gathered this Garland, upon ſuch a place of Scripture, as not onely beareth no ſuch flower, but the cleane contrary: for both ſhee, and others of Chriſts kindred that came with her, are heere ſharpely taxed, for that they did ſo unſeaſonably interrupt him, which Mathew doth manifeſtly cleare, when hee affirmeth that their meſſenger came unto him, Whilſt hee was yet teaching. Againe, it is ſinne not to know that which a man ought, eſpecially being taught by many meanes which the Lord miniſtreth: Now the Virgin Mary was ignorant of that ſhee ought to haue known, touching that that hee would haue certainely waited upon his father and mother, unleſſe hee had beene in his heauenly Fathers buſineſſe; where-

Luk. 2.48. 49. upon, after his Fathers businesse ended, Luke addeth that hee was subiect vnto them, and at their commandement: where also vpon the defence of our Sauiour Christ against his mothers accusation of hauing little compassion of his parents cares and sorrowes that they had borne in that iourney; The Virgine is againe conuicted of sinne, euen as in another place also, where shee hasted the miracle of prouision for wine, and obscured it by admonishing him of the want, as if hee had need of a remembrancer, but the Virgines own confession that hee was her Iesus and Sauiour, which could not bee, unlesse hee saued her from her sinnes, is alone able to cast down this pride which exalteth it selfe against Christ. I passe by the generall testimonies that throw all the whole race of mankind into one masse and lumpe of sinne. And therefore to make the Virgin Mary without sinne, the Iesuites must first settle an other Article of our beliefe, that not onely Christ, but his mother also were conceiued by the holy Ghost: wee might heere use the testimony of these Iesuites themselues if they were of any credite, which in one verse, as it were, with one blast, blow hote and cold: for they exhort by the example of Christ, not to hearken to mother, &c. mouing any thing against our spirituall mother the Church, confessing thereby (as the truth is) that the Virgine requesting a thing against the Church, was duly resisted of our Sauiour Christ, whom wee must follow. It is untrue that Augustine affirmeth the Virgin to bee without sinne: hee saith, that hee will not haue the matter disputed; Howbeit hee seemeth rather to incline to that opinion that shee had sinne: For giuing reason why hee would not haue it disputed of, namely, for that it is a matter without the reach of our knowledge, and for the honour of the Lord, hee saith after this sort; For how doe we know that more grace was bestowed vpon her to ouercome sin in euery sort, which deserued to conceiue and bring forth him, of whom it is out of doubt, that he had no sin. It seemeth therefore that there were some superstitious heads in Augustines times, that affirmed, that the virgin was without sinne: and Augustine shunning that question, as somewhat enuious, did yet giue some inckling of his contrary iudgement that way, which iudgement in another place hee doth clearely and plainly set downe against the Iesuites, for thus he writeth; What (saith he) is more pure then the wombe of that virgin, whose flesh although it came of the propagation and spread of sin, yet did it not so conceiue. And a little after, Wherefore (saith he) the body of Christ, although it were taken from the flesh of a woman, which was conceiued of the spread of sinfull flesh, yet because it is not so conceiued in her, as she was conceiued, it was no sinfull flesh, but the likenesse of sinfull flesh.

RHEM. [12. Lest they should be conuerted.] These speeches here and els where, we must not so vnderstand as though hee spake in parables of purpose and to this end, that the hearers might not vnderstand, lest they should bee conuerted: which were as much to say as that he would not haue them vnderstand, nor bee conuerted: but wee must learne the true sense of this very place in S. Matthew and in the Actes, where our Sauiour and S. Paul speake thus. They haue heard heauily, and haue shut their eyes, lest perhaps they may see, and vnderstand, and be conuerted, and I heale them. Whereby it is euident, that the speaking in parables was not the cause (for many beside the Apostles heard an vnderstood) but themselues would not heare, and vnderstand, and be conuerted: and so were the cause of their own wilfull and obstinate infidelitie. And therefore also hee spake in parables, because they were not worthy to vnderstand, as the other to whom he expounded them.

CARTVV. 1. [11. & 12. Lest they should be conuerted.] It is no disparagement to the iustice of God, that he should purposely speake in parables to this end, that some of the hearers should not vnderstand: For as he had cast them away iustly before the world began; so iustly did he vse the meane whereby he might come to the execution of his counsell. Neither doth hee them any more wrong in hiding from them the knowledge of himselfe, notwithstanding hee speake vnto them; then vnto those to whom purposely and determinatly he neuer vouchsafeth once to open his mouth, whereof there are and haue been infinite numbers in all ages. And where they say that many beside the Apostles heard and vnderstood, it appeareth, that not so much as the Apostles which were lightned, vnderstood the Parables, vntill such time as they were laid open by a plaine exposition of them; & yet this hindereth not, but their own hard heart and heauy eare was the cause why the doctrine deliuered in parables to a good sufficiency of vnderstanding, if it had light upon men of vnderstanding, profited them nothing to the inlightning of them with the knowledge of the truth that was taught in them. Also that they say, that he spake vnto them in parables, because they were not worthy to vnderstand, as the other to whom he expounded them, is a filthy crap of Popery, which assigneth the cause of the knowledge of the mystery of the Gospell to consist in the merit of the hearer, directly contrary to that which our Sauiour saith immediatly before, To you it is giuen to know the CARTVV. 3. [31. Mustard seed] Our Sauiour Christ comparing the Church and the Truth to Mustardseed, for the smalnesse at the first, and greatnesse after, doth (as in other the parables) set forth the estate of the Church, not onely such as it was in Christ his time, but such as it is and shall be in other ages of the Gospell. Neither doth he set forth the estate thereof by comparison of the multitude that should be after his time with the fewnesse that was in his time, but compareth the small beginnings of the Gospell where and whensoeuer the same hath entrance, with the mightie growth thereof in the same place after some continuance in it. And hereof the Churches of the Gospell are cleare and euident proofes, which being not many yeares agoe in the view and iudgement of all men so few as a childe with small Arithmeticke were able to tell, now are as the sandes of the sea for multitude, notwithstanding all the endeuours of the Beast in craft and violence against them, Now whereas the Iesuites would by this parable gather, that the visible face of the Church from our Sauiour Christs time, is alwayes great, they be confuted both by the Apostle, which foretelleth a notable apostasie from the Church; and by our Sauiour Christ, who teacheth that faith will be very rare at his comming; and by their owne iudgement, who affirme, that when their imaginary Antichirst shall come three yeares and a halfe before the last day, the Church shall be maruellously wasted, and that Antichrist shall both attempt and atchieue the desolation of the Church. Chrysost. Tom.2. contra Gentiles in vita S. Babylæ Martyr. hath nothing that giueth any strength in this cause of the Iesuites. Babyla.* Yea S Basill saith; He that toucheth the bone of a martyr, receiueth in some degree holinesse of the grace or vertue that is therein. The touch of Relikes. Basil. in Psal. 115.

CARTVV.2. [28. If I touch.] Can you tell vs whether a shadow be hot or cold, smooth or rough. But you that can taste accidence without substance, it is no maruell though you can touch shadowes: other men haue not their senses so fine, what your Catholicke will say to himselfe, you know better, but a godly and well inſtructed Chriſtian hath no ſuch doting confidence, as to beleeue, that vpon the ouerſhadowing of a Saint, he ſhall be the better for it: conſidering that hee will enquire whether the Saint hath receiued any ſuch calling of God as had our Sauiour Chriſt and his Apoſtles, to do ſuch rare miracles as they did. And if this were not had from the dead bodies of Chriſt and his Apoſtles: he will much leſſe look for it from the dry and rotten bones of their Saints. Chryſoſtom is ſhamefully peruerted of you. For in ſtead that hee ſaith, Their Kings at Conſtantinople eſteeme it a grace, or an honour to haue their bodies buried not onely neere the Apoſtles, but euen without their threſhold. The Ieſuits alledge him, as if they ſhould receiue graces and gifts of the ſpirit from the Sepulchres of the Apoſtles. Whereas it is known, that there is no knowen Citty in the world ſo full of whoredoms and Sodomitrie, as is Rome, where (as they ſay) men do daily viſit the ſepulchre of Peter and Paul. Touching Baſils teſtimony, vnleſſe it be ſalued by an hyperbole, or exceſſiue ſpeech, it ſauoureth ſtrongly of the ſuperſtition of the Gentiles, wch he had been brought vp in, which he held alſo otherwiſe. For in the ſame Pſalme he exhorteth very earneſtly, that the death of the Martyrs and Saints ſhould not in any ſort be lamented, but that all men ioying thereat, they ſhould lament the day of thir birth, which is meere heatheniſh. Dead things are no fit veſſels to receiue the precious liquor of the holy ſpirit, and therefore they cannot communicate to others that which themſelues haue not. For the reſt, when the Saints die, they haue ſerued their ages. And it is the law of nature to ſuffer the dead bodies to be laied vp in peace. For the law of the twelue Tables commandeth, that no man ſhall gather a dead mans bones. Laſt of all, the vſe of the whole Church will eaſily ouerthrow Baſil's authoritie. Sozomen ſheweth how the Chriſtians in Armenia hauing gathered up the reliques of one Acepſie, they burned or buried them. So otherwhere it is ſaid, that they gathered the reliques and buried them, but of worſhipping them there is not a word.

Act. 23.

Cic. 2. de legib.

Lib. 2. cap. 23. lib. 3. 14

Verſe 30 And immediatly IESVS knowing in himſelfe the vertue that had proceeded from him, turning to the multitude, ſaid, who hath touched my garment?

RHEM. 3. [30. Vertue.] Vertue to heale this womans maladie, proceeded from Chriſt, though ſhe touched but his coate: ſo when the Saincts by their Relikes or garments do miracles, the grace and force thereof commeth from our Sauiour, they being but the meanes or inſtruments of the ſame.

CARTVV. 3. [30. Vertue.] This is contrary to the former note out of Baſil, that he which toucheth a Saints bone, receiueth in ſome degree holines of the grace and vertue that is therein: declaring that the holineſſe commeth from the dead bone. It is contrary alſo to that they haue ſaid before, that the vertue of our Sauiour Chriſt came from Chriſt into the hemme of his garment and from his garment vnto the diſeaſed woman.

Verſ. 36. But IESVS hauing heard the word that was ſpoken, ſaith to the Archſynagogue, Feare not: ‖ onely beleeue.

Scripture fondly applied to proue onely faith.

RHEM. 4. [36. Onely beleeue.] It is our common ſpeach, wherein we require one thing ſpecially, though other things alſo be as neceſſary, and more neceſſary. As the Phiſicion to his patient. Onely haue a good hart: when he muſt alſo keepe a diet, and take potions, things more requiſite. So Chriſt in this great infidelitie of the Iewes, required onely that they would beleeue he was able to doe ſuch a cure, ſuch a miracle, and then he did it: otherwiſe it followeth in the next Chapter, He could not doe miracles becauſe of their incredulitie. Again, for this faith he gaue them here and in all like places health of body, which they deſired, and therefore he ſaith not, They faith hath iuſtified thee: but hath made thee ſafe or whole. Againe, this was the fathers faith, which could not iuſtifie the daughter, whereby it is moſt euident, that this Scripture, and the like, are fooliſhly abuſed of the Heretickes to proue that onely faith iuſtifieth.

v. 5.

Plutarch. Thucid.

CARTVV. 36. [Onely beleeue.] Thucidides being asked whether hee or Pericles were better wreſtlers, anſwered that hee could not well tell: for when I giue Pericles the fall, hee with his cunning in perſwading, maketh the ſtanders by beleeue that hee had no fall: The Papiſts are by this ſentence caſt flat vpon the ground; but the Ieſuites riſe vp, and would with a gloſſe or two make men beleeue that they were not ouerthrown, by the arme and ſtrength of this ſaying of Chriſt, where to obtaine the things needfull for us, faith onely is required. But they be firſt euill Periclesſes, and then the ſtanders by are not ſo ſimple as to ſuffer thmſelues to bee carried away with euery deceitfull and colurable word, Therefore they muſt underſtand that they haue falſely placed the faith that is heere required, in a bare perſwaſion that Chriſt was able to heale the child: for our Sauiour Chriſt requireth alſo of him, that ſeeing hee had undertaken to heale him, hee ſhould beleeue that hee bare him the goodwill, that hee would doe it for him; ſo that hee requireth alſo a perſwaſion of his grace and fauour towards him. Now for the firſt reaſon fetched out of the unproper and vulgar ſpeech: Firſt, wee anſwer, hee ſhould bee as unskilfull a Phyſition of the body, as you are of the ſoule, if his patient, marring himſelfe by miſ-diet, hee ſhould ſay onely haue a good heart: and if ordering himſelfe well in his ſickeneſſe, hee faile onely in faint-heartedneſſe, what ſhould he elſe aſke for at his hand, but a good heart? And to this Iairus (as it came to paſſe) beleeuing, if our S. Chriſt had ſaid, there is yet ſomthing wanting vnto thee for the obtaining of thy daughters health: who ſeeth not but that this ſpeech had tended to the diſcredit of our Sauiour Chriſt, and had giuen an uncurable wound. And if ſo bee the holy Ghoſt ſhould ſpeake ſo once, yet ſpeaking of the ſame matter oftentimes, as in Paules Epiſtles. it is yet to bee eſteemed that in one of thoſe places, hee would ſpeake properly, eſpecially in ſo weighty a cauſe, for as often as the Scripture ſaith, that wee are iuſtified by faith and not by workes: ſo often it ſhall appeare that thoſe words are of the ſame weight with theſe, beleeue onely.

It is alſo not to bee paſſed ouer that the Ieſuites do heere ſay, that Chriſt could do no miracles without the faith of the petitioners, in the ſame ſignification of that they ſay: Chriſt required of Iairus that hee ſhould onely beleeue that hee was able to do that miracle, But heere they ſpeak abſolutely of his power: It followeth therefore that in this allegation and expoſition of faith and infidelity, they do likewiſe, and conſequently they ſhorten and ſhrinke up the arme of God, which confound his abſolute power, with that power that his diſpenſation of miniſtery would ſuffer him to ſhew forth, which is that the Euangeliſt meant in the place which they quote, Mark. 6. 5. At the leaſt theſe things ought not thus confuſedly to haue beene turned up: And yet in the ſecond ſignification of his power by diſpenſation. It is alſo falſe that he could do no miracles, without the faith of them that receiued benefit: For the Euangeliſt declareth that his pitty and compaſſion, getting the maiſtery of their infidelity, healed certaine that languiſhed, which being done in a word and in a moment, was aboue the courſe of nature, and therefore miraculous. Your ſecond reaſon, that by this faith they obtained but health of the body, and that therefore it is not the iuſtifying faith, is unſound: For if by healing the corporall diſeaſes, there is ſealed up unto us that our Sauiour Chriſt is the deliuerer of us from our ſinnes (as the Scripture teſtifieth) and as your next note affirmeth, then it followeth that in beleeuing the mercy of God towards the healing of our diſeaſes, wee forthwith conceiue that hee forgiueth us our ſinnes, which are the cauſes of our maladies. You might alſo haue remembred that Abraham was iuſtified for that hee beleeued, that (according to the promiſe of God, contrary to the voice of nature, both in reſpect of himſelfe and his wife) hee ſhould haue a ſeed, whereas yet hee could not haue beene iuſtified, unleſſe hee had, upon this promiſe, conceiued further kindneſſe and loue of God towards him, then to the making him a father of many people. The Writer to the Hebrewes ſheweth in diuers examples, that by iuſtifying faith ſome ſubdued kingdomes, otherſome ſtopt the mouthes of Lyons, certaine quenched the force of fire, others eſcaped the edge of the ſword, other through faith had their dead raiſed, &c. All which things, although they bee temporall, yet were they atchieued by the iuſtifying faith, which is the hand of the people of God to receiue their good by. And therefore it is unaduiſedly concluded, that the iuſtifying faith is not heare meant, becauſe by it was giuen health of the body. Your laſt reaſon that it was the fathers faith which was not able to ſaue the daughter, might well haue been ſpared: For wee affirme not that the fathers faith iuſtifieth the daughter, but iuſtifying himſelfe it obtaineth all things conuenient either for him or his. And it maketh againſt you: for if faith onely of the father obtaineth good things for his daughter, how much more ſhall hee obtaine thereby things neceſſary for himſelfe. This therefore, and ſuch like places, are not fooliſhly abuſed of us to proue that onely faith iuſtifieth, but they are childiſhly and babiſhly deluded by you.

RHEM. 5. [41. Wench ariſe.] Chriſts miracles, beſides that they be wonders, and wayes to ſhew his power, be alſo ſignificatiue: as theſe which be corporally raiſed from death, put vs in mind of his raiſing our ſoules from ſin. The Scripture maketh ſpeciall mention onely of three: raiſed by our Sauiour of which three, this wench is one, within the houſe: an other, the widdowes ſon in Naim now caried out toward the graue: the third, Lazarus hauing been in the graue foure dayes, and therefore ſtinking, which diuerſitie of dead bodies, ſignifie diuerſitie of dead ſoules, ſome more deſperate then other, ſome paſt of all mans hope, and yet by the grace of Chriſt to be reuiued and reclaimed.

Verſ. 17 FOR the ſaid Herod ſent and apprehended Iohn, and bound him in priſon for Herodias the wife of ‡Phillip his brother beeauſe hee had married her.

MARGINALL NOTE.

RHEM. 1. [17. Philippe his brother] He might and ſhould by Moyſes law haue married his brothers wife, if he had been dead without iſſue, but this Philip was yet aliue, and had alſo this daughter that daunced.

CARTVV. 1. This is after anſwered in the 12 of Marke, v. 19.

Verſ. 3. Is not this the Carpenter the ſonne of MARY, the brother of Iames and Ioſeph and Iude and Simon? why, are not alſo his ſiſters heere with us? and they were ſcandalized in him.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 3. [3. The carpenter.] As his countrie-folkes ſeeing him not onely to be a poore man, but alſo knowing (as they thought) his whole parentage to be but vulgar, not reaching to his Godhead and diuine generation, did take offence or ſcandale of him: ſo do the Hereticks take like offence at his perſon in the B. Sacrament, ſaying, why this is not God: for it is bread made of corne by ſuch a baker, of the ſame mould that ſuch a loſe is: not marking that it was not made Chriſt by baking, but by Conſecration, and the vertue of Chriſts words.

CARTVV. 1. [The Carpenter.] If your Knight of the box could giue us ſuch experiments either of his wiſedome, or of his power, as theſe prophane men are with their own mouthes conſtrained to confeſſe to haue been in our Sauiour Chriſt, then were your charge iuſt againſt us, otherwiſe they bee but words which periſh in the aire.

RHEM. 2. [3. They were ſcandalized.] This ſcandall roſe partly of enuie of his equalls by birth;

Chryſoſt. hom. 49. in Math. birth, who reputing themſelues as good as he, tooke ſcorne to be taught of him, whereupon Chriſt ſaith, A Prophet is not without honour but in his own countrie: ſignifying (as it is plain in Luke) the malice and enuie of the Iewes his countrie men in refuſing him (Io. 1.) and that the Gentiles would more eſteeme of him.

Luke 4. 15. CARTVV. 2. [3. They were ſcandalized.] Although it be true, that the Gentiles did more eſteeme him then the Iewes, yet Luke 4. 15, compareth not the Iewes with the Gentiles, nor Iury with other Countries, but compareth Nazareth and the confines thereof with other places of Iury, eſpecially with the reſt of Galilee, where hee was greatly followed, and from whence hee had gathered the moſt of his Church?

Verſ. 5. And | hee could not doe any miracle there, but onely cured a few that were ſicke, impoſing his hands.

RHEM. 3. [5 He could not.] It is ſaid that he could not worke miracles there, not meaning that he was not able, but that on their part there wanted apt diſpoſition to receiue them. And therfore he would not of congruitie worke there, where their incredulitie was ſo great, that it would not haue profited them. And for this cauſe he ſaith *els where to them that will ſee and enioy his miracles, Only beleeue.

Mar. 5. 36. Math. 10. CARTVV. 3. [5 Hee could not.] To ſpeake in your Babiloniſh language, do you thinke that for not beleeuing in the Sonne of God (which is to make God a lyer as much as men may) a man deſerueth the depriuation of Gods grace, onely in congruity? Looke once againe on your bookes, and you ſhall finde that hee receiueth that iudgement condignely. And yet if you eſteeme, that therefore hee that beleeueth receiueth grace in congruity, the matter turneth not ſo round as you ſuppoſe, conſidering that the infidelity is ours and perfectly impious; whereas beſide that faith is the gift of God, it is alſo maymed and unperfect.

1. Ioh. 5. 10

Verſ. 9. But ſhod with ſandals, and that they ſhould not put on | two coates.

RHEM. 4. [9. Not two coates.] He forbiddeth ſuperfluities, and too carefull prouiſion of bodily things, when they are about Gods ſeruice in gaining ſoules. And for the contrarie that ſeemeth here and in S. Matthew, vnderſtand that there he forbiddeth them to carrie rod or ſtaffe to defend themſelues, here he permitteth a walking rod or ſtaffe to leane and ſtay vpon: there he forbiddeth ſhooes to couer all the foote, ſuch as we weare: here he permitteth ſcandals, that is ſuch as had ſoles onely which the poore commonly ware in Iewry and now ſome religious men. See S. Auguſt. opinion. li. 2. c. 30. de conſenſu Euang. to. 4

ANSVV. 4. [9. Well might the Ieſuits if the god of this world had not blinded their eyes, haue paſſed ouer this in ſilence, who as all men ſee, ſwim in all ſuperfluity of bodily things, as is too euident in their Lordly proud Prelacy, mating in outward pompe and glory, the mighty Princes of the world. And in their ſeruice of God being attired like ſtage-players with veluets, ſilke, and ſatten, and cloth of gold, and fine linnen, as in their copes, veſtiments, myters, ſurplices, and other trinkets, not fitting indeed the ſeruice of God, but their Idolatrous Maſſe. And as theſe are contrary to the Apoſtles ſimplicity and humility: ſo the baſe bare-foot Friers are leſſe then Apes to the Apoſtles in this their ſpeciall commiſſion; Auguſtine fauouring them not a iot, they being wholly vnknown unto him, hauing crept out of the bottomleſſe pit almoſt a thouſand yeares after his death, but ſee the high baſeneſſe of Popery.

Iam. 5. 14. Verſe 13 And they caſt out many diuels, and * annoynted | with oyle ‡ many ſick, and healed them.

RHEM. 5. [13. Oile many ſicke.] A preparatiue to the Sacrament of extreme vnction. Iac. 5.

RHEM. [13. With oyle.] In the wordes of the commiſſion oyle is not mentioned, and yet it is certain by this their vſing of oyle, that either Chriſt did then appoint them to vſe it, or they might take it vp of themſelues, by vertue of the generall commiſſion.

2. Cor. 11. CARTVV. 5. [13. With oyle.] It is true of all the Apoſtles, which Paul ſpeaketh of himſelfe, that that which they deliuered to the Churches, that they receiued of our Sauiour Chriſt. Seeing then, that the Apoſtles generally by practiſe, and Iames particularly by commandement, deliuered oyle unto the Churches; it is manifeſt that they had receiued the ſame in Commiſſion from Chriſt. And it is all one in the Apoſtolicke miniſtery, to ſay Chriſt commanded, and to ſay the Apoſtles did it: their doing in obedience neceſſarily inferring his authority and commiſſion. Wherefore Marke in the execution ſupplieth that which before he had omitted in the commiſſion, following therein his purpoſed and accuſtomed ſhortneſſe aboue all other the Euangeliſts; where you note in the margent, that this annoynting of the ſicke by the Apoſtles, was a preparatiue to extreme vnction, mentioned in S. Iames. How a Preparatiue, when it is the ſame thing that is commanded by Saint Iames, which was enioyned by the Apoſtles? And if you haue any ſuch oyle wherewith the ſicke doth certainly recouer health; poure it on hardly, hold it not backe. But our ſinnes and our vnthankfulneſſe haue withered the Oline tree, whereon this oyle grew many hundred yeares agoe, whereof although you pretend to haue a griffe, yet is your oyle no oyle of the ſanctuary, but prophane, and that whereinto the flies of your braine haue blowen, which marreth the whole boxe of oyntment. For when the Prieſt commeth with his Tar-boxe to anneale the ſick; as if he had an vnluckie hand, they very ſeldome ſcape that haue that plaiſter applied vnto them. And therefore it is none of S. Iames oyle, which hath the promiſe of healing the body. The effect therefore of healing being taken away; the cauſe, which is the annoynting, muſt needs ceaſe, vnleſſe you bee able to ſhew ſomr other effect out of Iames, which was cauſed by the oyle hee ſpeaketh of, which wee are ſure you cannot do out of the text, without your owne enterlining. We paſſe by that yours hath ſo many drugs to the confection of it, where the ſcripture maketh mention onely of oyle. Neither will we ſtand vpon your euill husbandry in your owne cauſe; which by chooſing that the Apoſtles tooke their oyle at their diſcretion, rather then by commiſſion from Chriſt, haue loſt the benefit of his conſecration of oyle, which otherwiſe you might as well haue grounded here, as you do many other your phanſies otherwhere.

RHEM. 6. [13. With oyle.] By this it is cleere that not onely the Apoſtles or other may haue power to worke miracles, by their onely worde and inuocation of Chriſts name, but alſo by application of creatures: which creatures alſo haue a miraculous medicinall vertue to heale diſeaſes.

CARTVV. 6. [13. With oyle.] Your words ſeeme to ſeuer the things which God hath ioyned. For by inuocation of the name of Chriſt, and by the vſe of creatures ſometimes ioyntly, they did miracles that were called thereto, and neuer by the creatures onely. And although oyle haue an vſe in many medicines, yet there was no ſtrength in the creature to heale a man ſuddenly of what diſeaſe ſoeuer he had, no more then there was in the clay applied to the blinde mans eyes, liker in the iudgement of reaſon to make them blinder then to open them; but the vertue commeth immediatly from Chriſt, who vſeth theſe weake meanes, partly to exerciſe the faith of ſome, who in common iudgement would iudge it ridiculous to receiue health by ſo baſe meanes, partly to ſupport the weak faith of otherſome, which eſteeme that ſo great things cannot be done without ſome outward means, as appeareth in the example of Naaman, that thought he could not be healed without the putting on of the Prophets hand vpon the ſore. Alſo of the Shunamite, who thought it not poſſible for the Prophet to raiſe vp her dead ſonne, vnleſſe he were preſent with him. And belike for this miraculous vertue, which is (as they ſay) in this creature, they haue mounted it into the place of Chriſts bloud. For where the Scripture teacheth, that Gods mercy, through Chriſts bloud, doth away our ſins, they pray that through this oyle (which ſauing reuerence to the Reader, is euill enough to put vpon bootes) and through the tender mercies of God, there may be forgiuen whatſoeuer the ſicke hath ſinned by any of his ſenſes. 2. King. 5. In their Maſſe booke.

RHEM. 1. [2. Common.] Common and vncleane is all one. For the Iewes were commanded by the Lawe to eate certaine kindes of meates onely, and not all indifferently: and becauſe theſe were ſeparated from other meates, and as it were ſanctified to their vſe, they called the other common and prophane: and becauſe the Law calleth thoſe cleane and theſe vncleane, thereof it is, that vncleane and common is all one, as in this chapter often, and Act. 10.

CARTVV. 5. [33. Spitting.] Where Theophilact ſaith it healed the man, it can haue no other underſtanding, but that the power which came from our Sauiour Chriſt healed him, the ſpittle being a meane which it pleaſed the Lord to uſe at that time, Exorciſmes and other ceremonies in Baptiſme.

RHEM. 6. [34. Ephphetha.] The Church doeth moſt godly imitate and vſe theſe very words and ceremonies of our Sauiour in the Exorciſmes before Baptiſme, to the healing of their ſoules that are to be baptized, as Chriſt healed the bodily infirmitie and the diſeaſe of the ſoule together Ambroſ li. 1. de Sacram. c. 1.

CARTVV. [34 Ephphatha.] Hee ſhould bee but a ſory ſeruant, that vnder a cloke of loning his maiſter, would do whatſoeuer hee ſeeth his maiſter do before him, to bee ſet at the Table and at the higher end of it as ſoone as hee, to eate and drinke of the beſt with him, to lie in bed untill eight of the cloke becauſe his Maiſter doth ſo, &c. and doth not rather attend what his Maiſter commandeth him to do. Such ſeruants are the Papiſts: for examples of our Sauiour Chriſts doings (whoſe imitation is not warranted unto us by any commandement out of the Scriptures) bee more their direction then his commandements. And therefore abſurdly that which our Sauiour Chriſt did to one man, they will do to all, yea to yong children, whom they hold not to bee of the Church before they be baptized: that hee did extraordinarily, they make ordinary, that hee did in healing the body, they will do in healing the ſoule; preferring their filthy ſpittle (which they make the meanes of curing the ſoule) unto our Sauiour Chriſts ſpittle, who applyed his onely to the cure of the body. So becauſe they loue whipping, they are worthy to bee double whipped, as well for that they follow unbidden, as that under pretence of following they go before our Sauiour Chriſt. Neither is there any cauſe why they may not by the ſame ground they bring in ſpittle into baptiſme, to put in the babes mouthes, bring in alſo to annoint his eyes, conſidering that that was alſo vſed of our Sauiour to reſtore the blind. Auant therfore with this prophane, and oftentimes euil ſauory ſpittle, as that which is fitter for the Spittle, then for the Church. Ambroſe onely affirmeth, that when the Church met for the adminiſtration of Baptiſme, they were all by the word Ephphatha admoniſhed to open their eares and their mindes to take heed to that which was asked them, and to that which they themſelues anſwered: which to what ſteed it ſerueth you, let all men iudge: eſpecially conſidering that in the ſame place Ambroſe teacheth the Church what that Syriacke word ſignifieth in their own language, unleſſe peraduenture it help you that the Church of Millain hauing but one ſtrange word had the ſame expounded unto them, whereas all being in a ſtrange tongue with you, there is not ſo much as a word interpreted unto the people.

RHEM. 1. [22. Touch him.] Our Sauiour vſed to worke much by touching: that we may learne not to contemne the corporall and externall application of holy things, not to chalenge by the ſpirit and faith onely, as Heretickes do.

CARTVV. 1. [22 Touch him.] Such outward things as the Lord hath ordained (as the holy ſacraments) we moſt willingly embrace; the other outward things we are willingly without, becauſe we cannot be without our Sauiour, whom it appeareth that the multitude of ceremonies draue out of Iewry unto the borders and confines of the Gentiles.

Verse 7 And they had a few little fishes: and he ‖ blessed them, and commanded them to be set before them.

RHEM. 3. [7. Blessed them.] So is it in some ancient Greeke copies, agreeable to our Latin and in S. Luk. expressly in the common Greeke text, that he blessed the fiue loaues and the two fishes: which must be alwaies marked against the heretickes, which deny this blessing to pertain to the creatures, but feine it alwayes to be referred to God for thankesgiuing. For if it were so, he would haue said grace but once for that whole refection: but he did seuerally blesse both the bread first, & afterward the fishes also, multiplying them (by his blessing (as he did mankind & other creatures in the beginning by blessing them) and so working effectually some change or alteration in the very creatures themselues.

Vers. 35. For he that will saue his life, shall loose it: and hee that shall loose his life for me and the Gospell, shall saue it.

RHEM. 4. [35. For me and the Gospell.] By the Gospell is signified not onely the foure Euangelists, but all Scriptures, and whatsoeuer Christ said that is not in Scripture: for he saith in this very place, He that shall be ashamed of my wordes, the Sonne of man will be ashamed of him, &c. Neither his own words onely, but whatsoeuer the Apostles taught in word or writing: for our Sauiour saith, He that despiseth you despiseth me. For defence of any of all these, and of euery Article of the Catholike faith, we ought to die, and this is to loose our life for Christ and his Gospel.

What is to suffer for the Gospell.

Luk. 9.

CARTVV. 4. [35. For me and the Gospell.] If the Scripture keepe silence of the words of our Sauiour Christ, who shall dare to be so bold as to open his mouth of them? If the Lords Secretaries the Apostles and Euangelists thought good to keepe them secret, who shall bee so hardy to breake up their closets, to discouer them, and to vnseale that which they sealed? or who is hee that will receiue them for Christs, that are not vnderwritten by his publick notaries? Vnder the law, if any matter were to be decided or to be enquired into, the people of God were sent vnto the Law and the Prophets, as vnto competent Iudges. And our Sauiour Christ declareth that Moses (that is the direction of the Law) and the Prophets were able to keepe them from damnation; Now if the old Testament was of force to end all controuersies, and to keepe men from the wrath of God, we hauing a noble encrease of the new Testament, whereby the darker places of the old testament are cleered, either in that they are fulfilled, or in that they are oftentimes expounded; his case must needs be desperate that refuseth the Scripture for a competent and sufficient Iudge: And his saluation must of necessity be forlorne, that in searching the Scriptures esteemeth not to haue life euerlasting in them; and although our Sauiour Christ spake moe words then are written, according as he hauing occasion to speake of one thing diuers times, varied his words and form of speech, yet is there no thing necessary for vs, the effect whereof his faithfull registers haue not entred into the records of the Scripture. And if the Apostles and Euangelists which knew the words spoken by him most assuredly, should leaue any matter wherein the Church is interressed to their report that knew it not so well as they did: they should evill haue acquited themselues of that trust that was put in them: and this abridgement of the word (of set purpose) the Church vnder the law by the direction of the spirit of God, doth teach: where Hosea, Esay and Ieremie preaching diligently some for the space of forty yeares, and some for longer time, haue all their Sermons contracted and couched so summarily as they be red ouer in a few houres, yet were they neuer sent for decision of controuersies, but to that which was written. Last of all, the Gospell of God, and the word of God are heere taken for one and the same; but the Apostle describing the Gospell, bounderh it in the holy Scriptures. Wherefore by the word of Christ in this place cannot bee vnderstood any thing but that which is contained in the Scriptures.

*Mat.*17.19. CARTVV.5. [38. In thy name.] That Heretickes may worke Miracles for confirmation of their errors, hath been shewed, That they can do miracles for the confirmation of the truth, hath proofe first insufficient, in that it groundeth a generall rule upon one bare example, and that not taken from the Scripture; and then false in that it is vntrue, that Iulian was then an hereticke, when he is supposed to haue done this miracle. For Theodoret declareth that this was done by him, when he was not yet come to the Empire, where his falling from the Gospell was after he had gotten the Scepter. And sheweth further, that at that time he carried himselfe couertly, but that after hee laid himselfe open. And the very manner of the supposed miracle by a crosse wherewith he crossed himselfe, declaring that he then behaued himselfe as other Christians: might of it selfe haue admonished the Iesuites of their error. Beside that it could be no miracle done by him, when hee had no purpose to do any. For when the diuels ran away from him at the sight of the Crosse, he marualled at the thing, as that which was more then he looked for. Now that the diuels ran away at the sight of the crosse set onely in the forehead, which dare assault the best Christians, and CHRIST himselfe, which haue on the compleat harnesse of spirit, they did it craftily, thereby to establish the superstition of the crosse, as in warre one enemy will fly before another, and giue ground, to the end that afterward he may come vpon him with greater aduantage. CART VV. 2. In neither whereof any impediment of our part, can make voide the faith and truth of God, but that with the bucket of faith the beleeuer may draw what water ſoeuer is fit. Otherwiſe wee ſhould alway bee as dry and as barren as the wilderneſſe, if the dew of his grace ſhould not fall upon us, untill wee had remoued all impedements for which hee might in iuſtice with-hold it.

Verſe 26. ‡ If ſo be that you will not forgiue, neither will your father that is in heauen, forgiue you your ſinnes.

RHEM. 3. [26. If ſo be that.] God neuer forgiueth ſinnes to him that pardoneth not his enemies from his heart. Whereby it is euident that more is required then onely faith.

CART VV. 3. [26 If ſo be that.] The forgiuing of our enemies commeth from faith, as the effect from the cause: And therefore when our Sauiour Christ had shewed that the brother

Luk. 17. 4. that hath offended us must bee forgiuen of us, seuen (that is infinite) times: the Apostles forthwith pray our Sauiour Christ that hee would increase their faith, noting that to bee the fountaine of forgiuenesse. Neither can it bee, but that if hee haue a full perswasion that God hath forgiuen him his 10000 talents, the loue of God must needs constraine him to forgiue his neighbour the hundreth pence which hee oweth him. It is therefore vnlearnedly concluded that the forgiuing of our enemies is necessary to iustification, becausе it cannot bee seuered from a man that Math. 18. is iustified: where on the contrary part, it being the effect of a iust man, as comming after, can not bee any cause of his iustification.

Verse 16. And he suffered not that any man should carry a ‖ vessell thorow the temple.

Verse 33. And that he be loued from the whole heart, and with the whole vnderstanding, and with the whole soule, and with the whole strength: and ‡ to loue his neighbour as himselfe is a greater thing then all holocaustes and sacrifices.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [33 To loue his.] This excellency of charity teacheth vs that faith onely is not sufficient.

CARTVV. 1 (33. To loue his.) Great excellency of charity (no doubt) to bee better then all legall sacrifices separated from faith and true repentance: for of such sacrifices must this place bee vnderstood, becausе if they were offered with faith in the sonne of God, and an earnest sorrow for sinne, they were offered also in loue, and therefore could not bee inferiour to loue. And the same may bee said of the least vertue in Christianity, that it is better then all legall sacrifices, euen then, when they were in vse. This place therefore was not so well chosen to commend the excellency of charity. But how excellent so euer charity is, it nothing derogateth from faith, but setteth it
Gal. 5. 6. 1. Tim. 1. 5. up so much the higher, for being the daughter of faith, her commendation returneth to the praise of her mother.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 17. And IESVS answering, sayd to them, Render therefore the things that are Cesars, to Cesar: and that are Gods, ‖ to God. And they marueiled at him.

God first to be serued, and then the Prince. RHEM. 2. [17 To God.] These men were very circumspect and wary to doe all duties to Cæsar, but of their duety to God they had no regard. So heretickes to flatter temporall Princes, and by them to vpholde their heresies, do not onely inculcate mens duetie to the Prince, dissembling that which is due to God: but also giue to the Prince more then due, and take from God his right and duety. But Christ allowing Cæsar his right, warneth them also of their duety toward God. And that is it which Catholiks inculcate, Obey God, do as he commandeth, Serue him first, and then the Prince.

CARTVV. 2. (17 To God.) If any flatter Princes and conceale their duties to God and to to their ſubiects, hee ſhall beare the condemnation. This wee know well that the Goſpell which wee preach, profeſſeth no ſuch thing, but contrariwiſe that all eſtates, from the higheſt to the loweſt, are (without exception of perſons) to bee admoniſhed of their moſt humble ſeruice towards God, and of their mutuall duties one toward another. But you leade your Princes priſoners in the ſtring of a vaine and ſuperſtitious feare of the Popes ſtrengthleſſe curſe, that they dare do nothing vntill they know what your good pleaſure is, wee are not ſo dutileſſe to endeuour any ſuch thing, and our Princes bee wiſer then to ſtand in awe of ſuch fray-bugges.

Verſe 19. * Moyſes wrote vnto vs, that if any mans brother die, and leaue his wife, and leaue no children, his brother ſhall take his wife and raiſe vp ſeed to his brother. Acts 25. 6. Deut. 24. 5.

RHEM. 3. [19 His brother ſhall take.] Marke well here, that the Law which ſayth, Thou ſhalt not marry thy brothers wife, is not ſuch as admitteth no diſpenſation, as though this marriage were againſt nature. For here the ſame Law ſayth, that in ſome caſe, the brother not onely might but then was bound to marry his brothers wife. Marrying the brothers wife.

CARTVV. 3. [19 His brother ſhall take.] It muſt needs bee a law of nature, for the breach whereof the heathen men Canaanites and Egyptians are both accuſed and puniſhed of the Lord: For in that it is ſaid that the Canaanites were ſpued out of the Land for ſuch ſinnes, it is euident that the abſtinence & flight from theſe ſins remained vnblotted out of the conſciences of the corrupt race of Adam vntill ſuch time as they through a floud and cuſtome of ſinne had waſhed it away: For whoſoeuer ſinneth without the written Law ſhall bee iudged by the law ingrauen in his own conſcience. Seeing therefore the heathen that had no written law of God, were ſpued out of their naturall Country for marrying the brothers wife; it followeth that to marry her is againſt the law of nature. And the Ieſuites exception of one brother raiſing vp ſeed vnto another by the commandement of the Law, is very trifling. For they may as well ſay, that it is not againſt the law of nature for a man to marry his own ſiſter, becauſe that God in the beginning of the world permitted that they might inter-marry. But theſe Paraſites care not how many ſoules neckes they breake to procure the Pope the ſame priuiledge of diſpenſing with the Lawes of God, which the Lord himſelfe hath: whereunto commeth the iudgement of the Councell, and others, that decree that the woman which marrieth brethren ſhall bee excommunicate. *Lev. 18. 24. Verſe 24. And IESVS anſwering ſaid to them, Do ye not therefore erre, I not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God?

RHEM. 4. [24. Not knowing the Scriptures.] * Who would haue thought that by this place of Scripture alledged by Chriſt, the Reſurrection were prooued? and yet we ſee that Chriſt doth hereby deduce it, and chargeth theſe great Doctours and Maiſters (which arrogated to themſelues the knowledge of Scriptures) that it is their ignorance, that they knew not ſo to deduce it. No marueil then if the holy Doctors and Catholike Church make the like deductions ſometime, and proofs where the heretike doth not or will not ſee ſo much, therefore no doubt, becauſe he knoweth not the Scriptures whereof he boaſteth ſo much, nor the ſenſe of the Holy Ghoſt in them. For example when of that place, It ſhall not be forgiuen in this world nor in the world to come, ancient Fathers deduced that there are ſinnes remitted after this life in Purgatorie. See S. Mat. 12. 32. * Many truths deduced out of Scripture, which heretikes ſee not.

CARTVV. 4. [24 Not knowing the Scriptures.] Such blind Phariſees as you, would not haue thought it, vnleſſe our Sauiour Chriſt had ſo deliuered it, becauſe as they were, ſo are you ignorant of the Scriptures, which is a perfect remedy againſt all errours: So that no man (by our Sauiour Chriſts argument) can bee intangled with errour through ignorance of vnwritten Verities, of Decrees and Decretals, of Canons and Councels, prouided alwaies that hee follow the direction of the Scripture. For touching that of the power of God, which is added, it is no other then that which is contained and taught in the Scripture. Now that you ſee ſo farre, and wee ſo neere at hand, and that (as wee may ſay) you ſhould haue the Eagles eyes, and wee the Iayes eyes, wee can ſee nothing but your own conceit. When wee were in England together and yoked in diſputation with you in the Vniuerſities and otherwhere, you never diuided any ſpoiles after your conflicts, but you were ſo beaten, as it were, before your own dores, or (to keepe the prouerb with truth, as the times were then) vpon your own dunghill, that you durſt neuer but vpon preſſing conſtraint come into thoſe liſts. As for your Purgatory duduction, it hath anſwer before, upon Math. 12. 32.

RHEM. 5. [24 The power of God.] Euen ſo do heretickes erre two wayes: becauſe they know not the Scriptures, which thy interpret contrary to the ſenſe of the whole Church and of all the ancient Fathers: and becauſe thy know not the power of God, that as he is able to raiſe the ſelfe ſame bodies againe, ſo he can make his body preſent in many places: but being altogether faithleſſe and not beleeuing his power, they diſpute of all ſuch matters onely by reaſon and their own imaginations. Heretikes ignorant and without faith

CARTVV. 5. [24 The power of God.] If your ſelues had but one eye to ſee with, it might happily bee ſome diſgrace vnto us ſo often to bee called blinde of you: but ſeeing you are ſo beetle blind, eſpecially in the Scriptures, wee take the reproach of ignorance from you, as ſome teſtimony of our abilitie that way. And the world will beare vs witneſſe that in the matter of the Supper, wee interpret the Sacramentall ſpeeches, by ſpeeches in the ſame kinde. And as for all the ancient Fathers they beare vs company with ſo great conſent, and ſo full and ſtrong a voice, as if it were the voice of many waters, that vnleſſe you were deafe (as you are blinde) you could not but heare them ſpeake in the ſame language of the Supper that wee doe. And as for the power of God, it helpeth not the weakneſſe of your idoll, vnleſſe as (as our Sauiour doth) you ioyne his reuealed will in the Scriptures, with his power: for hee chargeth them not with the ignorance of all manner of Gods power, but of that power which is reuealed. And the power of God which ſhall be ſhewed in the reſurrection, hath more coherence and and proportion with the power which wee teach in the Sacrament, then that which you forge. For as in the reſurrection of the bodies, there is the ſame matter of the corruptible and incorruptible body: ſo wee teach that there remaineth the ſame matter of bread after conſecration which was before. And as by the power of God in the reſurrection of the body, it taketh another quality of being heauenly that was earthly before; and of being ſpirituall which was naturall before: euen ſo by the omnipotent power of God, the bread which was before earthly, is now become heauenly, and that which (by nature) ſerueth onely for the nouriſhment of the body, is become by the ſame power an effectuall and powerfull inſtrument of nouriſhing the ſpirit of the faithfull.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 3. [4. When ſhall theſe things be.] The miſeries which did fall before the deſtruction of the Temple and cittie of Ieruſalem, were a reſemblance of the extreme calamitie that ſhall befall before the latter day at the time of Antichriſt: whereupon Chriſt ſpeaketh indifferently of both.

[14 The abomination of deſolation.] No hereſie doth ſo properly and purpoſely tend to this abomination of deſolation *which by Antichriſt ſhall be atchieued, as this Caluiniſme: which taketh away with other Sacraments and externall worſhip of God, the very ſacrifice of Chriſts body and bloud, which being taken away (as S. Cyprian * ſaith) no religion can remain.

[14. The abhomination of deſolation] This is anſwered before, vpon Math. 24. 15. whereunto Cyprian is here added, whom they haue falſified. For hee ſaith not that it ſhall ceaſe, but that certaine diſciples (expounding the words of our Sauiour as the Papiſts doe) groſſely feared, that if our Sauiour Chriſts fleſh being diuided and parted, would not ſuffice for the feeding of the world, his fleſh being conſumed, religion would fall. But ſaith Cyprian, this carnall vnderſtanding reacheth not to the meaning of Chriſt.

And so it is no generall commandement to all men.

CARTVV. This is answered in Section 6. of this chapter.

Verse 66. And when Peter was in the court beneath, there commeth one of the woman seruants of the high Priest.

RHEM. 3. [66 Woman-seruants.] He feareth not afterward Rome the Lady of the world, that in the house of Caiphas was afraid of the high Priests wench. Leo in Natiu. P. 1. and Pas. ser. 1.

CARTVV. 3. That Peter was at Rome is but your Apocryphall coniecture: And this his weaknesse at the wenches speeches did discouer what the strongest are in themselues, as his courage and constancy afterward, shewed what weake ones are in the strength of Christ.

Vers. 4. But there were certaine that had indignation within them-selues, and said, Whereto is this waste of the oynment made?

Cost religiously bestowed vpon Christ and his Church.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 4. [4 This waste.] Religious offices done to Christ for signification, deuotion, or honour sake, both then in his life, and now in the Holy Sacrament, be of some (vnder pretence of better bestowing such things vpon the poore) condemned vniustly.

Verse 6. But IESVS said, Let her alone, why doe you molest her? shee hath wrought a good worke vpon me.

RHEM. 5. [6 Let her alone] Christ answereth for the deuout woman, and for defence of her fact, as we must answer against the ignorant and ill men, when they blame good men for giuing their goods to the Church.

CARTVV. 5. (6 Let her alone.) No meruaile although your tongues bee nimble in this case, as those which are set a worke by your bellies bottomlesse sackes, which were not then full when you had ingrossed more then a third of the wealth of the whole Land into your clawes, otherwise the liberality which is giuen to the Church for the honest maintenance of her Ministers, her Schooles and poore, euery one of them according to their estate, hath both a plentifull and an easie defence with all godly or reasonable men.

The reall presence by Consecration. Amb. lib. de sacr. 4. c. 4. Ambr. in Luc. lib. 6.

RHEM. 6. [22 Bread.] This is bread before the Sacramentall wordes, but the Consecration once done, of bread it made the flesh of Christ. Ambros. li. 4. c. 4. de Sacramentis.

RHEM. [23 Chalice. Wine and water is put into the Chalice, but is made bloud by Consecration of the heauenly word: though to auoyd the lothsomnes which would be in the sight of bloud, thou receiuest that which hath the likenes and resemblance thereof. Ambr. ibidem.

Amb. de his qui initiantur mysl. 9. cap. Ambr. de sacr. lib. lib. 4. c. 4.

CARTVV. 6. [22. & 23.] The same answer that was made to Ambrose, Math. 26. 26, fitteth also this place. Although there is further answer out of Ambroses place heere wrested: for hee sheweth that there is like change in the Sacrament from that it was before; as there is change of us by regeneration of the spirit from that wee were before regeneration, Whereby it is euident that the alteration is not in the substance, but in the quality, which hee sheweth by diuers other similitudes to the same purpose. And therefore otherwhere hee saith, that hee is seene with faith and not touched with the body. And as hee had called the bread, the figure or signe of his body, and not the body it selfe; so hee saith that the cup is a similitude of his bloud, or that which hath a proportion with his bloud, and not the bloud it selfe, because there should bee no horrour of the blood. So that Ambrose setteth this downe as a reason why the Lord did ordaine the Bread and Wine in the Supper resemblances of his body and bloud, rather then his naturall body and bloud, because of the auoiding of the horrour. For if wee should carry this perswasion, that as often as wee receiue the Supper of the Lord, so often wee eate and drinke the naturall body and bloud of Christ, the inconpenience of horrour ſhould not bee taken away from any that hath the eyes of his minde open, and his conſideration occupyed and bent attentiuely thereunto. For as the ſenſes moue the minde, ſo the apprehenſion of the minde guideth the ſenſes in the liking or abhorring of any thing which the minde abhorreth. And therefore although a man wanted the benefite of his ſight, yet if hee ſhould know there were offered mans fleſh and bloud to eate and drinke, his ſtomake would forthwith riſe againſt it. And therefore the Papiſts haue rather a light opinion of their groſſe and fleſhy feeding in the Sacrament, then any ſteddy perſwaſion, or elſe degenerating from all humanitie, they are brethren vnto the Cannibals, and deuourers of men. Howbeit in admitting the ſenſe that they would ſuck out of Ambroſe, how will they accord it with the Councell holden vnder Pope Nicholas the 2. which affirmeth that Chriſt is in the Sacrament ſenſibly, and that not onely accidents, but the body of Chriſt is touched with the fingers and rent with the teeth. And although you put in wine and water into the Chalice, yet you do it without warrant of the Word, ſeeing our Sauiour Chriſt vſed wine onely, as that which is the fruit of the vine onely.

Faith neceſſary in the B. Sacrament. Ephipha. in Anchora.

CARTVV. 8. [23.24. My body, my bloud.] God forbid but that wee follow theſe counſels of theſe good fathers in this. But neither of them thought of any carnall preſence, for Epiphanius in the booke declareth, that although hee affirmed the bread to bee himſelfe, yet ſee wee (ſaith hee) that it is neither equall nor like (as if hee ſhould ſay neither of the ſame quantity or quality] neither for the incarnate image, nor yet for the inuiſible Deity, nor for the ſhape of his members: For this is of a round forme like vnto a globe or roole, and ſenſeleſſe as concerning power. And his very purpoſe of ſhewing that it is ſo betweene vs and the image of God (which is by grace and a certaine reſemblance) as it is between Chriſt and the Sacrament doth euidently argue that as wee are Gods image onely in regard of ſome reſemblance, ſo is the Euchariſt in like manner. And touching Chryſoſtom hee affirmeth plainely that in the ſanctified veſſels, that is, thoſe wherein the Sacrament of the Supper is miniſtred, there is not the true body of Chriſt, but the myſterie of it. Beſide that, Chryſoſtom in the place alledged by them requireth the faith to bee reached forth as far for the Sacrament of Baptiſme as for the Lords Supper. By the ſame rule that yee would haue your Prieſt alone to drinke all and leaue nothing for the people, you may aſwell maintaine a ſole communication of them vnto the bread, it being alike commanded vnto the Apoſtles to eate as to drinke, which is ſo euident that not Chryſoſtom onely, but euen your own Tapper hath eſteemed that for the perfection of the Sacrament it is more conuenient that the communion were vnder both kindes. Beſide that, you cannot bee ignorant what Gelaſius the Biſhop of Rome ſaith heerein, that either they take all or none, either the cup and bread both, or not ſo much as the bread. And as the Councell of Conſtance condemneth them of hereſie that thinke the cup neceſſary for the people, ſo the Biſhop of Rome eſteemeth them ſacrilegious wᶜʰ ſeuer them in the adminiſtration. And therefore howſoeuer otherwhere you hold the Pope aboue the Councell, yet heere it will bee ſafer for you to acknowledge the Councell aboue the Pope.

But for theſe Prieſts, thou mayeſt not marueil that they are ſo buſie againſt Chriſt, * partly becauſe they were ſuch as were intruded by the ſecular power of the Romane Emperour, and from yeere to yeere by briberie and friendſhip, not by ſucceſſion according to the law of Moſes: partly becauſe the time was now come when the old Prieſthood of Aaron ſhould ceaſe, and the new begin according to the order of Melchiſedec: and for theſe cauſes God ſuffred their former priuileges of wiſdome and iudgement and diſcretion to decay in theſe latter vſurpers, and that according to the Prophet ſaying, The Law ſhall periſh from the Prieſts and counſell from the Ancients But the Prieſtood of the new Teſtament is to continue vnto the end of the world, and hath (as being the principall part of the Church) the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt for euer promiſed, to teach it all trueth: and for Peter the chiefe prieſt thereof vnder Chriſt our Sauiour prayed. Chriſts body vnder diuers formes.

RHEM. 3. [12. In another ſhape.] Chriſt though he haue but one corporall ſhape, naturall to his perſon, yet by his omnipotencie he may be in whatſoeuer forme, and appeare in the likeneſſe of any any other man or creature as he list. Therefore let no man thinke it strange, that he may be vnder the forme of bread in the B. Sament.

CARTVV. 3. [12. In another shape.] Christ had one shape onely, and not diuers, and therefore the Euangelist saith, that he appeared, or seemed so to the two disciples, not as the Iesuites, that he had another shape from his naturall: neither appeared he in another forme by his omnipotencie, but by the impotencie of the Disciples eyes, as Luke doth precisely and manifestly note. And therefore he noteth, that when their eyes were opened, they saw and discerned him, but whose eyes were euer so open, as to see and to discern him in your Masse? And this dimnesse of the bodily eyes rose, as may appeare, for want of inward sight of the minde, in that they had so small hope of his rising againe, according to that he had foretold them, that euen then they took no heed unto it, when it was witnessed vnto them by those that had seen him risen, it was no maruell therefore although he appeared unto them, not to haue the shape of Christ, seeing they had giuen sentence with themselues, that he still remained in death. For the bodily eye beholding a man neuer so stedfastly, yet if the minde haue a fore-iudgement that it cannot be he, it cannot be but he must needs seeme otherwise then he is, the perswasion of the minde being stronger manifoldly then the bare sight of the eye.

Luke.24. 16.31.

It is no omnipotencie of Christ to appeare in the likenesse of any creature, there being so vgly and unsightly creatures as are to be found, but it would be an impotencie to appeare in any forme unfitting and unseemely for such a Maiestie, which is not onely in respect of his Godhead coequall to the Father, but as touching his manhood, aduanced aboue all creatures in heauen and earth. For as it were an impotencie in God to be able to denie himselfe, and to say an untruth; so is it no power nor ability, but contrariwise weakenesse and infirmitie, that Christ should transforme himselfe and the glory of his Maiesty into the forme of so base and contemptible shapes as the Iesuites doe insinuate.

Verse 16. He that beleeueth and is baptized, shall be saued: but he that beleeueth not, shalbe condemned.

RHEM. 4. [16. He that beleeueth.] Note well, that whereas this Euangelist mentioneth only faith and baptisme, as though to beleeue and to be baptized were ynough, S. Mathew addeth the words also out of our Sauiour, teaching them to obserue all things whatsoeuer I haue commanded you, which conteineth all good workes and the whole iustice of a Christian man.

Not only faith

CARTVV. 4. 16. [He that beleeueth.] Marke noteth the cause of our saluation, which is Faith, whereof Baptisme is the seale: Mathew what ought to be the effects of a man that is already saued.

Verse 17. And them that beleeue these signes shall follow: In my name shall they cast out deuils, they shall speake with new tongues, RHEM. 5. [17 These signes shall follow.] It is not meant, that all Christians or true beleeuers should do miracles: but that some for the proofe of the faith of all, should haue that gift. The which is the grace or gift of the whole Church, executed by certaine for the edification and profite of the whole.

The gifts of miracles.

CARTVV. 5. [17. These signes shall follow.] You are busie about the maintaining the profession of miracles, which so farre we willingly yeeld unto you as it falleth into the lot of Antichrist and his Ministers to haue some power that way. Otherwise children of ten yeares could easilyer see through the maske of your maruellous miracles,. And although you often lift at this stone, yet wanting the arme of the word, and incouragement of Antiquity, you are faine with shame to leaue it behinde you. And Bede telleth you, wee may retaine the Catholicke faith without such miracles, which (saith he) were necessary in the beginning of the Church for the nourishing of faith. And therefore we may retaine the Catholicke faith without miracles.

THE ARGVMENT OF S. LVKES GOSPELL.

SAint Lukes Gospel may be diuided into fiue parts.

The first part is of the Infancie both of the precursor, and of Christ himselfe chap. 1. and 2.

The second of the preparation that was made to the manifestation of Christ: cap. 3. and a piece of the 4.

The third, of Christs manifesting himselfe by preaching and miracles, specially in Galilee: the other peece of the fourth chapter to the middes of the 17.

The fourth, of his comming into Iewrie towards his passion: the other part of the 17 chap. vnto the middes of the 19.

The fift, of the Holy weeke of his passion in Hierusalem: the other part of the 19. chap. vnto the end of the booke.

S. Luke was Sectator (saith S. Hierom) that is a Disciple of the Apost. Paul, and a companion of all his peregrination. And the same we see in the Actes of the Apostles: Where from the 16. chapter S. Luke putteth himselfe in the traine of S. Paul, writing thus in the story. Forthwith we sought to goe into Macedonia, and in like maner, in the first person, commonly through the rest of that booke. Of him and his Gospell, S. Hierome vnderstandeth this saying of S. Paul: We haue sent with him the brother, whose praise is in the Gospell through all Churches, where also he addeth: Some suppose so often as Paul in his Epistles saith, According to my Gosp. that he meanes of Lukes book. And againe: Luke learned the Gosp. not onely of the Ap. Paul, who had not been with our Lord in the flesh, but of the other Ap.rs himself also in the beginning of his book declares, saying. As they deliuered to vs who themselues from the beginning saw, & were ministers of the word. It follows in S. Hier. Therefore he wrote the Gospell, as he had heard, but the Actes of the Apostles he compiled as he had seen. S. Paul writeth of him by the name to the Colossians: Luke the Physicion saluteth you, and to Timother: Luke alone is with me. Finally of his end doth S. Hierom write: He liued fourescore and foure yeeres, hauing no wife.

He is buried at Constantinople: to which citie his bones with the Reliques of Andrew the Apostle were translated out of Achaia the seuentieth yeere of Constantius. And of the same translation also in another place against Vigilantius the Hereitck: It grieueth him that the reliques of the Martyrs are couered with precious couering, and that they are not either tied in clowtes or throwen to the dunghil. Why, are wee then sacrilegious* when wee enter the Churches of the Apostles? was ‡ Constantius the Emperour sacrilegious, who translated to Constantinople the holy Reliques of Andrew, Luke, and Timother: at which the deuils rore, and the inhabitants thereof confesse that they feele their presence; His sacred bodie is now at Padua in Italy, whither it was againe translated from Constantinople.

CARTVV. 1. It might seeme very strange, that the most of the famousest Saints dying and being buried in Asia, their Golgotha or charnell house should bee in that part of Europe onely, where Popery hath gotten place. But if the Reader consider well of it, it shall not seeme so strange: For seeing on the one side they are so good wares, and so ready mony in Popery, and on the other side, they are so easily brought from their places where they died without labour, without cost, without danger, yea without the mouing of a foote, onely by a dash or two of a goose quill, forging a Translation to this and that place: it is no maruaile though Popery bee the mart of the dead bones of the Saints, considering that selling them so deere, they buy them for nought. Otherwise what likelyhood is there of S. Lukes translation from Constantinople to Padua; that is from a famouser Citie unto one which is lesse famous: from a people that gaue more honour to Lukes writings, to one that giueth lesse; from them which otherwise being sounder in the faith, yet in matter of Saints whichbee departed, dote as much as the Papists themselues.

THE ANSVVER TO THE RHEMIST ANNOTATIONS VPON THE HOLY Gospell of Iesus Christ according to Luke.

CHAP. 1.

Verse 10 AND * all the multitude of the people was ‡ praying without at the houre of the incense.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [10 Praying without.] We see here that the Priest did his duetie within, the people in the meane time praying without: and that the Priests function did profite them, though they neither heard nor saw his doings.

CARTVV. 1. [10 Praying without.] That the Priests function profited them that neither sawe the Priest nor heard him, will bee more then you will easily proue, for although they heard not, yet they might see the smoake of the perfume: Yea although they neither heard nor saw him, yet knowing the houre or time of the incense they knew what hee did, and what was represented in the offering of the perfume, namely the prayers of the faithfull. And therefore as an vnderstanding people, they applyed the truth to the ceremony, and prayed whilst hee was offering incense. And if it were so in the Law as they suppose, yet it follows not thereof that it should be so vnder the Gospell, vnder which most principally it is true, that fiue words vnderstood are better then 10000 otherwise: whereas your people (for the most part) know as much what your merry trickes, councell, gestures, and apparell, of the Masse meane, as hee that is alwaies brought vp in the profession of the Turkes. And if hee knew them all, as well as Durand himselfe, yet should hee get nothing but a burden of memory, without the aduantage of a graine of true Christian knowledge. Secondly, the Priest was therefore separate from the people, to represent our Sauiour Christs sundred and separate estate from all sinfull men, which is requisite in him that should bee our Aduocate towards God to perfume and make of good sauour our prayers before him, before whom (without Christs intercession) they stink and are abhominable. Now the Minister can haue no such respect, as one that representeth not our Sauiour Christ as a figure, but as his Embassador beareth his person. And therefore Peter when by prayer hee presented this sweete perfume, stood midst the whole Church and Congregation of the faithfull. And if it be further said that whilst Zacharie did his function, removed somewhat from the hearing of the people, there was some other Priest that red or conceiued the prayers, according to the necessity of the Church, as it is a iudgement agreeable with the number of the Priests, that at one time serued in the Temple, and standeth with the Analogy of other exercises of the Church, regarding the greatest edification of the Assembly: So wee thinke that it will bee very hard for you to bring any sound reason against it. Thus you see that the Mummery of your Masse, can haue no defence heere. Besides, note that that seruice and worship of God, was appointed for children, in respect of the people which liue vnder the Gospell.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 6. [3 Hauing diligently atteined.] Hereby we see that though the holy Ghost ruled the pen of holy writers that they might not erre, yet did they vse humane meanes to search out and finde the trueth of the things they wrote of. Euen so do Councels, and the President of them, Gods vicar, discusse and examine all causes by humane meanes, the assistance of the holy Ghost concurring and directing them into all trueth, according to Christ promise, Io. 16. 13. as in the very first Councell of the Apostles themselues at Hierusalem is manifest, Act. 15. 7, and 28. Againe here we haue a familiar preface of the author as to his friend, or to euery godly Reader (signified by Theophilus) concerning the cause and purpose and manner of his writing, and yet the very same is confessed Scripture, with the whole booke following. Maruell not then if the author of the second booke of the Machabees Sacred writers and holy Councels.

Machabees *vse the like humane speeches both at the beginning and in the latter end, neither doe thou therefore reiect the booke for no Scripture, as our heretickes do: or not thinke him a sacred writer. 2. Machab. 2.15.

CARTVV.6. [3. Hauing diligently attained.] As the Prophet saith in a like case, What hath wheat to doe with chaffe, Lukes writings with the Popes decrees, the Councels of the Apostles with Popish Councels, Luke with the Machabees? Not onely there is no comparison betweene this drosse and that gold, fined and refined seuen times; but also betweene the Apostles and Apostlicall mens writings, or Councels, compared with the godliest learned both Fathers and Councels, that euer came since their time, or shall come after. The odds is wonderfull great. For as in the former comparison there is as much difference as is betweene heauen and hell: so in the latter there is as great a distance as is between heauen & earth. And let them tell vs what it maketh to proue that a diuine Writer may pray pardon of that wherein he hath faulted, as doth the author of the Machabees: that Luke vsed all diligence in writing his story, as if endeuour to write well, argued a necessity that the author doubted of his well doing, where, of the other side S. Luke doth boldly professe an exact treatise of the matter he vndertooke: the booke of Machabees cleane contrarily doubting whether he fell on sleepe or euer he had finished his story. As for Iohn 16.13. it is a peculiar promise to the Apostles: who were by the Spirit of God (which is the Vicar of God vpon earth) therefore to be led into all truth, that by the perfect rule of the truth which they should leaue behinde them, the whole Christian posterity might haue wherewith to direct it selfe in all causes of religion. And that this is a peculiar promise not onely the experience of error in the most famous learned both men and Councels do declare, but the promise it selfe, which is that the Spirit should shew them of things to come. Now I trust you will not say that a Propheticall spirit is ordinary in the Church of God; in your Synagogue we are well assured that it is a rare bird. Notwithstanding we willingly yeeld that there is such a presence of the Spirit in the true Church, and that in good and gracious measure, that the elect neuer erre in the principall and fundamentall poynts of the truth.

Touching Luke's title giuen to Theophilus, modestly according to his Gentry, it maketh nothing to 2. Machab. 2.24. yow the glorious vaunt of a fabulous writer: much lesse to iustifie that the Holy Ghost had the leading of his hand, which knoweth not whether he had written well or no; and which consequently (if it be in the Canon as the Iesuites say) submitteth the worke of the holy Ghost to the censure of a mortall man; cleane contrary to S. Luke, which affirmeth that he wrote of things whereof he was certainly perswaded, and wrote them in good and perfect order. 2. Machab. 15.39.

Verse 6 And they were both | iust before God, walking in all the commandements | and iustifications of our Lord without blame.

RHEM.7. [6 Iust before God.] Against the heretikes of this time, here it is euident that holy men be iust, not onely by the estimation of men, but indeed and before God. True iustification by obseruing the Commandements.

CARTVV.7. [6 Iust before God.] Dauid desireth God not to enter with him into iudgement, for that no liuing man is iust before him, or in his sight, directly contrary to the Iesuites meaning: but yet it hath a sweete harmony with Luke, who by these words freeth not Zachary or his wife from sinne, and the condemnation that followeth sinne, by any righteousnesse of his own, but acquitteth them of hypocrisie in that the good which they did, they did it not so much for that men looked vpon the, as that they propounded God alwaies before the. And it is the same which the Lord commanded vnto Abraham, after that hee was reputed iust by faith, that hee should walk before him and be sound: so that this walking and righteousnesse before God could not iustifie him being perfectly iustified before. And if Zachary had had a righteousnesse able to stand in Gods iudgement: what made hee in the Temple offering sacrifice, not onely for the sinne of the people, but also for himselfe. And this title of being righteous before God, Luke giueth vnto him, notwithstanding his horrible sinne of distrusting the promise of God spoken vnto him by the Ministry of an Angell: yet will not you (vnlesse you turne your tongues) affirme that a man is iust before God in his own righteousnesse, which hath as you speake mortall sinne. Let the Reader also note that the Iesuites vse the same weapons against vs, which their fathers the Pelagians vsed against the ancienter Churches: against whom to aduance mans righteousnesse they vsed the same place, which the Iesuites do heere. Psal. 143.2. Gen. 17.1. Heb. 5.3. & 7.27. August. de pecat. Merit. & Remiss. Hieron aduers. Pelag.

RHEM.8. [6 In all the commandements.] Three things to be noted directly against the heretikes of our time, first that good men do keepe all Gods commandements, which (they say) are impossible to be kept. Againe, that men be iustified not by onely imputation of Christs iustice, nor by faith alone, but by walking in the commandements. Againe, that the keeping and doing of the commandements is properly our iustification.

RHEM.9. [6 Iustifications] This word is so vsuall in the Scriptures (namely in the Psal. 118. to signifie the commandements of God. because the keeping of them is iustification, and the Greeke is alwayes so fully correspondent to the same, that the Heretickes in this place (otherwise pretending to esteeme much of the Greeke) blush not to say, that they auoid this word of purpose against the iustification of the papists. And therefore one vseth Tullies word forsooth, in Latin constituta: and his scollers in their English Bibles say, Ordinances. Corrupt translation of heretickes. δικαιώματα. Beza in Annot. Nou. Test. 1556.

CARTVV.8.9. [6 In all the commandements.] Three things not worth three strawes; For that they walked in all the commandements, the meaning is, that although they might faile in many things, yet they seuered not the commandements in the practise of their life, as they do, which think they haue well acquitted themselues, if they bee not infamous by murder, theft, adultery, periury, and such like. For hee that endeuoreth not the keeping of all the commandements, endeuoreth the keeping of none; whereupon Iames doubteth not to say, that hee which transgresseth one commandement, transgresseth al: For if hee haue not a conscience of keeping that one commandement for Gods sake, and because hee commandeth it: the other which outwardly and in shew hee obserueth, Iam. 2.10.

hee doth not obserue for Gods sake, but for the auoyding of punishment, or infamy of the world, or some such by respect. So that if Luke had not giuen them this commendation of walking in all the commandements, hee had giuen them no good endeuour of true Christians. Beside that, who is so blind as not to see, that it is not all one to walk in all the commandements, and to walk out or to finish the way of the commandements. A man is said to walke in the way wherein his foote now and and then slideth, wherein hee stumbleth, yea catcheth a fall, from the which hee sometime steppeth aside. And that the way of the Law is longer then our pursey heart and short legges are able to come to the end and perfection of it, looke before vpon Math. 11. 30. To the noteleſſe and needleſſe notes, it is easily answered: that Christian walking iustifieth before men, and witnesseth of the imputed iustice whereby wee are righteous before God, but iustifieth no man in the sight of God, who seeth further into us then either other men, or our own hearts. Whereby also is answered the next Annotation: for wee shunne not the word Iustification for feare of you, against whom wee haue sufficient defence, but prouided thereby for the simple. where reprouing M^r. Bezaes and our translation, for translating the word δικαιώματα (Ordinances) you lay naked your great ignorance in the Hebrew tongue, where the word which the 70 interpreters translate δικαιώματα, signifieth properly that which is ingrauen in brasse, or stone, or some such thing: And therefore is aptly rendred by ordinances or Decrees, which were vsed (in token of stability) to bee so ingrauen. And is the Greek (I beseech you) so fully correspondent vnto this sense which you follow. What will you then answer to the Apostle, which saith, That the Gentiles knew the iustifications of God? did they know those things which would haue made them iust before God; And if they had done that which they know (that knew not the promises of God) had they beene righteous before God? If you say so, you haue your warre with the Apostle, which teacheth that they knew to make them inexcusable, but not to attaine to righteousnesse before God. You haue the whole body of the Scripture against you, that teacheth that there is no saluation, but in the knowledge of the promises, and of the Gospell of God. But if you deny it, you are so undone: For then it followeth, that this Greek word which you turne Iustification importeth no signification of iustifying men before God. The Apostle also to the Hebrewes doth expressely recken up certaine Iustifications of the which hee precisely affirmeth that they cannot make a man righteous. Leaue therefore bragging of your Greeke and Hebrew, wherein you seeme to bee strangers, which neuer trauailed those waies, but as heere and there you borrow a word from the Dictionaries, or get something by the heare-say of such as haue trauailed into those parts.

Vers. 14. And thou shalt haue ioy and exultation, and many shall reioyce at his natiuity.

RHEM. 10. [14 Ioy and exultation.] This was fulfilled, not onely when he was borne, but now also through the whole Church for euer, in ioyfull celebrating of his Natiuitie.

CARTVV. 10 [14 Ioy and exultation.] Not in celebrating of his Natiuity, but in feeling of the fruite of his Ministery, not one day in the yeare, but all the daies of our life.

Vers. 23. And it came to passe, after the daies of his office were expired, that hee departed into his house.

RHEM. 11. [23 He departed.] In the old Law (saith S. Hierome) they that offered hostes for the people, were not onely not in their houses, but were purified for the time, being separated from their wiues, and they dranke neither wine nor any strong drinke, which are wont to prouoke concupiscence Much more the Priests of the new Law that must alwayes offer sacrifices, must alwayes be free from matrimonie. Li. 1. c. 19. adu. Iouin. and ep. 50. c. 3. See S. *Ambrose in 1. The continency of Priests.

CARTVV. 11. [23. He departed.] That Ministers may in their Ministery lawfully haue their wiues, and that by all sorts of proofes, both of Scripture and antiquity, look before, vpon Math. 8. 14. Touching Ierom and Ambrose here cited, it came to passe to them, as it happeneth to some good men, which measure others by their own foot. They being therefore able, through a proper gift to runne the course of their Ministery without the helpe of a wife: esteemed that it should not bee so hard a matter for other to do the same; yet Ierom should haue been made wise in this behalfe, by the experience of his owne infirmity, which propounding unto himselfe the course of virginity, ran himselfe out of breath and fell, or euer he had gotten the goale. And in this place he ought not to haue been alledged by the Iesuites: for he maketh it not onely vnlawfull for a Minister to keepe company with his wife, but for any Christian, affirming in the same booke, that a man cannot fulfill the dutie of a husband, and of a continent man: as if it were directly against Christianity for the husband to giue due benevolence vnto his wife. And least he might thereby be thought onely (as hee pretendeth) to haue preferred virginity to marriage: he declareth there, that the vse of marriage forbiddeth to pray, and to receiue the Lords body. The Councell therefore is of more credit which decreeth that he shall be accursed which putteth difference between a married Minister and another unmarried, as if the married Minister might not minister the oblation because of his marriage. Yea Ierom himselfe (as hath beene shewed) is more fauourable to marriage in other places. But his reasons are to be weighed, wherein, upon the law which forbad the Priests the company of their wiues, during the time wherein they serued in the Temple: he concludeth that Ministers now, may neuer keep company with their wiues. But it is an uneuen comparison of a month in the yeere, with a mans whole life: of their extraordinary ministery, that came unto them but once a yeare, with our ordinary Ministery. Neither followeth it that they did this whilst they were in the seruice of the Temple, from whence they could not depart for that time, that therefore wee must do so in seruing the Church in places from whence (the Diuine Seruice being ended) wee may lawfully depart. It had beene a more equall comparison to haue compared their seruice which they did in their Synagogues in Preaching the Word, in pub-ſik: prayer and thanke-giuing, with the ſeruice which wee do in our Churches; their ordinary Miniſtery, which they did the reſt of the eleuen monthes in the yeare, with our ordinary ſeruice of the Church which wee doe all the yeare long: ſo they ſhould haue found that it being lawfull for the Prieſts all that time to enioy the company of their wiues, that the ſame lawfulneſſe remaineth to the Miniſters in enioying theirs.

Finally, that it was a ceremony that is vaniſhed by the appearance of our Sauiour Chriſt, the fellow conſtitution of it in not drinking wine, doth ſufficiently declare. Whereupon the Apoſtle requireth not that a Biſhop in his function ſhould abſtaine from a wife, but that hee ſhould bee the huſband of one wife, nor hee requireth not that hee ſhould drink no wine, but that he ſhould not uſe exceſſe of wine. The later whereof when the Papiſts (by their continuall practiſe) do confeſſe to bee abrogated, they ought to bee aſhamed to vrge the obſeruation of the former. And as for the difference of their oblation and ours, that they offered in their courſe once a yeare, and our oblation (as they ſay) is quotidian and daily all the yeare: It is to bee vnderſtood that they had the ſame miniſtery all the yeare long, that wee haue: for they preached the word as continually as wee doe, they offered publicke prayers and thanke-giuing all the yeare long as we doe; they ſeeme alſo to haue miniſtred the Sacrament of Circumciſion all the yeare long, and the Paſſeouer which anſwereth to our Communion in the appointed times. And therefore they had the ſame cauſe of abſtinence from their wiues which wee haue. For as for the ſacrifices and oblations made to repreſent the death of our Sauiour Chriſt, they haue an end by the onely ſuffering of our Sauiour which himſelfe made vpon the Croſſe. Theſe ſacrifices therefore haning neither in the figure nor in the truth any ſucceſſion, it is euident that the Miniſters in reſpect of them are not at all to bee debarred the company of their wiues. And in that ſenſe wherein the ancient Fathers call the holy Communion the daily ſacrifice, it is euident, that they vnderſtood not that, that ſhould bee offered daily of neceſſity, conſidering that the practiſe of the Church was diuers in that behalfe, ſome miniſtring it once a weeke, ſome euery day, as the Church of Rome very incommodiouſly. Touching Ambroſe hee forbiddeth not marriage either to Biſhop or Deacon, of whoſe wiues hee there ſpeaketh, without any note of infamy, onely he wiſheth that they ſhould forbeare when they come to the miniſtery of the holy things, and the rather hee moueth that way (as it ſeemeth) becauſe there were ſmall numbers of Miniſters to doe the worke. Otherwiſe there is no great likelyhood that hee had forgotten that which hee ſpeaketh other-where: That virginity may bee perſwaded but cannot bee commanded: And that in things aboue our reach, wee may rather deſire them, then command them: Alſo that the Apoſtles were all coupled in marriage (Iohn and Paul excepted) not for pleaſures but for poſteritie ſake: which muſt needs bee vnderſtood in Paul (before his Apoſtleſhip a perſecutor) and in Mathew (a friend of Publicanes and ſinners before hee entred into that function) of the time of their Apoſtleſhip: wee do not onely come our ſelues with reuerence and preparation, to the Lords holy Table, but exhort thoſe of our charge to doe the ſame. But becauſe the Lord hath giuen no preciſe commandement of abſtinence from the company of the wife, in that caſe wee feare to lay any yoke vpon the Churches necke which the Lord himſelfe hath not laid.

For it is ſaid of Iael that ſhe was bleſſed amongſt women: yea and that which you in your Aue adde commonly vnto the text, that the frute of her wombe is bleſſed, may be ſaid of the fruite of Elizabeth, who was bleſſed of the Lord. Hier. ep. 140 in exp. ps. 44

RHEM. 12. [28 Full of grace] Note the excellent prerogatiues of our B. Lady, and abhorre those hereticks which make her no better then other vulgar women, and therefore to take from her fulnesse of grace, they say here, Haile freely beloued, contrarie to all signification of the Greeke word, which is at the least endued with grace, as S. Paul vseth it Ephes. 1. by S. Chrysostoms interpretation, or rather, full of grace, as both * Greeke and Latine fathers haue alwayes here vnderstood it, and the Latines also read it, namely S. Ambrose thus, Well, is she onely called full of grace, who onely obteined the grace, which no other women deserued, to be repleniished with the author of grace. And if they did as well know the nature of these kinde of Greeke words, as they would seeme very skilfull, they might easily obserue that they signifie fulnesse, as when themselues translate the like word (Luc. 16. 20.) full of sores, Bza vlcerosus.

Corrupt translation of heretickes.

* κεχαριτωμενη. ἐκπεπληρωμενη. πλουσιωτερον.

CARTVV. 28 Full of grace.] Let them hardly bee blamed that make so light account of the holy Virgine: For if full of grace bee taken for the grace which is in Christ; whereby hee in a fulnesse of goodwill, vouchsafeth to a person some singular honour or benefite, then wee will not deny but the Virgin may bee said to bee full of grace: and mislike of your translation onely for two causes; whereof the one is that it departed further from the Greke then need was: another that it is doubtfull, and may bee drawn into two senses; whereof the former hauing beene mentioned, the second is that which you follow, that shee is called full of grace because this fulnesse of grace (and that in the proper signification of fulnesse) was inherent in her, before the conception, and after her deliuerance. And in this sense further, wee hold your translation for false, as contrary to the truth in generall, which teacheth that the fulnesse of the gifts of the holy Ghost was onely in Christ: that his members haue it in measure, which also receiuing daily increase can neuer bee full in this life. Secondly, as contrary to the meaning of the Angell, which comforteth her not vpon any ground of her vertues, but upon the free grace of God, which put this difference betweene her, and all other women that shee should bee the mother of Christ, whereunto her selfe giueth also witnesse, in her thankfull song, confessing that the Lord herein, regarded her base estate. And expounding the Angels words, that shee was blessed amongst women, shee saith, that all generations shall pronounce her blessed, not because shee excelled all other women in vertue, but because the Lord wrought mighty and wonderfull things in or by her: in that shee conceiued by the holy Ghost without the knowledge of man, and that shee bare Christ in her womb, which shee did not for any merites sake of hers, but for his names sake, as shee her selfe affirmeth. Thirdly, as contrary to the signification of the Greeke word, as their own Dictionaries and Doctors do declare, which expound this gratified, or whom Gods singular and vndeserued fauour hath made acceptable: For the termination which is a note of a verbe Transitiue, they either ignorantly or malitiously haue turned into a verb Neuter, whose action passeth not into another, but dieth in it selfe. And the word from whence it is deriued, is known to sauour nothing, but the vndeserued grace of God. Beside, that the Angell himselfe doth interprete the word, when repeating the comfort he gaue her; for hauing said gratified, or vndeseruedly accepted, before, hee after saith, that shee had found grace in the sight of God: And this translation of gratifying, the Iesuites are compelled to flee vnto afterward: For if they should translate it there as they doe heere: they should make all elect women full of the grace of God as they do the Virgine, and so should robbe her of her priuiledge, aboue other godly women, which they falsly surmise of vs.

Ephes. 1. 6.

The authorities alledged are partly against you. Chrysostom setteth forth the power of this word, both by the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, and making vs all exceeding beautifull and amiable vnto himselfe: and he sheweth how, namely, as if a man taking one that is full of scabs, and deformed, should both rid him from his scabs, and set him in a most comely and sightly fashion. In Athanasius we finde nothing written of this matter: Ambrose restraineth the fulnesse of her grace, not unto the virgines inherent vertues, but to the fulnesse of grace which was in our Sauiour Christ whom shee bare, in which respect wee are of accord, that she was full and most full of grace. And the same iudgement is of Ieroms place. But Ambrose addeth, that confessing her selfe his hand-maid, shee claimed it not as any priuiledge or prerogatiue that was due vnto her. As for Ephrem the Eremite, which hath pearked her into a corner of the wildernesse of his own braine, forsaking the company of the worthy Fathers before remembred, we meane not to meddle with him in this case, as one that taketh the Crown and Scepter with almost all the roialties of our Sauiour, to put it upon his mothers head. The poore shelter which he seekes in our translation of ἐλκώμενος, full of sores, argueth that they are neere driuen, considering that it is like the translators had regard not onely to the word, but to the circumstance also of the story, which declaring that he was not able to come to the gate, but as hee was carried thither, and further, that he had so many sores as occupied the rich mans dogges in licking, inforced somewhat the signification of the word, which otherwise peraduenture they would haue turned, stricken, made boylie, or some such thing. And if it were as easie for a sinfull creature to be full of the grace of God, as it is for a beggar which hath neither food nor rayment to be full of sores, we could not much haue sticked with you, if you had translated κεχαριτωμενη full of grace.

Verse 34 And MARY said to the Angel, ‡ How shall this be done because I know not man.

Our B. Lady vowed virginity.

RHEM. 14. [34 I know not man.] These wordes declare (saith S. Augustine) that she had now vowed virginitie to God. For otherwise neither would she say, How shall this be done: nor haue added, because I know not man. Yea if she had said onely the first wordes, How shall this be done; it is euident, that that ſhe would not haue asked ſuch a queſtion, how a woman did beare a ſonne promiſed her, if ſhe had married meaning to haue carnall copulation. c.4. de virgin. As if he ſhould ſay, If ſhe might haue knowen a man and ſo haue had a child, ſhe would neuer haue asked, How ſhall this be done? but becauſe that ordinarie way was excluded by her vow of virginitie, therefore ſhe asketh, How? And in asking, How, ſhe plainely declareth that ſhe might not haue a childe by knowing man, becauſe of her vow. See S. Gregor. Nyſſene de ſancta Chriſti Natiuitate.

CARTVV. 14 [34. I know no man.] This gathering is eaſily ſcattered by the plaine words of of the Euangeliſts. For when S. Mathew ſaith that the Virgine was with childe before Ioſeph and ſhee came together, he argueth plainly that they had a full purpoſe before this conception, to haue according to the ordinance of God in marriage, mutuall company one with another, if their purpoſe had not been thus preuented. And in that it is ſaid to Ioſeph, that hee ſhould not feare to take her to his wife, it is manifeſt that his purpoſe of marriage with the virgine, remained vntill that feare entred his head. But it were to mocke, and not to make a marriage, if after they had in their handfaſting, ſolemnly profeſſed before God, and other the friends of both ſides, that they would liue in the holy eſtate of matrimony, forthwith forgetting the couenant of God betweene them, of their owne heads, without any ſuch miraculous euent, as the Lord ſent to binde themſelues by the vow of virginity, that they could not performe it. To ſpeake nothing of the lightneſſe and fickleneſſe which theſe holy perſons are by this meanes vnworthily charged with. And for the reaſon to the contrary, that the virgin aſked how that might be done, and that ſhe knew not man. It is altogether inſufficient to proue the vow of virginity. For if the virgin had vowed, yet imagining (as the Ieſuites make her) that ſhe ſaw not how it could be performed, but by carnall copulation in marriage; ſhe might well haue knowne that this meſſage of God had freed and releaſed her from her vow. And where ſhe ſaith, I know no man. Firſt they muſt be conſtrained maugre their hearts forſaking their owne tranſlation, to take M. Bezas, which is, I am not to know, or I may not know, as alſo in the next verſe, the preſent time is put for the future, that which is borne, for, that which ſhall be borne, for that were a cold ſaying if ſhe knew not at that inſtant any man, vnleſſe ſhe further meant that ſhe ſhould or might not know any man. Being therefore agreed of the ſignification of the Euangeliſts words, for the ſence of them, it is euident that the virgin ſpake not thus in reſpect of any virginly vow that ſhe had made, but grounded this anſwer upon the words of the Angell, That his name ſhould be called Ieſus, that he ſhould reigne for euermore Iſrael, and that of his kingdom ſhould be no end. But moſt eſpecially of thoſe words, That he ſhould be called the ſon of the moſt higheſt. For thereupon ſhe wiſely concluded, that the ſonne of God could not be borne of the ſeede of a mortall and ſinfull man. Therefore let hardly this iudgement leane vpon both the crutches you ſtay it with: yet ſhall it not be able to ſtand before ſo manifeſt a truth, ſo far as that the queſtion, how ſhall this be done is able to vphold it. Ambroſes iudgement therefore is here of more weight then either Gregories or Auguſtines, who affirmeth ſhe knew that which the Prophet foretold, that ſhe ought to bee a virgin that ſhould conceiue the Meſſias of the world, and that ſhe here asked by what meanes a virgin ſhould conceiue, as appeareth alſo by the anſwer that ſheweth the meanes of the conception to be by the holy Ghoſt.

Verſe 36 And behold | Elizabeth thy coſin, ſhe alſo hath conceiued a ſonne in her old age: and this moneth is the ſixt to her that is called barren.

RHEM. 15. [36 Elizabeth thy Coſin.] By this that Elizabeth and our Lady were coſins, the one of the tribe of Leui, the other of Iuda, is gathered that Chriſt came of both tribes, Iuda and Leui, of the Kings and the prieſts: himſelfe both a king and a prieſt; and the annoynted (to wit) by grace ſpiritually, as they were with oile materially and corporally, Auguſt. 2. de conſenſ. Euang. cap. 1. Chriſt came of both Tribes Iuda and Leui.

CARTVV. 15. [36. Elizabeth thy Couſin.] Here againe the Ieſuites ſhielded with a ſentence out of Auguſtine (in the ſecond chapter not in the firſt) dare encounter with the writer to the Hebrewes, which ſaith that none of Chriſts Tribe had acceſſe to the Altar which ſhould be vntrue, if he were of the Prieſts ſtock, as here is ſaid, contrary alſo to the ſame writer, that he was no Prieſt after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchiſedek. Whereas being fit for the miniſtery, he muſt needs haue been after the order of Aaron, if he had come of the Prieſts ſtock. Now touching the reaſon wherof this ſhould be grounded, that Elizabeth was Couſin to the holy virgin, it hath no force: for the prieſts married out of all tribes indifferently. And therefore there is no doubt but Elizabeth was borne of the tribe of Iuda as well as Mary her couſin. Heb. 7. 13. Heb. 7, 11.

Verſe 42 And ſhee cried with a loud voyce, and ſaid, | Bleſſed art thou among women, and bleſſed is the fruit of thy wombe.

RHEM. 16. [42 Bleſſed art thou.] At the very hearing of our Ladies voice, the infant and ſhe were repleniſhed with the holy Ghoſt, and ſhe ſang prayſes not onely to Chriſt, but for his ſake to our B. Lady, calling her bleſſed, and her fruit bleſſed, as the Church doth alſo by her words and example in the AVE MARIE. The bleſſed Virgin Mary.

CARTVV. 16. [Bleſſed art thou.] She as a Propheteſſe of the Lord confirmed the holy virgins faith in the promiſe which ſhe had receiued. That ſhe ſung praiſe vnto the virgin is vntrue, for that ſhe was bleſſed, that is to ſay, receiued a ſingular grace of God in reſpect that ſhe conceiued our Sauiour, it tendeth to the praiſe of our Sauiour Chriſt, whoſe conception ſet her vp into a prehemineence aboue all other women. For that ſhe was not perfectly bleſſed, and deliuered from the wrath to come, by the naked bearing of our Sauiour Chriſt, it is euident by Chriſts controulement of the woman that pronounced the wombe and the breaſts bleſſed, which bare him, and gaue him ſucke. And Elizabeth carrieth the true bleſſednes vnto another cauſe then the conception, namely to faith that ſhe beleiued the promiſe. Beſide that in this ſinging of praiſe to her liuing upon earth, you are not at one with your ſelues, that reſerue that to their canonization after they are gathered from the earth. And although at the very hearing of the voyce of the virgine, Elizabeth was repleniſhed, yet the virgines voyce was not the cauſe. For although the cauſe goeth with the thing whereof it is the cauſe, yet Luk. 11. 27 28. Luk. 1. 45.

it followeth not that whatſoeuer iumpeth ſo euen with a thing, is by and by the cauſe thereof, which notwithſtanding the Ieſuites would make the ignorant reader beleeue. Touching repleniſhing of the childe at that inſtant, it is ſaid without all warrant. But if theſe may bee truly ſaid to bee repleniſhed with the holy Ghoſt, which notwithſtanding remained ſtill ſinners, and receiued daily encreaſes of Gods ſpirit: why ſhould words of the ſame effect ſet the virgin in ſuch a top of vertue, as the Ieſuites place her, where no ſin can approch her, and whither no increaſe of grace can (as it ſeemeth) come nigh her.

Luk. 1.80.

Verſe 43. And whence is this to mee, that the | mother of my Lord doth come to mee?

Her excellency.

RHEM. 17. [43 Mother of my Lord.] Elizabeth being an exceeding iuſt and bleſſed woman, yet the worthineſſe of Gods mother doth ſo far excell her and all other women, as the great light the little ſtarres. Hi. vom. Præf. in Sophon.

CARTVV. 17. [43 Mother of my Lord.] So farre as the Scripture ſpeaketh that ſhee excelled other women, wee willingly confeſſe, but how farre and in how many degrees wee find no ſtar in the Scripture to direct vs by. Ieromes Preface alſo vpon Sophonias, as of the reſt of the ſmaller Prophets Eraſmus ſuſpecteth as none of his, which is one cauſe why hee left them out. You might haue learned heere to haue mended your ſpeech of Lady, at the mouth of the holy Ghoſt, who ſpeaking in the moſt reuerendeſt ſort of the virgin calleth her not Elizabeths Lady, but the mother of our Lord, chooſing contrary to his cuſtome a longer ſpeech, whereby this is auoided.

Eraſ. in præfat. Hieron. in 12. prophet. tom. 3. Epiſt.

Verſe 48. Becauſe he hath regarded the humility of his handmaid: for behold from henceforth ‡ all generations | ſhall call mee bleſſed.

Her honour in all the world.

RHEM. 18. [48 Shall call me bleſſed.] This Prophecie is fulfilled, when the Church keepeth her Feſtiuall dayes, and when the faithfull in all generations ſay the Ane Marie, and other holy Antems of our Lady. And therefore the Caluiniſts are not among thoſe generations which call our Lady bleſſed.

CARTVV. 18. [48 Shall call mee bleſſed.] Wee acknowledge that ſhee is bleſſed, and ſhee is in our Generations honoured as a moſt holy woman, but not as in your Degenerations ſet vp for a Goddeſſe. And we are taught in the Scripture, The way whereby the Lord will haue the praiſe of his Saints preſerued, is by the Preaching of the Goſpell, wherein their faith and other vertues are ſet out for vs to follow. As for feſtiuall daies and Antems, it is your own dreame without warrant of the Word.

Verſe 63 And demanding a writing Table, hee wrote, ſaying, | * Iohn is his name. And they all meruailed.

Myſterie and ſignification in names.

RHEM. 19. [63 Iohn in his name.] We ſee that names are of ſignification and importance, God himſelfe changing or giuing names in both Teſtaments: as Abraham, Iſrael, Peter, and the principall of all others, Ieſus: and here Iohn, which ſignifieth, Gods grace or mercie, or, God will haue mercie. For he was the Precurſor and Prophet of the mercie and grace that enſued by Chriſt Ieſus. Note alſo that as then in Circumciſion, ſo now in Baptiſme (which anſwereth thereunto) names are giuen. And as we ſee here and in all the old Teſtament, great reſpect was had of names: ſo we muſt beware of ſtrange, profane, and ſecular names (now a dayes too common) and rather according to the * Cathechiſme of the holy Councell of Trent, take names of Saints and holy men that may put vs in minde of their vertues.

cap. de Bapt. in fine.

What names to bee giuen in Baptiſme.

CARTVV. 19. [63 Iohn is his name.] But that your commendation hath no grace, we might call for at your hand our deſerued praiſe in this point, which haue put to flight many of the prophane names that you had peſtered the world with.

Verſe 75. In holineſſe and | iuſtice before him all our daies.

True iuſtice, not imputatiue.

RHEM. 20. [75 Iuſtice before him.] Here alſo we ſee that we may haue true iuſtice, not onely in the ſight of men, or by the imputation of God, but indeede before him and in his ſight, and that the comming of Chriſt was to giue men ſuch iuſtice.

CARTVV. 21. [75 Iuſtice before him.] Heere are Colewortes not onely twiſe ſodden, but twiſe in one chapter as it were at one Table ſet before the Reader. Look anſwer before v. 6.

Verſe 78 Through the bowels of the mercy of our God, in which | the * Orient, from an high, hath viſited vs.

The heretickes controule both Greek and Latine Text.

RHEM. 21. [78 The orient.] Maruell not if heretikes controule the old authenticall tranſlation as though it differed frō the greek; whereas here they make much a do to controul not onely the greek interpreters of the old teſtament, but alſo S. Luke himſelf, for the word ἀνατολὴ, as in differing from the Hebrew.

CARTVV. 21. [78 The Orient.] Vnleſſe your Reader carry ſuch a ſeruile and baſe minde, towards your writings, as you towards the father of your profeſſion, which carieth your faith priſoner to beleeue what euer hee ſaith; hee can hardly bee moued with ſuch notes, which reproue without proofe, and reiecting the iudgements of learned men paſſe ouer their reaſons, whereupon the cauſe ſtandeth. And if either you had known the nature of the Hebrew word, or the phraſe of that tongue, the ſteppes whereof are eaſt-ſoones, and in this place to bee ſeene in the Greek (as when the Subſtantiue is for an increaſe of ſignification put for the Adiectiue or Participle) you could not without check of your own conſcience haue thus cauilled. Although what cauſe haue you heere to complaine, when neither the tranſlation which you follow is reiected, and when the tranſlation which you charge is ſo temperate as it may ſerue as well for the ſenſe which you follow as for that which wee better like of.

CHAP. II.

Verse 35 AND ‡ thine own ſoule ſhall a ſword pierce, that out of many hearts cogitations may bee reuealed.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [35 Thine own ſoule.] Simeon propheciednot onely of Chriſt but of our B. Lady, of all her ſorrowes: wherein ſhe was alwayes partaker with our Sauiour, from his flight into Egypt euen to his death.

CARTVV. 1. [35 Thine own ſoule.] That the virgine Mary did taſte of great ſorrowes with our Sauiour Chriſt, is not onely naturall for ſo tender a mother to ſo deare a ſonne, but alſo and eſpecially that ſhee might bee conformable to the ſufferings of Chriſt, as the members muſt be to the head: his ſuffering differings from hers, in that his were meritorious and ſanctified hers.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 14 Glorie in the higheſt to God: and in earth peace to men of good will.* Free will.

RHEM. 2. [14 Men of good will.] The birth of Chriſt giueth not peace of minde or ſaluation but to ſuch as be of good will, becauſe he worketh not our good againſt our wils, but our wills concurring. Auguſt queſt. ad Simplic. li. 1. q. 2. to 4.

CARTVV. 2. [14 Men of good Will.] Are in the Hebrew phraſe, men well accepted of, And the verſe immediatly going before declareth manifeſtly that the place muſt neceſſarily bee vnderſtood of Gods good will towards men, and not of mens good will towards God and godlineſſe: For Luke there declareth that the Angels ſong is of the praiſe of God, where it ſhould bee of mans praiſe, if heere his free will were ſet forth. Howbeit true it is that Auguſtine ſaith, that wee beleeue not but willingly, as it is moſt falſe and directly contrary to Auguſtines drift, which the Ieſuites haue ſet down of freewill: for hee ſheweth that the naturall power to chooſe or to refuſe things (hauing no power to chooſe that which is good) is made by the gift of God able to chooſe good: for hee ſaith: that if Iacob had beleeued becauſe him ſelfe would, or of his own will God had not giuen him faith, but hee him ſelfe by his will ſhould haue gotten it, and ſo hee ſhould haue had which hee receiued not. And after calling the queſtion from Iacob to all men, hee ſheweth: That no man beleeueth, but hee that willeth, no man willeth but hee that is called, neither is any man able to bring to paſſe that hee may bee called. Finally, that God doth by calling giue faith which no man beleeueth againſt his will. Look Bellar. vpon the defence of the vulgar tranſlatio, where he preferreth our expoſition vnto the Ieſuits

Verse 19 But MARIE kept all theſe words, conferring them in her heart.

RHEM. 3. [19 Kept all.] Our Lady though little be ſpoken of her concerning ſuch matters in the Scriptures, becauſe ſhe was a woman, and not admitted to teach or diſpute in publike of high myſteries: yet ſhe knew all theſe myſteries, and wiſely noted and contemplated of all thoſe things that were done and ſaid about Chriſt, from the firſt houre of his conception till the end of his life and his Aſcenſion. Our B. Lady full of deepe contemplations.

CARTVV. 3. [19 Kept all.] There was therefore notwithſtanding the fulneſſe you vaunt of, ſome place to receiue more.

Verse 34 And Simeon bleſſed them, and ſaid to MARIE his mother, Behold this is ſet vnto the ruin, and vnto the reſurrection of many in Iſrael, and for a ſigne which ſhall be contradicted.

RHEM. 4. [34 To the ruine.] Therefore to the ruine of ſome, becauſe they would not beleeue in him, and ſo were the cauſe of their owne ruine, as he is elſewhere called. A ſtumbling ſtone becauſe many would ſtumble at him, and ſo fall by their own fault, other ſome he raiſed by his grace from ſinne to iuſtice, and ſo he was the reſurrection of many. The Apoſtle vſeth the like ſpeech, ſaying: We are to ſome the odor of life, vnto life: to others the odour of death vnto death. Not that their preaching was to cauſe death, but becauſe they that would not beleeue their preaching, wilfully incurred deadly ſinne and damnation. 1. Pet 2. 2 Mens ruine and damnation is of themſelues. 2 Cor. 2. 16.

CARTVV. 4. [34 To the ruine] It is true which is here ſaid, but not all the truth, for iuſt Simeon doth ſay, that hee is ſet for ruin to many, and of whom hee is ſo ſet the Prophet expreſſeth, when ſpeaking in the perſon of God hee ſaith, Behold I ſet, &c. In which doing how nothing falleth from the iuſtice or holineſſe of the Lord, look before, vpon Mat. 6. 13. Eſay. 8. 14. Rom. 9. 33.

Verse 37. And ſhe was a widow vntill eightie and foure yeeres: who departed not from the temple, by faſtings and prayers ‡ ſeruing night and day. λατρευουσα.

RHEM. 5. [37 A widow.] Marke that widdowhood is here mentioned to the commendation thereof euen in the old Teſtament alſo, and the fruite and as it were the profeſſion thereof is here commended, to wit, faſting, praying, being continually in the Temple, euen as S. Paul more at large for the eſtate of the new Teſtament ſpeaketh of widowhood and virginitie, as being profeſſions more apt and commodious for the ſeruice of God. Holy widowhood. 1 Cor. 7.

CARTVV. 5. [37 A widdow.] If you draw this widowhead ſo hard to the imitation of all, you will alſo bring in women to teach in the Church publickly as this widow did. Howbeit wee confeſſe the ſtate of widowhood taken hold of where and as it ought to bee, to bee more apt for the ſeruice of God then the married eſtate of thoſe perſons ſhould haue beene.

RHEM. 6. [37 By faſting and prayers ſeruing.] Seruing, in the Greek is λατρευουσα, that is, doing diuine worſhip vnto God, as by prayer, ſo alſo by faſting, ſo that faſting is λατρεια, that is an act of religion. Faſting an act of religion.

of religion whereby we do worſhip God, as we do by prayer, and not vſed onely to ſubdue our fleſh, much leſſe (as Heretikes would haue it) as a matter of policie.

CARTVV. 6. [37 By faſting and prayers.] Faſting wee confeſſe frankly to bee a religious exerciſe not of it ſelfe, but ſo farre as it giueth a ſpeedier wing vnto prayer, and tendeth to our reaſonable ſeruice of God. Therefore it is an impudent vntruth not to bee ſhewed in the bookes of any learned of our ſide, that ſuch faſting is a matter of policy.

Verſe 51. And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth: and was ſubiect to them. And his mother kept all theſe wordes in her heart.

Dutifull obedience to parents.

RHEM. 7. [51 Subiect to them.] All children may learne hereby, that great ought to be their ſubiection and obedience to their Parents, when Chriſt himſelfe, being God, would be ſubiect to his parents being but his creatures.

CARTVV. 7. [51 Subiect vnto them.] S.

CARTVV. 2. [11. He that hath two coates.] By what Logicke doe you conclude, Workes ſatisfactory of the fruits worthy of Repentance? or how can they deliuer their ſoules from damnation by doing of that which being a duty, for that inſtant wherein the almes is done, cannot be any ſatisfaction for former tranſgreſſion. As if you could white two of theſe kinde of walles with one whiting boxe: the one whereof will take up more parget then will be made of your lime. Or as if an old coate and a little broken meat were able to ſtop that gap wherat the fire of Gods moſt fierce indignation wil break. No, no; both the coate and the meate themſelues with the giuer, ſhall be meate and match for the fire vnleſſe the free mercy and grace of God do pull them out. Verſ. 16 Iohn anſwered, ſaying vnto all, *I indeed baptiſe you with water: ‡ but † there ſhall come a mightier then I, whoſe latchet of his ſhooes I am not worthy to unlooſe, he ſhall baptiſe you in the holy Ghoſt and fire.

RHEM. 4. [16 But there ſhall come.] How ſay then the Heretikes that the Baptiſme of Chriſt is of no greater vertue then Iohns?

CARTVV. This is anſwered before vpon Math. 3.

Verſ. 36 ‡ Who was of Cainan, who was of Arphaxad, who was of Sem, who was of Noe, who was of Lamech.

RHEM. 5. [36 Who was of Cainan.] BEZA boldly wipeth out of this Goſpell, theſe wordes, who was of Cainan: though all the Greeke copies both of the old Teſtament and of the new, haue the wordes with full conſent, whereby we learne the intolerable ſaucines of the Caluiniſts, and their contempt of holy Scripture, that dare ſo deale with the very Goſpell it ſelfe.

Geneſ. 11. 1. Chron. 1.

CARTVV. 5. [36. Who was of Cainan.] The holy Ghoſt neither in the pedigree in Geneſis nor in the Chronicles, maketh any mention of Cainan, but paſſeth immediatly from Sale to Arphaxad, which led M. BEZA to leaue it out. The text of the old Teſtament and of the new, are alike authenticke, and the Goſpell is drawn from both: he can therefore hardly be ſaid to haue wiped out any part of the Goſpell, whoſe tranſlation accordeth with the truth of the old Teſtament: the new and the old being both of ſo ſweet and full conſent, and embracing one another ſo friendly, that he that taketh the one by the hand, giueth the welcome unto the other alſo. And if you had been as well prepared with arguments to haue bitten your aduerſaries, as you are by reviling words to barke againſt them, you would or euer you had ſo deeply condemned M. Beza, firſt haue anſwered this difficulty, why it is not liker that S. Luke followed the truth of the Hebrew, then the tranſlation of the ſeuenty. Beſides that, he had a moſt ancient Greeke copie that he followed, and if they had read Beda in this poynt, who vpon the difference in the Hebrew and Greeke, ſaith which of theſe are true, or if they bee both true, God knoweth, either they would at the leaſt haue diſſented with more modeſty from M. Beza in ſo difficult a thing, or elſe haue bewraied in how ſmall veneration they haue Venerable Beda, when he ſerueth not for their turne. But as for vs, we marry not this cauſe, but leaue it unto M. Beza owne defence. Onely let the reader conſider whether is more reaſonable M. Beza, which forſooke that Greek reading, moued with the authority of the old teſtament, or the Ieſuites which falſified the Pedigree of S. Luke, moued by the authority of Euſebius upon the verſe 23.

Verſe 20] He added this alſo aboue all, and ſhut up Iohn into Priſon.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 6. [20 He addeth this aboue all.] The fault of Princes and other great men, that cannot onely not abide to heare their faults, but alſo puniſh by death or impriſonment ſuch as reprehend them for the ſame (ſpecially if they warne them, as Prophets and Prieſts do, from God) is exceeding great.

CARTVV. 6. [20. S.

Verſ. 23. And IESVS himſelfe was beginning to be about thirtie yeeres olde: as it was thought, the ſonne of Ioſeph, who was [of Heli.

RHEM. 7. [23 Of Heli.] Whereas in Saint Matthew, Iacob is father to Ioſeph, and here Heli, the caſe was thus. Mathan (named in Saint Matthew) of his wife called Eſcha begate Iacob: and after his death, Melchi (named here in S. Luke) of the ſame woman begate Heli: ſo that Iacob and Heli were brethren of one mother. Thus Heli therefore marrying and dying without iſſue: Iacob his brother, according to the Law married his wife, and begate Ioſeph. and ſo raiſed vp ſeede to his brother Heli, whereby it came to paſſe, that Iacob was the naturall father of Ioſeph, which (as S. Matthew ſaith) begate him: and Heli was his legall father according to the Law, as S. Luke ſignifieth. Euſeb li. 1. *Ec. CARTVV 7. [23. Of Heli] Euſebius deceiueth you in that he maketh Melchi the father of Heli conſidering that S. Luke placeth both Matthath and Leui between, making Leui Melchies ſonne, and not Heli.

RHEM. 2. [13 Departed vntill a time.] No maruell if the deuill be often or alwayes buſie with Chriſtian men, ſeeing after he was plainly ouercome by Chriſt, yet did he not giue him ouer altogether, but for a time. The Deuills tentations.

RHEM. 3. [23 Done in Capharnaum.] God maketh choiſe of perſons and places where he worketh miracles or doth benefits, though he might do the ſame elſewhere if it liked his wiſdom. So doth he in doing miracles by Saints, not in all places, nor towards all perſons, but as it pleaſeth him. Aug. ep. 137. Miracles at one place and not at another.

Verſe 30. But he paſſing through the middes of them, went his way.

RHEM. 4. [30 Paſſing through the middes of them.] Either by making himſelfe inviſible, or alſo more wonderfully, penetrating the multitude and paſſing through them, as he did through the doore, his body either being without ſpace of place, or with other bodies in one place. By all which the like his doings mentioned in the Goſpell, it is euident that he can alter and order his bodie as he liſt, aboue the naturall conditions of a body. Chriſts body conteined in place aboue nature.

CARTVV.4. [30. Passing through the midst of them.] Your fable of Transubstantiation driueth you vnto an endeuour of transubstantiating the Scriptures: and where learned you to diuide Passing after this sort: you lay open your selues to the scorne of yong children; as if our Sauiour could not passe from one place to another, but either he must do it inuisibly, or else by changing the essentiall properties of his body, so that two bodies should be in one place at one time: when it is more agreeable vnto the words of the text, which note a naturall action, naturall instruments, and more answerable to the edifying of the Church in the faith of his Godhead, that passing with his leggs which are the naturall instruments of going, hee did by his diuine hand, make himselfe, as it were, a lane through the thickest of them. As Dauid doubteth not but that in Gods power he himselfe alone was able to breake through a troope of horsemen.

Verse 38. And IESVS rising vp out of the synagogue, entred into Simons house. * And Simons wiues mother was holden with a great feuer: and they besought him for her.

Mat. 8. 14. Mar. 1.30.

RHEM. 5. [38 Simons wiues mother.] It is euident that Peter had a wife, but after his calling to be an Apost, he left her, as S. Hierome writeth in many places. ep.34.c.2. ad Iulian. Li.1.adu. Iouin. See the Annot. Matth. 89.20.

CARTVV. 5. [38. Simons wiues mother.] If Ierom say that Peter left his wife, and Paul say, that he led his wife about with him: who shall here vaile the bonet? A Christian man would thinke, that Ierom should rise before the gray haires and graue head of Paul. But this point hath been further answered vpon Matth. 8.14.

1 Cor. 9.5.

CHAP. V.

Verse 3. AND he going vp into one ship that was Simons, desired him to bring it back a little from the land. And sitting, hee taught the multitudes out of the ship.

ANNOTATIONS.

Peters ship.

RHEM. 1. [3 One ship Simons.] It is purposely expressed there were two ships, and that one of them was Peters and that Christ went in that one, and sate down in it, and that sitting he taught out of that ship: no doubt to signifie the Church resembled by Peters ship, and that in it is the chaire of Christ and onely true preaching.

CARTVV. 1 [3. One ship Simons.] Looke the answer before vpon Math 8, 26.

Vers. 6. And when they had done this, they inclosed a very great multitude of fishes, and their nette was broken.

Peters fishing

RHEM. 2. [6 A great multitude of fishes.] Likewise by this figuratiue miracle wrought about Peters fishing, is euidently foreshewed what wonderfull successe Peter should haue in conuerting men to Christ, both Iewes and Gentiles, as when at one draught, that is to say, * at one Sermon he drew into his ship, which is Christs Church, a great number of men, as he did now fishes: and so continually by himselfe and his successors vnto the worlds end.

Acts 2. 41. 4.4.

CARTVV. 2. [6. A great multitude of fishes.] Successors in teaching the same doctrine, are the godly and learned ministers of the Gospell. But to the office of his Apostleship no man succeedeth, neither left the Apostles any brother behind them that could raise them a seed whom they might name by their names: much lesse is a Bishop Peters successors, least of all the Bishop of Rome, which hath remoued himselfe as farre from the doctrine and conuersation of Peter, as any other Bishop which couereth himselfe with the name of a Christian.

Verse 7. And they beckened to their fellowes that were in the other ship, that they should come and helpe them. And they came and filled both ships, so that they did sinke.

Peters coadiutors.

RHEM. 3. [7 Beckened to their fellowes.] Peter had so much worke that he called for help, and ioyned vnto him the other ship, representing to vs his Copartiners in the preaching of the Gospell and the coniunction of the Synagogue and the people of Gentilitie vnto Peters ship, that is, to the Church of Christ. Ambro. li.4 in Luc.c.vlt.

CARTVV. 3. [7. He beckned to their fellowes] If this allegoricall ship of the Gentiles bee staunch, and will hold out water; then Peters ship sinketh very low, in which the Synagogue of the Iewes was contained: so that the successe of the spirituall fishing in his ship, hath been but poore and pittifull. And because it liketh you thus to wander in your allegories, take home with you by your own measure, that they which came to helpe, came as fellowes, as copartners in the fish, as owners of their ship, as Peter was of his. He beckned indeed for them rather then praied them for to come, because silence was fit for fishing, but he beckned as to his equals, not as the Pope doth to other Bishops, as to his vnderlings and seruants, that haue their eares nailed to his chamber doore. And beside that you haue put that magistrally which Ambrose maketh a perhaps of, and for a doubtlesse doctrine, which he maketh a doubtfull opinion: you haue tied to another allegory of your own touching the Gentiles, which Ambrose speaketh not of.

Vers. 10. In like manner also Iames and Iohn the sons of Zebedee, who were Simons fellowes. And IESVS said to Simon, Feare not: from this time now, thou shalt be taking men.

RHEM. 4. [10 Thou shalt be taking men.] That all this aforesaid did properly meane Peters trauailes trauailes to come, in the conuerſion of the world to Chriſt, and his prerogatiue before all men therein, t is euident by Chriſts ſpecial promiſe made to him ſeuerally and apart in this place, that he ſhould be made the taker of men, though to other he giueth alſo, as to Peters cooperators and coadiutors, the like office. Mat. 4. 19. Peters precminance in fiſhing for mens ſoules.

CARTVV. 4. [10. Thou ſhalt be taking men.] Here is no prerogatiue unto Peter, but that was giuen to Andrew, and by proportion of calling belongeth unto all the Apoſtles. And the cauſe why it was here particularly vttered vnto Peter, is not that which the Ieſuites dogmatically teach without hauing a ſyllable of the text to fauour them: but the aſtoniſhment and feare whereunto the conſcience of Peters ſinne, by occaſion of the maieſtie of Chriſt ſhining ſo cleerely in this miracle, ſtroke him more then his fellowes. Hereupon came this particular application of a common grace: as the circumſtance of the text doth euidently conuince. Mat. 4. 19.

Verſ. 19. And not finding on which ſide they might bring him in for the multitude they | went vp vpon the roofe, and through the tiles let him down with the bed into the middes before IESVS.

RHEM. 5. [18 Went vp vpon the roofe.] A ſtrange diligence in procuring corporall health of and by Chriſt: and an example for vs of the like or greater, to obteine ſaluation of him either for our ſelues or our friends, and to ſeeke to his Church, and Sacraments with what extraordinary paine ſo euer. Zeale of ſoules.

Verſ. 20. (Whoſe faith when he ſaw, he ſaide, Man thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee.

RHEM. 6. [20 Whoſe faith] Great is God (ſaith S. Ambroſe) and pardoneth one ſort through the merits of others, therefore if thou doubt to obtaine forgiuenes of thy great offences, ioyne vnto thy ſelfe interceſſors, vſe the Churches helpe, which may pray for thee and obtaine for thee that which our Lord might deny to thy ſelfe. Amb. lib. 5. in Luc. The interceſſion of others.

CARTVV. 6. (20. Whoſe faith.) This is anſwered before, upon Math. 9. 2. Neither doe wee deny but that God forgiueth ſinnes at the prayers of other, in that by their prayers they obtaine faith unto the party, for whom they lift vp their hands: but as for the faithfull, they haue the ſelfe ſame promiſe in particular, which the Church hath in common, and therefore for his place is heard as well as the Church for hers.

Verſe 24. But that you may know that | the ſonne of man hath power in earth to forgiue ſinnes, (he ſaid to the ſick of the palſey) I ſay to thee, Ariſe, take up thy bed, and goe to thine houſe.

RHEM. 7. [24 The ſonne of man in earth.] By which acte (* ſaith Cyril) it is cleere that the Son of man hath power, to remit ſins: which he ſaid both for himſelf and vs. For he, as God in earth, being made man and Lord of the Law, forgiueth ſinnes. And we alſo haue obtained by him that wonderfull grace: for it is ſaid to his Diſciples, Whoſe ſinnes you ſhall remit, they are remitted to them. And how ſhould not he be able to remit ſinnes, who gaue other power to do the ſame. Prieſts doe remit ſinnes. In catena S. Thomæ. Ioh. 20. 23.

CARTVV. 7. [24. The Sonne.] This is anſwered before, vpon Math. 9. 2. 6. and Math. 16. 19.

Verſe 28 And | leauing all things, he roſe and followed him.

RHEM. 9. [28 Leauing all followed him.] The * profane Iulian charged Matthew of too much lightnes, to leaue all and follow a ſtranger, at one word, but in deed hereby is ſeene the maruelous efficacie of Chriſts word and internal working, that in a moment can alter the heart of man, and cauſe him nothing to eſteeme the things moſt deere vnto him, which he did not onely then in preſence, but alſo dayly doth in the Church. For ſo S. Antony, S. Francis, and others, by hearing onely the word of our Sauiour read in the Church, forſooke all and followed him. Hieron. in Mat. 9. Athan in vit. S. Antonij. Auguſt. conf. lib. 8. cap. 12 Bonau. in vit. S. Franciſci.

CARTVV. 9. [Leauing all followed him.] S. Mathewes plaſter againſt Iulians bit, is larger and ſtronger then is here alledged. For there is no doubt but he had heard of the name and miracles of Chriſt before. Beſides, notes of a diuine grauity and wiſedom ſhining in the face of our Sauiour Chriſt, which were able to helpe forward Mathewes perſwaſion of following Chriſt, which alſo is to be vnderſtood of Antonie, who not at that onely reading, was brought to forſake all; for Athanaſius noteth, that he was from his youth brought vp godlily. And in what ſence the forſaking of all is to be vnderſtood, hath been ſhewed out of Auguſtine to ſmall profit of the Ieſuites. Vpon Math. 19, 17.

What entertainment Bonauenture giueth S. Francis in his ſtory we eſteeme not: a worthy couer (no doubt) for ſuch a cup.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1 AND it came to paſſe on the ‡ Sabboth ſecond-firſt, when hee paſſed through the corne, the Diſciples did pluck the eares, and did eate rubbing them with their hands.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [1 Sabboth ſecond firſt.] S. Hierom (ep. 2. ad Nepotian. writeth of himſelf, that being at Conſtantinople, he asked his maſter Gregory Nazianzene, the famous Doctor, then Biſhop there, what Sabboth this was, who by his anſwer declared that it was very hard to tell, neither is it yet knowen to the beſt learned. Yet the Proteſtants are wont to ſay, All is very eaſie.

CARTVV. 1. [1 Sabboth ſecond-firſt.] Ieſuites promiſe of your ſelues. For many of our young Schollers know what this Sabboth meaneth: Yet wee ſuppoſe yee are neuer able to ſhew that the Proteſtants ſay that all is eaſie in the Scripture: Wee affirme that to the humble Reader there is alway food to kill hunger and ſlacke thirſt, that there bee no riddles or Delphicall anſweres, but ſuch as are written in the language and ſtile of a man: that is, which a man by ſeeking may come vnto at the leaſt in ſome good meaſure of a ſubſtantiall knowledge of the place.

Verſe 48. Hee is like to a man ‡ building a houſe, that digged deepe, and laid the foundation vpon a rocke. And when an inundation roſe, the riuer bette againſt that houſe, and it could not moue it, for it was founded vpon a rock.

RHEM. 2. [48. Building a houſe.] He buildeth right and ſurely, that hath both faith and good workes: he buildeth on ſand, that truſteth to his faith or knowledge of the Scripture, and doth not worke or liue accordingly.

CARTVV. 2. This is anſwered, vpon Math. 7. 1.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 3. And IESVS anſwering them, ſaid, ! neither this haue yee read which Dauid did when himſelfe was an hungred and they that were with him.

Heretickes vnderſtand not the Scriptures.

RHEM. 3. [3 Neither this haue you read.] The Scribes and Phariſees boaſted moſt of their knowledge of the Scriptures: but our Sauiour often ſheweth their great ignorance. Euen ſo the Heretikes that now a dayes vant moſt of the Scriptures and of their vnderſtanding of them, may ſoone be proued to vnderſtand little or nothing.

CARTVV. 3. [3 Neither this haue you read.] Hereupon that you are ſo learned in the Scriptures and wee ſo ignorant (belike) it commeth that wee call to the triall of the Scriptures, and you flee from their triall, as from a ſerpent that ſtingeth your cauſe to death. Heereupon alſo it is that wee call for the written Verities, and you for thoſe that are not written, and whereof a man cannot ſay as our Sauiour Chriſt in deciſion of a controverſie; How reade you?

Verſe 9 And IEVS ſaid to them, I aske you, if it bee lawfull on the Sabboth to do well or ill: to ! ſaue a ſoule or to deſtroy?

RHEM. 4. [9 Saue a ſoule.] Hereby it ſeemeth that Chriſt (as at other times lightly alwayes) did not onely heale this man in body, but of ſome correſpondent diſeaſe in his ſoule.

CARTVV. 4. [9 Saue a ſoule.] It is euident by the circumſtance that hee meaneth the life of a man and not his ſoule: For there was no queſtion among the Iewes whether the ſoule might bee healed vpon the Sabboth. And by the Ieſuites tranſlation and expoſition our Sauiour Chriſt is out of his liſts. The word alſo heere vſed doth divers times ſignifie the preſent life, which is common with him and other creatures that haue ſence.

Math. 6. 25 & 16. 39.

Verſe 12 And it came to paſſe in thoſe daies, hee went forth into the Mountain to pray, and hee paſſed the whole night in the prayer of God.

The Churches prayers at the time of giuing holy Orders.

RHEM. 5. [12 The whole night.] Our Sauiour inſtantly prayed, alone in the mount without doore, all night long, as a preparation to the deſignement of his Apoſtles the day after: to giue example to the Church of praying inſtantly when prieſtes are to be ordered, and a leſſon to vs all what wee ſhould do for our neceſſities when Chriſt did ſo for other mens.

CARTVV. 5. (12 The whole night. S.)

Verſe 13 * And when the day was come, hee called his Diſciples: and hee choſe twelue of them (! whom alſo hee named Apoſtles.)

RHEM. 6. [13 Whom he named Apoſtles. Here it is to be noted againſt our aduerſaries that deceitfully meaſure to the ſimple the whole nature and qualitie of certaine ſacred functions, by the primitiue ſignification and compaſſe of the names or wordes whereby they be called, with whom as a prieſt is but an elder, and a biſhop, a watchman, or Superintendent, ſo an Apoſtle is nothing but a Legate or Meſſenger, and therefore (as they argue) *can make no lawes nor preſcribe or teach any thing not expreſſed in his mandatum. Know therefore againſt ſuch deceiuers, that ſuch things are not to be ruled by the vulgar ſignification of the word or calling, but by vſe and application by the holy writers, and in this point by Chriſtes own expreſſe impoſition. And ſo this word Apoſtle, is a calling of Office, gouernment, authoritie, and moſt high dignity giuen by our Maſter, ſpecially to the College of the Twelue: whom hee endued aboue that which the vulgar etymologie of their name requireth, with power to binde and looſe, to puniſh and pardon, to teach and rule his Church. Out of which roome and dignity, which is called in the Pſalme and in the Acts, a biſhoprike, when Iudas fell, Mathias was choſen to ſupply it, and was numbered among the reſt, who were as founders or foundations of our religion, as the Apoſtle termeth them. Therefore to that college this name agreeth by ſpeciall impoſition and prerogatiue, though afterward it was by vſe of the Scriptures, extended to S. Paul and Barnabas, and ſometimes to the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, as alſo (by the like vſe of Scriptures) to the firſt conuerters of countries, to the faith, or their coadiutors in that function. In which ſenſe S. Paul chalengeth to be the Corinthians Apoſtle, and named Epaphroditus the Philippians Apoſtle: as we call S. Gregory and his diſciple S. Auguſtine, our Apoſtle of England. In all which taking, it euer ſignifieth, dignitie, regiment, Paternitie, Principalitie and Primacie in the Church of God, according to S. Paul 1. Cor. 12. He hath placed in his Church, firſt indeed Apoſtles &c. Whereby wee may ſee that S. Peters dignity was a wonderfull eminent Prerogatiue and Soueraintie, when he was the head not onely of other Chriſtian men, but the head of all Apoſtles, yea euen of the College of the Twelue. And if our Aduerſaries liſt to haue learned any profitable leſſon by the word Apoſtle, more profitably and truely truly they might haue gathered, that Christ called these his principall officers Apostles, or Sent (himselfe also specially aboue all other being Missus, that is, Sent. and called also Apostle in the Scriptures) to warne vs by the nature of the word, that none are true Apostles, Pastors, or Preachers, that are not specially sent and called, or that can not shew by whom they be sent, and that all Heretickes therefore be rather Apostates then Apostles, for that they be not sent, nor duely called nor chosen to preach. Luc.4. 18. Heb.3.1.

CARTVV.6. [13 Whom hee named Apostles.] The shaft of your impudent lying tongue must in the end needs returne upon your selues, seeing you shoote not priuily, but so impudently as you must needs bee discoured: for Master Caluin in the same place adorneth the Apostles with diuers priuiledges which are proper unto that calling, part whereof your selues alledge. Onely hee affirmeth that they were not to teach at pleasure, but as they receiued in commission, which he plainly proueth by the testimony of our Sauiour Christ, who commanded them to teach that which hee had enioyned unto them: Which reason with others, the Iesuites do not once touch, but bring forth that which is to no purpose: for although in respect of their doctrine they are the foundations of the Church, yet doth that doctrine no further beare the name of a foundation, then it selfe is grounded vpon the doctrine, that Christ commanded his Apostles to teach: whereupon the Apostle when any doubt entreth into the Church of his doctrine, alledgeth the authoritie and commandement of Christ, as if there were nothing that could cease the doubting thereof, but onely the knowledge that it was deliuered by him. And heere the example of the choise of Mathias is directly against you: for the Apostles durst not go about the appointment of another Apostle, which should stand in the watch tower that Iudas was in, but that they had the warrant thereof out of the Psalm. It is also the Iesuites vnskilfulnes that they make Epaphroditus the Phillipians Apostle, because he was a coadiutor in grounding their faith by teaching the Gospell, when the Apostle himselfe teacheth, that therefore hee was called their Apostle, because hee came with releise from them unto him, as other otherwhere are called the Churches Apostles, for the like respect of being sent with releise from the Churches. Yet is it greater ignorance and blindnesse that Paul is made an Apostle in the larger signification of an Apostle, and as Epaphroditus was to the Philipians, directly contrary to the Scipture, which matcheth his Apostleship with the best of the Apostles. As for your language of Gregory and Augustine the Monkes Apostleship, it is barbarous in the Church of God. If you had spoken of Apostates, you should haue beene better understood. Touching the authority of Peter ouer the rest of the Apostles, so often nakedly and barely affirmed it hath beene spoken of before, vpon Math. 16 & 17. *1.Cor. 11. 23. & 14. 37. & 15.3 Act.1.16. 24. Verse 23 | Bee glad in that day and reioyce: for behold your reward is much in heauen. For according to these things did their fathers to the Prophets.

RHEM.8. [23 Be glad.] The common miseries that fall to the true preachers and other Catholike men for Christes sake, as pouertie, famine, mourning, and persecutions, be indeed the greatest blessings that can be, and are meritorious of the reward of heauen. Contrarywise, all thy felicities of this world without Christ, are indeed nothing but woe, and the entrance to euerlasting miserie. All persecution for Christ is a blessing.

CAR TVV.8. Answered before, vpon *Math.*5.12.

Verse 26 Woe, when all men shall | blesse you. For according to these things did their fathers to the false Prophets.

RHEM.9. [26 Shall blesse you.] This wo pertaineth to the Heretickes of our dayes, that delight to haue the peoples prayses, blessings and shoutes, preaching pleasant things of purpose to their itching eares: as did the False-Prophets, when they were magnified and commended therefore of the carnall Iewes. The vanity of Heretical preachers.

CAR TVV.9. (26 Shall blesse you.) You can hardly seeke praise of well doing, that doe but the things which are euill: Whether wee seek praise or not, wee leaue it to the iudgement of others.

Verse 35 But loue yee your enemies: do good and lend, hoping for nothing thereby, and your reward shall be much, and you shall be the sonnes of the Highest, because himselfe is beneficiall upon the unkinde and the euill.

RHEM.10. [35 Lend, hoping nothing.] In that we may here seeme to be mooued to lend to those whom we thinke not able nor like euer to repay againe, it must be holden for a counsell rather then a commandement, except the case of necessitie, but it may be taken rather for a precept wherein vsury, that is to say, the expectation not of the lent, but of vantage for lone, is forbidden: as by other places of Scripture it is condemned, and is a thing against the Law of nature and nations. And great shame and pittie it is, that it should be so much vsed or suffered among Christians, or so couered and cloaked vnder the habite of other contracts, as it is. Against vsury

CAR TVV.10. Besides that the words are commanding, it hath been shewed vpon *Math.*19.12. that all Counsels of God to his people are commandements; and so necessary a commandement it is, that unlesse they do it they may not bee the seruants of God, as is declared in the same verse. As for the cause of Vsury, considering that it is no proper quarrell betweene us and you, wee passe it ouer; Admonishing the Reader, that this place which willeth a man to lend to him that hath need, although his enemy, and although it appeare a desperate debt, and hee should leese the principall: maketh nothing to this question.

RHEM. 2. [30 Deſpiſed the counſell.] As they condemned Iohns baptiſme, deſpiſed Gods counſell and wiſedome: ſo much more they that make no account of the Sacraments of the Church, deſpiſe Gods counſell and ordinance touching their ſaluation, to their own damnation.

Verſ. 38. And ſtanding behinde beſide his feet, ſhee began to ‡ water his feet with teares, and wiped them with the haires of her head, and kiſſed his feet, and annointed them with the ointment.

RHEM. 3. [38 Water his feete.] A perfect patterne of true penance in this woman, who ſought of Chriſt with open teares and other ſtrange works of ſatisfaction and deuotion, remiſſion of her ſinnes.

CARTVV. 3. [38] Satisfaction From us to God, and remiſſion from God to vs, can no more ſtand together, then marchandable paiment with bankerupt. For further anſwer, looke before, vpon Math. 3. 8.

Verſe 47 For the which I ſay to thee, Many ſinnes are forgiuen her, becauſe ſhee hath ‡ loued much. But to whom leſſe is forgiuen, he loueth leſſe.

RHEM. 4. [47 Loued much.] Not onely faith (as you may perceiue) but loue or charity obteineth remiſſion of ſinnes.

CARTVV. 4. (47. Loued much.) In the parable of the two debters, a greater and ſmaller, forgiuen, becauſe they had nothing to pay, there is firſt ſignified, that what or how little ſoeuer a man oweth vnto God, he is yet alwayes vnable to make payment. Secondly, our Sauiour Chriſt noteth, that the forgiueneſſe of the lebt of ſinne is a iuſt cauſe of loue, according to the meaſure and rate of the ſinnes forgiuen. As it is euident in ſuch debters from whom this ſimilitude is taken: which beare no ſpeciall loue to their creditors, vntill they know how they ſhall be dealt with by them in their debt which they are vnable to pay. Now if it ſhould be as the Ieſuites would haue it, that loue and the fruits thereof ſhould be a cauſe of remiſſion of ſins, our Sau. Chriſts application of the parable, ſhould be directly contrary to his parable; for here they make the greater ſinner to haue ſomewhat to ſatisfie, where the parable betokeneth, that not ſo much as the leſſer can do it. And that which in the parable he had made the cauſe of the loue of the forgiuen perſon, here he ſhould make it the effect of his loue, where the application alſo it ſelfe ſheweth the contrary, when it is ſaid to whom little is forgiuen, he loueth little. Let therefore the reader here learne to abhorre ſuch impudent wreſting of the word not onely to a diuers, but to a cleane contrary ſence of that the ſcripture meaneth. As touching theſe words, for becauſe, &c. that they are not onely notes of arguments of the cauſe to the effect, but alſo of the effect to the cauſe, and otherwiſe, ſee before, vpon Math. 25. 34. 35. How alſo agreeth it with your doctrine of ſatisfaction, that ſo grieuous a ſinner as was this woman, ſhould and that ſo ſuddenly, by loue deſerue the forgiueneſſe of her mortall ſinne.

Verſe 49 And they that ſate together at the table, began to ſay within themſelues, ‡ Who is this that alſo forgiueth ſins?

RHEM. 5. [49 Who is this that.] As the Phariſees did alwayes carpe Chriſt for remiſſion of ſinnes in earth, ſo the heretikes reprehend his Church that remitteth ſinnes by his authority.

CARTVV. 5. (49. This is anſwered before, vpon Math. 9. 3.

Verſe 5 For he loueth our nation: and he hath built a Synagogue for us.

ANNOTATIONS.

Building of Churches, Monaſteries, &c.

RHEM. 6. [5 Built a Synagogue.] As at that time to found a Synagogue, was acceptable to God, and procured the prayers of the faithfull people for whoſe vſe it was made: ſo now much more in the New Teſtament, to build a Church, Monaſtery, College, or any like worke for the honour and ſeruice of God, is gratefull to him, and procureth the prayers of the good people for whoſe vſe ſuch things be founded.

CARTVV. 6. (5. Build a Synagogue. S.] Onely we except that kinde of Monaſtery wherein the Popiſh Monkes may neſtle and breed yong.

Verſe 44 And turning to the woman, hee ſaid vnto Simon, Doeſt thou ſee this woman? I entred into thy houſe, water to my feet thou didſt not giue: but ſhee with teares hath watred my feet, and with her haires hath wiped them.

RHEM. 7. [44 Into thy houſe.] An exceeding approbation of the extraordinary workes and

signes of externall deuotion, which ſeeme to carnall men (though otherwiſe faithfull) to be often ſuperfluous or not acceptable. This Simon was perhaps of a good will, and therefore (as diuers other did elſewhere) inuited Chriſt to his houſe, not of curioſity or captiouſneſſe, as ſome other did: but of affection, as it may ſeeme by Chriſts familiar talke with him. Notwithſtanding his duties towards him were but ordinary: but the annointing, waſhing, kiſſing, wiping of his feet in ſuch ſort as the woman did, were further ſignes of more then vulgar loue: ſuch as is in deuout men or women that go on pilgrimage, and kiſſe deuouly the holy memories of Chriſt and his Saints. Which is no more but an exteriour expreſſing of their affection, and that they loue much, as euery vulgar Chriſtian man doth not. Exterior ſignes of more then common deuotion.

CARTVV. 5. (44. Into thy houſe.) All the tooles you haue cannot make your Popiſh Pilgrimes euen and leuell with the noble duty of this godly woman, vnleſſe you can make home-keepers, gadders abrode: and the memories of Chriſt and his Saints equall and alike, to be honoured with the perſon of our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe, to whom this woman did diuine honour. And therefore theſe pilgrimages are as the high and greene hills of the Iſraelites, where men went a whooring after their own hearts, worſhipping the creatures, paſſing by the Creator, which is bleſſed for euer. Amen.

Verſe 50 And he ſaid to the woman, Thy faith hath made thee ſafe, Goe in peace.

RHEM. 8. [50 Thy faith.] The remiſſion of her ſinnes being attributed before to charity, is now alſo ſayd to come of her faith. Whereby you may know that it commonly proceedeth of both, and of hope alſo, though but one named. Becauſe when there be diuers cauſes concurring to one effect, the Scriptures commonly name but one, and that eſpecially which is moſt proper to the purpoſe and time, not excluding the other. And therefore his working miracles vpon any perſon, is attributed to the faith of them on whom or at whoſe deſire they be done. Becauſe he wrought his miracles to induce all men to beleeue in him, and therefore ſpecially required faith at their hands, and namely before other things, whether they did beleeue that he was able to doe that which they asked at his hands: without which it had been rather a mockery and tentation of him, then a true deſire of benefit at his hands. Iuſtification attributed not to faith onely.

CARTVV. 6. (50. Thy faith.) Loue and Hope concurre in ſaluation, but not as cauſes, but as effects and fruits of the man that is ſaued by faith. And ſhew vs if you can, that either our Sauiour Chriſt or his Apoſtles euer ſaid, Thy workes or thy loue hath ſaued thee, or thou haſt peace by thy workes, or by thy loue, as of faith it is often ſpoken. It is indeed ſaid of Hope, that we are ſaued by, or rather in it; but in farre other ſence then when it is ſayd, that we are ſaued by faith. For the meaning is nothing elſe but that our ſaluation is a thing that is not apparantly ſeene, but that which lieth in hope, or is hoped for, making hope no cauſe of our ſaluation, but onely a thing neceſſarily annexed thereunto, as the whole circumſtance of the place doth conuince. Iam. 2. 24.

Verſe 13 For they vpon the rocke: ſuch as when they heare, with ioy receiue the word: and theſe haue no rootes, becauſe ‡ for a time they beleeue, and in time of tentation they reuolt.

RHEM. 1. [13 For a time.] Againſt the heretikes that ſay, faith once had can not be loſt, and that he which now hath not faith, neuer had,

CARTVV. 1. (13. For a time.) The true and iuſtifying faith certainly apprehending the mercy of God in Chriſt, once had, can neuer be loſt, becauſe he that beleeueth hath already euerlaſting life, and ſhall neuer die, which could not be if he ſhould at any time leeſe faith, without which there is no life. Secondly, becauſe that the nature of this faith is to proceed from faith to faith, and from leſſe to more, whereupon it is ſaid, that whoſoeuer drinketh of this water, ſhall neuer thirſt, for that it is a well or fountaine of liuing water in him welling or ſpringing to eternall life. Therefore thoſe which fall away were neuer of the Church, and therefore had neuer true faith. Thirdly, becauſe the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. It were alſo abſurd, that Chriſt praying to his father, that the faith of his elect faile not, ſhould be refuſed of him, or his petition denied. But as for the faith which is a naked perſwaſion of the truth of the Goſpell, without any ſpeciall application of it to themſelues in their harts, it is no maruell if the tempeſt of tentation do carry it away, as that which grew rather vpon the tongues end, then tooke root in the mould of the heart, *Ioh. 3. 15. 6. 40. & 11. 26. For this building, as appeareth in this place, and diuers others quoted in the Margent: All which being wartes and ſcarres in Peters face, if they ſerue for prerogatiues, I will not deny but that hee which boaſteth of Peters ſucceſſion, is the moſt priuiledged and prerogatiued man that is in the world. As hee that from the top of the crown, vnto the ſole of his foote, is full, not of wartes or ſcarres, but of boyles and botches; ſo that hee is nothing elſe but a Church byle, all feſtered and mattery: yet if all theſe ſpeeches of Peter had beene aduiſed and commendable they could proue no prerogatiue of power but of order onely.

ANNOTATIONS.

Holy women that followed Chriſt.

RHEM.4[3.That did miniſter] It was the cuſtom of the Iewes that women of their ſubſtance did miniſter meate and drinke and cloth to their teachers, going about with them, which becauſe it might haue been ſcandalous among the Gentiles, S. Paul maketh mention that he vſed it not And thy miniſtred to our Lord of their ſubſtance for this cauſe, that he whoſe ſpirituall benefits they reaped, might reape their carnall things.

CART VV.4.[3.That did miniſter] It cannot bee ſhewed that either this miniſtring by women was a cuſtome among the Iewes, or ſcandalous amongſt the Gentiles. But the contrary rather appeareth, for that this liberality of women roſe of an extraordinary feeling of Gods mercy in Chriſt. And as for the place to the Corinthes, it is vnderſtood of the Apoſtles wiues, as ſhall bee ſhewed in the proper place. And that Paul therefore abſtained from this (becauſe it was ſcandalous among the Gentiles) it is not onely vngroundedly but malepartly, and very ignorantly ſpoken: malapertly, becauſe omitting both the cauſes why Paul would not bee chargeable to certaine Churches expreſſed in the Scripture, they haue put in a cauſe of their own head without any warrant of the word: Ignorantly, for that the Iewes vnto whom the Apoſtles Preached when they carried about their wiues (as the Ieſuites ſay certaine Matrones) were ſcattered amongſt the Gentiles, and dwelt in the face and daily ſight of them. So that if the ſcandale of the Gentiles had beene the cauſe why Paul had forborne that which the other Apoſtles did in this behalfe, there was the ſame cauſe for them to haue forborne this Cuſtome as well as hee. Beſide that, to what Nation is it not ſcandalous for a man to lead a woman that is none of his wife about the Countrey with him whereſoeuer hee goeth? eſpecially if ſhee bee the wife of another man. As for our Sauiour Chriſt, his holineſſe did ſhine forth ſo cleere as the heavens, beſides hee was accompanied with twelue Diſciples, and the women that in that iourney miniſtred to him were Many, and a great multitude of people ſtill followed after him to heare his words, and to bee healed by him

But they are called his brethren (according to the vſuall ſpeech of the Scriptures) becauſe they were his couſins either the ſons of Ioſeps brother, or (as the more receiued opinion is) the ſonnes of our Ladies ſiſter called Mary of Iames, which Iames therefore is alſo called the brother of our Lord.

A third place after this life

RHEM.6.(55 Her ſpirit returned.) This returning of the ſoules againe into the bodies of them whom Chriſt and his Apoſtles raiſed from death (ſpecially Lazarus, who had been dead foure dayes) doth euidently proue a third place againſt our aduerſaries, that ſay, euery one goeth ſtraight to Heauen or to Hell, for it cannot be thought that they were called from the one or the other, and therefore from ſome third place.

CART VV.6. [55 Her ſpirit returned.] If indeed your doctrine were true of heauen merited: wee would not deny but that their might bee ſome iniuſtice to call him, from the ioyes of heaven for a certaine time. But ſeeing it is the free grace of God, and that God is debtor to none for his glories ſake, and for the edifying of the Church (which was notably performed in this miracle) hee may doe with his own as to his Fatherly wiſedome ſeemeth good, to abbridge them for a time of their taſted felicity. That I ſpeake nothing of the further felicity which was by this meanes of longer life faithfully led, added vnto the reuiued after their finall death, eſpecially to Lazarus who being a ſingular inſtrument of ſetting forth Gods glory, was out of all doubt glorified of the Lord accordingly. But yet this wee cannot let eſcape, that Lazarus who did not onely beleeue in Chriſt, but had a ſeuerall kinde of intereſt in our Sauiour Chriſts familiarity and friendſhip, is lodged of the Ioſuites in Purgatory. A man would thinke that our Sauiour Chriſts friends ſhould bee better accommodated. But the Pope, enemy to Chriſt, bearing the keyes of Heauen, Hell, Purgatory and all, it is no maruaile, although our Sauiour Chriſts friends are euill beſtomed and thruſt into his ſcalding houſe.

And withall thus haue they ouerthrown their vnsauory destinction which allotteth onely the middle sort which are neither very good nor very bad to take vp their baite in Purgatory or euer they can come into heauen. But you forget your selues further, for although a third place were granted, you could not thereupon conclude Purgatory: for you make a Lymbus or skirt of hell, the common Inne for all the faithfull that died, before Christ harrowed hell according as you use to speake. And there, but that you are fallen out with your selues, and turnesick with the maze of your own inuentions, you would haue bestowed Lazarus.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. AND calling together the twelue Apostles, hee gaue them ‡ vertue and power ouer all deuils, and to cure all maladies.

MARGINAL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. (1 Vertue and power.) To command deuils and diseases either of body or soule, is by nature proper to God onely: but by Gods gift, men also may haue the same, euen so to forgiue sinnes.

CARTVV. 1. [1 Vertue and power.] But as the Apostles could not worke miracles vpon all men that stood in need of them (the spirit forbidding them to offer grace to some) but vpon those to whom they were directed, euen so could they not giue remission of sinnes but to those which beleeued. Truth it is that they would not remit any but such; but it is also true, that they could not if they would. Act. 16. 6. 7

Verse 41. And IESVS answering said, ‡ O faithlesse and peruerse generation, how long shall I be with you and suffer you? bring hither thy sonne.

RHEM. 2. (41 O faithlesse.) Incredulity hindreth the effect of exorcismes, and other miraculous power giuen to the Church.

CARTVV. 2. This is answered before vpon Matth. 17. 19.

Verse 27. And I say to you assuredly, There bee some standing heere that shall not taste death, till they see the kingdom of God.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 3. (27 Till they see.) To the Apostles, that had to preach the kingdom of God, and to suffer so much misery for the same in this world, he will shew his glory, and giue them a taste of his owne ioyfull state and of his Saints in heauen, calling thither Moyses and Elias, that the Law and Prophets might be witnesses of the same. See the Annot. vpon Mat. c. 17. 1. The Transfiguration.

Verse 53. And they receiued him not, because his ‡ face was to go to Hierusalem.

RHEM. 4. (53 Face to goe to Hierusalem.) The Samaritans were Schismatickes from the Iewes, and had a Schismaticall temple in mount Garizim, of purpose to draw men thither from Gods temple in Hierusalem, where onely was the true and as it were the Catholike seruice and sacrifice vnto God. Therefore they did not gladly receiue our Sauiour, because they did perceiue hee was going to Hierusalem. Schismaticks, Ioh. 4. 9. 3. Reg. 12. 27. Tob. 1.

Verse 55. And turning, ‡ hee rebuked them, saying, You know not of what spirit you are.

RHEM. 5. (55 He rebuked them.) Not iustice nor all rigorous punishment of sinners is here forbidden, nor Elias fact reprehended, nor the Church or Christian Princes blamed for putting Heretickes to death: but that none of these should be done for desire of our particular reuenge, or without discretion, and regard of their amendment, and example to others. Therefore S. Peter vsed his power vpon Ananias and Saphira, when he strooke them both down to death for defrauding the Church. Desire of reuenge. The Churches seuerity. Act. 5.

Verse 62. IESVS said to him, ‡ No man putting his hand to the plough, and looking back, is apt for the Kingdome of God.

RHEM. 1. (26 No man looking backe.) It is a dangerous temptation for a man that hath lost his goods for Christ, to looke much backe at them, and to remember with delight the pleasures and ease of this world, for it breedeth in him discontentment of the troubles and crosses that are incident to the state of such as fully follow Christ. In which case a man should euer looke forward towards heauen, and neuer backward to the world. Looking backe.

Verse 16 ‡He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me.

RHEM. 2. (16 He that heareth.) It is all one to despise Christ, and to despise his Priests and Ministers in the Catholike Church: to refuse his doctrine, and theirs.

CARTVV. 2. (16) This is true if you meane of Christs true Ministers, and not of your Popish and Antichristian Priests and Prelats.

Supererogatio, ἐπερογὴ ἁμαρτιῶν.

Verse 35 And the next day he tooke forth two pence, and gaue to the host, and said, Haue care of him: and whatsoeuer thou shalt ‡supererogate, I at my return will repay thee.

RHEM. 3 (35. Supererogate.) S. Augustine saith that the Apostle (1. Cor. 9.) according to this place did so supererogate, that is, did more then he needed or was bound to doe, when he might haue required all dueties for preaching the Gospell, but would not. li. de op. Monach. c. 5. whereof it commeth, that the workes which we doe more then precept, be called workes of Supererogation: and whereby it is also euident against the Protestants, that there be such workes. See Optatus li. 6. cont. Parmen. how aptly he applieth this parable to S. Paules counsell of virginitie 1. Cor. 7.) as to a worke of supererogation.

CARTVV. 3. (35. Supererogate.) If the Scripture do allow of the works of Supererogation, yet were it as unseasonable here to speak of them, as a tempest in the midst of haruest. For it is euident, that our Sauiour by this parable goeth about to breake their pride, which esteemed that they can bee iustified by the obseruation of the Law. And therefore where to procure the easier keeping of the law, the Scribes by the word Neighbour understood their friends onely; our Sauiour sheweth by this parable, that the enemy also was understood in the compasse of that word: where it is to be obserued, that the Pharisee, as sightlesse as he was in the law, and as senseleesse in the knowledge of his owne vnability, yet notwithstanding saw thus farre, that no man was able to loue his enemy as himselfe. Now if our Sauiour Christ should by the same parable teach, that a man cannot onely fulfill the commandements, but also adde a surcrease and ouer-plus of good workes: hee should haue sowen this peece of ground in the Scripture, not with diuers, but with contrary seeds, and should haue placed the cabbadge neere vnto the vine, neere whereunto it cannot prosper. Further, it is contrary vnto the answer which our Sauiour Christ gaue to the like question; where being demanded of the rule of good workes, our Sauiour Christ defineth it by the law of commandements: so that if there be any good worke, it is contained there, as also the good workes are described by obedience, which in matter of good workes presupposeth a commandement: beside that it is expressly forbidden in the law, that any should adde thereunto. And doe the Iesuits thinke that the Samaritan hauing brought the wounded Iew into the Inne, had discharged a good duty of neighbourhood, if after he had left him there vnprouided of such things as the Inne wanting, the Samaritan abounded in. And if they thinke so, they little consider what force the law hath, that commandeth to ease euen the Asse of the enemy, if in falling vnder the load, the poore beast should haue been in perill of his life. As touching Augustine, he speaketh indeed of Paul supererogating, but his meaning is plaine, that he supererogated more then the Churches could require of him, but not more then the Lord did require of him: which is manifest in the same chapter, in that he saith, that otherwayes he should haue hindered the Gospell, and abused his authority. Now doe the Iesuites thinke, that it is at the free choyce of the Minister, whether he will abuse his authority, or use it well, lay a block in the Gospels way, or remoue it. And in another place he calling this duty to the fifth commandement, as to a head, affirmed that it belonged vnto him as a spirituall Father so to doe. And that he had no such meaning of Supererogation, it appeareth, in that hee saith, Thou dost altogether gine for nought, sauest for nought, for thou findest nothing in vs whereof to saue, and thou findest much whereof to condemne. Optatus also so expoundeth himselfe, that he serueth nothing to the Iesuites desire. For expounding the two pence to be the two Testaments, he sheweth that the other is no commandement fully laid out. For wee our selues hold, that it is folded in diuers circumstances of the persons, and of the gifts, and is not generally and simply commanded as the constant duties of married persons: giuing thereby to vnderstand, that it is so a counsell, that it is also a commandement, although not so expressed and said out as the two pence giuen to the host, but reserued in the decke untill circumstances draw it forth.

ANNOTATIONS.

The humble vnlearned Catholicke knoweth Christ better the the proud learned Hereticke.

RHEIM. 4. (21 To little ones.) By this vulgar place euery artificer may not presume that God hath reuealed all trueth to him, and therefore refuse to be taught of the learned, for Christ did not afterward endew fishers and vulgar men nor any other with the gifts of wisdome and tongues, without their industry, study, and teaching, though at the beginning, of great prouidence he did it, that it might be cleere to the world, that all Nations were conuerted to him, not by perswasion of cunning Orators or subtill Disputers, but by the plaine force of his grace and trueth, which S. Augustine counteth greater then all other miracles. Further we are taught by this place, that the poore humble obedient children dren of the Church know by their faith the high mysteries of Christs Diuinitie, and his presence in the B. Sacrament, and such like: rather then Arius, Caluin, and other like proud Scribes and Pharisees.

Verse 28 And he said to him, Thou hast answered right, | this doe, and thou shalt liue.

RHEM.5.(28 This doe.) Not by faith onely, but by keeping Gods commandements we obtaine life euerlasting: not onely by beleeuing but by doing. The hereticks say that it is impossible to keep this commandement of louing God with all our heart. But the Scriptures giue vs example of diuers that haue kept and fulfilled it, as farre as is requisite in this life. 3.*Reg.*14.8. 2.*Par.*15,15. *Ps.*118.10 Eccles 47.9,10.4.*Reg.*20.3,5.*Luc.*1.5. CARTVV.5. [28. This doe.] Not by faith onely conclude you. No not by faith in part say we, if it be true that you would here gather, that we are saued by doing and that perfect Iustice standeth by doing and working so as the law prescribeth: which if you be ashamed of, then it followeth, that although here be a way prescribed to heauen, yet that it is a way which was neuer, nor can be beaten with the foot of any man, our Sauiour Christ onely excepted. And therefore that our Sauiour Christs answer to the Scribe, was made according to the words of the question, by what doing one might be saued? wherein that our Sauiour Christ left the Scribe in his mire, and opinion of his owne righteousnesse, without further instruction of the truth, it came upon this; that he came to entrap and to tempt our Sauiour Christ, as the Euangelist noteth. Comming therefore to mocke him, himselfe was worthily mocked: whereas our Sauiour Christ towards the young man and Prince asking the same question with some affection to know the truth, beareth himselfe farre otherwise: for by bidding him sell that which he had, and follow him, he would haue taught him in one of the smaller commandements, how farre he was ouershot in his opinion of fulfilling of the law. For seeing hee tooke our Sauiour Christ to be a teacher sent of God, he faulted against the first and eighth commandement, in that being commanded of God, by the ministery of our Sauiour Christ to distribute unto the poore, he obeyed not. And seeing the law requireth obedience unto God euen to the losse of life, it must needs follow, that the obedience which is to the losse of goods; is much more commanded by it: And that herein hee brake the law of God, it is yet more euident, when as our Sauiour Christ vpon this refusall of his, affirmed that it was hard, yea impossible for rich men to enter into the kingdom of heauen, which notwithstanding lieth wide open for those that fulfil the law. Now our Sauiour Christ hauing conuinced him in his conscience of the breach of the law, would no doubt (if the yong man had harkened unto him) further haue instructed him in the way of saluation: especially considering that he meant to haue called him to the ministery of the word, and to be a daily and continuall follower of his. But this question of the way to saluation is notably decided by Paul and Silas, which being asked of the Iaylor, so farre void of the opinion of his owne iustice, that in the conscience of his own wickednesse, hee was euen at the very doore of desparation, in what doing he might be saued: answer plainly, that in beleeuing in the Lord Iesus he should be saued. Both these poynts, that neither the Law is able to saue, and that onely faith doth saue, as they haue certaine and cleare testimonies of the word, so so haue they the approbation of antiquity. Irenæus affirmeth, That the Law doth onely discouer sinne, but taketh it not away. Augustine saith, That all the commandements of God are then esteemed to bee done, when it is forgiuen whatsoeuer is not done: That woe is to the life if it be neuer so comendably led, when it receiueth iudgement without mercy. And where they say that they keepe the Law so farre as it is requisite, giving thereby to vnderstand, that an unperfect keeping of the Law will satisfie the iustice of God: they are manifestly ouerthrown by the words of the Law, which pronounceth for cursed him that doth not abide in all that is written to do it. Touching the examples of righteous men which they haue heere raked together, they are all answered before, vpon Luke 1.6. in the example of Zachary and Elizabeth, considering that such as was their righteousnesse, such is the righteousnesse of the rest. Touching the other point, that by faith alone wee are iustified, Ierome affirmeth, That by faith alone God doth iustifie. Basil also, That that is truely to glory when a man is not extolled for his own iustice, but doth acknowledge himselfe destitute of true righteousnesse, and yet by onely faith in Christ to bee iustified. Augustine, That a man is not iustified by the precepts of good life, but by faith in Christ; not by the law of workes, but by the Law of faith; not by the letter but by the Spirit, not by the merit of deeds, but by a free willing grace. Wherefore it is apparant that in the Marginall note vpon the 19 of Mathew, Augustine is shamefully wrasted from his meaning: for hee maketh the doing of good workes necessarily annexed to him that shall bee saued, and that the faith from the which they are remoued cannot saue, as that which is no true faith: Where the Iesuites would haue the workes copartners with faith in the cause of our saluation. And this Augustine doth euidently declare, when hee speaketh not of the true but of a dead faith, For otherwise it is euident by Augustine, That hee placeth the righteousnesse of a man not in that hee hath done any good, but in that his sinnes are forgiuen him, which remission of sinnes is obtained by faith. *Luk.*18.18 *Mat.*19.18 *Act.*16.30. 31. *Lib.*3.cap. 20. *Lib.*1. extract. c.19. In confess.lib 9.cap. 13. *Deu.*27.26 *Gal.*3.10. *Hieron in Rom.*10. in initio. De humilit. Aug. de spirit. & litera. cap. 13. Calce. Aug.in Psal. 31 in initio. Act. 10.43

Verse 30 And IESVS taking it, said, a certaine man went down from Hierusalem into Iericho, and fell among theeues, who also spoiled him, and giuing him wounds went away leauing him | halfe-dead.

RHEM.6.[30 Halfe dead.] Here is signified man wounded very sore in his vnderstanding and free-will, and all other powers of soule and body, by the sinne of Adam: but yet that neither vnderstanding nor free-will, nor the rest, were extinguished in man or taken away. The Priest and Leuite signifie the Law of Moyses: this Samaritan, is Christ the Priest of the new Testament: the oyle and wine, his Sacraments: the host, the priests his ministers. Whereby is signified, that the Law could not recouer the spirituall life of mankind from the death of sin that is, iustifie man: but Christ onely, who Concil. Aran 2.c.25.to.1 *Conc. Trid. Sess.*6.c. 1. The parable of the wounded man explicated.

who by his passion and the grace and vertue thereof ministred in and by his Sacraments, iustifieth, and increaseth the iustice of man, healing and abling free will to doe all good workes.

CARTVV.6. [30 Halfe dead.] Your fond Allegory is not able once to looke the plaine and simple word in the face, which teacheth not that wee are halfe dead, but that wee are wholy dead. Esay 2. 1. Ioh.3. 3.7. Rom. 6. 5. Ioh.11. 26. 27. In which respect it is said that wee must bee borne againe to enter into the kingdom of heauen: Heereupon our reformation in the Gospell is called Resurrection, which is a rising euen from the dead, and not the turning of a sicke bed into a whole, as the Papists make it. And therefore the Euangelist noting the particular doctrine which the raysing up of Lazarus doth yeeld, teacheth it to bee that our Sauiour Christ is the resurrection, not onely of those that haue finished this life, but of those which beleeuing do liue still. The ancient Councell (for of the conspiracy of Trent wee make no account) is directly against you, not onely in the seuenth Chapter where it affirmeth him to bee deceiued by an hereticall spirit, which esteemeth that by strength of nature hee is able to think so much as a good thought: and divers other chapters, but also in the same chapter which is heere alledged, where the Councell esteeming that a naturall man may do good workes in shew; addeth, that hee cannot do it as hee ought; not for that hee is not able to do it perfectly and exactly as the law requireth, but, as the Councell it selfe saith, because hee doth it not for Gods sake, which must necessarily be at the beginning of euery good work. But to make this Allegory true in some sort, that in no sort is Theologicall, That small portion of life that remaineth in a man after his fall must bee vnderstood of his hability to reason, discourse, for-see dangers to come, and in a word to prouide for the things of this life: for in the matters pertaining to the life to come, hee is so bound with the bands of death, that hee is not able to set one foot before another.

Verse 42 But one thing is necessary. | Mary hath chosen the best part which shall not bee taken away from her.

The Contemplatiue or Religious life, better then the Actiue and Secular. RHEM.7.[42 Marie the best part.] Two notable examples, one of the life Actiue, in Martha the other of the life Contemplatiue, in Mary: representing vnto vs, that in holy Church there should be alwayes some to serue God in both these seuerall sorts. The life Contemplatiue is here preferred before the actiue, the Religious of both sexes are of that more excellent state, and therefore our Protestantes haue wholy abandoned them out of their common wealth, which the true Church neuer wanted. But to say truth, they haue neither Martha nor Mary, our Lord giue them grace to see their misery. If ours were not answerable to their profession, or were degenerated, why haue thy no new ones? If our Churches votaries vowed vnlawfull things, Chastitie, Pouertie, Obedience, Pilgrimage: what other Votaries or lawfull vowes haue they? For to offer voluntarily by vow (besides the keeping of Gods commandements, whereunto we are bound by precept & promise in our Baptisme) our soules, bodies, goods, or any other acceptable thing to God, is an act of soueraine worship belonging to God onely; and there was neuer true religion without such vowes and Votaries. If there be none in their whole Church that professe contemplation, or that vow any thing at all to God voluntarily, neither in their bodies nor in their goods: God and the world know they haue no Church, nor religion at all.

Vowes and votaries.

CARTVV.7. [42 Mary the best part.] Contemplation (as wee esteeme it) is a deep muse and meditation of the mind, which could not bee performed by Mary when shee had set her eares with all diligence to heare the doctrine of our Sauiour Christ. The discourse and contemplation of the minde ought rather to follow the doctrine then to accompany it, whereby the minde being distracted by discourse, should bee vnable to vnderstand that which is taught. And if this bee a contemplatiue life to heare the Word spoken, when by those that haue calling thereunto, it is brought euen into their houses or Churches, then it is cleere that all the whole Church ought to leade a contemplatiue life: And if Marthaes bee an actiue life, it is as euident that there may bee no actiue life in the Church: for our Sauiour Christ blameth Martha for embracing more then shee was able (with her duety towards God) to ouercome, and checketh her for that shee did not as her sister Mary did. Whereby all men may see how pittifull and miserable you bee in your proofes for your votaries; And, but that wee haue conscience to wrest the Word to an other sense then it is written, wee could shew you Augustine that all ought first to bee Marthaes and then Maries: likening Maries estate to the state of the godly after this life, and Marthaes to our Christian conuersation upon earth. And where you say, that the Church of God hath neuer beene without your votaries of both sexes, you first forget that in the Church vnder the Law the single life was not esteemed, whereupon it commeth, Iepthes daughter bewailed this, that shee should die a Virgine. Heereupon also it came that the profession of the Nazarites, which was the most solemne vow in that Church, was not restrained, not so much as the small time of their vow, from marrying. Afterward you forget the exhortation of the Apostle, which will haue yonger widowes although poore, and such as depend upon the Churches releife, to mary, to bring forth children, and to keep house, leauing the solitary life, especially for women aboue three-score yeares. Last of all you forget your selues, which making it a necessary estate in the Church, hold notwithstanding that it is not commanded, but at the free choise of euery one, whether they will put their neckes vnder that yoke or no: whereas if it had beene so necessary an estate in the Church of God, there is no doubt but the Lord would haue made surer worke then to haue left it at mens courtesies: Not to speak of your false Translation of best part for good part, thereby to inforce your argument the more.

Verse 41. But yet « that that remaineth, ‡ giue almes, and behold all things are cleane vnto you.

RHEM. 5. [41 Giue almes.] The great force of almes is here and in diuers places of holy write signified. In one place, they extinguish sinne: in another, they deliuer from death: in another, to them giuen or omitted, our iudgement to heauen or hell is attributed, and here they make cleane and satisfie for the Iewes former offences for (as Augustine saith c. 70, Enchiridij) almes deeds profit not a man that hath a will to continue his sins, but thy are to be done for a propitiation to God of former offences. Now how well the Protestants like this doctrine so euidently set forth in Scripture, let the indifferent iudge, and how well it agreeth with their onely faith. The force of almes. Eccles. 3. 33. Dan. 4. 24. Tob. 4. 12. 11. 9. Mat 25. 35 42.

CARTVV. 5. [41 Giue Almes.] Verse 39. declareth, that hee recommendeth Almes not for any great Princedome it hath among other Christian vertues, but onely that hee might oppose it to the ravine and pillage whereof the Pharises were full. Neither is it said that Almes doth make them cleane, or doth saue them, but that they are cleane which giue Almes, which hee might haue spoken of the most inferiour duty that can be: considering that none of them is found, but in such which are through faith cleansed. Now seeing that neither they, nor any of them, is able to be done but of a cleansed, and iustified man: it followeth that as effects or seales of our cleansing they shew forth our deliuerance from our spirituall leprosie and uncleannesse. Neither is the almes any more the cause of cleannesse, then the markes of purgation, which came after restitution of health, are causes of the restored health: which one answer serueth to all these allegations, that carry any authority with them; sauing onely, that that out of Daniel may be understood of a redemption from the plagues that were to fall upon the Babylonian oppressors in this life; which by an outward restitution onely, or giuing where they could not restore; might happily haue been turned away: considering that the Lord doth sometime reward an obedience in shew, with temporall benefites, as in Achab and Iehu. And to this sence the estate both of the King and of Daniel, may be understood. For in that Daniel was the Kings Counsellor for the preseruation both of him and his Common wealth, hee discharged the trust of his office by forewarning their ruines, and shewing their remedy. And in that Nebuchadnezzar was not in the couenant, but barred out of it, partly by the partition wall of the ceremonies, and further by shamefull blasphemy against God, and extreme cruelty against men, the Saints especially: therefore the Prophet without a speciall calling from God, would not enter into speech with him, of obtaining life and redemption euerlasting. And this answer may be made you in allowing you your corrupt translation. For otherwise the word which the Prophet vseth, signifieth to break of: whereof also the noune signifieth a breach ordinarily. And it is a grosse fallation of the resemblance of words not to discerne between עֹרֶד and עוֹן, but to confound one with another, that haue but the first letter alike. That Augustines meaning is to make the almes onely a testimonie and witnesse of our cleansing, and no cleanser, it is euident, for thus he writeth, that a mans almes must begin at himselfe, by beleeuing in God through faith, which cleanseth all things. Now if faith cleanse all things, it leaueth nothing to cleanse for almes deeds, nor for any other good workes. *August. 30. Neither is it ynough to keepe Chriſt in his heart, but he muſt alſo acknowledge him in his words and deedes. And to denie Chriſt, or any article of the Catholike faith, for ſhame or feare of any worldly creature, hath no leſſe puniſhment then to be denied, refuſed, and forſaken by Chriſt at the houre of his death, before all his Angels; which is an other manner of preſence and Conſiſtorie, then any Court or Seſſions that men can be called to for their faith in this world.

For ſuch an one called before the Commiſſioners, ſaith enough & defendeth himſef ſufficiently, when he anſwereth that he is a Catholike man, and that he will liue and die in that faith which the Catholike Church throughout all Chriſtian countries hath and doth teach, and that this Church can giue them a reaſon of all the things which they demaund of him. &c.

Verſe 14 But hee ſaid, Man, ! who hath appointed mee iudge or diuider among you?

RHEM. 5. [14 Who hath appointed.] Chriſt refuſed to medle in this temporall matter, partly becauſe the demaund proceeded of couetouſneſſe and ill intention, partly to giue an example to Clergie men, that they ſhould not be withdrawen by ſecular affaires and controuerſies from their principall function of praying, preaching and ſpirituall regiment: but not wholy to forbid them all actions pertaining to worldly buſines, ſpecially where and when the honour of God, the increaſe of religion, the the peace of the people, and the ſpirituall benefit of the parties doe require. In which eaſes S. Auguſtine (as Poſſidonius writeth) was occupied often whole dayes in ending worldly controuerſies, and ſo hee writeth of himſelfe alſo, not doubting but to haue reward therefore in heauen: The dealing of Clergy men in worldly affaires. In vita c. 19 l. de op. Monach. c. 29.

CARTVV. 5. [14. Who hath appoynted.] The cauſe of refuſall to iudge in temporall cauſes, is expreſſed in the text, for that he had no calling thereunto, nor was appointed of his father to that end: which the Ieſuits putting out, haue put in two reaſons of their own braine, the former whereof is ſo ridiculous, that it is unworthy of anſwer: for therfore rather he ſhould haue decided the controuerſie, becauſe the harueſt of a good iudge is where there is the greateſt vniuſtice, leſt through delay of iudgement, things euill ſhould proceed to worſe. The other reaſon is directly againſt themſelues: for if our Sauiour hauing ten thouſand talents to furniſh the miniſtery with, would not lay out a peny of it, but in ſeruice of the miniſtery: how much leſſe ought the miniſters to diſtract their few pence which they haue receiued for accompliſhment of their miniſtery, to the exerciſing of ciuill offices, which next vnto the miniſtery of the word, requireth the greateſt coſt to beare it to any good profit of thoſe ouer whom charge is committed. Neither is it enough to abſtaine from ciuill gouernment, ſo farre as the ſame ceaſeth the worke of the miniſtery: but euen ſo farre as the miniſtery is hindered, or is defectiue any way. Wherefore ſeeing ſo much induſtry as is beſtowed in ciuill gouernment, is withdrawne from the attendance of the miniſtery of the word: it is euident, that the vndertaking of the ſmalleſt charge in the Common wealth, ſhrinketh the hand of the Miniſter, that hee cannot lift ſo well at the burden and weight of the Miniſtery, which otherwiſe it might. And therefore the Apoſtle will haue the ſtate of a Miniſter like vnto a Souldier, that freeth himſelfe of all things which might hinder his warfare. And therefore the Councell decreeth, that the Biſhop ſhall meh attend vnto prayer, preaching and reading. Alluding as it ſhould appeare to the place of the Apoſtle. And Ambroſe ſaith preciſely, That worldly gouernement is the weakning of the Prieſt. As for Poſſidonius he affirmeth nothing of Auguſtines ciuill gouernement: for oppoſing worldly and ſecular affaires vnto thoſe matters wherein Auguſtine was buſied, hee giueth all to vnderſtand that hee had no lot amongſt the ciuill Gouernours. And Auguſtine himſelfe helpeth them much leſſe; for that which hee did, hee affirmeth to bee commanded of the Apoſtle to bee done, by the moſt abiect in the Church. So that vnleſſe you dare ſay that the Magiſtrates office is neceſſarily tyed to the charge of a Biſhop, or that the Apoſtle commandeth that the ſimpleſt in the Church might beare Ciuill Office, euen then when the Magiſtrate (being an enemy) would commit no authority vnto him, this place is vtterly from the purpoſe. And ſeeing that it appeareth otherwhere in Auguſtine, that the Africane Councels decreed that they ſhould ceaſe from ſuch affaires, to whom it belonged not to command any controulement of that which the Magiſtrate had laid lawfully vpon Auguſtine: it cannot be any Ciuill gouernement, that hee had fettered himſelfe with, for then the redreſſe thereof ſhould haue beene by humble petition to the Magiſtrate for releaſe. Moreouer in that hee obtained of the people that theſe matters ſhould bee turned from him to Eradius. And that in an Eccleſiaſticall Aſſembly where they met for choiſe of one to ſucceed Auguſtine in the Biſhopricke, it is manifeſt that it was no Ciuill Office. Laſt of all, it is to bee obſerued that in both Auguſtines places hee complaineth of theſe matters, as of hindrances to his Miniſterie, as of things which did more let the courſe of it, then if hee had wrought with his hands euery day in ſome occupation, that hee ſought to bee deliuered from them at the Councels and peoples hands: whereas you take it to bee a help and furtherance to the Miniſtery. and pull it to your ſelues that hee thruſt from himſelfe. 2 Tim. 2. 4. 4 Carthag. cap. 20. 1 Tim. 4. 15, 16. *Amb. lib. 5. Verſe. 21. So is he that laieth up treaſure to himſelfe, and is not ! rich to God ward.

RHEM. 6. [21 Rich to God ward.] He is rich towards God, that by his goods beſtowed vpon the poore, hath ſtore of merits, and many almeſmens prayers procuring mercie for him at the day of his death and iudgement, which is here therefore called treaſure layd vp in heauen, where the barnes be large ynough. The neceſſitie of which almes is by Chriſt himſelf here ſhewed to be ſo great, and ſo acceptable to God, that rather then thy ſhould lacke the fruit thereof, they ſhould ſell all thy haue & giue to the pore. Meritorious workes CARTVV. 6. [21 Rich to God ward.] Iohn affirmeth him to bee poore to God ward which boaſteth of his own ſufficiency and thinketh that he wanteth nothing. as you naked, blinde, miſerable, and pore Papiſts do; wherefore to bee rich to Godward is to haue no opinion of your own righteouſneſſe, but to eſteeme your ſelues deſtitute of all good things, that thereby you may bee moued to buy tryed gold at the Lords hands, &c. Where if peraduenture yee lay hold of the word buying, as that which ſhould vphold your Marchandiſe, exchange and trafique between you and the Lord. The Prophet which telleth you that you ſhall buy for nothing will put you from that hold. Your meritorious works hauing beene oftentimes confuted, and heere repeated onely vpon the credit of your bare affirmation, wee paſſe by. Reu. 3. 17. Ibid. v. 18. Eſay. 55. 1.

RHEM. 7. [34 Where your treaſure is.] If the rich man withdrawen by his worldly treaſure Almes.

cannot ſet his heart vpon heauen, let him ſend his money thither before him, by giuing it in almes vpon ſuch as will pray for him, and his heart will follow his purſe thither.

CARTVV.7. [34 Where is your treaſure.] If the heart doe not ſend the money into the treaſure of heauen, the treaſure is no ſuch loadſtone, as is able to draw the heart thither ſo high.

CHAP. XIII.

Niſi pœnitentiam habueritis.

Verſ. 3 NO, I ſay to you: but vnleſſe you haue ‡ penance, you ſhall all likewiſe periſh.

MARGINAL NOTES.

RHEM.1.[3 Haue penance.] Or as it is vttered in other places, doe penance, μετανοῆτε. the which in the new Teſtament ſignifieth perfect repentance. See Annotations Mat.3.2 11.21.

CARTVV.1. [3 Haue penance.] Heere you are taken in the words of your own lippes, for it ſignifyeth (ſay you) perfect repentance. how chanceth it then that you turne it Penance, and uſe us ſo uncourteouſly for tranſlating it Repentance.

Verſe,6. And hee ſaid this ſimilitude, A certaine man had a ‡ fig-tree planted in his Vineyard, and hee came ſeeking for fruite on it, and found not.

RHEM.2.[6 A figtree planted.] The figtree with onely leaues and no fruite, is the Iewes ſynagogue, and euery other people or perſon which hath faith and faire words, and no good workes.

CARTVV.2. [6 A figtree planted.] S.

*Verſe.*24. ‡ Striue to enter by the narrow gate: becauſe many, I ſay to you, ſhall ſeeke to enter, and ſhall not bee able.

RHEM.3 [24 Striue to enter.] Chriſtians in their liues muſt ſeeke the ſtrait way, but in religion the ancient common way.

CARTVV.2. [24 Striue to enter.] If a Chriſtian mans life bee a religious life, you rend and teare in peeces rather then diſtinguiſh, which make a ſeparation betweene his Life and Religion ſeeing true faith is neuer without good workes.

*Verſe.*34. Hieruſalem, Hieruſalem which killeſt the Prophets, and ſtoneſt them that are ſent to thee, how often would I gather thy children as the bird doth her brood vnder her wings, and ‡ thou wouldſt not?

RHEM.4, 34 Thou wouldeſt. The Iewes loſt their preeminee, by their own freewill, and not not by Gods cauſing: who ceaſed not to call and cry vpon them, and they would not heare. Whereby free will is plainely prooued.

CARTVV.4. [34 Thou wouldeſt.] The Lord our God doth the good that hee doth moſt willingly, and the deuils the euill which they doe. they doe it with a great ſtreame of will: may wee therefore conclude that either God can do that which is euill, or the deuils that which is good? no: yet is this our Ieſuites Diuinity, which will they, nill they, they muſt teach, if they will bee like themſelues. To the Annotations vpon the chapter wee anſwer not, becauſe they containe no proofe of any queſtion between vs. Although therefore they were loſt by their freewilll, yet they could not bee ſaued by their free-will: For the children of God are not borne of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man but of God, and of the will of God. There is no ſhew to proue that man hath any free-will to good but to that which is euill, for it is ſaid, And thou wouldſt not, which free-will wee grant to bee in man.

Ioh.3. 13. Iam. 1. 18.

Verſe 2. And hee anſwering ſaid to them, Thinke you that theſe Galileans were ſinners more then all the Galileans that they ſuffered ſuch things?

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM.5.[2 Theſe Galeleans.] It is Gods mercie that he ſtraight puniſheth not all offenders, but ſome few for a warning to all; as that for Schiſme he ſtriketh not all ſuch as haue forſaken the Church and the lawfull Prieſts, as he did Core and his complices: that for ſpoile of Churches he reuengeth not all, as he did Heliodorus: and all that vow and reuoke their giftes to God, as Ananias and Sapphira. Some few therefore for their iuſt deſerts, be ſo handled for example, to prouoke all others guiltie of the ſame crimes to do penance. Which if thy doe not in this life, they ſhall all aſſuredly periſh in the next world. Optatus lib.1.cont. Parmen. ſub finem.

Some puniſhed for example, Num. 16. 2. Mach. 3. Acts 5.

*Verſe.*16. But this daughter of Abraham whom Satan hath bound, lo, theſe eighteene yeares, ought not ſhee to be looſed from this bond on the Sabboth day?

RHEM.6. [16 This daughter.] Wee may ſee that many diſeaſes which ſeeme naturall, doe proceede of the deuill by Gods permiſſion, either for ſinne, or for probation: and both thoſe kinds Chriſt ſpecially cured, for that no naturall medicines could cure them, and ſpecially becauſe he came to diſſolue the workes of Satan both in bodie and ſoule.

Diſeaſes not naturall.

RHEM.7.[24 By the narrow.] Our Lord is not contrarie to himſelfe in that he anſwereth, the gate to be ſtraite, and few to be ſaued, whereas elſewhere he ſaid, that many ſhould come from the Eaſt and Weſt &c. and ioy with Abraham in the kingdom of heauen. *Math.*8.11. For though they be few in reſpect of the wicked of all ſorts, yet they be many in themſelues and in the ſocietie of Angels. the wheate comes are ſcarſe ſeene at the threſhing, when they are medled with the chaffe: but when the ill are remooued, the whole barne of heauen ſhall be filled. So ſaith S. Auguſt. Ser. 32. de verb. Do.

RHEM.

RHEM. 8. [24 Shall ſeeke,] Many would be ſaued, and look to be ſaued, but can not, becauſe thy will not take paines to enter in at ſo ſtraite a paſſage, that is to ſay, to faſt much, pray often, do great penance for their ſinnes, liue in holy Churches diſcipline, abſtaine from the pleaſures of this world, and ſuffer perſecution and loſſe of their goods and liues for Chriſts ſake. Penance.

Verſe 16. Then you ſhall begin to ſay, Wee did eate before thee and drinke, and in our ſtreets didſt thou teach.

RHEM. 9. [26 Eate before thee.] It is not enough to feede with Chriſt in his Sacraments, or to heare his word in the Church, to chalenge heauen thereby, vnleſſe we liue in vnitie of the Catholike Church. So S. Auguſtine applieth this againſt the Donatiſts, that had the very ſame ſeruice and Sacraments which the Catholike Church had, but yet ſeuered themſelues from other Chriſtian countries by Schiſme. *Schiſme. Verſe 23. And the Lord ſaid to the ſeruant, go forth into the waies and hedges, and I compell them to enter that my houſe may bee filled.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 2. [23 Compell them.] The vehement perſwaſion that God vſeth both externally by force of his word and miracles, and internally by his grace, to bring vs vnto him, is called compelling, not that he forceth any to come to him againſt their own wils, but that he can alter & mollifie an hard heart, and make him willing, that before would not. S. Auguſtine alſo referreth this compelling to the penall lawes which Catholike Princes do iuſtly vſe againſt Heretickes and Schiſmatickes, proouing that they who are by their former profeſſion in Baptiſme ſubiect to the Catholike Church, and are departed from the ſame after Sectes, may and ought to be compelled into the vnitie and ſocietie of the vniuerſall Church againe, and therefore in this ſenſe, by the two former partes of the parable, the Iewes firſt, and ſecondly the Gentils, that neuer beleeued before in Chriſt, were inuited by faire ſweete meanes onely: but by the third, ſuch are inuited as the Church of God hath power ouer; becauſe they promiſed in baptiſme, and therefore are to be reuoked not onely by gentle meanes, but by iuſt puniſhment alſo. Epiſt. 50. Paulo poſt princip. & ep. 204. & lib. 1. cont. ep. Gaudent. cap. 25. Heretickes may by penal lawes be compelled to the Catholicke faith.

CARTVV. 2. [23 Compell them.] The compulſion that is meant heere, are the threates of the Law, which the Miniſters of the Word denounce againſt ſinners, which giue no eare vnto the ſweet promiſes of the Goſpell. And as for the ciuill compulſion by the ſword of the Magiſtrate, it hath beene made euident that the Miniſters of the Word may not, nor cannot deale with it: Howbeit wee are not of that iudgement, that Iewes and other Infidels, cannot bee compelled by the Ciuill Magiſtrate to profeſſe the name of Chriſt, and in default of ſo doing to receiue chaſtiſement, according vnto the meaſure of reſiſtance vnto the truth, wherein hee hath by procurement of the Magiſtrate beene well and ſubſtantially informed: For the Magiſtrate beareth not the ſword in vaine, but muſt bee a reuenger of all wickednesſe, and eſpecialy that which is againſt the Lord. But wee could beare ſomewhat the more with your pouerty in ſuch caſes as theſe are, where the authority of ſome learned Doctors of the ancienter Church dazeleth your eyes: But heerein it ſeemeth you are come to the perfection of all blindneſſe, which eſteeme, that neither the Iewes nor Gentiles did euer beleeue in Chriſt before the time of the Goſpell: Whereas the doctrine of Chriſt was laid open to the wide world before the reſtraint that the Lord made by couenant with Abraham and his ſeed, numbers whereof beleeued from age to age vnto the time of their reiection. The Writer to the Hebrewes would haue better ſcholed you, if you tooke not more delight, and were not better skilled in your Dunſery, then in the ſacred Scriptures. Free-will. Rom. 13. 4. Heb. 11.

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 13 AND not many dayes after the yonger ſonne gathering all things together, went from home into a farre countrey: and there he waſted his ſubſtance, liuing riotouſly.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [verſ. 13. The prodigall ſonne is a parable, both of the Gentiles conuerſion, and alſo of euery diſſolute ſinner, penitently returning to God.

CARTVV. 1. [13.] You are very vnluckie in your Allegories. For the Gentiles which were called by the miniſtery of the Apoſtles, could not forſake their fathers houſe, wherein they were

Verse 7 I say to you, that euen so there shall bee ioy in heauen upon one sinner that doth penance, | then upon nintie nine iust that need not penance.

ANNOTATIONS.

Ioy in heauē for euery penitent.

RHEM. 2. [7 Then vpon nintie nine iust] Neither God, nor the Saints in heauen, nor men in earth do for all that esteem more of penitent sinners, then they do of them that continue iust and godly, though by the soden motion and present affection of ioy that man taketh and expresseth in such alteration and new fallen good, it be here signified that the conuersion of euery sinner is exceeding acceptable to God, and giueth his Saincts new cause of ioy and thankesgiuing to God in another kinde then for the continuance of the iust.

CARTVV. 2. [7. Then upon nintie nine iust.] Since no man is without sinne, Rom.3.10.23. neither is any simply without need of repentance: and therefore the most iust are taught daily to aske the forgiuenesse of their sinnes, Math.6.12. but the meaning of Christ is onely to shew, that great care and paines is to be taken for the recouery of those who haue specially strayed from the grace of God, for whose conuersion there is great matter of reioycing, not onely upon earth, but in heauen also: contrary to the proud presumption of these Scribes and Pharisees hypocrites, who swelling with the opinion of their own righteousnesse, despised as cast-awayes, these poore though penitent sinners and Publicans.

Vers. 10 So, I say to you, there shall be ioy before the Angels of God, vpon one sinner that doth penance.

The Angels and Saints know our hearts.

RHEM. 3. [10 Before the Angels.] The Angels and other celestial spirits in heauen, do reioyce at euery sinners conuersion: thy know then and haue care of vs, yea our hearts and inward repentance be open to them: how then can thy not heare our prayers; and betwixt Angels and the blessed soules of Saincts there is no difference in this case, the one being as highly exalted as the other and as neere God, in whom and by whom onely they see and know our affaires, as the other.

Acts 1.24.

Iob. 1. 5.

CARTVV. 3. [10. Before the Angels] Here the Iesuits deifie the Angels & Saints, by giuing them an ordinary knowledge of mens hearts, which the Scripture ascribeth unto God alone, where the same Scripture giueth Angels no further knowledge of mens doings then they get by walking about the earth, and can gather by their outward behauiour. For although the place of Iob be of the wicked Angel: yet when he hath the same knowledge by creatures which the elect Angell hath, and differeth not from him, but in that he abuseth his knowledge to the dishonour of God, and distruction of mankinde, and the molestation of the Church: it is cleare, that that which is said of one in this poynt, must be understood of the other. And although the Saints should be like the Angels in all poynts, as you would violently wring out of S. Mathew, yet the manifest words and drift of the Euangelist, will not suffer this conformity of the Saints with the Angels, untill the day of the resurrection, which commeth too late to exalt the Saints so high in this point as are the Angels. But hereof see further before, upon Math.22.30.

Verse 23 And bring | the fatted calfe, and kill it: and let vs eate, and make merry.

The B. Sacrament, and Sacrifice of the Altar.

RHEM. 2. [23 The fatted calfe.] This feasting and festiuitie (saith S. Augustine li.2.qu. Euang. c.33.to.4.) are now celebrated throughout the whole world, the Church being dilated and spred: for that calfe in the bodie and blood of our Lord is both offered to the Father, and also feedeth the whole house. And as the calfe signifieth the B. Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Christ, so the first stole may signifie our innocencie restored in baptisme, and the rest, other graces and giftes giuen vs in the other Sacraments.

CARTVV. 3. [23. The fatted Calfe.] The same Augustine a little before affirmeth, that the Calfe is then brought when Christ is preached, and that then he is slaine for euery one, when he is of them beleeued to haue been slaine, according to his sentence otherwhere, Beleeue and thou hast eaten. Wherefore it is euident, that this feasting is as well before as in the time of the celebration of the Sacrament, and that by these words of Augustine, there is no more carnall eating of his body, then in the preaching and beleeuing of the Gospell. Touching the allegory, although it be hoare headed, yet we cannot rise before it, considering that the haire groweth not vpon the head of any Scripture: much more we contemne and highly despise the fat and foolish allegories of the Iesuites, especially seeing by the Iesuits diuinitie it should follow that the Gentiles were first called by the preaching of the Apostles, or euer our Sauiour Christ was offered in sacrifice. Looke their marginall note upon the 13. verse of this chapter.

CHAP. XVI.

Verse 9 And I say to you, Make unto you friends of the ‡ Mammon of iniquity: that when you faile, | they may receiue you into the eternall tabernacles.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [9.] Mammon (saith S. Ierom. q.6. ad Algas.) in the Syriack tongue, signifieth riches, Mammon of iniquity, because they are often ill gotten, or ill bestowed, or occasion of euill, or at the least worldly and false, and not the true heauenly riches.

CARTVV. 1. [9.] It is called wicked Mammon, because it passeth easily from the right owners to vniust possessors, as the circumstance of the text doth declare. For it passed from the master of the houſhold which was the true owner, to the Steward firſt; and after to the Maſters debters, both which were uſurpers.

Verſe 23 And lifting vp his eyes when he was in torments, he ſaw Abraham a farre off, ‡ and Lazarus in his boſome.

RHEM. 2. [23 And Lazarus in his boſome.] Lazarus in Abrahams boſome, and reſt: but both in hell, and not in the kingdom of heauen before Chriſt. Hierom. epiſt. 3. Epitaph. Nepot.

CARTVV. 2. [23.] This is anſwered in the 7. Section of this chapter.

RHEM. 3. [29 They haue Moyſes and the Prophets.] Abraham had knowledge of things in earth which were not in his time, as that they had Moyſes and the Prophets bookes which he neuer ſaw Aug. de cura pro mor. c. 14.

CARTVV. 3. [29. They haue Moſes and the Prophets] If there were not here, as otherwhere in the Scripture, a manifeſt figure, yet gaine you nothing to eeke out the Saints eares: Auguſtine himſelfe being witneſſe, whom ye make iudge in this caſe; for directly againſt you he declareth that Abraham knew not the things that were done vpon earth, no further then he might learne them of Lazarus which knew: and to this end he citeth the prophet, Abraham knew not vs. Now if the Saints in heauen may communicate one with another, it followeth not therfore that they can communicate with theſe vpon earth: the oddes is too great, and the conſequent will neuer be able to ouertake the antecedent, vntill heaven and earth touch each other. προσωποποιία Iudg. 9. 8. 9 Eſa. 14. 8. 9

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM 4. [8 The Lord prayſed.] This mans deceiuing his maſter is not prayſed, nor we warranted by his fact to gaine vniuſtly for to haue wherewith to giue almes: but his prudence, in that he prouided ſo ſubſtantially for himſelfe whiles his maſters goods were in his handes, is commended, not for a vertue, but for a worldly pollicie: and propoſed as an example of the carefull prouiſion that rich men (who are Gods ſtewards in earth) ſhould make for their ſoules, againſt thy be put out of their bailiſhip, and be called to account, which is the day of their death: and for a condemnation of faithfull mens folly and negligence, that being aſſured, they ſhall out of their offices, and well knowing they might gaine ſaluation by their money, haue ſo little regard thereof. Good workes

CARTVV. 4. [8. The Lord praiſed.] Thus is the Lord made a Marchant, and the kingdom of heauen ſet to ſale, which is ſo often times called the gift of God. Yet is there not a word in this verſe that can giue any colour of ſuch a market. It is maruell therefore if you haue no part in this kingdom, which vpon ſo light occaſion, and ſo ſmall a price will ſell it. Mat. 25. 28 Ioh. 4. 10 Rom. 6. 23. Epheſ. 2. 8. 2. Tim. 2. 9

RREM. 5 [9. They may receiue you into] A great comfort to great almes-men, and a wonderfull force and vertue in almes, which beſide the merite of the worke of mercie, which (as in other places of Scripture is ſaide) purgeth ſinne and gaineth heauen, procureth alſo not onely the prayers of their beades-men in earth, but their patronage in heauen alſo. Whereby alſo the prayers of Saincts for the liuing, and namely for them to whom they were beholding in their life, are proued. Yea and that they be in ſuch fauour with God, that they may and do receiue their friends which were once their benefactors, into their manſions in Heauen, no leſſe then the farmours whom the ill Steward pleaſured, might receiue their friend into their earthly houſes. Which alſo inſinuateth to us, that almes beſtowed ſpecially vpon holy men, who by their merits and prayers are great in Gods grace, may much more helpe vs, then our charitable deedes done vpon vulgar men in neceſſitie, though that be of exceeding great merite alſo. See all this in theſe doctors following. Hiero qu. 6. ad Algaſ. to. 3. Ambroſ. in Luc. Aug. ſer. 35. de verb. Do. c. 1. Greg. moral. li. 21. c. 14. Aug. li. 2. qu. Euang. q. 34. Chryſoſt. hom. 33. ad po. Antioch. to. 5. Almes meritorious. Tob. 12. 9. Math. 22. 5 The Saints do pray for vs.

CARTVV. 5. [9. They may receiue you.] Our Sauiour Chriſt to allude to the parable, ſpeaketh of friends to receiue vs, and that which he ſpeaketh allegorically, theſe men bite as hard vpon, as if it had been ſpoken without a trope: for it is known that we need the friendſhip of none to come to heauen, but God in Chriſt Ieſus. And Chriſts friendſhip towards vs is not by our almes, conſidering that he was our friend, when we were his enemies, and could do no good worke, and he alone it is, who by his aſcending into heauen hath made vs place there to be receiued in. But the meaning of our Sauiour Chriſt is, that as the vniuſt Steward wanted not friends for giuing his maſters goods: ſo we in giuing our owne, according to the Law of giuing almes, ſhall not want friendſhip for the life to come; for the good worke will giue friendly teſtimony to his conſcience, that he is elect, and hath not beleeued in vaine. Now for the ſence which the Ieſuits follow, that the benefited perſons ſhall not onely aliue vpon earth, but in heauen alſo (after they be dead) with their praiers, procure their benefactors felecity, it is a groſſe abſurdity, for thereof it muſt needs follow, that the benefited muſt neceſſarily die before the benefactor: otherwiſe he ſhall looſe not onely the increaſe, but euen the principall of his money that he hath giuen to the poore: if his entrance into heauen ſtanding vpon the benefactors prayers, which is departed, he yet be liuing vpon the earth, when his benefactor by the paſſage of death, is to haue a new lodging; ſo alſo it ſhould follow that the rich man that releeueth the poore man ſhould pray to God that the poore man may die before him, leaſt he want a friend in the Court when hee commeth thither for entertainement. Moreouer, by this ridiculous ſenſe it ſhould follow that the departed Saints (as patrons) ſhould alwaies haue a deeper intereſt in Gods loue then the Saints in earth, Martha then Mary: if Martha died before Mary: And ſo clean contrary to the word, which teacheth that it is a ſigne of Gods fauour to liue long upon earth, it ſhould follow that the ſooner hee die the more he is beloued of God. And where further the Scripture ſheweth, That it is a bleſſeder thing to giue then to take, The Ieſuites make the cleane contrary, that the ſtate of a poore godly man, is better then of a godly rich man, whoſe bleſſed eſtate ſtandeth ſo much upon the prayers of the poore here, and in heauen, as if without them there were in heauen no roome for the other. And which for patronage to the poore heere upon earth, are made the poores clients in heauen: where the Scripture teacheth that although the poore being wicked ſhould neuer pray for us, yet wee hauing 2. Pet. 1. 10 Iam. 2. 22, 23. Acts 20. 35.

giuen it in a good heart, and (ſo farre as wee are able) with good iudgement, our paſſage to heauen ſhall bee no leſſe ready and open vnto vs, then if they had multiplyed their prayers for vs. As when a man giueth to a poore man profeſſing the Goſpell outwardly, but hauing a falſe heart within (which none is able to ſound but God alone) his gift being for Chriſts ſake, although it were but a cup of cold water, ſhall looſe nothing of the reward that ſhould bee performed vnto him, if his almes had light vpon a poore man, profeſſing the Goſpell without hypocriſie: for if hee cannot open his mouth to pray for thee, yet his ſides (which thou haſt lapped) ſhall bleſſe thee. Beſides that, the Ieſuites might haue remembred that being commanded to do good to all men, Iewes, Turkes, &c. there is alſo as great a promiſe of life euerlaſting, vnto thoſe which exerciſe their liberality vpon them, as when they do it to the godly poore, ſo that it bee with iudgement of preferring the houſhold of faith vnto them, and dealing more plentifully with them, then with the other. Wee paſſe ouer, that the ſoules that are departed are carried into their reſt and felicity by the Angels. And therefore are not, nor haue no need to bee brought into heauen by Saints. The place of Matthew hath beene anſwered before. For the Fathers alledged, they haue nothing that maketh for the prayer of departed Saints for vs: Some make the friends the Angels, and Saints departed, to whom wee cannot bee but friends being once reconciled vnto God, ſeeing thereby we haue peace euen with the wilde beaſts. And there is no doubt but they are ready after a ſort to bid vs welcome, and take vs by the hand when wee come into heauen, Seeing they haue in their meaſure the ſame will perfectly with our Sauiour Chriſt, which is our alone and full Sauiour. The reſt referre this to the poore, but not in that ridiculous ſenſe which the Ieſuites follow, but that by their prayers vpon earth the Lord doth beſtow grace on vs, whereby our faith being ſtrengthned wee haue readier and more ſurer entrance into the euerlaſting Tabernacles? Whereupon if they thinke to conclude, that becauſe the Almes of the giuer, and the prayer of the receiuer are ioyning with the ſaluation of the giuer, that therefore they are cauſes of our ſaluation: they might aſwell conclude, that not the heat but the drineſſe is the cauſe that the fire is hote, becauſe dryneſſe is inſeparable from the fire: where if dryneſſe ſhould bee the cauſe of the heate of the fire, the earth alſo that is dry ſhould bee hote, which is by nature cold. Onely their Pope Gregory maketh the poore Patrones of the rich: Which although it may haue ſome truth in that by the prayers of the poore the Lord deliuereth the rich from many dangers for his promiſe ſake, and not for the merite either of the almes of the giuer, or prayer of the taker: But becauſe this man was commenced Doctor in the Popiſh Schooles, and neuer was yet incorporate into the Church Vniuerſity, we make ſmall account of him.

*Abrahams boſome. Limbus patrum. Zach. 9. 11. Eſay 42. 7. * Aug. in Pſal. 85. Ep. 99. Chriſt deſcended into hell, and deliuered the Fathers.*

RHEM. 8. [22 Abrahams boſome.] The Boſome of Abraham is the reſting place of all them that died in perfect ſtate of grace before Chriſts time, heauen before being ſhut from men. It is called in Zacharie, a lake without water, and ſometimes a priſon, but moſt commonly of the Diuines Limbus patrum, for that it is the light or brimme of Hell, the places of puniſhment being farre lower then the ſame, which therefore be called Infernum inferius, * the lower hell. Where this manſion of the fathers ſtood, or whether it be any part of Hell, S. Auguſtine doubteth: but that there was ſuch a place, he nor no Catholike man euer doubted: as all the fathers make it moſt certaine, that our Sauiour deſcending to hell, went thither ſpecially, and deliuered the ſaid fathers out of that manſion. Iren. lib. 4. c. 39. Gregor. li. 6. epiſt. 179. which truth and place though of all the ancient writers confeſſed and proued this and other Scriptures: yet the Aduerſaties denie it (as they do Purgatorie) moſt impudently.

CARTVV. 8. [22 Abrahams boſome.] That the faithfull vnder the Law of God went (in ſoule) ſtreight to heauen after the parting of the body from the ſoule, hath beene before declared vpon Math. 3. 16. And notwithſtanding that this place doth arme vs further againſt the fabulous Limbo: yet euen of this timber, whereby the Scripture furniſheth vs of a bulwarke to beate down this Hould that exalteth it ſelfe againſt the knowledge of God, they ſeeke to repaire this rotten and decayed building of Limbo, or the skirt of hell. For firſt of all, the Lymbo being ſuppoſed to bee vnder the earth, it is heere affirmed, that Lazarus ſoule from earth was carried vp: where if hee went to Limbo, the Angels were no good wiſe guides of the way, in that they cary him aboue the earth whom they ought to haue carried to a place vnderneath the earth. And where they make it to bee the brimme or hemme of the damned places: out Sauiour Christ teacheth, that the glutton in hell saw Abraham a farre off with Lazarus; and further that there is a great gulfe and distance betweene the damneds place, and that wherein Lazarus abode. Last of all when Abraham opposeth Lazarus comfort vnto the Gluttons torment, it is euident that he being in infinite torment, the other was in infinite ioy, which because it cannot bee but in heauen, as in the Lords presence chamber, it followeth that the bosome of Abraham is the rest that his faithfull and right begotten children haue in heauen. For Zacharies place, the circumstance and words do teach that it is to be vnderstood of the captiuity of Babylon wherein the people of God were. And it speaketh of a benefite which that people that then liued (and not the ages before or after) had already receiued. And it cannot in any sort agree to the place where Lazarus was with Abraham, considering that it being a place of comfort, in this Luke there is no water of comfort. The which is also to bee vnderstood in the allegation out of Esay, who calling the place there a prison will not frame with Lazarus a place full of comfort. Further the allegation out of Esay is confuted by our Sauiour Christ; who sheweth that it was then fulfilled, when hee preached at Nazareth: in that by his ministery he loosed the bands of sinne, and brake the prison which was due for the wages thereof: whereas he should breake not their prison, but their palace, if he had opened the place wherein Lazarus was, who was gathered into the same rest of Abraham, wherein the Gentiles were afterward to be gathered from the foure corners of the earth. It cannot be denied but the Fathers make mention of hell remoued from damnation, which the Iesuites notwithstanding should haue been ashamed to haue alledged, vnlesse with the head of their sentence they would haue taken the taile also, or rather one taile or tale with another: for the ancientest Fathers affirme, that the soule of no man goeth to heauen before the generall resurrection. To passe ouer Pope Iohn the 20. who was condemned for the like or worse error: where also it is to be obserued, that as in a quagmire or foggy place, they found not where to stand, one making this Limbo in the heart or middle of the earth, as other aboue the earth, some vnderneath the earth. And beside that they dissent one from another, they are not at one with themselues. As Tertullian, that the place where the soules rest, is vnder the earth. And Augustine in the point here in controuersie, although otherwhere he make a hell for the soules of the righteous, yet to Euodius he affirmeth, That he neuer read hell in the Scriptures taken in good part. And touching Ierom, as he is not for the truth in this behalfe, so vpon the same place which you haue chosen for you, he is directly against you, expounding the Lake without water not to bee the rest of Lazarus, but the place wherein the rich glutton was tormented, from the which notwithstanding hee saith, there was release by the comming of Christ. Cyril is manifestly against you: for it appeareth, that by Christs preaching to the Spirits in hell, he meaneth nothing else, but that he preached or brought the ioyfull newes of his redemption to the soules of the iust men, whose bodies being in hell, that is to say, according to the Hebrew phrase, in the graue, their soules were in heauen. For in the same place he sheweth, that our Sauiour Christ bequeathed his spirit into the hands of his father, which giueth to vs a ground of great hope: for we ought to beleeue, that as soone as the soules are departed from the bodies, that they are commended vnto the goodnesse of God, as into the hands of a most deere father, and not (as some infidels thinke) that they are still in earth vntill the body be buried: nor yet that they are carried vnto the place of infinite torments, that is to say, to hell, but that the way being first prepared by Christ, they rather flye into the hands of the father. Where it is plaine, that our Sauiour Christs soule was forthwith in heauen, as soon as it departed out of his body. For seeing other iust soules are for and by his soule receiued thither into the hands of the father presently after death, it followeth that his soule must much more take a strait flight out of his body into heauen. And Tertullian reproueth Marcion that hee made the place of hell to bee as well the place of refreshing as of torment? and proueth out of this place of Luke, that there is an infinite distance of height and depth betweene the place called the bosome of Abraham, and that called Hell.

‖ χασμα A horrible distance.

RHEM. 8. [26 A great chaos.] A great distance betwixt Abrahams bosome and the inferiour hell. Some iudge Purgatory to be placed there, from whence (no doubt) Christ also deliuered some at his descending to hell, for, these in Abrahams bosome were not in paines: and S. Augustine saith the Scriptures be plaine that he tooke some out of the places of punishment, and yet none out of the hell of the damned. What other place then can that be but Purgatorie;

Purgatory Aug. epi. 99

CARTVV. 9. [26. Great chaos.] How doth a great distance from the lower hell, agree with the hemme or skirt of it? Is there so great distance between the hemme or skirt of a garment, and the garment? which are so neerely ioyned together, that the one toucheth the other: ye wisse these things were not well thought of, you haue need of some Vulcan to make the gimmers that should hold these together. The place of your popish Purgatory is not yet found out, nor cannot be, seeing it selfe is not extant. Augustine cited by you, maketh nothing for you, but much against you. Where first it is to be obserued, that that which Augustine doth doubt of diuers times in the Epistle, the Iesuits propound it without doubt, and yet without a scrap of reason. Again, it appeareth that it is not Augustines sentence that Christ deliuered any out of the paines of hell: onely he doth not deny, but that may be so. But his iudgement is rather that the sentence of the Apostle touching that Christ loosed the sorrowes of death, should be referred vnto himselfe, which is proued by the words that follow; In that it was impossible for him to be holden of them. Adde to this that if your Purgatory be in the lower hell, as you say in effect, and that there is so great a distance betweene it and the vpper hell, that they cannot come one to another: there being a farre greater distance betweene heauen and it, it must needs follow that there is no passage from purgatorie into heauen, if you would giue neuer so much money. For if he can make no footmanship, nor climbe so high as Limbus; much lesse can he approch heauen which is further off, and higher then it.

Gen. 32.
Caluins blaſphemie.
Cal. lib. 3. Inſtit. c. 22. ſect. 24.

RHEM. 9. [28 Leſt they alſo.] If the damned had care of their friends aliue how and for what cauſe ſoeuer, much more haue the Saincts and ſaued perſons. And if thoſe in hell haue meanes to expreſſe their cogitations and deſires, and to be vnderſtood of Abraham ſo far diſtant both by place and condition, much rather may the liuing pray to the Saints and be heard of them: betwixt earth (that is to ſay) the Church militant, and heauen, being continuall paſſage of ſoules, and *Angels aſcending and deſcending by Iacobs ladder. Men muſt not for all that be curious to ſearch how the ſoules of the deceaſed expreſſe their mindes, and be heard one of another, and ſo fall to blaſphemie, as Caluin doth asking whether their eares be ſo long to heare ſo farre off, and wickedly meaſuring all things by mortall mens corporall groſſe manner of vttering conceits one to another, which was not here done by this damned, nor by Abraham, with corporall inſtruments of tongue, teeth, and eares: though for the better expreſſing of the damneds caſe, Chriſt vouchſafed to vtter it in termes agreeing to our capacitie.

CARTVV. 10. [28. Leſt they alſo.] If the euidence of the truth could not haue moued you to underſtand this dialogue between Abraham and the rich glutton, to be of things not done, but repreſented of our Sauiour Chriſt for the better and more commodious ſetting forth of the eſtate of the godly and of the wicked after this life, yet Euthymius a greek writer would haue made you wiſer in this behalfe. Let vs underſtand (I beſeech you) when this new religion entred into damned ſoules in hell, that they ſhould haue a care of the ſaluation of their kinsfolke in earth: when they went to hell, they were voyd of charity and care that way. And if hell be ſuch a ſchoole houſe of charity, that they learne that there of the diuels, which they neuer learned in earth of Moſes and the Prophets: What ſhould hinder but that Origens error, that all ſhall bee ſaued in the end, (yea the Diuels themſelues) may be holden for Catholike doctrine. For if (as ſome fooliſhly ſay, you anſwer, that the glutton for feare of greater iudgement that ſhould fall upon him in the condemnation of his brethren; for that he had neglected his duty towards them, made this requeſt: it hath reproofe, in that euery mans iudgement ſhall be as the day of his death ſhall finde him: that this is the time to do good in whileſt the day laſteth, no man being able to worke when the darkneſſe of night commeth, that this life is only the ſeed time, the harueſt whereof muſt be gathered in the life to come, and therefore if the glutton had obtained their conuerſion, yet ſhould the ſame no whit haue mittigated his iudgement. Further, if hell be a place of darkneſſe and ignorance, where is it, and by what glaſſe, and by mean of what light, that the gluttons ſoule knoweth Abrahams and Lazarus ſoule which knew not them before it entred into hell. You are wont to ſay, that the departed Saints ſee all in the reflection of the beames of of Gods Maieſty, in whoſe preſence they be. Dare you alſo affirme, that the ſoules in hell haue the ſame knowledge, by touring into the diuell? Now by the Ieſuits, the Saints departed haue found a ladder to go up and downe for entertraffike betweene them and theſe upon earth, neuer a ſcale of which ladder was made for the Saints feet, but for the Angels, as both the place of Geneſis and of the Euangeliſt doth declare, which ſhew that by Chriſt the elect Angels doe ſerue, and are miniſtring ſpirits ſent for thoſe that ſhall inherit ſaluation. And if the ſoules could climbe up and downe after that ſort: why is it that they are carried up into heauen by the miniſtery of the Angels? Here alſo the Ieſuits, not being able to anſwer M. Caluins reaſon, fall to railing of him; but if the Ieſuits father were a Memnon, he would cauſe the whip to cleaue to your skinnes, and tell you that hee taught you not to raile on Caluin, but to diſpute againſt him, for it hath been before declared, that the Angels themſelues (much more the Saints) know not the affaires here upon earth, nor haue any intercommunication with vs, further then they come neer to the places where we are. But it is the cõmon practiſe of the Ieſuits, the knot wch they cãnot vndo, to cut it alwaies with the knife of miracles For they will haue ſpeech to them, but they can aſſigne no cauſe nor meanes thereof. Againe, they would haue ſmall and low voyces to be heard of creatures remoued either from other infinite ſpaces; yet how the voyces of the Saints here ſhould go up to the Saints departed, or their hearing ſhould come downe to our prayers, they know not, and therefore poſt it to a miracle which is the common ſhift of heretickes.

CARTVV. 3. This is answered in the same place.

Verse 10. I trow not. So you also, when you shall haue done all things that are commanded you, say, Wee are ! unprofitable seruants: we haue done that which we ought to doe.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 4. [10 Vnprofitable seruants.] If our Sauiour had said that the keeping of Gods commandements had been vnprofitable and not auailable to our selues, then might the Protestants haue truly argued thereby that our workes deserue not heauen or any reward at Gods hand: but so he sayd not, but that our seruice is to God vnprofitable, who calleth for it as duty, and not as a thing needfull or profitable to himselfe. And though here our Master teach vs so humbly to conceiue of our own doings toward him, yet himselfe els where calleth not his seruants vnprofitable when they haue done their labour, but speaketh thus, Good and faithfull seruant, Because thou wast faithfull ouer a little, I will place thee ouer much, enter into the ioy of thy Lord, Yea of such as serue him in the grace of the new Testament he affirmeth that he will not now name them seruants but friends, yea & take them for his own children & as his friends and sonnes he counteth of vs and our workes toward heauen, though we in humilitie and mueth must confesse alwayes that we be to him vnprofitable seruants. Yea and S. Paul saith plainly, that by cleansing our selues from sinfull workes wee shall be profitable vessels to our Lord. 2. Tim. 2. 21. — How we are unprofitable & profitable seruants, Mat. 25. 23 Ioh. 15. 14

CARTVV. 4. [10 Vnprofitable seruants.] Our Sauiour Christ hauing shewed that no scandale is to bee giuen, and if it bee, that the party offended or hurt ought, and (through the benefite of a sound faith) should also forgiue the wrong doer as often as hee faulteth against him, although the iniury were doubled and redoubled upon him infinitely: Least that the Apostles in so doing should thinke that they had deserued somewhat at Gods hands: hee putteth this parable, whereby hee declareth by an argument of the greater that no man can deserue any thing at Gods hands by well doing. For if a man may bee bound so strongly to a mortall and sinfull man, that whatsoeuer hee doth, and how diligently soeuer hee serueth, yet shall not deserue so much as thankes at his Maisters hand: Much lesse can wee, that are not onely seruants, but the creatures of God, with all our best endeuours deserue any thing at the hand of God: The reason whereof hee addeth, for that wee haue done but that which wee ought. And therefore as no creditor is beholden to his debtor for making due payment of his debt: so God cannot bee bound unto men by the excellency of any good work, considering that he is indebted unto him for it: Whereupon he concludeth that we are unprofitable seruants. Now marke the Iesuits poore shift and wide sse distinction, that in as much as Wee are unprofitable to God wee deserue nothing, but deserue at Gods hand in that wee are profitable to our selues: So that whereas our Sauiour reasoneth that therefore wee can deserue nothing at Gods hand because wee are unprofitable to him, they answer, That they can deserue because they are profitable to themselues: Wherein, beside that they leaue the knot cleane undone, and hold out a sword in steed of a bukler: Let it bee obserued (I pray thee good Reader) what a false and fooliſh knot they made. For to returne to the Parable that our Sauiour Christ put forth: What Maister is there, how equall and reasonable soeuer which will hold himselfe bound to his seruant for hauing enriched himselfe under his seruice, without bringing a peny profite unto him? And are they not ashamed to affirme that a man hath merited at Gods hand because hee hath deserued well of his own selfe? It is strange, that hee which giueth all and taketh nothing should be beholden unto him that taketh all and giueth nothing. This also the Reader may see not onely how absurd, but also how blasphemous the Papists are in the opinion of their merite: which make the euerliuing God more bound unto his sinfull creature, then a sinfull Maister is bound to his sinfull seruant: Whereupon also followeth that they must hold that a sinfull man may owe more to some one of his neighbours which is his Maister then unto God himselfe, in as much as being able to deserue nothing of his Maister, yet hee shall notwithstanding be able to deserue of God somewhat; (what say wee somewhat) yea the very Kingdome of heauen, and the top of all felicity; and that not onely for themselues but for others also, if with the slight of vowed continency they can (forsooth) ouershoote the marke of Gods commandements. As for the other places hee quoted, they make nothing against this cause; for there the Scripture speaketh of our seruice and profitablenesse, such as it is by grace and acceptation; whereas heere hee noteth what wee are by vertue or worthinesse of our best deeds. Wee are therefore profitable, faithfull, and good seruants by imputaion of Christs faithfulnesse, who was faithfull unto him that sent him, but by desert and merite of our own workes wee are altogether unprofitable. — Eph. 3. 21. Heb. 13. 15. 21. 1. Pet. 2. 5.

Verse. 14. Whom as hee saw, hee said, Goe * shew your selues to ! the Priests. And it came to passe, ! as they went, they were made cleane. — Lev. 14. 2.

RHEM. 5. [14 To the Priests.] This leprosie signifieth sinne, which though God may and can heale without any mans meanes, yet he doth it not ordinarily but by the Priests ministerie: therefore — Confession to the Priest.

fore let no man despise Gods ordinance nor say that it is ynough to confesse to God though he neuer come at the priest. li. de visit. infirm. apud Aug.

CARTVV. 5. [14 To the Priest.] If you stand to your Allegory, it followeth, that men are cleansed from their sinnes before they come to confession; contrary to your doctrine, which teach that men are cleansed by confession. Further, following the suite of this Allegory men ought to come to the Priest to professe their cleanenesse, and not to confesse their uncleanesse; for so did these Lepers. Againe, the Priest was a shadow of our Sauiour Christ, which being vanished, the confession that was made to him is come to our Sauiour Christ, who is the truth and body of that shadow. Last of all in that they should go to the Priests, not to shew their scabbes or pushes, or other light diseases, but onely the most dangerous and infectious disease of the Leprosie: It can argue no more then that wee are to shew our selues to the Priests in criminall and heynous sinnes, which put the conscience to great distresse. In which case wee hold well (though not after the manner of your auricular confession) that the grieued party should resort to the Minister, that is able for his sound knowledge in the word of God to iudge of his soare. And that may bee the meaning of Augustine, if it be Augustine that is heere alleeged. For Erasmus doubteth not to say, that they are both witlesse and shameleesse, that thrust those books of visiting the sicke upon Augustine.

RHEM. 6. [14 As they went.] A man may sometimes be so contrite and penitent, that his sinne is forgiuen before hee come to the Priest, but then also he must notwithstanding goe to the Priest as these lepers did, specially whereas we are neuer sure how contrite we are, and because there is no true contrition but with desire also of the Sacrament in time and place.

CARTVV. 6. [14 As they went.] It appeareth by this that the Popish Contrition, commeth by fittes and starts, and therefore it is no maruaile although they be so doubtfull of their contrition wherein still their Allegory that they would father some friendship of, standeth against them. For all the Lepers knew assuredly, by experience and liuely sense in their own bodies that they were cleansed. Math. 8. 4. And the Samaritan knew that, yet more certainely by the faith in the promises of Christ: so that they went not to the Priest to be assured of their cleansing from their Leprosie, but that the Priest might know to his amendment, or confusion: that our Sauiour Christ which cleansed him was the promised Messias. Neither is there any Priest or Sacrament, that can assure any, that hee is contrite enough for his sinnes, according to the rule of contrition which the Law requireth. Wherefore it is in vaine to seek that at the Priests and Sacraments hand, which by them cannot bee performed.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [1 Alwayes.] We should pray alwayes by faith, hope and charitie, and by working the things that be acceptable to God: though speciall times of vocall prayers in the Canonicall houres be assigned for the sturring of vs vp to God through externall signes of deuotion.

CARTVV. 1. [1. Alwayes.] The parable following doth euidently declare what is meant by praying alwayes, namely, that hauing entred into a lawfull sute before God, we should neuer be nonsute, or giue it ouer untill we haue obtained, not as the Iesuites foolishly and unskilfully interprete, that we should alwayes pray, if not by words, yet by good deeds, confounding good conuersation with godly prayer: for the poore widow which is here brought for ensample, did not sollicit the vniust Iudge when he was gone to bed, or at meale times; but at fit seasons, when he went to the place of iudgement, or where she found any good opportunity of calling for iustice. And if they refuse this interpretation at our hands: let them giue eare unto themselues, which otherwhere expound it better, vpon Rom. 1. 9.

Vers. 13 And the Publican standing a farre off, would not so much as lift up his eyes toward heauen: but he ‡ knocked his breest, saying, God bee mercifull to mee a sinner.

RHEM. 2. [13 Knocked his breast.] So doe the priests and people at the holy Altar knocke their breasts, and say with the humble Publicane, Deus propitius. Aug. P. 31. conc. 3.

CARTVV. 2. [13. He knocked.] He had need to knock: for he is commonly the Publican, or worst man in the Church; yet it is known that he doth it as a peece of his part which he hath to play upon the stage, striking his breast or euer his heart strucke him: wherefore he goeth home no more iustified then he came.

Verse 17 Amen I say to you, Whosoeuer receiueth not the kingdom of God ‡ as a childe, shall not enter into it.

RHEM. 3. [17 As a child.] In matters of faith and religion we must be as humble and obedient to the Catholike Church as yong children to their parents.

CARTVV. 3. 17 This is answered before vpon Math. 11. 25.

Verse 20 Thou knowest the commandements: Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not commit adultrie, Thou shalt not beare false witnesse, Thou shalt not steale, Honour thy father and mother.

RHEM. 4. [20 The commandements.] Not faith onely but also keeping the commandements purchase life euerlasting. See annot. Math. 19. 16.

Verse 22 Which Iesus hearing, said to him, Yet one thing thou lackest: ‡ Sell all that euer thou hast, and giue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen: and come follow me.

RHEM. 5. [22 Sell all that euer.] This is not a commandement or precept, but counsell: which the religious do follow, See Annot. Mat. 19.

CARTVV. See the answer there also.

Verse 29 Who said to them, Amen I say to you, There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or children, or ‡ wife, for the kingdom of God, &c.

RHEM. 6. [29 Wife or children.] The Apostles among other things left their wiues also, as S. Hierome noteth out of these place. li. 1. adu. Iouin.

CARTVV This is answered before vpon, Math. 8. 14.

Verse 30 And shall not receiue much more in this time, and in the world to come ‡ life euerlasting.

RHEM. 7. (30 Life euerlasting.) Life euerlasting the reward for leauing or loosing willingly our goods for Christ sake.

CARTVV. This is answered before, vpon Mark 10. 19.

Verse 8 I say to you, that he will quickly reuenge them. But yet the sonne of man comming, shall he finde trow you, faith in earth?

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 8 (8 Shall he find faith.) The Luciferians and Donatists vsed this place to excuse their fall from the Church, as our Aduersaries now doe, saying that it was decayed in faith when they forsooke it. To whom we answer as S. Hierome and S. Augustine answered them, that Christ saith not that there should be no faith left in earth: but by this manner of speach insinuateth, that at the later day in the great persecution of Antichrist faith should be more rare, and the faithfull among so many wicked not so notorious: specially that perfect faith containing deuotiō, trust, & affectiō toward God, which our Maister so praised in certaine vpon whom hee wrought miracles, and by force whereof mountaines might be mooued, which is rare euen when the Church florisheth most. The Church erreth not in faith. Hier. cont. Lucif. c. 6. Aug. de vnit. Ec. c. 15. & de verb. Dō. Ser. 16.

CARTVV. 8. [8. Shall he find faith.] Hauing exhorted to perseuerance in prayer, vpon both the certainty and speed of obtaining our requests, by this question, Whether he shall find faith vpon earth, he affirmeth that there are but few that beleeue this promise, in the beliefe whereof standeth the perseuerance in prayer, because that then we giue ouer our sute, either when wee thinke it shall not bee granted, or when it shall be a long and wearisome sute. Whereby first it is euident, that this is not meant of the faith of miracles, and moning mountaines, but of common faith of the whole Church. Secondly, it appeareth hereupon, that this rarenesse of faith is at all times: considering that the Parable is vttered to teach all ages, throughout the wch they are but few that do beleeue truly in respect of those that doe not. Wherefore it is euident, that this is not properly meant of the time of the fained Antichrist, which they say shall reigne two yeares and a halfe before the end of the world. And this the Iesuites affirme, contrary to their interpretation of their Antichrist, whilest they confesse (although misunderstanding it) that the faith here spoken of, may be rare in the most flourishing estate of the Church. And albeit our Sauiour Christ assigne this rarenesse of faith in the time of his comming: yet that is not to restraine it thither, but rather partly that he might stirre up all men in all ages to the watch and expectation of his comming: and partly for that the full and perfect deliuerance of the elect is not finished vntill that day. Beside that our Sauiour Christ may well be said to come as often as hee deliuereth his elect out of trouble; euen as the Prophet saith, that although God tarry, yet we should waite, for that he will certainly come. As for vs we depart not from you, as from those which be decayed in faith, but as from a faithlesse Synagogue of Sathan, where the Lords building is razed from the foundation, where there is not a stick nor a stone left apt for the Lords house vntill it be hewed and framed anew, regarding that which is properly yours. Abac. 2. 3.

CHAP. XIX.

Verse 17 AND he said to him, Well fare thee good seruant, because thou hast been faithfull in a little, thou shalt haue power ouer ‡ ten Cities.

MARGINAL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [17 Ten cities.] Marke here against the aduersaries, that the rewards of these two good seruants be diuers and vnequall, according to diuersitie or inequality of their gaines, that is their merits, and yet one receiueth the penny (Mat. 20. 9.) as well as the other, that is, heauen, or life euerlasting.

CARTVV. 1. [17. Ten Cities.] If as the text saith, he receiued ten Citties, because hee was faithfull: and that no man can be faithfull but by faith which causeth faithfulnesse; it is euident, that faith is the fountain of this reward, which is varied and increased, according to the increase of faith whereof faithfulnesse is a witnesse. Beside that, where merit requireth proportion of good workes' little for little, and much for much: this place doth vterly ouerthrow that which saith, that for vsing' a little well, he ſhould receiue much. Whereupon afterward, verſ. 26. it is called a gift which is free, and therefore no merit which bindeth God. Touching the abuſe of Matth. 20. 9. their fondneſſe hath there been laid open.

Verſe 4 And running before, he went up into a Sycamore tree, that he might ſee him, becauſe he was to paſſe by it.

ANNOTATIONS.

Externall deuotion.

REM. 2. [4 Went vp.] Not onely inward deuotion of faith and charitie towards Chriſt, but externall offices of ſeeing, following, touching, receiuing, harbouring him, are recommended to vs in this example, euen ſo our manifold exteriour deuotion towards his Sacramentes Saincts and ſeruants be gratefull: ſpecially the endeuour of good people not onely to be preſent at Maſſe or in the Church but to be neere the B. Sacrament, and to ſee it withall reuerence ad deuotion according to the order of the Church, much more to receiue it into the houſe of their body.

Ier. 23.23

CARTVV. 2. [4. Went vp.] Our Sauiour Chriſt being below, ſeeth Zacheus that was aboue: but your puppet being lifted aboue the Prieſts buſh head, ſeeth as much a beetle. Howbeit your counſell is good, that men ſhould come neere to gaze upon it, that it may be known that your God is a God neere at hand, and not a farre off, which is as much to ſay, as an Idoll. But if hee be receiued into the houſe of your body, you giue him nothing to eate, as Zacheus did unto Chriſt. But like Buſtrides, or the Canibals, you murder and eate up your Gheſt moſt barbarouſly.

Verſ. 8 But Zacheus ſtanding, ſaid to our Lord, Behold the halfe of my goods, Lord, I giue to the poore: and if I haue defrauded any man of any thing, I reſtore foure fold.

Reſtitution.

RHEM. 3 [8 I reſtore foure fould.] That which we giue of our own, is almes and ſatisfaction for our ſinnes: but that which we reſtore of ill gotten goods by Extortion, Vſury, Simony, Bribrie Theft, or otherwiſe, that is called here Reſtoring. And it is of duty and not of free almes, & muſt be rendred not to whom we liſt, but to the parties anoyed if it be poſſible, otherwiſe it muſt be beſtowed vpon the poore, or other good vſes, according to the aduiſe of our ſuperiour and ſuch as haue charge of our ſoules. But that he yeelded foureſold, that was more then he was bound, but very ſatisfactorie for his former ſinnes alſo. And herewith we may note that it is not the giuing of a peny, grote, or crowne, of a rich mans ſuperfluitie, that is ſo much recommended to ſinners for redeeming their faultes: but this large beſtowing vpon Chriſt, to ſell all and giue it in almes, to giue the moytie of our goods, to render foure times ſo much for that which is wrongfully gotten, that extinguiſheth ſinnes. The poore widowes braſſe peny was very gratefull, becauſe it was all or much of that ſhe had: but the rich mans pound of his ſuperfluitie though it be good, yet is nothing ſo gratefull.

Satisfaction.

Num. 5. 6. 7 Leu. 5. 15. Leuit. 4. 5. Rom. 4. 11. 12. Gal. 3. 7.

CARTVV. 3. [8. I reſtore foure fold.] A man can walke in no part of your booke, where your ignorance in the word doth not meet with him. If you looke vpon the law, you ſhall finde that a defrauder of his neighbour, which is a thiefe, is bound to reſtore foure fold, and in ſome caſes fiue fold, except the iniury were done ignorantly, in which caſe an eaſier reſtitution is appointed. As for the reſt it is an idle repetition of their blaſphemous ſatisfaction, without any new ſupply of reaſon, and contrary to the text in hand, which aſſigneth the cauſe of ſaluation, not in reſtoring of foure fold, but in that he was the ſonne of Abraham, which ſonneſhip the Apoſtle defineth to be, in that hee beleeued as Abraham did.

CHAP. XX.

Verſe 35 BVT they that ſhal ‡ be counted worthy of that world, and the reſurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor take wiues.

MARGINALL NORES.

RHEM. 1. [35 Counted worthie,] The Greeke οἱ καταξιωθέντες importeth alſo this much: They that are made worthie, to wit, by the grace of God, and ſo they are indeed worthy, as alſo in the next chapter, verſe. 36. & 2. Theſ. 1. 5.

CARTVV. This is anſwered in the next Section following.

ANNOTATIONS.

To be worthy of heauen, or to deſerue & merit it. The new Teſtament, anno 1580.

RHEM. 2. [35 Shall be counted Worthie.] This trueth and ſpeech that good men be worthy of heauen, is according to the Scriptures, and ſignifieth that mans works done by Chriſts grace doe condignly or worthily deſerue eternall ioy. as Sap. 3. God proued them, and found them worthy of himſelfe. and Mat. 10. He that loueth his father more then me, is not worthy of me. and Coloſ. 1. That you may walke worthy of God. and moſt plainly, Apoc. 3. They ſhall walke with me in white, becauſe they are worthy as of Chriſt (c. 1,) Thou art worthy O Lord to receiue glory, &c. And that to be counted worthy, and to be worthy, is here all one, it is plaine, by the Greeke word, which S. Paul vſeth ſo, as the Aduerſaries own Engliſh Teſtaments do teſtifie, reading thus, Heb. 10. Of how much ſorer puniſhment ſhall he be worthie, which &c. and it muſt needs ſo ſignifie, becauſe men for ſinnes are not onely counted, but are indeed worthy puniſhment, as themſelues do grant, They do greatly therefore forget themſelues and are ignorant in the Scriptures, and know not the force nor the valure of the grace of God, which doth not onely make our labours gratefull to God, but worthy of the reward which he had prouided for ſuch as loue him. See the Annot 2. Theſ. 1. 5.

CARTVV. 2. [35. Shall be counted Worthy.] Whether the Greek word be turned ſhall bee accounted worthy, or ſhall be made worthy, it skilleth not: conſidering that they which are accounted worthy thy of the kingdom of heauen, are indeed worthy. But that the Scripture teacheth, that they are worthy by grace, and not by work; by the merits of Christ, and not by their own, it is euident, in that the Apostles reioyced that they were accounted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. Now seeing it is a grace, and no desert, a gift of God, and no merit for the best men to suffer for Christs sake, how much lesse can a man be worthy of the ioyes of heauen for his workes sake, seeing he is not worthy so much as of sufferings and torments here vpon earth for the truths sake. So that if the compound verbe vsed alwayes in the Scripture, to the setting forth of the vndeserued grace of God towards the elect, be not enough to shut out this proud opinion of merit: yet the euidence of the truth will, maugre the Iesuites heart, winne that sence, which commandeth the grace of God, and not the merite of men. To omit the hudling of diuers significations of worthinesse which they haue shuffled here together: for Colos. 1. to walke worthy of God, is to walke agreeable vnto his will, as themselues interpret the word in a like case, Act 26. 20. Do workes worthy of penance, which we suppose they will not expound workes which deserue penance. Act. 5. 41. Phi. 1. 7. 27

Verse 36 Neither can they dye any more, for they are | equall to Angels: and they are the sonnes of God, seeing they are the sonnes of the resurrection.

RHEM. 3. [36 Equall to Angels.] Saints of our kinde, now in their soules, and after their resurrection in body and soule together, shalbe in all things equall to Angels: and for degree of blisse, many Saints of greater merit shalbe aboue diuers Angels: as S. Iohn Baptist, the Apostles, and others, and our B. Lady aboue all the orders of holy spirits in dignity and blisse, and no maruell, our nature by Christ being so highly exalted aboue all Angels. The dignity of Saints.

CARTVV. 3. [36. Equall to Angels] As the Apostle saith, you thrust your selues into things you neuer saw: for you take vpon you to be Gentlemen vshers in the Starre-chamber of the kingdom of glory, which are vnworthy to keepe a doore in the Lords lower house vpon earth. And marke how foolishly you do it, for to proue that some of the Saints shall be seated in heauen aboue some Angels: you alledge that our Sauiour Christ carried our flesh to a higher glory then any Angels are in: whereby followeth, that not Iohn Baptist, the Apostles, and the virgin Mary onely, but all the Saints, whose flesh Christ in himselfe hath so exalted, must be mounted vp, not onely aboue certain Angels, but aboue all the Angels in heauen. For the same cause of so high preferment reaching to all the Saints, the same effect must needs haue the same extent. Here therefore you haue put on a great cost vpon a little body: wherein if Cyrus, being a childe, had faulted, his master would haue beaten him for it. But to let this thornie question goe, let them tell vs how of a place of Scripture, which precisely affirmeth, that the Saints shall be equall to the Angels, they conclude, that they shall bee superiours vnto them. It is no miracle although they be fruitfull in miracles, and can remoue mountaines, that can make such miraculous conclusions: All Saints are equall to Angels, Ergo, They shall be aboue them. At the least you should haue chosen some other ground to haue sowen this seed vpon. Coloss. 2. 18

CHAP. XXI.

Verse 37. AND the daies hee was teaching in the Temple: but the nights going forth, hee abode in the ‡ Mount that is called Oliuet.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [37 Mount that is called] Solitarinesse or heremitage (as S. Gregory Nazian. sayth) is a goodly thing, this doth the mount Carmel of Elias teach, Iohns desert, and that mount vnto which Iesus often retired, and was quietly alone with himselfe Ser. 26. de amore pauperum.

CARTVV. 1. 37 Mount that is called.] It is a godly thing, when a man is driven for the truths sake, from the comfortable society of men, as was Elias, or when it is sought for prayer, to the end that the ordinary function, which is exercised amongst men, may bee done with more fruite, as in the example of Christ. But when it is taken in hand without such causes, by voluntary vow and profession, then the Eremits are like the Wolues of the Desart, which (as the Prophet noteth) worry most, and bite sorest. Of Iohns solitarinesse it hath beene spoken of before vpon Math. 3. 1. How small it was, except it bee when hee was in prison. Ezec. 22. 27

Verse. 4. For all these of their aboundance haue cast into the gifts of God: but shee of her penury, hath cast in all her liuing that shee had.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 2. [4 Of her penurie.] To offer or giue almes of our superfluities, is not so acceptable nor meritorious, as to bestow some of that which we may hardly spare from our necessary prouision and which we may hardly spare from our selues: for, that proceedeth of greater zeale, will, and intention, which be more respected of God then the substance of the gift.

CARTVV. 2. [4 Of her penury.] Except the Babilonicall word of Meritorious, which the Church vnderstandeth not, and which wee (once for all) detest whersoeuer it commeth, the rest may passe.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſe. 20 IN like manner the Chalice alſo, after hee had ſupped, ſaying, ‡ This is the | Chalice | the new Teſtament in my Bloud, | which ſhall be ſhed for you.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [20 This is the chalice.] The Greke is here ſo plaine, that there was very bloud in the Chalice ſhed for vs, that Beza ſaith it is a corruption in the Greeke. See the Annotat. upon this place.

CARTVV. This is anſwered in the Annotations.

Verſe. 15. And hee ſaid to them, | with deſire haue I deſired to eate this Paſche with you before I ſuffer.

ANNOTATIONS.

The old paſchall ceaſeth & Chriſts is inſtituted.

RHEM. 2. [15 With deſire I haue deſired.] This great deſire he had to eat the Paſchall lambe, was not for it ſelfe, which he had celebrated many yeeres before, but becauſe he meant immediatly after the Paſchall of the Law was ſacrificed and eaten, to inſtitute the other new Paſchall in the oblation and eating of his own body, by which the olde Paſchall ſhould end and be fulfilled, and in which the olde Teſtament and Law ceaſing the kingdome of God (which is the ſtate of the new Teſtament and of his Church) ſhould begin. For, the very paſſage from the old Law to the new was in this one ſupper.

CARTVV. 2. [15. With deſire I haue deſired.] This he ſaid eſpecially to declare the hunger and thirſt which hee had of our redemption by his death: in ſuch ſort that hee deſired greatly this Paſſeouer, as that which drew his death immediatly with it: ſo that the inſtitution of the Supper hath not the principall but a ſecond regard in this great Deſire of our Sauiour Chriſt. Neither is it the offering of Chriſts body in the Sacrament but the offering it upon the Croſſe, whereby all things were finiſhed, and the vaile of the Temple rent, and the paſſage made of the old Teſtament unto the new: for the new Teſtament hath not his force untill the death of this Teſtator.

Heb. 7. 19.

Verſe. 17. And | taking the Chalice hee gaue thankes, and ſaid, Take and diuide among you.

Two cups or coalices at Chriſts laſt ſupper. Mat. 26. 19

RHEM. 3. [17 Taking the Chalice.] This Chalice according to the very euidence of the text it ſelfe alſo is not the ſecond part of the holy Sacrament, but that ſolemne cuppe of wine which belonged as a libament to the offering and eating to the Paſchall lambe. Which being a figure ſpecially of the holy Chalice, was there drunken by our Sauiour, and giuen to the Apoſtles alſo, with declaration that it ſhould be the laſt cuppe of the Law, not to be drunken any more, till it ſhould be drunken new in the kingdom of God, that is to ſay, in celebration of the B. Sacrament of his bloud of the new Teſtament. And by this place it ſeemeth very like that the words in S. Matthew, I will not drinke of the fruite of the vine. &c. were pertaining to this cuppe of the old Law, and not to the holy Sacrament, though they bee there by repetition or recapitulation ſpoken after the holy Chalice.

CARTVV. 3. 17 Taking the Chalice.] The third and laſt ſentence in this note requiring anſwer is anſwered, upon Math. 26. 29.

Verſe. 19. * And taking bread, hee gaue thankes, and brake: and gaue to them, ſaying, | This is my Body | which is giuen for you. | Do this | for a commemoration of mee.

The veall preſence.

RHEM. 4. [19 This is my body.] Although ſenſe tell thee it is bread, yet it is the body, according to his words. let faith confirme thee, iudge not by ſenſe, after the words of our Lord, let no doubt riſe in thy minde. Cyril. myſtag. 4. Of the veritie of fleſh and bloud there is left no place to doubt: by the profeſſion of our Lord himſelfe and by our faith, it is fleſh and bloud indeed. Is not this trueth; To them be it vntrue, which denie Ieſus Chriſt to be true God. Hilar. li. 8. de Trinit.

CARTVV. 4. [19 This is my body.] Cyrils ſentence is able to maintaine it ſelfe without ſuſpition of tranſſubſtantiation: conſidering that it is a matter of faith paſſing the reach of any Senſe, to beleeue that the bread of the Supper is no common bread, but Sacramentally the body of our Sauiour Chriſt, whereby wee are (after wee haue beleeued) brought further into the participation and communion of our Sauiour Chriſt. Or doth any man doubt, but that the inſtitution of Chriſt in the bread and wine, doth make them Myſteries? But how far Cyril was from this groſſe and fleſhly eating may eaſily appeare otherwhere, where hee ſaith, that whatſoeuer the Holy Ghoſt toucheth is ſanctified and changed, noting that this change is not in the Euchariſt alone, but in all holy things, where alſo hee noteth that the change is the ſanctification of them to ſuch uſes as they are ordained. In Hilarius teſtimony the Ieſuites are fled from the queſtion in hand, for where they ſhould proue our Sauiour Chriſt to bee naturally in the Sacrament, they bring authority that hee is naturally in us, without a ſyllable to proue that hee is naturally in the Sacram. For further anſw. it muſt be underſtood that Hilary proueth againſt the Arians that the vnity of the Sonne with the Father is in ſubſtance, and not in adoption or agreement of will alone, whereunto hee uſeth the argument of our vnity with Chriſt, and his with us, which when it is in ſubſtance, both in that our nature by his conception was naturally knit to him God and man, and our nature by faith is made one with his: that therefore the vnity of the Son with the Father is in ſubſtance, and not in agreement onely: Whereby it is euident that hee meaneth nothing elſe, but that which the Apoſtle ſaith: That we be members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones; and that hee dwelleth in vs by his ſpirit: which being done by faith, before the receiuing of the Supper, it is manifeſt that Hilary ſpeaketh of no other eating of his fleſh, or drinking of his bloud ſpoken of in the Sacrament, then that which is aſwell without the Sacrament, as with it: And ſo himſelf expreſſeth his minde ſaying, That all that ſhall beleeue in him ſhall be one with the Father and the Son. Again he ſaith, that wee communicate vnto the true fleſh of Chriſt vnder a Sacrament, or Sacramentally in a Myſterie, or myſtically and ſpiritually we eate, that is are partakers of the true fleſh of Chriſt. Further, hee affirmeth that by communicating with this Sacrament, aſwell wee are in Chriſt, as Chriſt in vs. But we are not in Chriſt by his eating of our fleſh; it followeth therefore that hee is not in vs, by our eating of his fleſh. Laſt of all, that this naturall vnity with Chriſt and vs muſt bee commodiouſly expounded, and not to the full ſound of the word naturall, it is euident out of the ſame booke, that affirmeth, that wee are one with the Father and the Sonne, not by adoption onely, and conſent of wils but by nature: Where in our vnity of nature with the Father what elſe can bee ſoundly meant, but indeed and truely. In the mollifying of which word, if wee can haue no credite with you, wee preſent you with Hilaries own interpretation, where to proue that wee are ioyned to Chriſt hee ſaith, that wee are ioyned to Chriſt by faith, to wit, By the nature of one faith, that is to ſay naturally: which if it ſatisfie them not, let them heare Cyril, who ſaith, that the naturall vnity is nothing elſe but a true vnity. And to ſay the truth, that which is ſpiritually united is more truely, ſtrongly, and cloſely united, then that which is fleſhly united. And if neither of theſe interpretations will content them; let the Ieſuites picke out what word they can which is conſonant to the Catholike truth, confeſſed (in this point) of both ſides, and that we will not ſtick to apply vnto the vnity of Chriſt with vs in the Sacrament.

RHEM. 5. [19 Which is giuen.] As the former words make and proue his body preſent, ſo theſe words plainly ſignifie, that it is preſent, as giuen, offered or ſacrificed for vs: and being vttered in the *Preſent tenſe, it ſignifieth not onely that it ſhould afterward be giuen or offered on the Croſſe, but that it was then alſo in the Sacrament giuen and offered for vs. Whereby it is inuincibly prooued that his body is preſent as an hoſt or ſacrifice: and that the making or conſecrating thereof muſt needs bee ſacrificing. CARTVV. 5. [19 Which is giuen.] Look anſwer before, upon Math. 26. 28. And it is ſhame for them to bee ignorant in this exchange of Preſent time for the future, ſeeing not onely the old Teſtament and the new, namely Luke in like caſes would haue taught them better. But the tranſlation which they themſelues magnifie aboue the heauen, that is aboue the originall copies, euen in this preſent caſe doth vtterly ouerthrow them: for he declining a little from the charge of a Tranſlator to the office of a Paraphraſt, and briefe expounder of the Text, hath plainely put in place of, is giuen, ſhall be giuen. 1. Cor. 11. 24. as others beſide him haue done in the cup. And what ſhould wee ſeeke ſo farre when this inuincible argument is conuinced of falſhood in the next verſe of their own tranſlation, which tranſlateth the preſent time by the time to come, which ſhall bee ſhed. How alſo will you maintaine it an vnbloody ſacrifice: If you will needs haue theſe words expounded according to the preciſe ſound of them, vndelayed with any trope or borrow of ſpeech. And where they would yoke in both the Sacrament of his paſſion, and his paſſion to bee ſignified by one word of Giuen, it is manifeſt that they are according to the prouerbe to bee ſent home to the cuſtody and ouerſight of their kinſfolke, which would haue one and the ſame word, in one and the ſame place to ſignifie that which was preſent, and that which was to come, and one and the ſame ſingular action to bee done at diuers times. And as for the antiquity that is heere conſtrained (will it nill it) to appeare to proue that there is a Sacrifice, or ſinne offering in the Supper, the wiſe Reader may eaſily coniecture by the muſling of them, that they ſhould not ſo much as one of ſo great a number ſpeak, were it not that the Ieſuites are in iealouſie of them, that whilſt calling it a Sacrifice, they ſhould ſpeake one word for them, in naming it otherwhere, A Sacrifice of thankeſgiuing and a ſigne of the commemoration of Chriſts body and bloud, a remembrance in ſtead of a ſacrifice, a figuratiue ſacrifice, a type of the great myſteries and the Altar to be in heauen, whither our oblations and prayers are directed, &c. They ſhould ſpeake two againſt them. Beſide that their hands itching to ſcrabble what they can rap or rend: you may be well aſſured that they (which for the moſt part alledge at length the teſtimonies directly againſt themſelues) would not haue loſt this opportunity of blotting a ſheet of paper, if their mouth ſhould not therefore haue beſhrewed their hand. And as for all antiquity, it ſhall appeare how little your propitiatory ſacrifice in the ſacrament is beholden to it. The new Start ups as certaine of the Councels alledged in the end, wee eſteeme no more of them, then Roboam ſhould haue eſteemed of his yonkers and beardleſſe Councellers.

RHEM. 6. [19 Doe this.] In theſe words the holy Sacrament of Order is inſtituted, becauſe power and commiſſion to doe the principall act and worke of Prieſthood, is giuen to the Apoſtles; that is to do that which Chriſt then did concerning his body, which was, to make & offer his body as a ſacrifice for vs and for all that haue need of ſacrifice, and to giue it to be eaten as Chriſtes body ſacrificed, to all faithfull. For as the Paſchall lambe was firſt ſacrificed, and then eaten: ſo was his body: and thus to doe he here giueth commiſſion and authority to the Apoſtles, and to all Prieſts which be their ſucceſſours in this matter. Dion. cal. Hierar. c. 3. Iren. li. 4. c. 32. Cyp. ep. ad Cæc. Chryſoſtom. 17. in ep. ad Heb. Amb. in Pſ. 38. & in c. 10 ad Heb.

The Apoſtles are made Prieſts, and the Sacrament of holy Orders inſtituted.

CARTVV. 6. [19. Doe this.] To proue, that to doe this, to ſacrifice the body of Chriſt, here is nothing thing but the bankrupt credit of the Iesuits, contrary to the vse of the Greeke word, and contrary to the interpretation of the Apostle, who interpreteth these words, Do this in my remembrance, by these, As oft as yee shall eate this bread, and drink this cup, yon shall declare the Lords death vntill he come. If it signifie to sacrifice, then priuate persons in the Church, to whom it is commanded, Doe this, are ordained sacrificing Priests; and then also it followes, that they must sacrifice not onely the body of Christ, but whatsoeuer is done in the Supper, as the taking of the bread, the blessing, the breaking, the giuing and eating of it, for the relatiue (This) comprehendeth the whole institution. And so they will make almost as many propitiatory sacrifices as they forge sacraments. The passeouer must of necessity be first slaine, or euer it could be eaten, otherwise they must haue eaten it both aliue and raw: but it is not so in Christ, who was the tree of life, the Manna, the paschall and spirituall food unto the faithfull of all ages. For as the death of our Sauiour Christ once suffered towards the end of the world, reached vnto Adam whilest he liued (in which respect Christ is noted to be the slaine Lambe from the beginning of the world:) euen so the sacrament of his death, ministred before hee died, hath the effect which that sacrament hath, which is ministred after his death. And if you will presse the Analogie of the Passeouer, you shall be constrained to confesse, that our Sauiour Christ (a horrible thing to remember) slue himselfe in this supper, considering that the Passeouer could not bee eaten before it was slaine. And the Apostle shewing in diuers places, a great difference between the sacrifice of the law, and the sacrifice of Christ, doth easily shew the vanity of your comparison. And yet if you mark well, it will be turned against you: for thereof will follow, that as the bloud was offered vnto God, and not drunke of the people, so it ought to be in the Sacrament. Touching the institution of the Sacrament of order in this place, see their folly herein before, vpon Math. 26. 20. Into which folly they haue here made a further step, whilest they call this action in the sacrament, The principall act and worke of Priesthood; wherein they imbase their Priesthood, and cast it under all honest and liberall professions or occupations that are upon earth: to the furniture of which occupations there is more required then is or can be performed by the greatest part of your massing Priests: neither in the true Church, where this sacrament is duely by able ministers celebrated, is it yet the chiefe seruice of God, and the principall act of Ministery, considering that the sacraments are appendants, and haue their force of the preaching of the Gospell: considering also that S. Paul being lifted into the highest ministery in the Church, was sent to preach the Gospell, and not so much to administer the sacraments. The testimonies here cited, proue nothing of that they are alledged for: and Denis toucheth nothing in controuersie between vs, vnlesse it be that the ministers doe perfect their hearers not by the administration of the sacrament, but by the most holy doctrine, assigning the principall act of the ministery in preaching, and not in sacrificing; for if of the word ἱερουργία, you will ground a sacrifice, it is but your ignorance, that know not that it signifying all holy seruices to God, cannot bee restrained to sacrificing. The rest speake of an oblation or sacrifice, which as it is no principall point of this annotation, being the argument of the annotation that went before, so it is not denied of vs.

Heb. 9.

1. Cor. 1. 17.

REM. 7. [19 For a commemoration.] This Sacrifice and Sacrament is to be done perpetually in the Church for the commemoration of Christ, specially of his Passion: that is to say, that it may be a liuely representation, exemplar, and forme of his sacrifice vpon the crosse. Of which one oblation on the crosse, not onely all other sacrifices of the Law were figures, but this also: though this is a more nigh, high, mysticall, and meruellous sort then any other, for in them Christs death was signified as by resemblance and similitudes of externall creatures and bodies of bruit beasts, but in this of the New Testament, his body visibly sacrificed on the crosse, in and by the selfesame body sacrificed and immolated in Sacraments and vnder the shapes of bread and wine, is most neerely and perfectly resembled: and therefore this is most properly commemoratiue, as most neerely expressing the very condition, nature, efficacy, sort and substance of that on the crosse. For which the holy fathers call it the very selfe same sacrifice (though in other manner) which was done on the crosse as it is the selfesame thing that is offered in the Sacrament, and on the crosse. Whereby you may see the peruersity of the Protestants or their ignorance, that thinke it therefore not to be Christes body, because it is a memory of his body vpon the crosse nor to be a true sacrifice, because it is a commemoratiue sacrifice, for as the thing that more liuely, neerely, and truely resembleth or representeth, is a better figure then that which shadoweth it a farre off: so this his body in the Sacrament, is more perfectly a figure of Christes body and sacrifice, then any other. Christ himselfe the Sonne of God is a figure and character of his Fathers person, being yet of the selfesame substance, and Christs body transfigured on the holy Mount, was a figure and resemblance of his person glorified in heauen, euen so is his body in the Sacrament to a faithfull man that knoweth by his beleeue grounded on Christs own word, that in the one forme is his body, in the other his blood, the most perfect representation of his death that can be. As for the sacrifice, it is no lesse a true sacrifice, because it is commemoratiue of Christs Passion: then those of the old Testament were the lesse true, because they were prefiguratiue, for that is the condition annexed to all sacrifice of euery Law, to represent Christes Passion.

A commemoration-sacrifice is a true sacrifice, no lesse then the prefiguratiue sacrifices were true sacrifices.

Anb. in 10. Heb. Chrysost. hom. 17. in ep. ad Hebr.

To bee a figure of a thing, & yet the same it selfe to signifie not.

CANT VV. 7. [19 For a commemoration.] As wee haue heard of you, and now see in you, wee looke for no sound knowledge, or substantiall learning at your hand. Howbeit we esteemed you had had a reasonable sense and understanding of men, which now we perceiue your sorcerous Transubstantiation hath bewitched: Change therefore your cloudy speech, whereby heere and otherwhere almost throughout your whole booke, you steale away the sense of the Scripture from the understanding of the simple and unlearned man: Change (I say) your word of Commemoration into a Remembrance, And the Argument which you so proudly and scornefully reiect, hath such euidence that the simplest man may see the truth thereof: for wee haue no need to remember him by a figure or representation of Sacrament which himselfe is present; the use of remembrance being in things past and not present. And if some mans counterfeit, and his own person, were set in one chamber before him that desired to know the mans proportion and features; wee suppose hee would take his know ledge of the person himselfe, and not of the counterfeit, which should in this case, and to this end bee of no use. The Sacrament therefore being a figure and representation of Christ crucified should bee (for the point of remembrance) fruitlesse and endlesse, if himselfe should bee in such grosse manner present in it. Hereunto also serueth that our Sauiour fore-seeing that it was the first and the last time that hee should celebrate the Sacrament with his Disciples, said, as oft as they should doe it, they should doe it in his remembrance, But when it is aded, Vntill his comming, thereby hee declareth euidently not onely that hee should be bodily absent during the celebration thereof, but that it both took beginning of his bodily ablence (the which might by the use of this Sacramen be easilier borne) and that it should haue an end by his bodily presence, which should bee in the end of the world. They are herein also forsaken of common sense and reason, that they make the figure, and the thing figured, the resemblance and the thing resembled to bee one and the same. As if the picture of a man set in a Table should bee the same with the man himselfe whose picture it is: Or as if a peece of wax that had taken the print of a seale, should bee the same with the seale it selfe, whereas not so much as the bare print is the same with the originall from which it was taken, but onely a paterne of it. And if they understood the language of the Logicians wee could tell them that neither the subiect can bee the adiunct, nor the likenesse and representation one of another can be but in them that bee diuers one from another: Not to speak of their sectarie opinion in this point, as from the truth, so from their own men which make not the body of Christ the Sacrament, but the accidence of the bread, &c. As for the ir reasons they use heereunto, they are partly false and partly friuolous: for Chrysostome after he had affirmed that the sacrifice used in the Church is the same with that which was done on the Crosse in the end correcteth himselfe, saying, It is rather a remembrance of, that sacrifice. And indeed it is impossible that that singular action upon the Crosse should bee the same with any thing whatsoeuer. Impossible that they which differ in place diuersly, in time diuersly, also in Priest diuersly bee one and the same: that that which is with death should bee the same that is without death: that the bloudy sacrifice should be one with the unbloudy: certainely it must needs bee a strong cup of enchantment that should turne one of these into another.

Hier. in Mat. cap. 26. Tertul. contra Marc. li. 1. & 4.

Chrysost. homil. 17. in Heb.

The second reason of our Saviour Christ being a figure and character of his Father and yet of the same substance, is babish. For it is no proper speach to say that Christ is a figure of his Father, but borrowed and metaphoricall, whereas the Sacrament of the Supper is truely and properly a figure of Christ crucified. Beside that instead that they say that Christ is a character and figure of his Father, and yet of the same substance: to haue said any thing to the matter in controuersie, they should haue said that Christ a figure of the Father's person, is yet the same person that the Father: which is utterly false, the Sonne being an other person from the Father, and not the Father.

And for their third reason, that Christs body transfigured in the Mount is a figure of his person glorified in heauen. Let them first shew the institution of this figure, for we admit no figures of the glorified body of Christ, that are of the stamp of mans braine, and it is absurd that the transfigured body which is but one, and the least part of the person should be both a figure of itselfe and of the whole. Then we further say, that as Socrates old and learned, differed from himselfe being yong and rude; so the transfigured body of Christ, being in the Mount mortall (and therefore uncapable of so great glory as this glorified body is) is not in that respect that it was transfigured, the same with his body glorified: beside that, the glory of his transfigured body vanished away, where his glorified person in heauen shall abide for euermore.

RHEM. 8. [20 The new Testament in my blood.] Moyses tooke the blood of the first sacrifice that was made after the giuing of the Law, Exod. 24. and with blood confirmed the couenant and compact betwixt God and his people, and so dedicated the Old Testament, which without bloud (saith S. Paul) was not dedicated. Moyses put that bloud also into a standing piece, and sprinkled all the people &c. with the same, and sayd these formall words, This is the bloud of the couenant, &c. or (as it is read in S. Paul) of the Testament which God hath deliuered vnto you. Vnto all which, Christ in this action about the second part of this his sacrifice, in euery of the Euangelists most cleerely alludeth, expressing that the New Testament is begun and dedicated in his bloud in the Chalice, no lesse then the Old was dedicated begun, and ratified in that bloud of calues conteined in the goblet of Moyses, with which his own bloud he sprinkled inwardly his Apostles as the first fruites of the New Testament, imitating the words of Moyses, and saying, This is the Chalice of the New Testament, &c. which the other Euangelists spake more plainely, This is my blood of the New Testament. By all which it is most certaine that Christes bloud in the Chalice, is the bloud of Sacrifice, and that in this sacrifice of the altar consisteth the externall religion and proper seruice of the New Testament, no lesse then the soueraine worship of God in the old Law did consist in the sacrifices of the same. For though Christes sacrifice on the Crosse: and his bloud shed for vs there be the generall price, redemption, and satisfaction for vs all, and is the last and perfectest sealing or confirmation of the new Law and Testament: yet the seruice and sacrifice which the people of the New Testament might resort vnto, could not bee that violent action of the Crosse, but this on the Altar, which by Christes own appointment is and shalbe the eternall office of the New Testament, and the continuall application of all the benefits of his Passion vnto vs.

Heb. 9. Both Testaments dedicated in blood. Vers. 20.

The externall Religion of the new Testament principally in the sacrifice of the Altar.

CARTWR. 8. [20 The new Testament in my bloud.] Here is nothing but a beggarly asking of that which is in controuersie, namely, that it is bloud which is in the Chalice, which is a figure of the bloud which was to be shed the next day. And the very Analogy of the blond of the old Testament doth utterly ouerthrow them. For as that bloud could not establish the old couenant but by the death of that beast which was offered in sacrifice, euen so cannot the new Testament bee ratified, but onely in the death of the Sonne of God: seeing therefore you admit no death in the Sacrament, it followeth that there can bee no bloud of ratification in the Chalice. In which respect the Writer of the Epistle to the Hebrewes affirmeth that the Testament cannot bee established but in the death of the Testator, and confirmeth the same by comparison of the old Testament, making the bloud of the new Testament in this point, like vnto the bloud of the old.

Heb. 9. 16, 17, 18.

The Chalice shed for vs, must needes signifie the bloud therein. not wine, and the same sacrificed.

RHEM. 9, [20 Which shalbe shed.] It is much to be obserued that the relatiue, Which, in these wordes is not gouerned or ruled (as some would perhaps thinke) of the nowne blood, but of the word chalice, which is most plaine by the Greeke. Which taketh away all cauillations and shifts from the Protestants, both against the reall presence and the true Sacrificing. For it sheweth euidently, that the bloud as the contents of the chalice, or as in the chalice, is shed for vs (for so the Greek readeth in the present tense) and not onely as vpon the Crosse. And therefore as it followeth thereof inuincibly, that it is no bare figure, but his bloud indeed, so it ensueth necessarily, that it is a Sacrifice, and propitiatorie, because the chalice (that is the Bloud contained in the same) is shed for our sins. For all that know the maner of the Scriptures speeches, know also that this, Bloud to be shed for sin, is to be sacrificed for propitiation or for pardon of sins. And this text proueth all this so plainely, that Beza (Annot. Nou. Test. 1556) turneth himselfe roundly vpon the holy Euangelist, charging him with Solœcisme or false Greeke, or else that the words (which yet he confesseth to be in all copies Greek and Latin) are thrust into the text out of some other place: which he rather standeth vpon then that S. Luke should speake incongruously in so plain a matter. And therefore he saith plainely that it can not be truely said neither of the chalice it selfe nor of the contents thereof: which is indeed to giue the lie to the blessed Euangelist, or to deny this to be Scripture. So cleere is the Scripture for vs, so miserable flights and shifts is falsehood put vnto, God be thanked

Beza condemneth the Gospel it selfe of falshood & impossibility.

CARTVV. 9 [20. Which shall be shed] We know, and M. Beza confesseth, that the holy Ghost, which teacheth other to speake and to write, can speak and write well. And this construction which you follow, hurteth not vs a whit, nor could not bleare your eyes neither; if that you understood that the sacraments take their names of the things wherof they are sacraments. And therfore it offendeth not vs that the wine in the cup is called Bloud, no more then it offendeth vs that the bread is called the Body: yet if you will bite so hard vpon the word, it shall follow that the cup (or that in it) is the new Testament, which is not the new Testament, but that wherewith the new Testament is established. You fall a railing vpon M. Beza: but the knot you undoe not, but carterly cut it in peeces. M. Beza himselfe hath taught you to undoe it, and how to retaine the words of the Euangelist with congruity of the tongue, which you would your selues faine haue vsed, but that the pride of your heart is such, that you will not acknowledge him your master, whose pettices you are unworthy to be. And notwithstanding that he hath changed no word in the Euangelist, but left all as he found it, ouercome with the consent of the Greeke Copies (against whose authority he maketh no such account of Basils reading) yet as if he changed round into square, you barke against him; where your selues are to be put in mind of your shamefull adding and diminishing to and from the words of the institution: for you haue interlaced the word (or,) also that Christ lifted up his eyes, also the word euerlasting: likewise the mystery of faith. Of the other side you omit, which shall be giuen for you. And yet these manglers and maimers of the institution haue mouthes to open against M. Beza, which hath left all whole as hee found it. And if you esteeme him miserable for saying that Luke the Euangelist used a Solœcophanes in one place; to speake nothing of Erasmus, how miserable will you esteeme Ierom, who affirmeth that Paul the Apostle maketh solœcismes more then one. For as for solœcophanes it is sometime eloquently used, not onely of other writers, but of Luke himselfe otherwhere, as Act. 26. 17.

Ambition.

RHEM. 10 [24 Contention.] The Apostles perceiuing Christs departure from them and his kingdom to be neere, as infirme men and not yet endued with the spirit of God, began to haue emulation & cogitations of Superioritie one ouer another: which our Maister represseth in them by exhortation to humilitie and by his own example, that being their Lord, yet so lately serued them: not forbidding Maioritie or Superioritie in them, but pride, tyrannie, and contempt of their inferiours.

Rom. 8.

Vpon Matth. 20. 25.

CARTVV. 10. [24. Contention.] They were indued with the spirit of God, although not so plentifully as after the ascension; otherwise he that hath not the spirit of God is none of his. That maiority and superiority amongst them is reproued, it hath been shewed, and the Iesuits at vnawares here confesse it, for if our Sauiour condemned the thoughts that then rose in their hearts, the Iesuites affirming that they were thoughts of superiority that rose in them, and not of tyranny: it followeth, that he reproued superiority, and not the desire of gouerning tyrannously, which is a deeper accusation against the Apostles, then they are able to make proofe of. It is no maruell therefore, if for their aduantage they fasten their teeth so hard vpon vs; when to vphold the rotten boat or barke of Rome, they spare not the Apostles themselues.

Verse 31. And our Lord sayd, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath required to haue you for to sift as wheat:

Peters faith shall neuer faile.

RHEM. 11. [31 Simon, Simon] Lastly to put them out of doubt, he calleth Peter twise by name, and telling him the Diuels desire to sift and try them all to the vttermost (as he did that night) saith that he hath specially prayed for him, to this end that his faith should neuer faile, and that he being once conuerted should after that for euer confirme, establish or vphold the rest in their faith. Which is to say, that Peter is that man whom he would make Superiour ouer them and the whole Church. Whereby we may learne that it was thought fit in the prouidence of God, that he who should be the head of the Church should haue a speciall priuiledge by Christes prayer and promise, neuer to faile in faith, and that none other either Apostle, Bishop, or Priest may chalenge any such singular or speciall prerogatiue either of his Office or person, otherwise then ioyning in faith with Peter and by holding of him. The danger (saith S. Leo) was common to all the Apostles, but our Lord tooke speciall care of Peter, that the state of all the rest might be more sure, if the head were inuincible: God so dispensing the aid of his grace, that the assurance and strength which Christ gaue to Peter, might redound by Peter to the rest of the Apostles. S. Augustine also: Christ praying for Peter, prayed for the reſt, becauſe in the Paſtor and Prelate the people is corrected or commended. And S. Ambroſe writeth, that Peter after his tentation was made Paſtor of the Church, becauſe it was ſaid to him, Thou being converted, confirme thy brethren. Ne ther was this the priuiledge of S. Peters perſon, but of his Office that he ſhould not faile in faith, but euer confirme all other in their faith. For the Church, for whoſe ſake that priuiledge was thought neceſſary in Peter the Head thereof, was to be preſerued no leſſe afterward, then in the Apoſtles time. Whereupon all the Fathers apply this priuilege of not failing and of confirming other in faith, to the Romane Church and Peters ſucceſſors in the ſame. To which (ſaith S. Cyprian) infidelity or falſe faith can not come. And S. Bernard ſaith writing to Innocentius Pope, againſt Abailardus the Hereticke, we muſt referre to your Apoſtleſhip all the ſcandals and perils which may fall, in matter of faith ſpecially. For there the defects of faith muſt be holpen, where faith cannot faile. For to what other See was it euer ſaid I haue prayed for the Peter, that thy faith do not faile; So ſay the Fathers, not meaning, that none of Peters ſeate can erre in perſon, vnderſtanding, priuate doctrine or writings, but that they can not nor ſhall not euer iudicially conclude or giue definitiue ſentence for falſhood or hereſie againſt the Catholike faith, in their Conſiſtories, Courts, Councels, decrees, deliberations or conſultations kept for deciſion and determination of ſuch controuerſies, doubts or queſtions of faith as ſhalbe propoſed vnto them: becauſe Chriſts prayer & promiſe protecteth them therin for confirmation of their brethren. And no maruel that our Maiſter would haue his vicars Conſiſtory & Seat infallible, ſeeing euen in the old law the high Prieſthood & Chaire of Moyſes wanted not great priuiledge in this caſe, though nothing like the Churches and Peters prerogatiue. But in both, any man of ſenſe may ſee the difference between the perſon, & the Office, as wel in doctrine as life. Liberius in perſecution might yeeld, Marcellinus for feare might commit Idolatrie, Honorius might fall to Hereſie, and more then all this, ſome Iudas might creepe into the Office: and yet all this without preiudice of the Office and Seat, in which (ſaith S. Aug.) our Lord hath ſet the doctrine of truth. Caiphas by priuilege of his Office prophecied right of Chriſt, but according to his own knowledge & faith, knew not Chriſt. The Euangeliſts and other penners of holy Writ, for the execution of that function had aſſiſtance of God, and ſo far could not poſſibly erre: but that Luke, Marke, Salomon or the reſt might not erre in other their priuate writings, that we ſay not. It was not the perſonall wiſdome, vertue, learning, or faith of Chriſts vicars, that made S. Bernard ſeeke to Innocentius the third: S. Auguſtine and the Biſhops of Afrike to Innocentius the firſt, and to Celeſtinus ep. 90. 92. 95. S. Hierome to Damaſus ep 57. 58. to. 2, but it was the prerogatiue of their Office and higher degree of Vnction, and Chriſts ordinance, that would haue all Apoſtles and Paſtors in the world, for their confirmation in faith and Eccleſiaſticall regiment, depend on Peter. The lacke of knowledge and humble acceptation of which Gods prouidence, that is, that one is not honoured and obeyed of all the brotherhood, is the cauſe of all Schiſmes & Hereſies, ſaith S. Cyprian, A point of ſuch importance, that all the Twelue being in Apoſtleſhip like, Chriſt would yet for the better keeping of vnity and truth, haue one to be head of them all, that a head being once appointed, occaſion of Schiſme might be taken away, ſayth S. *Hierom li. 1. adu. The learned Fathers ſought to the B. of Rome for reſolution of doubts. Bernard ep. 190. Chryſ. ep. 1. & 2. Cypr. ep. 55. num. 2.

CARTVV. 11. [31 Simon Simon.] It is a ſtrange priuiledge the cauſe whereof roſe vpon the horrible fall & deniall of our Sauiour Chriſt by Peter; for our Sauiour Chriſt hauing prayed for all his Apoſtles that their faith ſhould neuer faile, doth tell Peter eſpecially and by name thereof, for that he foreſaw not onely Peters abiuring of him but all the floudes and waues of temptations that could accompanie this abiuration of Chriſt, wherein that he ſhould not be drunke vp by Diſpare of pardon in ſuch a heynous crime, our Sauiour telleth him particularly, regarding not the ſuperiority of Peter, but the truth of his promiſe, that none of the twelue ſhould periſh beſide the loſt one. Chryſoſtome in this caſe hath, although not the ſame, yet the like iudgement unto this, at the leaſt it is as ſtrong againſt the Popiſh wreſting of this place, as that which is alledged. Therefore to him alone (ſaith Chryſoſtom) Chriſt ſaid Satan hath deſired to ſift you, but I haue prayed that thy faith ſhould not faile, becauſe peraduenture he ſauoured high things, or was lifted vp in pride, truſting to the deſert, for that he loued Chriſt more. You were wont to make the way to obtaine priuiledges by merit of good workes, but now as men that know not your owne voyce, you ground your priuiledges vpon ſhamefull falles, peraduenture becauſe you remembred that your Popes by their noble acts of Necromancie giuing themſelues to the diuell, empoyſonings, and ſuch like, clime vp vnto their priuiledged chaire, and that otherwiſe they could not be Peters ſucceſſors, vnleſſe Peters prerogatiue were conueyed unto him, through his abiuring of Chriſt. And if Peter vpon occaſion of his fall, gained ſuch a priuiledge, how much more ought Iohn to haue it, which entred into the high Prieſts hall as well as Peter, went out of the ſame againe, without crack of his faith towards Chriſt, which Peter without any great ſtorme of tentation, had almoſt made ſhipwracke of. And if Peter had been ſurnamed (as Iohn was) he whom the Lord loued, if he had but leaned vpon his breaſt once, as Iohn did many times, if he had committed the care of his mother (whom ſometimes you make a figure of the whole Church) to Peter as he did unto Iohn, if he had reuealed the eſtate of the whole Church to the worlds end to Peter, as he did to Iohn, which were indeed priuiledges and preheminences aboue the reſt. I feate not how little skill ſoeuer you haue, but that you could (if you would) ſet a better flouriſh of Iohns priuiledges and preheminence then euer you haue yet been able to do vpon Peters; wherein I pray you conſider what a large field you ſhould haue to walke in, in that S. Iohn of all the Apoſtles (as you ſay) the onely virgin, was hee to whom (in all conuenience) the Church which is a virgin, ſhould be committed. Epheſus therefore, if it had light vpon ſuch a Nimrod biſhop as Rome did, might eaſily haue found ſuch proctors and aduocates, as would haue ſet it in as great forwardneſſe of ſuperiority, as you euer were able to do Rome. And as for this of praying that Peters faith ſhould not faile, firſt it ſignifieth not, that Peter could not fall, but that he ſhall not lie ſtill when he hath fallen, as the iſſue declared. Then if it ſhould be reformed to the office of Peter, rather then to his priuate perſon, it is no demaine of Peters, but common to all the Apoſtles, who failed in faith no more then Peter did. Touching Leo his reaſon, it is light as his authority. For firſt it is vntrue that the danger was common to all the Apoſtles: for Peter, which thruſt himſelfe into the high Prieſts houſe, was in more danger then were those Apostles, that hauing fled, pressed not thither. Secondly, the speciall care of Christ ouer Peter, proueth not any supreme power that he could giue him aboue the rest. For the parent hath ouer his yongest sonne sicke, more care for the present, then for all the rest of his sonnes, being in good health: yet followeth it not, that therefore he will preferre him to all the rest of his brethren. Augustine in the same place saith, Did he pray for Peter, and not for Iames and Iohn, to speake nothing of the rest of the Apostles. Whereupon he concludeth that in Peter all were contained, meaning that our Sauiour in saying that he prayed for Peter, meant that he prayed for all the rest, which he proueth out of Iohn 17 chapter. This hath Augustine, but the words which you put in his mouth, that in the Pastor or Prelate the people is corrected and commanded, he hath nothing of in that place, namely in quæst. veteris & noui Testamenti, 75. which was printed by Frobenius: and if there were any such thing, yet we see not how that can make for Peters supremacie aboue all other Apostles, much lesse for the Bishop of Rome aboue all other Bishops, it rather maketh against it, vnlesse you will make the rest of the Apostles to goe under the reckoning of the people. And it is euident that our Sauiour Christ in the solemne prayer wherewith he shut up his last Sermon, which hee had to his Disciples before his passion, doth not onely pray for all the Apostles, the Pastors and Teachers of the Church, but had also a speciall prayer for the Church, which had been but a battalogie if he had in the prayer for the pastors recommended the estate of the Church. And how farre Augustine was from this iudgement of the Iesuits, it may appeare in that he readeth, I haue prayed for you, and not I haue prayed for thee, that your faith should not faile, and not that thy faith should not faile. Indeed he saith, that Peter was appoynted the head of the Disciples, that he might be the Pastor of the Lords flock, but thereby he maketh not him pastor ouer the rest of the Apostles, but ouer the Lords people, especially the Iewes, as appeareth by that which he alledged forthwith when he citeth that therefore hee had prayed that his faith might not faile, that when hee was conuerted hee might strengthen his brethren, which were the people of the Iewes, whose faith he is known to haue strengthened, that neuer was ready to haue strengthened the faith of the Apostles, as those in whom there is no speciall weakenesse marked out. But wee read that Paul strengthened him, and staied him from falling when he tottered. And yet wee see not why it maketh any thing for Peters supremacie, that he was Pastor of all the Lords flocke, euen of the other Apostles, euery one of them hauing charge as of all the rest of the flock, so one of them ouer another, although not to teach one another, being all taught immediatly of Christ to all sufficiency, yet to admonish & to strengthen one another. Beside that, it is not the iudgement of Erasmus onely, but of your men that this booke of questions of the old and new Testament is none of Augustines. That of Ambrose is from the question, for it is not debated whether Peter was pastor of the Church, but whether he was the supreme pastor aboue the rest of the Apostles. And the reason that Ambrose proueth him Pastor of the Church, for that he was bidden to strengthen his brethren, restraineth the chiefe charge of Peter to the circumcision, as also after his charge was so limited by consent of the Apostles. For Peter at that time had no brethren but amongst the Iewes, where further your ruinous building of the Romish seat is very plainely and euidently to bee seene, in which the laying of one stone is the casting downe of another. For where you affirme that Peter that was put in possession of the supremacie by these words, Feed my sheepe: hereby you make him their head and supreame gouernor immediatly after he had repented his forswearing of Christ: and vpon what weak words doe they build this stiffe and strong gouernment, namely upon the word Strengthen, as if there were no difference betwene rule ouer thy brethren, and strengthen them, the latter being a duety that belongeth vnto all Christians, and may be done not onely of equals, as of one hand vnto another, but of inferiours to their greatest rulers, as of the foot to the head. And the meaning of our Sauiour Christ is, that forasmuch as Peter should deeply taste of Gods mercy, therefore hee should bee fit to strenthen others; as Paul by the comfort he receiued, had wherewith to comfort others. But against it they might haue found, that this was spoken, not of the publick doctrine, but of the personall faith of Peter, in that it is said, For thee and thy faith, whereunto seruеth that he calleth him Simon, rather then Peter. And it is euident, that this not failing in faith is common to all the children of God, as it hath also been before declared.

Iohn. 7. 20. Aug. de verb dom. in Luk serm. 36. Quæst. veteris & Noui Testamenti 75. Gal. 2. 11. Censur. in lib. emendem in append. operum. Aug. Tom. 4. Gal. 2. 9. 1. Thes. 5. 11. Rom. 1. 11. 2. Cor. 1. 4.

Now as to proue Peters supremacie (by way of wrest) they haue somewhat out of the scripture, but so to proue the Popes succession vnto this supremacie they can not find so much as a word. And therefore here alwaies they borrow their prooses from men, if yet it bee to borrow to take them beside, and oftentimes directly against their will, which is most euident in the allegation of Cyprian for declaring that Nouatus and his mates went with tales and lyes to Rome to draw him and his fellowes into hatred, he further affirmeth that the Romanes (whose faith the Apostle had commended) could not be so light of credite as to beleeue those lies and tales, they haue sophistically wrested it from a godly circumspection and warines in not beleeuing euery flying report to the faith whereupon the Church of God is grounded. And whereas Cyprian meaneth that they could not in any likelihood be deceiued with vaine reportes, they take it as if he had affirmed that they could not possibly be deceiued: And last of all where Cyprian spake of the gouernours and state of the Romane Church at that time, they stretch it to all the succession of Rome, which to haue been nothing lesse then Cyprians meaning may appeare in that Stephen another bishop of Rome is charged by the same Cyprian to haue dealt too losely with the bishop of Arles who denied repentance and to returne to the Church, vnto those that had fallen from the trueth of the Gospell to Idolatrie. And notwithstanding that the same Stephen held not rebaptizing of those which were baptised by heretickes, yet Cyprian did not therefore giue ouer his opinion, which out of doubt he would haue done if he had beleeued that the Bishop of Rome could not haue erred in faith. Of the contrary part he chargeth Stephen as haning dealt proudly, impertinently, vnlearnedly, vnwarily, and contrarie to himselfe in the defence of Heretickes against Christians and against the Church. And in another place not he onely but a whole synode of Africke charge him to haue been deceiued and abused by two heretickes whom he would haue set in to be bishops, contrarie to both the lawfull deposition and the Church lawfull election of other catholike biſhops. Tertullian alſo accuſeth the Biſhop of Rome to be a montaniſt hereticke. And it would require much time to reckon vp all the biſhops of Rome that haue been hereticks, coniurers or other men of monſtrous life. Their own ſeruant Bernard alſo, of whom for want of better euidence, they are conſtrained to borrow a teſtimonie of the Popes ſupremacie, layeth to the Popes charge that he was a great perſecutor of the godlie. So that where you ſay, what if ſuch a one were an hereticke, ſuch an other an Idolater, and yet the third which ſhould creepe in to the ſeat like Iudas: ye wiſſe yow need not be ſo nice or deintie in the matter conſidering that after Boniface, and eſpecially the thouſand yeers paſt, we may well aske you what was his name which entered vpon that ſeat not marked in his forehead with the blacke coale of ſome notable vice and enormitie, which made him (according to the rule of the Apoſtle) vtterly vnable for the leaſt miniſterie in the Church. Tell vs (I ſay) where we ſhall find him that we may honour him, if not for any great deſert of vertue, yet for that he was not ſo out of faſhion and deformed as his fellowes. I doubt not but it may bee truelie ſaid of your Popes, which Ariſtotle ſomewhere affirmeth of good Monarches, that their names may be all written with in the ſmall compaſſe of a ring. Howbeit how foule ſoeuer the perſon be which ſitteth in the Romiſh ſeat, the Ieſuites haue found out ſuch a preſeruatiue, that when the perſon of the Pope ſhall be an Hereticke, yet the Pope ſhal be a catholique, and when his perſon is ſeaſed vpon with all manner of ſin, yet the Pope ſhall remaine crowned with all manner of vertues: and conſequently when the Popes perſon ſhall be in the bottome of hell, yet the Pope himſelfe ſhall be in the top of heauen. This is hard to vnderſtand, howbeit the Ieſuites expound them ſelues, that in priuate doctrine and writing they may erre, but not in their courts conſiſtories and Councels. We wayted that they ſhould haue put in pulpits too, which they might haue done with ſo much more truth then thy do thoſe which they haue named, as the Popes rarelie teaching there, can ſeldom erre in them. But make vs (I beſeech you) better acquainted how he that is in his chamber an hereticke ſhould be when he cometh to Peters Church a catholique, that he which at home hath conſulted euill in his hart ſhould with his mouth (when he cometh abroad) pronounce the cleane contrarie. It was wont to be both an ould and a true prouerbe, that from the wicked goeth out wickednes: but of the pope (that altereth the nature of things) wee perceiue this prouerb can take no hould, but the contrarie thereof, that out of the wicked goeth out goodnes: it is another holie prouerb that out of the treaſure of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, where it is not reſtrained by feare, yet the Popes heart being fraught with hereſie and fearing none, but terrible vnto all; his mouth when he is in court and conſiſtorie powreth forth wholeſome doctrine. I perceiue therefore that at Rome the bramble tree beareth grapes, and the thiſtle figges, and that the Courts and Conſiſtories of Rome are like vnto certaine grounds, which will nouriſh no poiſoned beaſts: yet the holy Temple and Sanctuarie of the Lord had no ſuch priuiledge but that it might bee a den of theeues. And it is no meruaile if the Court and Conſiſtory of Rome condemne the truth, ſeeing that the high Prieſt vnder the Law, which liuely repreſented the perſon of the Sonne of God (where the Biſhop is but a dead image of Peter) had no further priuiledge of determing the trueth in controuerſies: then he was both ſtudious in the law of God and well affected thereunto. And therefore Moyſes doth not bind any man vnto the Prieſts ſentence in matter of controuerſie vnleſſe firſt the prieſt ſhall haue giuen ſentence according to equitie. And how foliſhly this place of Deuteronomie is abuſed to proue the ſeruitude of the truth vnto the high prieſts mouth, it is euident in that the ſame thing in euery point is there ſpoken of the ciuill iudge, which is ſpoken of the ſpiritual, vnleſſe they will ſay, that ciuill Magiſtrates (vnder the Law) had an armour of proofe againſt all falſe iudgements in ciuill affaires, they can not by this place auow it in the high prieſt. And if the ciuill magiſtrate vnder the law could not giue falſe iudgment how much leſſe (to follow the tract of your reaſon) can he do it vnder the Goſpel, how fondlie alſo it is now reſtrained to the Biſhop of Rome, it appeareth by Cyprian which applieth this ſentence of Deuteronomie vnto the iudgement, that any biſhop ſhall giue in his charge, and namelie he applieth it unto himſelfe.

Tertul. contra Parax. Bernard. de conuerſ. Paul. 1. Tim. 3. 12 2. Sam. 24. 13. 14. Mat. 22. 34 Ier. 7. 11. Deut. 17. 9. 10. Cypr. ad florent. pupian epiſt. 69.

There remaineth therefore onely the example of Balaam which may ſuccour the Ieſuites in this caſe; for albeit he had (through greedineſſe of gaine) a purpoſe to haue curſed the people of God, yet when hee came to giue his definitiue ſentence, the Lord did ſo maſterfully turne his tongue that in ſteed of curſing hee was conſtrained to bleſſe the people of God; If therefore it were true that the Ieſuites affirme of the Popes impoſſibility of erring in Court, which can do nothing elſe but erre at home and in his chamber, yet is this no priuiledge of Peters chaire but of Balaams ſtoole, and himſelfe not Peters but Balaams ſucceſſor. But to omit here the latter Biſhops of Rome, whoſe decrees are a patchment of untruthes for the moſt part, What will they anſwer to Pope Victor, who liued in the time of Irenæus, was not his iudgement of excommunicating the Churches, that obſerued not the Eaſter upon the ſame day hee did, erronious? Was it not publique and proceeding from his Conſiſtorie? As for Auguſtine, hee is here ſhamefully abuſed: for where hee teacheth that wholeſome doctrine is not to bee forſaken for the naughtineſſe of the teacher: they alledge him as if Miniſters corrupt in manners, could not but truely te[ach]. And whereas Auguſtine ſpeaketh this generally of all the Churches of God, where there bee [mi]niſters of corrupt and ſlanderous conuerſation, they haue taken it and tyed it onely to the Church of Romes girdle; not onely contrary to the truth, but alſo contrary to your own Doctor, who in the euidence of the truth it carrieth, hath applyed this place of Auguſtines to all Biſhops, whether they bee Paſtors or hirelings. The cauſe why other Biſhops ſought ſometime to the Biſhop of Rome, Baſil himſelfe will tell you, not as you fondly imagine, that they thought him to haue any authority aboue the reſt, or that they eſteemed that his iudgement could not ſtray from the truth; but for that it was ſuſpected of the Eaſterne Churches, that whatſoeuer their Biſhops did ſay, they ſaid it for their own cauſes, to keepe them in awe; of the other ſide, that the Weſterne Biſhops the further they were remoued from the Eaſt Churches, the more credite they had with them. How uncorrupt alſo and virgine-like, Baſil eſteemed the Biſhop of Romes iudgement, it may appeare, in that hee complaineth, that there was no good to bee looked for from the proud Biſhops of the Weſt part, which neither knew what was the truth of the cauſe, nor would ſuffer themſelues to be taught it: And this hee profeſſeth that hee had written euen to the chiefe or ring-leader of them all. Another cauſe was, for that by meanes that they were Biſhops in the Emperiall Citie, when they were godly that ſate there, their credite was ſo much the greater, as ſtanding upon an higher hill then other Biſhops did, they were more regarded then other Biſhops that were placed in inferiour Cities, as it were in lower vallies. And how ſhameleſly Auguſtine, and the Biſhops of Africk are cited for ſeeking to Rome, as to ſome ſupereminent authority, it may eaſily appeare by their letter to Celeſtinus heere named, whom they require not to chalenge power in their cauſes which roſe in their Churches. Wherefore their ſeeking unto the Biſhops of Rome, mentioned in thoſe places, was no authority of commanding, but onely for the eſtimation they had in the Churches for the cauſes aboue named, and ſuch like unto them.

Epiſt. concil. African. in concil. Afric.

As for Cyprians place it is impudently wreſted to the Biſhop of Rome, which Cyprian ſpake of all Biſhops in their charges, which is euident, in that in the ſame place Cyprian declareth, That there and in that Country euery cauſe is to bee heard where the fault is committed. Alſo, That they were but a few deſperate and loſt children which eſteemed the authority of the Biſhops of Affrick, leſſe then the authority of the Biſhops of Rome: Beſide that, the ſame ſentence which is heere ſpoken of the authority of euery Biſhop in his Church is otherwhere by Cyprian applyed to himſelfe. Ieromes meaning is like unto Cyprians; for hee would haue in euery Church one to excell in authority, which hee confeſſeth alſo to bee an humane policy, deuiſed for the repreſſing of contentions, And although an Elder of Rome, yet ſo farre hee is from maintaining any ſupremacy of the Biſhop thereof, that hee affirmeth the Biſhop of the baſeſt Citie to bee of the ſame worthineſſe and miniſtery that hee is of: euen as alſo Cyprian affirmeth, That the reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame that Peter was, of the ſame fellowſhip of honour and power.

Pardon of due penance and ſatiſfaction.

CARTVV. 2. [43 In Paradiſe.] This of a rare example and prerogatiue, is your bare affirmation, and therefore is current no where but in the Kingdom of the Ieſuites, whereas the Scripture teacheth that it is generall to all, that whenſoeuer a ſinner repenteth, the Lord will put all his iniquities out of his remembrance. And that as when the righteous departeth from his righteouſneſſe it ſhall bee dealt with him as if hee had neuer done righteouſly; ſo when the wicked departeth from his wickedneſſe, it ſhall bee dealt with him as if hee had neuer done wickedly. By which iudgement of the Prophet, not onely it is conuinced to bee a common caſe, but alſo that the Popiſh ſatiſfaction is a feyned fiction: for ſeeing it ſhould bee done with them. as if they had neuer ſinned, and that where no ſinne is done of us, there no ſatiſfaction is due from us: It followeth neceſſarily that the ſatiſfaction for our ſinnes proceedeth from ſome other fountaine then from our ſelues. Neither is this doctrine ſutable to other Popiſh doctrines, which lay the great weight of ſaluation upon the weak ſhoulders of mens workes, that the Lord ſhould deny that to him that hath alwaies liued commendably in the feare of God, which hee granteth unto him that doth but in a manner cut of the wouſe of his ſinfull conuerſation with the thrid of his life.

Verſe 30 And it came to paſſe, whiles he ſate at the table with them, hee tooke bread, and bleſſed and brake, and did reach to them.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM.3[30. Took bread] The Fathers in diuers places take this to be meant of the B. Sacrament, Author operis imperf. ho 17. S. *Auguſtine li.3.de conſenſu Euang.c.25. & ſer.*140. de tempt. & ep. 59 *ad Paulinum*q.8. Paulinus himſelfe in the next epiſtle before that among S. Auguſtines. Venerable Bede alſo vpon this place. Theophylact vpon this place. And that it ſhould be meant of the holy Sacrament, the forme of ſolemne taking the bread into his hands, bleſſing it, breaking it, and reaching it to his diſciples (exceeding proper to the conſecration) and common to none other vulgar benediction, nor any where vſed but in Chriſts miraculous multiplying the loaues) and the ſingular effect in notifying Chriſt vnto them, do proue. And if it be the Sacrament (as it is moſt probable) then is it an euident example and warrant of miniſtration in one kinde. The B. Sacrament in one kinde.

CARTVV.3. [30. Tooke bread.] Neither the place which was an Inne, nor the time which was night (where no vrgent neceſſitie preſſeth; were fit for the celebration of the ſupper, but eſpecially it is abſurd, that our Sauiour ſhould enter vpon the celebration of the Sacrament, by bleſſing and breaking of bread amongſt thoſe that yet knew not what he was, and therefore knew not whether

1. Cor. 11. 28. he were an able man to miniſter it or no: Neither would he that by his Apoſtle taught others to proue themſelues or euer they came to that Table, haue entred vpon the celebration of the holy Supper, without any preparation of the communicants at all, or once telling them what hee went about. And beſides that, there is nothing here but which agreeth to a reuerent & religious receiuing of the common repaſt, there are no words of the inſtitution of the holy Supper. Further, where theſe are ſuppoſed commonly to haue been of the 70 Diſciples, whereof neuer a one was at the celebration of the firſt Supper. Let them tell vs (if they can) how theſe men ſhould know our Sauiour Chriſt by breaking the Sacramentall bread, which had neuer in their liues ſeen him break bread in that ſort before, It is euident therefore, that they hauing been with him often when he went to his repaſts, and ſeeing his cuſtome of bleſſing the table, and diſtributing of bread to thoſe which ſate with him when they ſaw the like done here, they were forthwith guided to a better knowledge of him. And therefore Euthymius doth ſay, that they knew him after his accuſtomed or known breaking of bread. And this ſunne of truth ſhineth ſo bright, that your owne Monke affirmeth it no Sacrament, but a common repaſt. And if the Monks credit will not be taken for ſuch a matter as this is, yet your Pope (I hope) will be to you warrant enough, who affirmeth that they laid the Table, and ſet on bread and meat, and thereupon exhorteth to hoſpitality, and other workes of charity.

Dionyſius Carthuſ. Greg. in Euang homil. 23.

It is no meruaile though this firſt author make it ſacramentall bread, when as hee turneth the repaſt taken againſt extreme hunger whereof were pertakers not the godlie alone but the infidels into the holie ſupper. Touching Auguſtines thirty ninth booke de conſenſu Euangeliſt. It will be too much coſt to find out. Indeed in the third book he calleth it ſacramentall bread. But his meaning thereof doth manifeſtly appeare to haue been not that he iudged that the bread of the Lordes ſupper. And it appeareth manifeſtly not ſo much by your owne Lyra which affirmeth that this ſentence of Auguſtine is not to be vnderſtood of the ſacrament or of the naturall body of Chriſt, but of his myſticall body which is the Church: but alſo by Auguſtines own words wherof the two epiſtles here alledged are ſufficient witneſſes, for Paulinus ſaith that herein there was ſome ſacrament, myſterie, or hidden thing, that he was known by breaking bread that was not known by expoſition of Scriptures: Wherunto Auguſtin yeeldeth and this ſacrament or myſterie Auguſtine himſelfe ſaith to be that none can know Chriſt but he that is one with his body which is his Church. In the laſt teſtimonie out of Auguſtine there is onely an alluſion made of the ſupper of the Lord with this breaking of bread, whereby Auguſtine concludeth of the compariſon of paiers: that in partaking to the bread of the Lords ſupper we ſhould come to a ſpeciall knowledge of Chriſt: ſeing that theſe two by partaking of common bread came to the diſcerning of of his perſon. And vnleſſe this breaking of bread be vnderſtood of the ordinarie repaſt. Auguſtine argument halteth down right, for it followeth not, if they by participation of the holy ſupper came to the diſcerning of the outward lineaments of his body, that therefore we by the ſame ſhall come to a ſauing knowledge of Chriſt, Beſide that Auguſtine otherwhere doth flatly declare it to haue bin cõmon bread, when as vpon this place he concludeth that a man by hoſpitality may come to the knowledge of Chriſt & hitherto ſerueth the Popes teſtimony, which is not, that Chriſt fed others, but that himſelfe was fed. And although Auguſtin ſhould underſtand that the ſacrament were here celebrated, yet that he ment not thereby (as you do) to ſhut forth the people from the communion of the cup, it is euident by that alluding to the breaking of bread in Emaus, he ſaith that he eateth and drinketh iudgement which knoweth not Chriſt in the breaking of the bread: noting the iudgement of God againſt the vnworthy receiuer of the cup, as of the bread which notwithſtanding ſhould not be vnleſſe that the cup were aſwell the ſacrament of the blood as the bread is of the bodie. Although we are not without ſuch anſwer to Theophilact as we could probablie hold him with vs; Yet becauſe we ſuppoſe that his iudgement inclineth to yours wee are content that hee haue here that authoritie which a learned man may haue, againſt ſo euident a truth as hath bin ſhewed. And as the reſults of nothing can build nothing ſo if they had had the skill to haue framed this ſtone to their deſire, yet ſhould it be vnfit for the building they are about, it being euidently knowen that the ſcripture vnder the name of bread ſignifieth the whole table. To eat bread at ſupper or dinner in the ſcripture is perfectly to ſup and to dyne. As of the other ſide by the cup is noted the whole ſupper of the Lord. And if this were graunted vnto them, that it was both the ſacrament and receiued vnder one kind what haue theſe poore ſophiſters gotten but made a ſnare for their own foote to bee taken in. For ſo it ſhould follow that the miniſters themſelues, ſhould communicate vnder one kind, which is that they themſelues do vtterlie condemne.

RHEM. 4. [47 Penance to be preached.] He ſhewed vnto them out of the Scriptures, not onely the things that were now accompliſhed in himſelfe, but alſo that were yet to come about his Church: as, where it ſhould begin, to wit, at Hieruſalem: and how farre it ſhould goe, to wit, to all nations: that he might not ſuffer vs (ſayth S. Auguſtine) to erre neither in the bridegrome nor in the bride. For this maketh manifeſtly againſt all Heretickes and Schiſmatickes, that ſet vp new Churches in particular countries, drawing the people from the foreſayd onely true Church, which from Hieruſalem ſo groweth ouer all nations, till the end of the world come.

CARTVV. 4. [47. Penance to be preached.] This is anſwered in the 2d Section aforegoing.

RHEM. 5. [50 Bleſſed them.] Chriſt our high Prieſt* prefigured ſpecially therein by Melchiſedec often gaue his bleſſing to his ſometimes by words, as, Peace be to you: ſometimes by impoſing his hands, and now here by lifting vp his hands ouer his Diſciples as it were for his farewell. In what forme, the Scripture doth not expreſſe, but very like it is that in forme of the croſſe, as Iacob the Patriarch bleſſed his nephewes for ſignification of Chriſtes benediction, for now the croſſe began to be glorious among the faithfull, and the Apoſtles (as it is moſt certaine) * by the fathers which call it an ancient tradition) vſed that ſigne for an externall note of benediction. Yea S. Auguſtine ſaith (in Pſ. 30. Conc. 3.) that Chriſt himſelfe not without cauſe would haue his ſigne to be fixed in our forehead es in the ſeat of ſhame faſtnes, that a Chriſtian man ſhould not be aſhamed, of the reproch of Chriſt, & what forme can a Chriſtian man vſe rather to bleſſe himſelfe or others, then that which was dedicated in Chriſts death, and is a conuenient memoriall of the ſame? Howſoeuer it be, that the Biſhops and Prieſts of Gods Church bleſſe with an externall ſigne, no man can reprehend, being warranted by Chriſtes own example and action. Bleſſing with the ſigne of the Croſſe.

CARTVV.5. [50. Bleſſed them] Note (good Reader) the arrogant blindneſſe of this kinde of Popiſh cattell, which dare open their mouths in things they neuer heard at the Lords mouth, whoſe pride, is ſo vntollerable, as that they dare adde that the Euangeliſt thought not good to ſpeake of, which would (out of all controuerſie) haue ſpoken of the ſigne of the Croſſe, if there had been any aduantage of godlineſſe to haue been reaped thereby. For the time wherein it began, and of this whole matter, looke before, vpon Math.24.30. And as there is no ſhew nor ſigne of the ſigne of croſſe to be gathered out of any Scripture (Iacobs croſſe laying of his hands, whereby prophetically he preferred the yonger to the elder, being ridiculous to this purpoſe) ſo it is moſt fooliſhly and ignorantly gathered here, where the Euangeliſt ſheweth how our Sauiour vſing the vſuall geſture of holding vp his hands in prayer, did as the high Prieſt, pray for all manner of good bleſſings at his holy fathers hands, which the Apoſtles might haue need of. Now men (as I ſuppoſe) need not to ſet their hands a Croſſe, but hold them ſtraight to heauen, as doe alſo now the godly Miniſters, when they pronounce the bleſſing vpon the Church.

THE ARGVMENT OF S. IOHNS GOSPELL.

SAint Iohns Goſpell may be diuided into foure partes.

The firſt part is, of the actes of Chriſt before his ſolemne manifeſtation of himſelfe, while Iohn Baptiſt was yet baptizing: chap.1,2,3,4.

The ſecond, of his Actes in Iurie (hauing now begun his ſolemne manifeſtation in Galilee, Mat.4.12.) the ſecond Eaſter or Paſche of his preaching: chap.5. For of the firſt Paſche, we had in the firſt part, *c.2.13. And the paſche of the Iewes was at hand, And that feaſt whereof we haue in this ſecond part, *chap.5.1. After this there was a feſtiuall day of * the Iewes*, is thought of good authors, to be the feaſt of Paſche. Iren. lib.2. cap.39.

The third part is of his Actes in Galilee, and in Iurie, about the third Paſche, and after it: chap. 6. to the 12. For ſo we haue chap.6.4. And Paſche the feſtiuall dayes of the Iewes was at hand.

The fourth part is of the fourth Paſche (which we haue in the end of chap.11.55. *And the Paſche of * the Iewes was at hand*) that is to ſay of the Holy week of his Paſſion in Ieruſalem, chap.12. vnto the end of the book.

By which diuiſion it is manifeſt, that the intent of this Euangeliſt writing after the other three, was to omit the Actes of Chriſt in Galilee, becauſe the other three had written them at large: and to report his Actes done in Iurie, which they had omitted.

And this he doth, becauſe Iurie with Hieruſalem and the Temple, being the principal part of the Countrey, there abode the principall of the Iewes, both for authoritie, and alſo for learning in the law of knowledge of the Scriptures, and therefore that was the place, where our Lord Ieſus finding in the Head it ſelfe and in the leaders of the reſt, ſuch wilfull obſtinacie and deſperate reſiſtance, as the Prophets had foretolde, did by this occaſion, much more plainely then in Galilee, both ſay and prooue, at ſundry times, euen euery yeere of his preaching, himſelfe to be the Chriſt that had been ſo long promiſed vnto them, and expected of them: and the ſame Chriſt to be not onely a man, as they imagined, but alſo the naturall, conſubſtantiall, and coeternall Sonne of God the Father, who now had ſent him. Therefore theſe were the wordes and deedes that ſerued beſt the purpoſe of this Euangeliſt, being, to ſhew the glorie and excellencie of this perſon Ieſus: that thereby the Gentils might ſee, how worthily Hieruſalem and the Iewes were reprobated, who had refuſed yea and crucified ſuch an one: and how well and to their own ſaluation themſelues might do, to receiue him and to beleeue in him. For this to haue been his purpoſe, himſelfe declareth in the end, ſaying, Theſe are writtten, that you may beleeue that Ieſus is Chriſt the Sonne of God: and that beleeuing, you may haue life in his name. Iohn.20.31.

And hereupon it is, that S. Hierome writeth, thus in his life: Iohn the Apoſtle, whom Ieſus loued very much, the ſonne of Zebedee, the brother of Iames the Apoſtle, whom Herod after our Lords Paſſion beheaded, laſt of all wrote the Goſpell, at the requeſt of the Biſhops of Aſ againſt Cerinthus, and other Heretickes, and ſpecially againſt the aſſertion of the Ebionites then riſing, who ſay Chriſt was not before Marie. Whereupon alſo he was compelled to vtter his diuine Natiuitie. Of his three ..s, And of his Apocalypſe, ſhall be ſaid in their owne places. Hier. in Cat. Ioh. 21.20. Mat.4.21. Acts 12.2.

It followeth in S. Hierome, that In the ſecond perſecution vnder Domitian, fourteene yeeres after the perſecution of Nero he was exiled into the ile Patmos. But after that Domitian was ſlaine, and his actes for his paſſing crueltie repealed by the Senate: vnder Nerua the Emperour he returned to Epheſus, and there continuing vnto the time of Traiane the Emperour, hee founded and gouerned all the Churches of Aſia, and worne with old age, he died the threeſcore and eight yeere after the Paſſion of our Lord, and was buried beſides the ſame city.

VVhose excellency the same holy Doctor thus briefly describeth, lib. 1. Aduers. Iouiniauum.

IOhn the Apostle, one of our Lords disciples, who was the yongest among the Apostles & whom the faith of Christ found a virgin, remained a virgin, and therefore is more loued of our Lord, and lieth vpon the breast of Iesus: and that which Peter durst not aske, he desireth him to aske: and after the resurrection, when Marie Magdalen had reported that our Lord was risen again, both of them ranne to the sepulchre, but he came thither first, and when they were in the ship and fished in the lake of Genezareth, Iesus stood on the shore, neither did the Apostles know whom they saw: onely the virgin knoweth the virgine, and saith to Peter, It is our Lord. This Iohn was both an Apostle, and Euangelist, and Prophet; an Apostle, because he wrote, to the Churches as a Master: and an Euangelist, because he compiled a booke of the Gospell, which (except Matthew) none other of the twelue Apostles did: a Prophet, for he saw in the ile Patmos, where he was banished by Domitian the Emperour for the testimonie of our Lord, the Apocalypse, conteining infinite mysteries of things to come. Tertullian also reporteth, that at Rome being cast into a barrell of hote boiling oile he came foorth more pure and fresher or liuelier, then he went in, yea and his Gospell it selfe much differeth from the rest. Matthew beginneth to write as of a man: Mark of the prophecie of Malachie and Esay. Luke of the Priesthood of Zacharie: the first hath the face of a man, because of the genealogie: the second the face of a lion, for the voice of one crying in the desert: the third of a calfe, because of the Priesthood, But Iohn as an Eagle flieth to the things on high, and mounteth to the father himselfe, saying, In the beginning was the Word, and the word was with God, and God was the Word, Thus farre S. Hierome.

ANNOTATIONS.

How God the Son is called the Word.

RHEM. 3. [1 Was the word.] The second person in Trinitie which is the naturall, onely, and eternall Sonne of God the Father, is called the Word: nor as the holy Scriptures or speeches of the Prophets Prophets and Apoſtles (written and ſpoken by Gods commandement for the vttering of his diuine will towards man) be called his word, but in a more diuiner eminent, and inefable ſort, to expreſſe vnto vs in a ſort, by a terme agreeable to our capacitie, that the ſonne of God ſo is, and ſo from euerlaſting is borne of God the Father as our prime concept (which is our internall and mentall word) is and iſſueth out of our intelligence and mind. This Word then, Sonne, or ſecond Perſon in the holy Trinitie, was and had his being then alreadie, when other creatures (of what ſort ſoeuer) had but their beginning, and therefore cannot be a creature, as many Heretickes before the writing of this Goſpell thought, and as the Arrians after taught. And this firſt ſentence of the Goſpell not onely the faithfull, but the Platonikes did ſo admire (as S Auguſtine writeth) that they wiſhed it to be written in golde. Aug. de ciu. Dei. lib. 10. cap. 29. The Platonikes.

CARTVV. 3. [1 Was the Word.] S. For agreeing in the matter wee meane not to ſtriue with the compariſon of Prime concept.

RHEM. 4. [1 With God.] Becauſe a man might ſay, If the Word were before any thing was created, where or how could he be? the Euangeliſt preuenting that carnall concept, ſaith firſt, that he was with God, whoſe being depended not vpon time, place, ſpace, or any other ceatures, all which were made by him, ſecondly, he giueth vs to vnderſtand that the word hath his proper ſubſiſtance or perſonalitie diſtinct from God the Father, whereby Sabellius the old Hereticke is refuted: thirdly, here is inſinuated the order of theſe two perſons, one towards the other, to wit, that the Sonne is with and of the Father, and not the father of the Sonne, fourthly, you may confute here the blaſphemie of Calvin, holding the ſecond Perſon to be God, not as of God the Father, but as of himſelfe. And yet ſuch are the bookes that our youth now read commonly in England, and that by commandement. The Word coeternall with the Father, diſtinct in perſon and of the Father. Calu. inſt. li. 1. c. 13. ſect. 23. & 25.

CARTVV. 4. [1 With God.] Theſe gagling geeſe are worthy to haue their tongues pulled out of their heads, for crying Church-robbery againſt him, which enriched the Church with the true and ſound knowledge of God: Maiſter Calvin confuteth certaine blaſphemous heretickes of our age, which placed all the eſſence of God in the perſon of the Father, and the Sonne with the Spirit to haue no eſſence or being, but that which is borrowed of him: Hee therefore granting that theſe two perſons come from the Father as from a fountaine, denieth it to bee true, that they had no Eſſence or Being of themſelues: uſing thereunto grounded reaſons, and namely for the Sonne, that hee is called Iehouah in the Scripture, which is a name ſignifying one that being of himſelfe, giueth being unto all creatures. Now not being able once to hiſſe at his reaſons, nor to ſtand before the face of them, as Shemeits, hauing Calvins graue as a hill between him and them, ceaſe not to throw forth naked and bare curſes, without one argument, either of refutation of his iudgement, or confirmation of their own. And ſeeing it is a matter of ſo great weight, wee may hold you ſuſpected of the ſame hereſie there confuted: which condemning another mans defence of the truth, make out nothing of your own for the upholding of it againſt the Aduerſary. And to ſpeake in the beſt ſort of you, you are heere found manifeſtly betrayers of the truth. But for further explaining of this truth by Maiſter Calvin, let the Reader looke otherwhere in his workes, that where the Perſons are noted, there he confeſſeth the Sonne of God to bee of the Father touching his eternall Eſſence. But when the eternall Eſſence and ſimple Nature is conſidered in it ſelfe, without relation of Perſons, there the Eſſence is the ſame in all three Perſons. And this is eſtabliſhed upon the place in hand, for to note the difference of Perſons he ſaith, that the Word was With God, meaning the Father and the Holy Ghoſt. But when hee addeth that the Word was God, hee thereby ſheweth that hee was of the ſame Eſſence with them: ſo that the Word is the Sonne of the Father, but God of himſelfe. Secondly, this is manifeſt by the words of Chriſt, whereby he affirmeth, that all that is his, is the Fathers, and all that is the Fathers is his. The Father therefore hauing that God-head of himſelfe, it followeth that the Sonne hath ſo likewiſe. And therefore אהיה, that is, I will bee, is ſaid of the Sonne expreſly: which could not bee unleſſe hee were of himſelfe, For nothing is able to warrant unto it ſelfe an euerlaſting being which is not of it ſelfe. Wherefore except you will ſay that our Sauiour Chriſts indurance for euer, ſtandeth but of grace and of promiſe, it followeth that it dependeth of himſelfe and of his own being. And if Chriſt bee not God himſelfe, how was hee in the forme of God, when as the forme of God cannot be, unleſſe it bee of it ſelfe; how can it be equall to God, for it were a great inequality, that the one ſhould be God of himſelfe, and the other of an other. Whereupon alſo ſhould follow that there ſhould be two Gods, God of himſelfe, and God of another. How ſhould hee alſo haue the fulneſſe of the God-head: when as it is contained in the fulneſſe of the God-head to bee of it ſelfe and not of another. And if hee be not God of himſelfe, how is he good of himſelfe, holy of himſelfe, omnipotent of himſelfe. Laſt of all, if the Father giue the nature of God unto the Sonne in begetting, then there is a diſtinction of the nature of God begotten and unbegotten, as there is of the perſons begotten and unbegotten. And for the truth of this doctrine, that the Word is God of himſelfe, ſerueth the old diſtinction uſed of the ancient Diuines, Hilary, Auguſtine, &c. that in the Trinity there is another Perſon, but not another thing: whereas it is another thing that one ſhould bee of himſelfe, and the other of another. Alſo that of Baſil, that the Sonne is begotten not in that hee was the ſubſtance, but in that he was begotten. Laſt of all, a Councell of your own affirmeth, that euery one of the three perſons is the ſame thing: that is, Subſtance, Eſſence, or Diuine nature. And that thing is not begetting or begotten, or proceeding, but it is the Father which begetteth, the Sonne which is begotten and the holy Ghoſt which proceedeth: that the difference may bee in the perſons, and unity in the nature. In confeſſ. ob-lata Lauſan. Iob. 17. 20. Exod. 3. Phil. 2. Coloſ. 2. 9. Later. concil. 1. can. 1. de fid. catholic.

RHEM. 5. [1 God Was the word.] Leſt any man vpon premiſſes, which ſet forth the relation and diſtinction of the ſecond Perſon from the firſt, might thinke that the Father onely were God, the Euangeliſt expreſly teacheth, the Word to be God, for though the words ſeeme to lie otherwhiſe (becauſe we haue of purpoſe followed the elegancie which the Euangeliſt himſelfe obſerued in placing them ſo, and therefore they ſtand ſo both in Greeke and Latine) yet indeed the conſtruction is thus: The Word true God by nature. 1. Iob. 5. 20

The Word was God, and as (in his first Epistle the same Apostle writeth) true God: least any might say (as the Arians did) that he was God indeed, but not truely and naturally, but by common adoption or calling, as good men in the Church be called the sonnes of God. What wonderfull wrangling and tergiuersation the Arians vsed to auoide the euidence of this place, we see in S. Augustine lib. 3. de Doct. Christ. cap. 2. euen such as the Protestants do, to auoide the like words, This is my body, concerning the B. Sacrament.

The Protestants are like the wrangling Arrians.

CARTVV. 5. [1 God was the VVord.] It is a prouerb, that loosers must haue the words.

Verse 3. All things were made by | him: and without him was made nothing. That which was made.

RHEM. 6. [3 By him.] Againe, by this he signifieth the eternitie, diuinitie, omnipotencie, and equalitie of the Word or Sonne, with God the Father, because by him all things were created, all things he saith, both visible of this world: and inuisible, as Angels and all spirituall creatures. Whereupon it is euident also, that himselfe is no creature, being the creator of all, neither is sinne of his creation, being a defect of a thing, rather then a thing it selfe, and therefore neither of nor by him.

The Word not a creature, but the Creator.

RHEM. 7. [12 He gaue them power.] Free-will to receiue or acknowledge Christ, and power giuen to men, if they will, to be made by Christ the sonnes of God: but not forced or drawen thereunto by any necessitie.

Free will.

CARTVV. 7. [12. He gaue them power] The Euangelist in this very verse sheweth that this is the dowry of the faith in Christ, which is the meere gift of God, to lift us up to this dignity or prerogatiue of being the children of God, and therefore there is no gramercies to our freewill in this behalfe, the Greeke word signifying no such thing in us: neither can our free will bee meant here, which is assigned to be the effect of faith. Not to speake of Cyrils interpretation, cleane contrary to yours, nor of the verse following, which cutteth the winde-pipe of your freewill: we put you in remembrance of your owne Doctor, who affirmeth that the Greeke word signifieth, not as some did interpret it, the vertue or strength that a man hath, but rather right and authority.

Ephes. 2. ἐξουσία Iacobus Episcop. Gandauens. in concord. Euang. c. 113.

Verse 14 And | the Word was made flesh, and dwelt in us (and wee saw the glory of him, glory as it were of the onely begotten of the Father) full of grace and verity.

RHE. 8 [14. The word made flesh] This is the high & deuine testimonie of Christs incarnation, and that he vouchsafed to become man, for the acknowledging of which inexplicable benefit and giuing humble thankes for the same, all Christian people in the world by tradition of the fathers prostrate themselues or kneele down, when they here it sung or said at the holy Masse, either in this Gospel or in the Creede by these words, & homo factus est.

Humble kneeling at the solemne words of Christs incarnation.

CARTVV. 8. [14. The word made flesh.] A slender seruice for such a noble benefit: and if this will-worship were tollerable, why should you not rather prostrate your selues at these words, Hee was crucified, as those whereby greater humility and loue of our Sauiour Christ is set forth, then by these, The word was made flesh.

Verse 18 God | no man hath seene at any time: the onely begotten Sonne, which is in the bosome of the Father, he hath declared him.

RHEM. 9 [18 No man hath seene.] Neuer man in this mortalitie saw God in the very shape and naturall forme of the diuine essence, but men see him onely in the shape of visible creatures, in or by which it pleaseth him to shew himselfe vnto many diuersly in this world; but neuer in such sort as when he shewed himselfe in the person of the sonne of God, being made truely man and conuersing with men.

Verse 32 And Iohn gaue testimonie, saying, That I saw | the Spirit descending as a Doue from heauen, and he remained vpon him.

RHEM. 10. [31 The Spirit.] Here is an euident testimony of the third Person in Trinitie, which is the holy Ghost: so that in this one Chapter we finde expressly against all Heretickes, Iewes, and Pagans, set foorth the trueth of the Churches doctrine concerning the whole Trinitie.

RHEM. 11. [42 Looking vpon him.] This beholding of Simon, insinuateth Christs insignement and preferring of him to be the chiefe Apostle, the Rocke of the Church, and his Vicar, and therefore vpon that Diuine prouidence and intention he accordingly changeth his name, calling him for Simon, Cephas, which is a Syriake word, as much to say as Rocke or stone. And S. Paul commonly calleth him by his name Cephas, whereas other both Greeks & Latins call him altogether by the Greeke word, Peter which signifieth the selfesame thing. Whereof S. Cyrill saith, that our Sauiour by foretelling that his name should no more now be Simon, but Peter, did by the word it selfe aptly signifie, that on him, as on a rocke and stone most firme, he would build his Church.

Peter by his new name designed to be the rock of the Church. Cephas. Petrus, Lib. 2. c. 12 in Ioan.

CARTVV. 11. [42. Looking vpon him.] The smallest office in his Church, Christ passeth not, by bare-lookes: much lesse would he appoynt his Vicar generall of his Church by such a slight meanes. Neither was there any appoyntment of the rich yong Prince to any such office, although our Sauiour Christ beheld him stedfastly. The other matter is here talked of as though it had neuer beene mentioned before, when it is nothing but a vaine repetition before answered, vpon Mat. 10. 2. & 16. 17.

Verſe 9 AND after the chiefe Steward taſted the ‡ water made wine, and knew not whence it was, but the miniſters knew that had drawne the water, the chiefe Steward called the Bridegroome, &c.

MARGINALL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [9 Water made wine.] He that ſeeth water turned into wine, needeth not diſpute, or doubt how Chriſt changeth bread into his body.

CARTVV. 1. [9 Water made wine] What Zeno, what Plato, or what Ariſtotle ſet vp the ſchoole of this Logicke. Chriſt changeth one creature into another: Ergo, euery Sir Iohn lacke Latin turneth the bread into God: Chriſt changeth one creature into another: Ergo, he changeth the creature into the creator. Chriſt ſo changeth the water into wine, that no taſt, no ſmell, no colour of the water remaineth, there appearing all the properties and effects of wine, therefore he changeth the bread into God, when as the colour, the taſte, the bigneſſe of the bread remaining, there appeareth nothing of God, not in one onely of the leaſt properties and effects, that belong unto him. If you had turned the ſpeech and ſaid, that he that ſeeth the bread turned into Chriſt, need not doubt of Chriſt turning water into wine, you had argued ſubſtantiall.

Verſe 2 And Ieſus alſo was called, and his Diſciples to the marriage.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 2. [2 Ieſus alſo was called.] By his vouchſauing to come with his to the marriage, he approueth the cuſtome of the faithfull in meeting at honeſts feaſts, and recreations for maintenance of loue, peace, and amitie among themſelues: he reproueth the hereſie of Tatian, Martion, and ſuch like condemning wedlocke, laſtly (as S. Cyrill ſaith) he ſanctifieth and bleſſeth the mariage of the faithfull in the new Teſtament, making it a new creature in him, and diſcharging it of the manifold maledictions and diſorders wherein it was before. By which benediction the often diuorces, remariages, and pluralities of wiues, and the womens ſeruile ſubiection and imparitie in that caſe, be redreſſed and reduced to the primitiue inſtitution, and ſo Chriſtian marriage made a Sacrament. See S. Aug. de nupt. & concup l. 1. c. 10. & 21. li. 1. de adult coniug. c. 8. Chriſt with his preſence honoreth and approueth marriage. Cyril. in 2. Io. c. 22.

CARTVV. 2 [2 Ieſus alſo was called.] The ſentence of Cyrill, that hitteth Tatian, &c. cannot miſſe you, that haue incorporate your ſelues into the ſame hereſie, in the matter of marriage. And where you affirme that by Chriſts preſence at the marriage, he made it a Sacrament. To ſpeake nothing of the time of feaſts, vnfit for the inſtitution of the ſacrament, when friends met to make merry: what words (I beſeech you) can you ſhew of this inſtitution? Neither hath Auguſtine, alledged by you any word to proue that our Sauiour made any ſacrament at this feaſt. But your boldneſſe of affirming hath here broken your owne head. For if (as you hold) the ſacrament of marriage be the cauſe of the imagined vnlawfulneſſe to marry againe, during the life of both the parties, for what cauſe ſoeuer. And that the ſacrament tooke beginning firſt at this marriage feaſt: it muſt needes follow, that the marriage vnder the Law had no ſuch Iron bonds, as the marriage vnder the Goſpell. But the truth is, the greateſt ſtreightneſſe of the knots of marriage vnder the Goſpell, our Sauiour Chriſt proueth out of the ſentences of the Law: wherefore it followeth, that (in right) there was no more libertie of ſecond marriages after a lawfull diuorce vnder the Law, when marriage was no ſacrament: then now vnder the Goſpell, when (by your iudgement) it is a ſacrament, and no more reſtraint now than then. Math. 19.

Verſe 3 And the Wine failing, the Mother of Ieſus ſaith to him, ‖ They haue no Wine.

RHEM. 3 [3 They haue no wine.] Our Lady many wayes vnderſtood that now the time approched of manifeſting himſelfe to the world by miracles and preaching, and nothing doubted but that he would now begin at her requeſt. Whereby we learne that Chriſt ordinarily giueth not his graces, but humbly asked and requeſted thereunto, and that his mothers interceſſion is more then vulgarly effectuall, and that he denieth her nothing. Our Ladies interceſſion.

CARTVV. 3. [3. They haue no wine] It is no maruell if he refuſed not to do a miracle, tending to the glory of God at his mothers requeſt, when he neuer refuſed it to any which came to aske his aid by miracles: not ſo much as the Elders of the Iewes (for the moſt part) his greateſt foes, intreating for the good Centurion; onely he refuſed it to Herod, which ſought thereby the contentment of his curious minde. It is no maruell alſo, although he deny her nothing, when it is the common good of all the faithfull, that whatſoeuer they aske according to his will, in that, hee heareth them. 1. Ioh. 5. 14. Theſe therefore are very ſilly grounds to eſtabliſh a principality of interceſſion in the mother of Chriſt. But we would know of you, what manner of interceſſion you call this, Command thy ſon?

Verſe 4 And Ieſus ſaith to her, ‖ What is to me and thee, woman? my houre commeth not yet.

RHEM. 4. [4 What is to me and thee.] Becauſe this ſpeech is ſubiect to diuers ſenſes, we keepe the words of our text, leſt by turning it into any Engliſh phraſe, we might ſtraiten the holy Ghoſts intention to ſome certaine ſenſe either not intended, or not onely intended, and ſo take away the choiſe and indifferencie from the reader, whereof (in holy Scripture ſpecially) all Tranſlatours muſt beware. Chriſt then may meane here, What is that, woman, to mee and the being but ſtrangers, that they want wine; as ſome interpret it, or (which is the more proper uſe of that kind of ſpeech in holy write) Tranſlation of holy Scripture.

what haue I to do with thee? that is, why ſhould I haue reſpect to thy deſire in this caſe? In matters touching my charge, and the commiſſion of my father for preaching, working miracles, and other graces, I muſt not be tied to fleſh and blood. Which was not a reprehenſion of our Lady, or ſignification that hee would not heare her in this or other things pertaining to Gods glory or the good of men; for the euent ſheweth the contrary, but it was a leſſon to the company that heard it, and namely to his Diſciples, that reſpect of kindred ſhould not draw them to doe any thing againſt reaſon, or to be the principall motion why they do their dueties, but Gods glory.

2 Sam. 16. 10. & 19. 22. Epiph. hb. 3. here. 59. col. Cyrid. Our Lady doubteth not but Chriſt will grant her petition. lib. 2. in Io. cap. 23.

CARTVV. 4. [4. What is to thee and me.] The phraſe of ſpeech (as the conference of other places doth declare) argueth that it was a checke. Epiphanius alſo telleth you, that theſe words were ſpoken of our Sauiour Chriſt to his mother, to meet with ſuch men which keepe no lawfull meaſure in the honouring of the virgin: wherein you fall more groſſely then euer any other heretick did, offering of the fatteſt ſacrifice of prayer and laud unto her.

Verſe 5 His mother ſaith to the miniſters, Whatſoeuer he ſhall ſay to you, do yee.

RHEM. 5. [5 Whatſoeuer he ſhall ſay.] By this you ſee, our Lady by her diuine prudence and entire familiaritie and acquaintance with all his manner of ſpeeches, knew it was no check to her, but a doctrine to others: and that ſhe had no repulſe, though hee ſeemed to ſay his time was not yet come to worke miracles: not doubting but he would begin a little before his ordinarie time for her ſake, as S. Cyril thinketh he did: and therefore ſhe admoniſheth the waiters to marke well, and to execute whatſoeuer Chriſt ſhould bid them do.

CVRTVV. 5. [5. Whatſoeuer he ſhall ſay] You that can ſee two ſunnes, may (happily) ſee that the virgin Mary underſtood it to be no checke unto her: but there is no light of text to ſhew it by: for if hee yeelded to doe this miracle for his mothers ſake, whereas the Euangeliſt noteth, it was done to ſhew his glory, that his diſciples might beleeue in him: yet it followeth not, but that both ſhe had raſhly faulted, and therefore was iuſtly checked, conſidering that if the Lord ſhould not grant our petitions before they were free from ſundry imperfections, we ſhould be ſure alwayes (as fruſtrate) to returne from our prayers aſhamed and confounded. And to ſay, that he preuented the ordinary and appointed time of working miracles, for his mothers ſake, is as much to ſay, hee had heerein more regard to the petition of his earthly mother, then to the commandement of his heauenly Father, Cyril maketh much againſt you; for hee draweth this action to the obedience that all children owe to their parents: Vnleſſe therefore that children at their parents requeſts may breake ſome ſquare, in that which the Lord hath appointed them to do, it muſt needs follow that our Sauiour Chriſt did preuent no appointed time for his mothers ſake. Againe, when Cyril affirmeth, that our Sauiour Chriſt had ſomewhat differred the time of the holy Virgins requeſt, it followeth, that both ſhee had requeſted out of time, and that our Sauiour Chriſt had ſpeciall regard to ſtay the time that was appointed: that is to ſay the fitteſt time: which was not as the Virgin eſteemed, as ſoone as the wine failed, but ſomewhile after, when the want of wine being further notified, the glory of the miracle might be the more commended. And therefore the Ieſuites are yet further deceiued, in carrying theſe words, my time is not yet come, generally to the time of beginning his miracles, where our Sauiour Chriſt meant, that his time of working that miracle was not yet come: for the time of working miracles began with his ſolema entrance into his publique Miniſtery at his baptiſme. And hee had before this ſealed the truth of his calling, both by his miraculous faſt, and by another miracle mentioned of this Euangeliſt. Neither is there any Diuine prudence heere to bee proued, upon that the virgine underſtood that hee would furniſh them of wine: for when ſhee had requeſted, that Chriſt would out of hand ſupply their want of wine, and hee had anſwered that his time was not yet come, it was eaſie for any reaſonable man to gather that hee would make a ſupply of wine, although not at the preſent inſtant wherein hee was deſired to doe it.

Ioh. 1. 47, 48.

Verſ. 15. And when he had made as it were whip of little cords, hee caſt them all out of the Temple, the ſheep alſo and the oxen, and the money of the bankers hee powred out, and the tables hee ouerthew.

Profaners of Gods Church are to bee puniſhed in ſoul and body by the ſpirituall power.

RHEM. 6 [15 Caſt them out.] By this chaſtiſing corporally the defilers and abuſers of the Temple, he doth not onely ſhew his power, that being but one poore man he could by force execute his pleaſure vpon ſo many ſturdy fellowes: but alſo his ſoueraine authoritie ouer all offenders, and that not vpon their ſoules onely, as by excommunication and ſpirituall penalties, but ſo farre as is requiſite for the execution of ſpirituall iuriſdiction, vpon their bodies and goods alſo. That the Spiritualitie may learne, how farre and in what caſes, for iuſt zeale of Chriſts Church, they may vſe and exerciſe both ſpiritually and temporally their forces and faculties againſt offenders, ſpecially againſt the prophaners of Gods Church, according to the Apoſtles alluſion, 1. Cor. 3. If any defile the Temple of God, him will God deſtroy.

CARTVV. 6. [15 Caſt them out.] It is a wofull cauſe that driueth her aduocates, to affirme that one and the ſame thing is a corporall puniſhment, and a ſpirtuall iuriſdiction. But it deceiueth you, that you eſteeme alwaies that to bee a ſpirituall iuriſdiction, that is executed by Church-men, or ſpirituall men, as you uſe to call them, for neither was Athaliaes and Agags killing with the ſword a ſpirituall puniſhment, becauſe it was executed by a Leuite and a Prieſt, (the executed perſons being heathen upon whom no Church diſcipline could bee uſed.) Neither was the ſlaughter of the falſe Prophets, commanded by Elias, a ſpirituall puniſhment, becauſe it was done by the Church Miniſter, But they were all extraordinary actions, which the Lord doth cauſe ſometime to bee done, when thoſe to whom theſe executions do ordinarily belong, are found altogether in defect. And if the action of our Sauiour Chriſt were ſuch, yet it ought not therefore to bee drawn to a common rule of the Church Miniſtery. Howbeit it may bee anſwered, that touching the whipping out of the oxen and ſheep nothing is done, but that which a priuate man may doe: No more, then when the Sexton drieth dogges out of the Church. For that hee whipped the men it cannot bee proued of the Text, but rather (as the Euangeliſt noteth) in the money-changers and ſellers of Doues; it is like that our Sauiour Chriſt gaue the ſellers and buyers warning to depart. And it ſerueth more to the Maieſty of Chriſts miracle which the Euangeliſt doth heere commend, that Chriſt draue them out by the power of his word onely, then with the ſmart of the whip: Beſide that, it is to bee noted that this abuſe (likely) came into the Church without authority begunne by the common people, which ſought both their eaſe and gaine, and winked at by the Prieſts, as a thing that filled their purſes, whilſt the ſacrifices being alwaies at hand, wherein they had their part, the people offered the more plentifully: it creeping therefore in without all authority, it might the better bee redreſſed by him which medled not with corporall puniſhment or ciuill iuriſdiction, but had onely a Prieſtly authority in the Temple. The alluſion of the Temple, with the congregation of the faithfull is elegant: But touching the abſurd compariſon of the Temple of Ieruſalem, and the roomes which the Churches haue honeſtly to meete in, it hath beene ſpoken of before. upon Math. 21. 12.

Verſe. 24. But I IESVS did not commit himſelfe vnto them, for that hee knew all.

Tract. in Io. 11. The B. ſacrament is not to be giuen to nouices or yonglings in faith.

RHEM. 7. [24 Ieſus committed not himſelfe.] S. Auguſtine applieth this to their firſt faith and beleefe in Chriſt, ſodenly raiſed vpon the admiration of his wonders, but yet not fully formed or eſtabliſhed in them, vnto the faith of Nouices or Catechumens in the Church, and Chriſts not committing his Perſon to them as yet, to the Churches like warineſſe and wiſdome, in not opening nor giuing to them our Lord in the B. Sacrament, becauſe all were not to be truſted with that high point, without full triall of their faith, CARTVV. 8. [24 Ieſus committed not himſelfe.] Wee agree, that the Sacrament of the Supper, is not to be permitted vnto ſuch, as are not able in ſome good meaſure to giue a reaſon of their faith. But how it is proued by this place, otherwiſe then by way of alluſion or ſimilitude, that as Chriſt committed not himſelfe to ſuch as were hollow-hearted, and had not ſimply beleeued, ſo the Miniſter ſhould not permit the Sacrament but vnto ſuch as are ſufficiently inſtructed thereunto, let Auguſtine look vnto it.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 5] Eſusanſwered, Amen, Amen I ſay to thee, Vnleſſe a man I be borne againe of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

ANNOTATIONS.

Baptiſme in water neceſſary to ſalvation.

RHEM. 1. [5 Borne againe of water.] As no man can enter into this world, nor haue his life and being in the ſame, except he be borne of his carnall parents, no more can a man enter into the life and ſtate of grace which is in Chriſt, or attaine to life euerlaſting, vnleſſe he be borne and baptized of water and the holy Ghoſt. Whereby we ſee firſt, this Sacrament to be called our regeneration or ſecond birth, in reſpect of our naturall and carnall which was before. Secondly, that this Sacrament conſiſteth of an external element of water, and internall vertue of the holy Spirit: wherein it excelleth Iohns Baptiſme, which had the externall element, but not the ſpirituall grace, thirdly, that no man can enter into the kingdome of God, nor into the fellowſhip of holy Church, without it. Whereby the * Pelagians, and Caluiniſts be condemned, that promiſe life euerlaſting to yong children that die without Baptiſme, and all other that thinke onely faith to ſerue, or the externall element of water ſuperfluous or not neceſſarie: our Sauiours words being plaine and generall. Though in this caſe, God which hath not bound his grace, in reſpect of his own freedome, to any Sacrament, may and doth accept them as baptized, which either are martyred before they could be baptized, or els depart this life with vow and deſire to haue that Sacrament, but by ſome remedileſſe neceſſitie could not obtaine it. Laſtly, it is prooued that this Sacrament giueth grace ex opere operato, that is, of the worke it ſelfe (which all Proteſtants denie) becauſe it ſo breedeth our ſpirituall life in God, as our carnall birth giueth the life of the world.

* Aug. hæreſ. 88. Baptiſme in two caſes not neceſſary, but otherwiſe ſupplied.

CARTVV. 1. [5. Borne againe of the Water] It is a picture of the worke of the holy Ghoſt in the godly, as is the other, that Chriſt baptizeth with fire and with the holy Ghoſt, as the next verſe doth declare, where mention onely is made of the ſpirit of regeneration. And vnleſſe by water here be underſtood the holy Ghoſt, and not the outward element of water, how could our Sauiour Chriſt charge Nicodemus ſo deeply of the ignorance of things, required in a legall teacher; conſidering that the Law inſtructing them aboundantly of the ſanctification of thoſe that ſhould enter the kingdome, leaueth them yet vnſchooled of the water in Baptiſme. But if a man ſhould grant the ſence that you labour for, tell vs (I pray you) where and in what Scripture that water is neceſſary, but in two caſes onely: wherefore ſhould not the yong infants that are borne in the couenant, not able to be conueniently brought to the holy Sacrament, be excepted out of this generall rule, as well as men in your two caſes? And why ſhould the want of ability to vow, and deſire baptiſme, be more hinderance vnto them to be ſaued; then their want of faith is hinderance to their receiuing of Baptiſme, which is the ſeale of their ſaluation. But of this, and all the reſt of their poyſon which they haue ſpit forth in this note, look the anſwere before, vpon Math. 3. 11.

Vrſe 18 He that beleeueth in him, is not iudged, but he that doth not beleeue, is already iudged; becauſe he hath not beleeued in the name of the onely begotten ſonne of God.

charitie (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) ſhall not bee condemned at the latter day nor at the houre of his death, but the Infidell, bee hee Iew, Pagan, or Hereticke, is alreadie (if hee die in his incredulitie) by his own profeſſion and ſentence condemned, and ſhall not come to iudgement either particular or generall, to be diſcuſſed according to his workes of mercie done or omitted. In which ſenſe S. Paul ſaith that the obſtinate Heretick is condemned by his own iudgement, preuenting in himſelfe, of his own freewill, the ſentence both of Chriſt, and of the Church, Verſ. 31. He that commeth from aboue, is aboue all. He that is of the earth, of the earth he is, and of the earth he ſpeaketh. He that commeth from heauen is aboue all.

The excellency of Chriſts power and graces.

RHEM. 3. [31 He that commeth from aboue.] As though he ſhould ſay, No maruell that men reſort to Chriſt ſo faſt and make leſſe account of me, for, his baptiſme and his preaching and his perſon are all from heauen immediately. He bringeth all from the very boſome, mouth, and ſubſtance of God his Father. whatſoeuer is in me, is but a little drop of his grace. His ſpirit and graces are aboue all meaſures or mens giftes, euen according to his Manhood: and all power temporall and ſpirituall, the kingdome and the Prieſthood, and all ſoueraintie in heauen and earth are beſtowed vpon him as he is man alſo.

CARTVV. 3. [31. He that commeth from aboue.] It is alſo true, that Iohns preaching, Iohns baptiſme, and Iohns miniſteriall perſon, came from heauen immediatly; ſo that Iohns baptiſme as his preaching, are equall and the ſame: the miniſteriall perſons indeed differ, as differeth the maſter from the ſeruant.

CHAP. IIII.

Verſe 2 (Howbeit ‡ Ieſus did not baptiſe, but his Diſciples.)

MARGINAL NOTES.

RHEM. 1. [2 Ieſus did not baptize.] He did not baptize ordinarily, yet that he baptized his Apoſtles, S. Auguſtine thinketh it very probable. ep. 108.

CARTVV. 1 [2, Ieſus did not baptiſe.] Seing you can bring no proofe out of the Scripture, why doe you ſo definitiuely reſtraine the words of the holy Ghoſt, which Auguſtine doth but thinke probable.

Verſe 39 And of that Cittie many beleeued in him of the Samaritans, for the word of the ‡ woman giuing teſtimony, that he told me all things whatſoeuer I haue done.

RHEM. 2. [39 Woman giuing.] This woman miſtically being the Church, it is here ſignified, that they which at the firſt beleeue becauſe the Church teacheth ſo, afterward be much confirmed, finding it in the Scripture alſo, and by other inſtructions, CARTVV. 2. [39. Woman giuing.] The 42. verſe would haue taught you, that howſoeuer we come to the knowledge of the truth by the miniſtery of the Church. Yet that we muſt haue a ſurer hould to ground our faith upon, then is the authority of the Church; namely, the authority of Chriſt in his word, and that our ſtay in the truth ſtandeth not in that the Church knoweth it, or wee by the Church, but in that we our ſelues know it through perſwaſion of the ſpirit by meanes of exerciſe in the word, moſt eſpecially by hearing it preached.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 20 ‡ Our Fathers adored in this mountaine, and you ſay, that at Ieruſalem is the place where men muſt adore.

The Schiſmaticall Temple contendeth againſt the true Temple. Ioſeph. lib. antiq. 11. cap. 8.

RHEM. 3. [20 Our fathers adored.] By adoration is meant doing of ſacriſice, for other offices of Religion might be done in any place. The Samaritanes to defend their adoring in Garizim, pretended their worſhipping there to be more ancient then the Iewes in Hieruſalem, referring it to Iacob, whereas indeed that Patriarch adoring there before the Temple was appointed, or the Law giuen, made nothing for their Schiſme: which was begun by Manaſſes a fugitiue Prieſt, onely to hold his vnlawfull wife thereby, and to obtaine ſuperioritie in Schiſme; which he could not doe in the vnity of his brethren: long after the Temple of Hieruſalem, from which the reuolt was made. Therefore Chriſt giueth ſentence for the Iewes and the Temple of Hieruſalem, affirming that they had a good ground thereof, but the Samaritanes none at all.

The true temple prenaileth. Ioſeph. li. 13. antiq. c. 6.

Ioſephus alſo recordeth how the Samaritanes demaunded of Alexander the Great, the like priuileges and immunities as he had graunted to the high Prieſt and Temple of Hieruſalem, pretending their Temple to be as great and as worthy, and themſelues to be Iewes as the other, and to worſhip the ſame God, but their Schiſmaticall hypocriſie was eaſily ſpied and dimiſſed with nothing. Another time the Iewes and Samaritanes (as the ſame writer teſtifieth) made a great ſturre in Alexandria about the truth and antiquity of the Schiſmaticall temple and ſeruice in Garizim and the other true Temple of Salomon: in ſo much that the matter was put to arbitrement by Ptolomeus the kings commandement, onely to trie whether of the two was firſt. And the Schiſmatickes (as their cuſtome is) per ſaltum can make their Church or ſeruice as olde as thy liſt, referring it to the Patriarkes, as our Schiſmatickes do now to Chriſt and the Apoſtles. But when the triall was made, onely they of Ieruſalem did inuincibly proue by continuall ſucceſſion of their Prieſts, and by the iuſt note of the time when the Schiſmatickes went out from them, that theirs was the lawfull, and the others the falſe temple and falſe false adoration, and so it was iudged, and the Samaritanes put to silence. Afterward the sayd Schismatickes (which is lightly the end of all Schismes) reuolted quite from the Iewes religion, and dedicated their temple in Garizim to Iupiter Olympius, as Caluins supper and his bread and wine is like at length to come to the sacrifice of Ceres and Bacchus.

CARTVV. 3. [Our fathers adored.] It is our honour before God, and all good men, that for triall of the truth of our religion, we appeale to Christ and his Apostles: Of the other side, it is maruell that you can be so blinde, as not to see that a figge is not liker a fig, then you be to the schismatical Samaritans, which build your religion upon your fore-fathers, when as indeed of the good forefathers, you are both bastard children, and Apish followers, euen as were these Samaritans of Iacob. And where you professe of the Masse of that holy Supper, which we by the grace of God doe celebrate in our Churches: we maruell how the profitiesse Iesuits come to be in number of the Prophets, which are neither Prophets, nor sonnes of the Prophets, but men (for the most part) fitter for the Plough-staffe then to handle the pen of the learned Scribe.

Verse 23 But the houre commeth, and now it is, when the true adorers shall adore the Father † in spirit and veritie. For the Father also seeketh such to adore him.

RHEM. 4. [23 In spirit and veritie.] Our Sauiour foretelleth her that the end and ceasing of their sacrifice and adoration in both the Temples should shortly be: and euen then was begun to be fulfilled: instructing her in three things concerning that point, first, that the true sacrifice should be tied no more to that one place or nation, but that true adoration should be throughout all Nations according to the Prophechie of Malachie *. Secondly, that the grosse and carnall adoration by the flesh and blood of beasts and other externall terrene creatures, not hauing in them grace, spirit, and life should be taken away, and another sacrifice succeed, which should be in it selfe inuisible, celestiall, diuine, full of life, spirit and grace. And thirdly that this adoration & sacrifice should be the veritie it selfe whereof all the former sacrifices and hostes were but shadowes and figures, and he calleth that here spirit and trueth, which in the first Chapter is called grace and trueth. All which is no more but a propheſie and description of the Sacrifice of the faithfull Gentiles in the body and blood of Christ: not that it is not by externall meanes giuen to vs (for otherwise we being men consisting of flesh and bloud could not be capable thereof) but that it is spirit and life in it selfe, being the flesh of the Word of God. And if a man inlarge the word of Adoration, (which here as is said, signifieth properly the worship of God by sacrifice) to all the Sacraments of the new Law, they all likewise be spirit and grace, the holy Ghost working inuisibly and internally vpon our soules by euery one of them, whereupon our Baptisme, is water and the Holy Ghost: our Penance, the word of absolution and the holy Ghost: our Confirmation, oyle and the Holy Ghost by imposition of hands: finally, all the adoration of the Catholike Church, is properly spirituall, though certaine externall creatures for our natures, state and necessitie, be ioyned thereunto. Take heed therefore thou gather not of Christs words, that Christian men should haue no vse of externall office towards God: for that would take away all sacrifice, Sacraments, prayers, Churches and societie of men in his Seruice.

Christians adoration throughout al nations in euery place, in spirit and veritie: that is in the Sacraments & seruice of the new Law full of spirit & grace: in the verity of things before prefigured, specially the true sacrifice of Christs bodie & blood.

* Mal. 1. 17. † 10. 1. 17.

CARTVV. 4. [23. In spirit and veritie.] By worship in spirit is meant, that the worship of God under the Gospell, should especially consist in the minde and heart of a man, and not so much in bodily seruices of washings, of annoyntings, of religion in garments, in meates, in places, in times, &c. as it was vnder the Law: which is proued manifestly by the next verse, where the reason of this minde and spirit worship is assigned to be, for that God himselfe is a spirit, and therefore that he seeketh the worship, especially that is done by the spirit. According vnto the which the Apostle affirmeth that he serued God in the spirit. By worship in truth is vnderstood, that the worship of God under the Gospell should not be in figures & shadowes, as in times past vnder the Law. By which two notes of the true worship of God, it is more cleere then the noone day, that the Popish worship, which requireth more bodily things and seruices, and which standeth of moe significations and mysticall interpretations of all their garments, nods, and gestures, then euer the Law did, is a false and counterfeit worship, meeter for a God of flesh and bone, then for the true God, which is an euerlasting spirit. Neither is it our Sauiour Christs meaning to shut forth all seruices, as the bowing of the knees, and lifting vp of hands vnto the Lord, nor yet to seclude all earthly meanes from his worship, which appointed water for Baptisme, and bread and wine for the supper. But this hee speaketh because of the fewnesse of corporall seruices and earthly, which are vsed vnder the Gospell in respect of them that are vnder the Law. Rom. 1.

Now as for this interpretation here set downe by the Iesuites, it is their own dreame after a sleepe-drunke, as should appeare by the grosnesse of it, not onely vnknowne vnto all antiquity, but (so farre as we can read) to their owne Doctors, Monkes, and Friers, that haue expounded these places. And to speake nothing here of the feined sacrifice of the Masse, it is absurd to draw the generall worship of God here spoken of, to one onely seruice thereof. And the reason for that Adoring of God by sacrifice onely is ridiculous. For the Diuell that would haue been adored of our Sau. Christ, required no more but that he would fall downe before him. And Paul saith, that he worshipped God, not in offering vp Christ on the Altar, but in the Gospell of his sonne, which hee preached: where also hee vseth the same word which the Iesuites (although ignorantly) affirme proper to God, and whereof also they would father their Masse. Hereby also they charge our Sauiour Christ with disorder of teaching, which instructed the woman of the Sacrament of the supper, or euer he had giuen her any vnderstanding of the Sacrament of Baptisme, whereas it is not like he would instruct an idolatrous and ignorant woman in that mystery whereof yet he had made no mention vnto his disciples, which were well entred into the true knowledge and worship of God. Last of all, to proue that by Spirit and truth is meant nothing else but Christ offered vp daily by the hands of the Priest, they alledge Iohn 1. 17. where it is spoken of grace and vertue, which they say is all one with these words here, spirit and truth. The vntruth whereof Mat. 4. 9. Rom. 1. 9.

as it may appeare of that which here hath been spoken of the sense of these words spirit and truth: so it utterly ouerthroweth all that which they haue builded in this place: for if grace and truth bee the same that spirit and truth is, grace and truth being not Christ vpon the Altar, but that which Christ caused, it followeth that by spirit and truth cannot be vnderstood Christ offered vpon the Altar. And beside that their sacraments are fleshly and false, not spirit and truth, they doe shamefull iniurie to the holy Sacraments vnder the Law, whiles they make them no better then carrion and dead things, which notwithstanding were (although in lesse measure then ours) both spirituall and true, as those which had allowance of the spirit of God, and of the truth of the word.

CHAP. V.

Vers. 29 And they that haue ‡ done good things, shall come forth into the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill into the resurrection of iudgement.

MARGINAL NOTES

RHEM. 1. [29 Done good things.] Not faith onely, but good and ill deedes shall be counted, and acordingly rewarded at the day of iudgement.

CARTVV. 1. [29. Done good things.] Fortie times vpon one and the same ground, that the Lord will reward good workes.

Vers. 39 ‡ Search the Scriptures, for you thinke in them to haue life euerlasting: and the same are they that giue testimony of me.

RHEM. 2. (39 Scriptures.] Catholikes search the Scriptures. and find there, Peters and his successors Primacie, the reale presence, the Priests power to forgiue sinnes, iustification by faith and good workes, Virginity preferred before matrimonie, breach of the vow of continencie damnable, voluntary pouertie, Penance, almes, and good deedes meritorious, diuers rewards in heauen according to diuers merits, and such like.

CATVV. 2. [39. Scriptures.] This is answered in the 7. Section of this chapter.

Vers. 43 I am come in the name of my Father, and you receiue me not: if ‡ another shall come in his owne name, him you will receiue.

RHEM. 3. [43 An other shall come.] He meaneth specially Antichrist. How then can the Pope be he, seeing the Iewes receiue him not?

CARTVV. 3. [43. Another shall come.] He meaneth generally all those that should come vnto them without a lawfull calling, as hee had who came not, but sent of his father. And more specially he meaneth Theudas and Indas the Galilean. Wherefore the Pope, as he is indeed, so may he be the Antichrist.

Acts 5.

Verse 2 And there is at Ierusalem, vpon Probatica, a ‖ Pond, which in Hebrew is surnamed Bethsaida, hauing fiue porches.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 4. [2 A pond.] This is as great a wonder and worke as was in the olde Law, yet neuer recorded in the Scripture before: the conditions and circumstances of the same much to be distinctly weighed against the Miscreants of this time for many causes. First, that God without derogation to his honour yea to the great commendation of it, doth giue vertue of miracles, and cure to water, or other creatures. Secondly that he giueth such vertues to these creatures specially which be by vse and occupying in sacred functions or otherwise, as it were sanctified: for this pond was it wherein the carcasses of sheep (therfore called Probatica) & other beasts to be sacrificed, were first washed, to which being alwaies red (as S. Hierom saith, de locis Hebr. post. med.) with the blood of hosts, this force was giuen for the commendation of the sacrifices of the law there offred. How much more may we acknowledge such works of God miraculously done in or about the sacrifice or sacraments of the new Testament, which faithlesse men wholy reiect and condemne for fables, because they know not the scriptures nor the power of God. Thirdly, that this operation was giuen more at one time then at an other, and rather on great festiuall dayes then other vulgar times (for this was the feast of Pasche or Pentecost) as dayes more sanctified, and when the people made greater concourse: which sheweth that we should not wonder to see great miracles done at the Memories or feasts of Martyrs or other great Festiuities, more then at other places and times. Fourthly, that the Angels or some speciall Saints are Presidents or Patrones of such places of miracle, and workers also vnder God of the effects that there extraordinarily be done, which ought to make Christians lesse doubt, that the force of diuers waters in the world is iustly attributed by our forefathers, and good stories to the prayers and presence of Saints, which prophane incredulous men referre onely to nature, vntruly pretending that God is more glorified by the workes of nature, which be of his ordinary prouidence, then by the graces of Miracle giuen by his Saints or Angles by his extraordinary prouidence. Fiftly, that miracles be not wrought on men by their faith onely and as well by their presence in spirit as in body, or vpon the parties desire or deuotion onely, according to the Heretickes pretext that God is a like present by his power & grace to euery man and place: and therefore that men need not to go from their own houses or countries to seeke holines or health at the places of Christs or his Saints birth, death, memories: for none could haue benefit of this water but he that could touch it, and be in it corporally, and at that iust time when the water was in motion by the Angell. Yea sixtly, we may consider that in such cases to make the matter more maruelous, rare, and more earnestly to be sought for, and to signifie to to vs that God hath all such extraordinary operations in his own will and commandement, without all rules of our reasons and questioning thereon, none could be healed but that person who first could get into the pond after the Angell came and stirred the same. Seuenthly, that these graces of corporall cures giuen to this water, *prefigure the like force of the Sacraments of Baptisme for the cure of soules, though wee neede not seeke the correspondence thereof to the figure in euery point. Lastly, Christ by his power of excellencie and prerogatiue could and did heale this poore man that could get no body to helpe him into the water, because he earnestly desired the remedie by God appointed, but was excluded by necessitie: as our Lord saueth all such as die without Baptisme, if they in their own persons earnestly intended, desired, and sought for the same.

CARTVV. 4. [2. A Pond.] It were meruaile that any of the Scriptures of the old Testament should make mention of this miracle, seeing there is no likelihood that it was done under any Prophet liuing in that time, but granted vnto the Iewes for theupholding of them in the true worship of God against the manifest insolencies and scornes of the true worship, under the persecution of Antiochus. And that it was not continually vnder the Law, the story of Naaman the leper euidently declareth. For where this healed all manner of diseases, at Naamans comming, there was no such water that could helpe him: so that if Elizeus had not directed him to the riuer of Iordan, he had returned home as hee came. And where as many leprous men might haue beene healed by this water which Iohn speaketh of, in the time of Elisæus there was none cleansed but Naaman, notwithstanding that there were many lepers in Israell.

2. King. 5.

In the eight collections out of this place, there is nothing worthy the paper that beareth them, beside that, they are often sitten vpon, but for want of heate of any good reason they can neuer bee hatched. For the first, wee acknowledge that God healeth, by the meane of creatures, but the creatures haue no miraculous power within them, but that commeth from the Lord which healeth, when as his ordinance is obeyed. To the second, and third, of the place and time no man can well doubt but they were chosen to the greater renowne of the miracle, no place being more sightlier then the Temples precinct, nor no time so fit for the greater fame of it then the time of the solemn Feasts. And if there were then vnder the Law, any Religion in the place and time, yet now there is no such difference of place and time as then was. To the fourth, wee reade in the Scriptures of the Angels presidency and gouernement of such places, but of the departed Saints Patronage, wee reade not, but in the scrablements of the Iesuites and their likes. To the fift, it is first well known that our Sauiour required nothing but Faith to the working of his miracles, then wee hold that men cannot take so much profite of prayer and of the vnderstanding of the Word, vnlesse they present themselues at the times and places appointed for the Church meetings. But where dead bones and such things are the Preachers, there wee esteeme that the bodies may take more hurt with the euill sent of them, then the soule can be forwarded in any true holinesse. And when Augustine directed men to a Bishops graue for decision of a doubtfull cause, hee did not so well remember the words of the Prophet, that affirmeth, it most inconuenient to go from the liuing to the dead. Notwithstanding wee grant that the superstition of men did well deserue that they should bee so deluded by the deuils, which (as hath beene shewed) were commonly the haunters of these graues: which Augustine himselfe in this Epistle doth seeme plainly to affirme, namely, that the deuils by feare or punishments, draue the guilty persons to the confession of their faults. Now wee suppose that this is blacke Diuinity to goe to the deuill that is a lier, and the father of lies, keeping his standing at a Martyrs graue, to aske the truth of a matter, although hee would bring forth the truth as sometime (the more to deceiue) hee doth. In the fift, as there is no falshood, so is it a cold note, neither hauing great heate or light in it, nor hauing almost nothing proper to the words it is gathered of, which might not haue beene gathered of the speciality of the place and time of this miracle, To the seuenth, Baptisme may by the way bee compared with this: But it cannot bee shewed, that it was a figure of it. The contrary whereof appeareth, in that Baptisme being long before begunne, this miracle continued still, which as the shadow to the body should haue giuen place, if it had beene a figure thereof. Neither hath Ierom any such wordes as will weigh to proue this matter a figure in Baptisme. The last is before answered, vpon Ioh. 3. 5.

Verse 14. Afrerward IESVS findeth him in the Temple, and said to him, Behold, thou art made whole: | sinne no more, lest some worse thing chance to thee.

RHEM. 5. [14 Sinne no more.] We may gather hereby that this mans long infirmitie for punishment of his sinnes, and that men often attribute their sicknes to other naturall defects, and seeke for remedies of the world in vaine, when the sinne for which it was sent, remaineth, or is not repented of: and therefore that in all infirmities men should first turne to God and go to their Ghostly father, and then call for the worldly Physitions afterward.

Sin the cause of sickness & infirmities.

CARTVV. 5. [14 Sinne no more.] A Ghostly Father is hard to finde amongst you, where Priests can for the most part do nothing but giue the visited a little ghostlesse oyle.

Verse 34. But | I receiue not testimony of man: but I say these things that you may bee saued.

RHEM. 6. [34 I receiue not.] Our Maister meaneth that mans testimony is not necessary to him, nor that the trueth of his Diuinitie dependeth on worldly witnesses or mens commendations: though to vs such testimonies be agreeable and necessary, and so for our instruction he vouchsaued to take the testimonies of Iohn the Baptist and Moyses and the Prophets: and departing out of this world, to send forth all his Apostles, and in them all Bishops and lawfull Pastors to be his witnesses from Hierusalem to the ends of the world.

CARTVV. 6. [34 I receiue not.] S.

RHEM. 7. [39 Search the Scriptures.] He reprehendeth the Iewes, that reading dayly the Neither Iewes nor heretickes find the truth because they search not the Scriptures deeply, but read superficially.

Scriptures and acknowledging that in them they ſhould finde life and ſaluation, they yet looked ouer them ſo ſuperficially that thy could not find therein him to be Chriſt their King, Lord, life & Sauiour. For the ſpeciall maiſters and Scribes of the Iewes then, were like vnto our hereticks now who be euer talking and turning, and ſhuffling the Scriptures, but are of all men moſt ignorant in the deepe knowledge thereof. And therefore our Maiſter referreth them not to the reading onely or learning them without booke, or hauing the ſentences thereof glorioufly painted, or written in their Temple, houſes or coates: but to the deep ſearch of the meaning and myſteries of the Scriptures, which are not ſo eaſily to be ſeen in the letter.

CARTVV. 7. [39 Search the Scriptures.] Wee wiſh wee turned the Scriptures oftner ouer then we do, ſo ſhould we bee able the better to bee armed againſt not onely your hereſie which tottereth of it ſelfe, and is oftentimes worthier of a hiſſe then of a confutation, but againſt theſe Caſtles and Holds of hereſie which are more cunningly made to the reſemblance of the tower of Syon which is impregnable. As for your cunnings, your note in the Margent doth declare it to be wonderfull: which can reade that in the Scripture that is not written, can take up that out of it, that neuer was laid down into it.

ANNOTATIONS.

RHEM. 1. [27 Worke not the meate.] By their greedy ſeeking after him for meate of the body, he taketh occaſion to draw them to the deſire of a more excellent foode which he had to giue them, and ſo by litle to open vnto them the great meate and myſterie of the B. Sacrament: which (as he proueth) doth not onely farre paſſe their ordinary bread or his maruelous multiplied loaues, but Manna it ſelfe, which they thought came from heauen, and ſo much wondered at it.

CARTVV. 1. [27 Work not the meat.] The eating of the fleſh of Chriſt, and the drinking of his bloud ſpoken of in this chapter, is not the eating of the Sacrament of the Supper, but all manner of participation with Chriſt in the Word, and in the Sacrament. And this is euident by many argument; Firſt, for that the mouth wherewith the ſpirituall meate is eaten, is faith, verſ. 29. 35. 40. 47. Whereupon Auguſtine ſaith: Why doſt thou prepare the tooth, beleeue and thou haſt eaten. And againe, To beleeue in him is to eate the liuing bread. And yet againe, Hee that beleeueth in him, doth eate him inuiſibly, is fatted becauſe hee is inuiſibly borne againe. Secondly, this eating heere ſpoken of neceſſarily giueth life euerlaſting to the eater, 27. 35. 51. 54. but the Sacrament doth not ſo; therefore the eating of the Sacrament is not heere propounded. Heere upon Auguſtine ſaith, that Chriſts fleſh is not onely to bee eaten in the Sacrament (which many wicked haue done) but to the participation of the Spirit. Thirdly, this eating of Chriſt is perpetuall, and without the which no man can haue life in him, verſe 53. But the eating of the Sacrament is not perpetuall, nor that without the which a man cannot haue life in him, therefore the eating of the Sacrament is not heere meant. And according to this, Auguſtine ſpeaking to the Iewes that then were with our Sauiour Chriſt, You deſire bread from heauen, you haue it before you and eate it not. Yet could they not then eate it in the Supper, which was not inſtituted untill two yeare after or thereabout. And in another place hee extendeth the full and perfect eating of Chriſt unto the life to come. Where (wee ſuppoſe) you dare not affirme any Sacramentall eating. Fourthly, in that our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, 61 verſe, doth this offend you? As much as if hee had ſaid, this ſo plaine a caſe, ſo manifeſt a matter by all the Scriptures of the Law, and of the Prophets, which teach that I am the meate of the world, whereby it muſt bee deliuered from deadly famine: it appeareth that he ſpake not of the myſterie of the Supper, which was but darkly and generally noted out in the Scripture, in ſuch ſort that the learned amongſt them, and not the common multitude onely, might (without great meruaile) haue beene ignorant of it. Laſt of all, the meat that periſheth not, is of the ſame kind of ſpeech as that in the fourth of Iohn, of the water which is neuer conſumed, but welleth and ſpringeth (in him that drinketh it) to euerlaſting life. And ſo doth Auguſtine compare the places, but the Ieſuites themſelues confeſſe that there the ſpirit of God is meant by water, wherefore it followeth that the drinke alſo heere ſpoken of, is the participation of the ſpirit of Chriſt; And not (as they meane) of a groſſe and carnall drinking of Chriſts bloud. Thus (not to ſpeake of your own Doctors which affirme that the Sacrament is not ſpecially meant of heere) it appeareth what a vaine coyle the Ieſuites keep about their Sacrament of the Altar, and how with their foule feet they trouble the cleere waters of the Euangeliſt.

RHEM. 2. [32 The true bread.] Though the perſon of Chriſt incarnate, euen out of the Sacrament alſo, be meant vnder the Metaphores of bread and drinke from heauen: and our beleefe in him, be ſignified by eating and feeding: yet the cauſes why they ſhould be recommended unto vs in ſuch termes, were, that he was to be eaten and drunken indeed in the formes of bread and wine: for the which cauſe his body on the Croſſe is called *his bread: and his bloud ſhed on the Croſſe, *the bloud of the grape: no doubt becauſe the ſame body & bloud were in the holy Sacrament to be eaten and drunken. In which ſpeaches, either of Chriſtes perſon generally, or peculiarly of the ſame as in the B Sacrament, the true bread is not taken properly and ſpecially for that ſubſtance which is of corne, and called with us bread: but generally for foode or meate, and therefore it hath ioyned with it lightly a terme ſignifying a more excellent ſort of ſuſtenance: as, the true bread, the bread of heauen, the bread of life, Superſubſtantiall bread, in which ſort the holy Sacrament which is Chriſts body, is both here, and in S Luke and S. Paul alſo, often called bread, euen after conſecration: not onely for that it was made of bread, but becauſe it is bread more truely, and by more excellent property and calling, then that which ordinarily is named bread.

CARTVV. 2. [32. The true bread.] The words of Chriſt which declare that he is called bread, and the true bread, for that he giueth life unto the world, verſ. 33. for that hee preſerueth men from death verſ. 50. 51. leaue no place to your blind and bold affirmation, that it is recommended unto us under theſe termes, for that it was to be eaten and drunken under the formes of bread and wine, which is to turne the cauſe in to the effect and contrariwiſe, for that our Sauiour Chriſt is our ſpirituall meate: therefore the ſacrament is recommended unto us in the elements of bread and wine, fitly to reſemble the doctrine which teacheth him to be the food, not as the Ieſuites, not onely falſly, but fooliſhly affirme, that the ſacrament gaue the cauſe of this ſpeech of our Sauiour Chriſt; whereas this ſpeech of our Sauiour Chriſt gaue the occaſion of the ſacrament, as the figured thing is the cauſe of the figure, and not the figure the cauſe of the figured thing. We forbeare to ſpeake of the fond allegation of Ieremy and Geneſis, wreſted ſo openly from the naturall meaning of the Prophets, for that it hath (eſpecially in the place of Ieremy) ſome ancient wreſt, that hath ſet it in a higher note then will agree with any myſticall interpretation of the purpoſe of the Prophets. Howbeit, as we haue uſed ſome freedom of iudgement in other their declinings from the manifeſt meaning of the particular places which they interpret: ſo in theſe places, whereof the former noteth out the counſell of famiſhing the Prophet Ieremy in priſon, wherein they thought ſo to ſet him up at the racke, and at hard meate, that he ſhould eate the poſts in the priſon, if he would eate any thing at all: the other noteth ſo great plenty of vines in the tribe of Iuda, that the inhabitants might waſh their garments in the bloud of the grape. We may be bold to ſay, that there is a great agreement of theſe places with the imagined ſence that here is ſet downe, as is of hony with ſacrifice.

Verſ. 44 No man can come to me, vnleſſe the Father that ſent me I draw him: and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day.

God draweth vs without free will. Aug. cont. duas ep. li. 1. c. 19. & Ser. de verb. Apoſt. c. 2.

RHEM. 3. [44 Draw him.] The Father draweth vs and teacheth vs to come to his Sonne, and to beleeue theſe high and hard myſteries of his incarnation, and of feeding vs with his own ſubſtance in the Sacrament: not compelling or violently forcing any againſt their will or without any reſpect of their conſent, as Heretickes pretend: but by the ſweete internall motions and perſwaſions of his grace and ſpirit he wholy maketh us of our owne will and liking to conſent to the ſame.

CARTVV. 3. [44. Draw him.] Which is directly againſt Free-will, quoted in the margent of the note, both by the words of drawing, which is contrary to our running, or freewill: and by the drift of our Sauiour Chriſt, which remoueth the offence of thoſe mens contempt of his doctrine, in that it was not in their power to receiue it, vnleſſe by exchange of their naughty wils into good, made by God, they were gathered into the fould of Chriſt. As therefore to take away the thorne that pricked the Apoſtles feet, in that their miniſtery was contemned by the wiſe men of the world, he calleth them to the counſell of God, which had hidden it from their eyes. So here (for the like reſpect) he wil haue them in the cauſe of this peoples vnbeliefe, haue reſpect unto the iuſt iudgement of God, which reacheth not out his ſauing hand to draw them unto him. For whereas the enemies of the truth in glorifying themſelues againſt it, will ſay that it is not ſo great a matter to come unto, that it was in their power to haue been as good a Goſpeller as the beſt of them all; our Sauiour Chriſt cutteth the combe of this boaſting, in ſhewing that it is not in their power, further then they being by nature vnwilling to receiue the truth, ſhall by the grace of God be fitted thereunto. Looke Auguſtine hereof, which ſhewes that it was not in us to come when we are called, vnleſſe we receiue this gift from him, of comming by faith.

Verſe 49 Your fathers did eate Manna in the deſert, and they died.

The manifold prehemineneces of the B. Sacrament aboue Manna

RHEM. 4. [49 Manna, and died.] The Heretickes holding the fathers of the olde Teſtament to haue eaten of the ſame meate, and to haue had as good Sacraments as we, be here refuted: Chriſt putting a plaine difference in the very ſubſtance thereof, and in the graces and effects much more at large. Manna was onely a figure of the B. Sacrament, though a very excellent figure thereof for many cauſes. It came in a ſort from heauen, our Sacrament more: it was made by God miraculouſly, our Sacrament more: it was to be eaten for the time of their peregrination, our Sacrament more: it was to euery man what he liked beſt, our Sacraments more: a little whereof ſerued and ſufficed as well as much, our Sacraments more: it was reſerued for ſuch dayes as it could not be gathered, and our Sacrament much more: it was kept for a memoriall in the arke of the Teſtament, our Sacrament much more: the diſcontented incredulous murmured and gainſaid it, at our Sacrament much more: it ſuſtained their bodies in the deſert, our Sacrament both body and ſoule much more.

CARTVV. 4. [49. Manna and died.] We willingly paſſe in that number of Heretiks whereof Paul is the generall, who expreſſely teacheth that in Manna, and the water comming out of the

And therefore the matter of both theirs and our Sacrament is one, the effects alſo are the ſame in kinde and nature, which is a partaking of Chriſt, although (as in all other holy exerciſes of the Goſpell) the manner differ: becauſe he is (in ours) more plentifully partaked, whereas he was more ſparingly in theirs. And as for that which is ſaid, that the Fathers died that ate thereof, it is to be underſtood that our Sauiour Chriſt therein ſpeaketh of the Sacrament, according to the opinion of the Iewes, which conſidered no further of it then of a belly meate. The miraculous making of Manna was euident to all men that had reaſon or ſenſe; yours appeareth not but to thoſe that firſt take their farewell of all ſenſe and reaſon, humane and diuine. Manna, howſoeuer it varied ſome-

Wiſd. 16. what, according as it was either boyled or baked, or otherwiſe coqued, it was yet to euery man for taſt partly like unto ſtoned honey, partly unto the principalleſt Oliue Oile, and not as you affirme (under colour of the book of Wiſedom, directly contrary to Moſes) unto euery man what hee liſted: Your Sacrament indeed is, as it pleaſeth you, to ſome tranſubſtantiated onely by authority and decree of Church, to other ſome by authority of the Scripture: to ſome it is the naturall body not naturally, to other ſome it is the naturall body naturally, to ſome it is in the Sacrament unſenſibly, to other ſome ſenſibly; to ſome it is eaten whole, to otherſome it is torne with the teeth; to ſome Chriſt in the Sacrament goeth no further then the throate, to other ſome into the ſtomacke, and ſo you ſay truelier then you were aware of, that your Sacrament is as it liketh you. Of Manna, the allowance of an homer was giuen unto euery one daily, but none (the Prieſt excepted) hath any daily and ordinary allowance in your Sacrament, but once a yeare. Where alſo you affirme, that leſſe then a little of your ſacrament ſatisfieth: you are taken in the words of your own lippes, that thereby doe grant that is horrible) a parting of Chriſt into portions. Manna was reſerued for thoſe daies wherein God dewed none from the cloudes, yours is reſerued for ſuch times, when (as you would make men beleeue) it falleth from heauen upon all the Altars in Chriſtendom thicke and three-fold. Manna was laid ſecretly up in the Arke, yours is like a puppet carried about to bee gaſed and ſtared upon. Manna being commanded of the Lord to bee laid up corrupted not, conſumed not, ſtunck not, yours being reſerued upon a deuiſe of your own braine, mouldeth, rotteth, ſtinketh, and goeth to naught. Manna being Gods inſtitution was unworthily neglected; yours being a whelp of your own Litter is worthily troden under feete. Manna was meat for the body and for the ſoule, as hath beene ſhewed; yours is good neither for the hungry body, whereunto it giueth little or no nouriſhment, and to the ſoule that hungreth after the bread of life, it is altogether taſteleſſe. If you extend the vſe of your Sacrament beyond the time of our Peregrination, it were good you had told us your meaning, for we ſee not how you can iuſtifie it, vnleſſe you will either renue the ſhamefull abuſe of cramming in the Sacrament, into dead mens mouthes, or elſe will haue it celebrated in the glorious kingdome of heauen, where all exerciſes of Religion ſhall ceaſe. But wee perceiue you tooke pleaſure in this figure, and therefore to dwell in it long, you made no conſcience ſomewhat to ſtreine the truth.

In the B. Sacrament, How, is a Iewiſh word

RHEM. 52 How can this man?] It came not to their minde that nothing was impoſſible to God, that wickedly ſaid, How can this man giue vs his fleſh? but we may make great profite of their ſinne, beleeuing the Myſteries, and taking a leſſon, neuer to ſay or once think, How? for it is a Iewiſh word and worthy all puniſhment, ſaith S. Cyrill lib. 4. c. 13. in Io. Neuertheleſſe if one asked onely for deſire to learne in humilitie, as our Lady did touching her hauing a childe in her virginitie, then he muſt take the Angels anſwer to her, That it is of the Holy Ghoſt, ſo S. Damaſcene li. 4. c. 14.

CARTVV. 52 How can this man.] Firſt, there wanteth the Lords voice and authority to tell us that his naturall body is in the Sacrament, at whoſe word wee keep our ſoule in ſilence, with the Ieſuites and their companions we dare bee bold to aske how? why? and wherefore? And think that wee honour them and humble our ſelues, which in ſuch truthleſſe and witleſſe paradoxes, vouchſafe to enquire of them for their better inſtruction. Then if the Ieſuites anſwer, that it is of the Holy Ghoſt, we hold them for no Angels, ſeeing the ſame Ieſuites are but lying ſpirits, ſent of God to deciue ſuch as will not beleeue the truth.

Verſe 53 Ieſus therefore ſaid to them, Amen, Amen, I ſay to you, | Vnleſſe you eate the fleſh of the ſonne of man, | and drinke his bloud, | you ſhall not haue life in you.

RHEM. 53 Vnleſſe you eate.] Chriſt commending the Sacrament of the faithfull vnto vs, ſaith, Except you eate, &c. you cannot haue life in you. So the life ſaith of life, and to him that thinketh the life to be a lie, this meate ſhall be death and not life to him. Aug. Ser. 2. de verb. Ap. c. 1. S. Leo thus, Becauſe our Lord ſaith, except you eate, &c. let vs ſo communicate that we nothing doubt of the trueth of Chriſtes body and bloud: for that is receiued with mouth, which is beleeued in heart: and they anſwer Amen in vaine, that diſpute againſt that which they receiue.

CARTVV. 6 [53. Vnleſſe you eate] Here the Ieſuits haue falſified Auguſtine both in his words, and in his meaning, to make the ſentence fitter to proue the ſacrament of the Supper vnderſtood in this place, they haue tranſpoſed the word commending which Auguſtine ioyneth with Chriſt the ſpirituall food, to the word Sacrament. And whereas Auguſtines meaning is, to ſhew that Chriſt in calling himſelfe meate, did it to ſet forth the ſacramentall and myſticall coniunction of himſelfe with his Church, to be ſuch as meat vnited and made one with the body that receiueth it: they haue forcibly and impudently applied this to the Supper of the Lord, which Auguſtine expreſly maketh a ſacrament of this myſticall vnity. For affirming otherwhere that which he doth here, that by the meate and drinke here ſpoken of, Chriſt will haue vnderſtood the ſociety of his body and his members, he addeth immediatly of this thing, that is to ſay, of this vnity, his body and blond the Sacrament is prepared vpon the Lords table in ſome places daily, mother ſome places with intermiſſion vpon certaine dayes. The ſupper therefore being a ſacrament, or ſigne of the eating here mentioned, is not the eating it ſelfe. And that Auguſtine meant not the ſacrament of the ſupper in this place alledged by the Ieſuits, it appeareth a few lines after, where he ſaith, What is to drink but to liue? And againe otherwhere, to beleeue in him is to eate the liuing bread, he that beleeueth in him eateth. Pope Leos authority we make no account of for cauſes before recited, yet his words heere proue no reall preſence, conſidering that ſacramentally and in a figure we receiue with our mouthes that which we beleeue in our hearts, according as Auguſtine alſo affirmeth, that then the body and blond of Chriſt is life to euery one, when that which is viſibly taken in the ſacrament, is in truth ſpiritually eaten and ſpiritually drunken. And it appeareth otherwhere, that giuing to Baptiſme, the water which ranne out of Chriſts ſide, as well as to the cup the bloud, which iſſued thereat: he maketh no other preſence of the bloud in the cup, then is of the water flowing from Chriſts ſide in Baptiſme.

RHEM, 7. [53 And drinke.] This the Proteſtants alledge for the neceſſitie of receiuing in both kindes: but in reſpect of themſelues (who lightly hold all this chapter to pertaine nothing to the Sacramentall receiuing, but to ſpirituall feeding on Chriſt by faith onely) it can make nothing for one kind or other. And in reſpect of vs Catholikes, who beleeue Chriſts whole perſon both humanitie and Diuinitie, both fleſh and bloud to be in either forme, and to be wholy receiued no leſſe in the firſt, then in the ſecond or in both, this place commandeth nothing for both the kinds.

Receiuing in both kinds not neceſſary.

CARTVV. 7. [53. And drinke] What you beleeue it maketh no great matter, whoſe beliefes are pinned to the Popes ſleeue. But the Proteſtants denying this place to be vnderſtood of the ſupper, may notwithſtanding vrge the receiuing of both kindes out of the eating and drinking here ſpoken of. For ſeeing the ſupper is (as hath beene avouched) a ſacrament or ſigne of this eating and drinking, and there ought to be a proportion and correſpondence between the ſigne and the thing ſignified: it followeth that vnleſſe there be ſome liquor in the ſacrament, or ſigne, the ſigne is not ſo well fitted and framed to the thing ſignified as is meet.

RHEM. 8. [53 You ſhall not haue life.] Though the Catholikes teach theſe wordes to be ſpoken of the Sacrament, yet they meane not (no more then our Sauiour here doth) to exclude all from ſaluation, that receiue not actually & Sacramentally vnder one or both kindes. For then children that die after they be baptized and neuer receiued Sacramentally, ſhould periſh: which to hold, were hereticall. Neither did S. Auguſtine meane, applying theſe wordes to infants alſo, that they could not be ſaued without receiuing ſacramentally, as not onely the hereticks, but Eraſmus did vnlearnedly miſtake him: but his ſence is that they were by the right of their Baptiſme ioyned to Chriſtes body Myſticall, and thereby ſpiritually partakers of the other Sacrament alſo of Chriſts body and bloud. As all Catholike men that be in priſon, ioyning with the Church of God in heart and deſire to receiue and be partakers with the Church of this Sacrament, and thoſe ſpecially that deuoutly heare Maſſe and adore in preſence the body & bloud of Chriſt, ioyning in heart with the Prieſt, all theſe receiue life & fruit of the Sacrament, though at euery time they receiue not ſacramentally in one or both kinds. And although in the Primitiue Chuch the holy Sacrament in the ſecond kind were often giuen euen to infants to ſanctifie them, yet (as the holy Councell hath declared) it was neuer miniſtred vnto them with opinion that they could not be ſaued without it, and therefore the heretikes do vntruly charge the Church and the Fathers with that errour,

The true meaning of S. Auguſtins words touching infants receiuing of the B. Sacrament.

L. 1. de pec. mor. & rem. c. 20.

Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 21. c. 4

CARTVV. 8. [53. You ſhall not haue life] Here the Ieſuits are grauelled, for our Sauiour Chriſts words being preciſely generall, that none can haue life, but thoſe that eate of this meate, and drink of this drinke, they are to their faces conuicted, that theſe words are not meant of the Sacrament of the ſupper, conſidering that yong infants partaking vnto this food, are not to bee receiued vnto the ſacrament of the ſupper. And the poore ſoules to pull out themſelues out of this mire beray themſelues miſerably, changing our Sauiour Chriſts generall propoſition ſo often repeated into a particular, and that without any proofe, or colour of proofe, more then their bare aſſertion, which had been yet more tollerable, if they would ſell by the ſame meaſure wherewith they buy: for before, (upon Ioh. 3) vpon a generall propoſition falſly vnderſtood, they ſhut from the kingdom of heauen the infants that cannot attain the Sacrament of Baptiſme. And here, where the ſame vniuerſality of wordes is vſed and vſed againe, and that (as they ſay) in the matter of the ſupper of the Lord, whereby all are ſhut from life, that are not partakers thereof, yet doe they exempt young infants, which they will not ſuffer to be exempted in the place where they imagine baptiſme to be generally required. And whereas in the other ſacrament of baptiſme they ſeclude infants which cannot attaine baptiſme for that they can haue no deſire, nor make no vow to be baptiſed in the ſacrament of the ſupper, they deny not but that they may be ſaued, although they haue no vow nor deſire thereunto. Thus the water of Euripus is not ſo fickle and inconſtant as theſe men are. And although theſe ſilly men are not able to get our their own feet out of this ſlough: yet they make a face, as if they were able to draw out the ancient

Fathers,

Fathers, which haue fallen in this poynt of communicating the ſacrament to yong infants. But marke with what dexterity and deepe knowledge the learned Ieſuites deliuer the ancient Fathers from the charge of the vnlearned Proteſtants. Forſooth although they miniſtred the ſacrament of the ſupper vnto infants, yet they did it not in any opinion of neceſſity: ſuch Aduocates are worthy to plead without fee, for ſtill you leaue the old doctors in a grieuous crime of diſpenſing the holy Sacrament of the ſupper vnto infants, to whom for want of ability to proue themſelues, the ſcripture denieth it. And by ſo much you make them the more criminous, as they committed ſo great a diſorder, hauing no conſcience of any neceſſity of the infants partaking to the communion, which if they had had, they were the more to be borne with: for a thing done diſorderly in a conſcience and zeale towards God, although it be ſinne, yet is it leſſe then that which is done otherwiſe: where therefore the Proteſtants (affirming that the Fathers did it in an opinion of neceſſity) couer ſomewhat the ſhame of this diſorder, theſe iolly proctors with their defence, haue not onely not couered their nakednesſe, but haue pulled ſome cloath of their innocency from them: which as they haue done with ſome diſhonour to the ancient Fathers, ſo haue they done it falſly, and contrary to their mindes. For Ieroms affirmeth plainly of a certaine Biſhop, that he could not miniſter baptiſme to yong infants, but hee muſt needes miniſter the ſacrament of the ſupper vnto them. And Auguſtine in receiuing infants that were baptiſed by hereticks, thinketh it expedient that the Church which receiueth them, ſhould giue them the holy ſacrament of the ſupper, which hee would not haue done, vnleſſe he had thought that the Scripture had ſo required. Which iudgement of his, and of Innocentius himſelfe, Biſhop of Rome, appeares alſo otherwhere in Auguſtines workes. And Beatus Rhenanus ſheweth that this corrupt opinion of the neceſſity of the Euchariſt in infants, was very ancient, and continued ſome hundred of yeares. Now where they ſay, that Auguſtines meaning was, that by right of baptiſme ioyned to Chriſts myſticall body, they were partakers ſpiritually of the other ſacrament. As it is ſpoken without any manner of proofe out of Auguſtines either words or circumſtance; ſo it is abſurd that they ſhould eate the ſacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt, that neuer taſted or once touched it, where Auguſtine proued the neceſſitie of baptiſme by the neceſſity of the Euchariſt, which could not be miniſtred before baptiſme. But they add ſpiritually, they might truelier haue ſaid, Phantaſtically. They may (I grant, eate the body and bloud of Chriſt ſpiritually, which neuer receiued the Supper of the Lord; But that they ſhould eate the Sacrament of the body and bloud ſpiritually, which neuer were admitted vnto the ſupper, needeth ſome cunninger interpreter then euer were Ioſeph or Daniel. Dig therefore as deepe as you can, yet ſhall you neuer finde, but in the bottom of hell, where you are alwayes raking for ſuch ſtuffe, that infants receiuing the baptiſme, forthwith receiue this ſacrament. Wee will grant you more then you aske, namely that your Maſſe is of that vertue, that it bringeth as much fruit to him that is abſent from it, as to him that is preſent and heareth it; yea granting that the Maſſe were not the abhomination which we proue it to be, yet being done in an vnknowne language, let them tell us what more fruit is there in hearing of a Maſſe then in ſeeing of a Sermon? But heereof there will be a fitter place.

For not only our ſoules were to be lifted vp by the holy Ghoſt to life euerlaſting, but this rude groſſe terreſtriall body of ours is to be reduced to immortality, by touching, taſting, and eating this agreeable food of Chriſts body. And when Chriſt ſaith, I will raiſe him vp, he meaneth that this body which he eateth, ſhall raiſe him. Our fleſh* (ſaith Tertullian) eateth the body and bloud of Chriſt, that the ſoule may alſo be fatted, therefore they ſhall both haue one reward at the Reſurrection. And S. Irenæus, How do they affirme that our bodies be not capable of life euerlaſting, which is nouriſhed by the body and bloud of our Lord: Either let them change their opinion, or els ceaſe to offer the Euchariſt. S. CARTVV. 9. [55 I will raiſe him.] This raiſing of the bodies of the Saints riſeth againſt your opinion of the Sacrament of the Supper in this chapter. For conſidering that our reſurrection to life dependeth of this, that wee are one with Chriſt: and Chriſt one with us, wee being one with him and he one with us without the Sacrament of the Supper, and before we can be partakers thereof, it muſt needs follow that the eating of Chriſt in the Sacrament is not the cauſe of our reſurrection, but the eating of his body and bloud in ſpirit and faith. Otherwiſe miſerable is the eſtate of the Fathers before the Law and vnder it: Miſerable alſo is the caſe of many Martyrs, and Infants which all died before they could communicate in this Sacrament. And therefore Cyril ſaith, That Chriſt is the foundation to ſanctification and righteouſneſſe, namely, through faith, and no otherwiſe. As for theſe teſtimonies they are idlely alleaged, conſidering that wee hold that no man can haue life, vnleſſe hee partake vnto Chriſt, which is to eate and drinke him. Onely wee deny that this eating is at any time carnall, or alwaies in the Sacrament. And whereas it is affirmed by the ancient Fathers, that wee riſe to life becauſe of our participation in the Sacrament, their meaning is, that the Sacrament is a pledge of our reſurrection to life, whereof the ſpirituall participation by faith is the cauſe. As for Tertullian what eating hee meaneth it is apparant in the ſame booke, where ſpeaking of this eating which Iohn ſetteth forth in this chapter, hee ſaith, That the Word which was made fleſh, for liues ſake is to bee deſired, and to bee deuoured by hearing, to bee chewed by vnderſtanding, and to bee digeſted by faith. Niſſen affirmeth that the liuely body entring into our body maketh it liue and immortall; but that hee affirmeth not to be by the Sacrament, eſpecially not by that alone, but leaſt of all by the mouth and teeth. For we know that Chriſt dwelleth in our hearts by faith, and if wee loue Chriſt and keepe his commandements, both hee and his Father will come and dwell with us, both in body and ſoule, which are his Temples.

But the holy body of Christ is the true food nourishing to life euerlasting, and his bloud the true drinke that driueth death away vtterly, for they be not the body and bloud of a meere man, but of him that being ioyned to life is made life: and therefore are we the bodie and members of Christ, because by this benediction of the mysterie we receiue the Sonne of God himselfe. So saith S. Verse. 58. This is the bread that came down from heauen. Not as your fathers did eate Manna, and died. Hee that eateth this bread, shall liue for euer.

RHEM. 11. [58 He that eateth this bread.] By this place the holy Councell prooueth that for the grace and effect of the Sacrament, which is the life of the soule, there is no difference whether a man receiue both kindes or one, because our Sauiour who before attributed life to the eating and drinking of his body and bloud, doth here also affirme the same effect, which is life euerlasting, to come of eating onely under one forme. Therefore the heretickes be seditious calumniators that would make the people beleeue, the Catholike Church and Priests to haue defrauded them of the grace and benefite of one of the kinds in the Sacrament. Nay, it is they that haue defrauded the world, by taking away both the reall substance of Christ, and the grace, from one kinde or both kindes, and from all other Sacraments. The Church doth onely (by the wisedome of Gods Spirit and by instruction of Christ and his Apostles, according to time and place for Gods most honour, the reuerence of the Sacrament, and the peoples most profit thereby) dispose of the manner and order, how the Priest, how the people shall receiue, and all other particular points. Which himselfe (saith S. Augustine) did not take order for, that he might commit that to the Apostles, by whom he was to dispose his Churches affaires, though both he and the Apostles and the Fathers of the Primitiue Church left vs example of receiuing vnder one kinde, Christ at Emaus, the Apostles Act 2. 44. The Primitiue Church in giuing the bloud onely to children, Cypr. li. de lapsis, nn. 10. in reseruing most commonly the body onely, Tertul. li. 2. ad vxo. nn. 4. Cypr. de lapsis nn. 10. in houseling the sicke therewith, *Euseb. Whereby the Church being warranted and in the ruling of such things fully taught by Gods spirit aswell for the reprouing of certaine heresies, that Christ God and man was not whole and all in euery part of the Sacrament, as specially for that the Christian people being now enlarged, and the communicants often so many at once, that neither so much wine could be conueniently consecrated, nor without manifold accidents of shedding or abusing be receiued (whereof the Protestants haue no regard, because it is but common wine which they occupie, but the Church knowing it to be Christs own bloud, must haue all dreadfull regard) therefore I say she hath decreed and for some hundred yeeres put in vse, that the Priest saying Masse, should alwayes both consecrate and also receiue both kindes, because he must expresse liuely the Passion of Christ, and the separation of his bloud from his body in the same, and for to imitate the whole action and institution aswell in sacrificing as receiuing, as to whom properly it was sayd, Do this, for that was spoken onely to such as haue power thereby to offer and consecrate. But the Lay men, and the Clergie also when they do not execute or say Masse themselues, should receiue one kinde, thereby no lesse partakers of Christs whole person and grace, then if they receiued both. For (as S. Paul saith) He that eateth the hostes, is partaker of the altar. He that eateth, saith he: for though there were drinke offerings or libaments ioyned lightly to euery sacrifice, yet it was enough to eat onely of one kinde, for to be partaker of the whole. The Priests that say Masse, must receiue both kinds. Luk. 22. 19 1. Cor. 11. 1. Cor. 10. 18.

CARTVV 11. [58 Hee that eateth this bread.] By eating and drinking both, is set forth a full and whole partaking unto Christ to liue by him. And it is a similitude taken from the manner of feeding of the body, which is not nourished to sufficiency, vnlesse it haue both bread and drinke: Wherefore our Sauiour Christ to declare that hee is alone sufficient to eternall life, calleth himselfe both bread and drink. And to the sealing up of this sufficiency, hee ordained not onely bread but wine also: where fore-seeing this treacherous sacriledge of the Synagogue of Rome, in stealing away the cup from the Church, hee more precisely spake of the cup then of the bread, that they should drinke all of it. In which act of theirs, by a wonderfull prouidence of God, they haue cut out their Sacrament according to the measure of their doctrine: for as they teach Christ to be but halfe a Sauiour, by making their workes ioynt purchases of their saluation with him, so they minister halfe a Sacrament of saluation. And as they teach doubting and staggering in the saluation that is by Christ, so they haue taken bread alone to seale up that doubting: that as a man cannot be assured of his nourishment in this life by bread alone, so by the Popish faith in Christ, hee can come to haue no certainety of his nourishment unto life euerlasting. As for the prophane rout of Trent Councell, it first presumeth the Sacrament of the Supper to bee meant in this place, which is (as hath appeared) false. Secondly, if it were so understood, yet their collection of it is untrue; for if our Sauiour had named both the bread and the cup before to bee necessary to euery one that shall bee saued, as the verse 53 soundeth in their eares, that which followeth of the bread alone must needs bee taken by a trope, wherein the part is put for the whole: otherwise there is a manifest contradiction in these propositions. That a man to saluation must necessarily both eate and drinke: and it is sufficient for a man to saluation to eate onely. Wee which in our Sacrament communicate with Christ, and by him with his graces, take neither Christ nor grace away from the Sacrament. But you in altering of the ordinance of Christ in a substantiall point, and not in a circumstance, as you pretend, whereof Augustines rule is understood, haue made it no Sacrament of God, but an idoll of your own braioe. As for the wisedome of your Church in disposing of such matters as this is, as time and place doth admo- Mar 26. 27 Epist. 118. c. 6.

nish, wee know her wisedome is turned into folly: for what wisedome can shee haue that forsaketh the word of the Lord, and his ordinance? Neither doth Augustine warrant any such sacriledge, that leaueth onely in the discretion of the Church such things as our Sauiour Christ had giuen no commandement of, and whereof no generall rule could with conuenience be perpetually giuen, as in the time, place, and such like. And albeit the Iesuits hold it an arbitrarie matter, and in the Churches choyce, yet Gerson, that writeth against the heresie of Lay mens communicating vnder both kindes, doth not so iudge of it. The former part of Lukes Gospell hath been answered, his other of the Actes commeth after. The testimonies out of the Fathers touching the halfe communion, first are not to the question: for if men secretly in their houses, when by some impediment they could not assemble themselues publickly in the Church, did take the sacrament in one kinde: yet it neither followeth, that in the common meeting of the Church it was so, or that the Church did allow of that deed, as may appeare, in that they affirme that the bread is receiued and not inclosed. Another, that the remnants of the sacraments were diuided to the schollers to be eaten presently in the Church And a Councell decreed, that he that ate not the sacrament presently in the Church, should bee accursed. Againe, though there be mention made of bread alone, yet the other part of the sacrament might well be understood, considering that they vsed to carry home with them, and to lay up both parts of the sacrament, which might so much the more easily be done, through the abuse that had crept into the Church of dipping of the bread into the wine, as it is also manifest in the example of Serapion by you aledged. Touching Basils epistle ad Cesaream Patritiam, it is not to be found in his epistles. Now consider the graue consultations that haue moued your Synagogue to change the institution of Christ. The first is, of the number of communicants: and if there were now in your some hundred yeares, the like number that was in the Apostles time and long after, when the Gospell was planted in all the parts of the world. Or as in the time of Constantine, when the Gospell was maintained by the sword throughout the greatest part of the Empire. Out of this great number of communicants, rise two lets, one the want of wine for so great a number, wherein appeareth how needfull it is for liers to haue a good memory. For you gaue your communicants wine, but no sacramentall or consecrated wine, and that to the third sip, which is but a drunken tick, and such as would hardly be allowed at any honest mans boord. And if you haue common wine to sup on after that sort, you might haue it consecrated also if it pleased the Priest to make the Church equall with himselfe in the sacrament, which is equall vnto him in the faith of saluation of Christ, whereof the bread and cup is a sacrament. And therefore Chrysostom affirmeth, that the Priest differeth not from one of his people in the mystery of the supper But there is somewhat in this reason of the number of Communicants, which peraduenture the Iesuits thought not of: for indeed if it were Christs naturall bloud which is in the cup, there being so many thousands that communicate in the world at one time, it must needs be a monstrous and out-growen body that should hold so much bloud in it as wil satisfie so many thousands drinking of it. As for other accidents of shedding the bloud vpon the beards, or the ground, they are so ridiculous, both in that they are afraid to spill that which is not, and that if there were any spilt, yet being without contempt, the same could draw no more gilt on the Church, then it drew vnto the Disciples, which suffered the bloud which our Sauiour Christ sweat in his agonie, to fall vpon the ground, and there to lye, not sauing it in viols. Besides that both Christs Apostles, and the primitiue Church, are thus priuily bitten by these Serpents, to whom none of these graue considerations euer came to minde, which this Popish age, as the eighth wise man, or the third Cato, that is to say, the veriest dotterell of all others, hath bethought it selfe of. And if it be good for the Priest in vsing both kindes, to expresse lively the passion of Christ, why should it not be good for the common people, which because of their heauy and slacke vnderstanding, haue most need of the liuelyest portraitour of the passion of Christ that can be. But whatsoeuer is pretended, the true cause indeed of this sacriledge, is that which Gerson noteth, that the Priests dignity might be thus prouided for, to whom it would be some disgrace, not to haue one dish more at his table then the common people haue. As for that pretended out of Luke, it is answered. And if it were a commandement of Christ to the Priests onely, to communicate onely vnder both kindes, how commeth it to passe, that your Church holdeth it arbitrary? How that the Councel of Basil granted it to the Bohemians in both kinds? how also, that your late Councell of Trent in certaine cases, and vpon certaine conditions, licenseth both kindes to the people? The place to the Corinthians 11. teacheth manifestly that that which was spoken to the Apostles of eating and drinking the bread and the cup is commanded to all the Churches: so that herein the shameleſse forehead of the Iesuits is open to all the world, which without any visard or disguising by slight of words, or reason, alledge that place for them which is directly against them. The last reason out of the first Corinth. 10. 18. to proue the sufficiency of one kind, hath been answered by a Trope most familiar vnto the Scripture, and especially in the matter of meates and eating. And the place maketh manifestly against them: for what sacrifices the people (by commandement of God) did communicate vnto, of the drinke offerings appendant to the same sacrifices, they had the like commandement to be partakers of. Vpon these grounds the Church of Rome for some hundred yeares, hath thus determined, by this speech they would make us beleeue, that this decree (that is, from yesterday) should be very ancient. But if it were, yet that which was the first is true, and that which is the latter is false. That you affirme our wine to be common wine, you speake vntruth, our wine is the wine of the Lord, sacramentall and holy wine set apart to holy vses, and which causeth holy effects, holily and reuerently to be vsed, yet alwayes wine.

Chrisost. in 2 Cor. homil. 18.

Tertul. lib. 4 aduers. Marcion.

Christ insinuateth that faithlesse men shall not beleeue his presence in the B. Sacrament because he is ascended.

Verse 62 If then you shall see the Sonne of Man ascend where he was before.

RHEM. 12. [62 If you shall see.] Our Sauiour seemeth to insinuate, that such as beleeue not his wordes touching the holy Sacrament, and thinke it impossible for him to giue his body to be eaten in so many places at once, being yet in earth, should be much more scandalized and tempted after they saw or knew him to be ascended into heauen. Which is proued true in the Caphamaits of our time, whose principall reason against Christes presence in the Sacrament is, that he is ascended into heauen, yea, who are so bould as to expound this same sentence for themselues thus. It is not this body or flesh I will giue you, for that I will carry with mee to heauen. Whereby if they meant onely that the condition and qualities of his body in heauen should be other then in the Sacrament, it were tollerable: for S. Augustine speaketh sometime in that sense, but to deny the substance of the body to be the same, that is wicked.

CARTVV. 12. [62. If you shall see.] The Iewes were offended at two sayings of Christ, the one, that he said he was the bread that came down from heauen, whom they esteemed to be Iosephs son, vers. 41. 42. the other that he would giue his flesh and bloud to be eaten and drunken. According therefore to this double offence taken, he answereth to the former, that they shall know evidently that hee descended from heauen, when they see him go up to heauen againe: for that none can ascend thither but he that descended from thence. And with this answer to the first offence, he breaketh also the neck of the other offence of the carnall eating of his flesh and drinking of his bloud, for that by the carrying of his body from hence into heauen, they might understand that hee meant not a grosse eating of his flesh, as the Capernaites now and then dreame and dreamt. But dare wee bee so bold to expound this for our selues: we dare in deed expound it so, the circumstance of the place leading us thereunto. And we are the bolder somewhat in that Augustine before us hath so applied the ascension of our Saviour Christ to proue, there is no carnall eating meant here by the words of our Saviour. But as for you which are shameless hounds, it were but a folly to aske how you dare bring in this lazie interpretation, that hath proofe of the circumstance of the place, no inducement of ancient authority: yea which haue the circumstances of the Text so manifestly against you. For it appeareth that our Saviour Christ endeavoured like a wise and discreet Teacher, to dissolue the difficultie that his hearers were in, and to remoue the offence which they had taken: whereas your exposition tieth the former knot harder then before, and thrusteth on head long those that were ready to fall: which thing although our Saviour might happily haue done to the obstinate enemies of his trueth; yet would he not deale so with his own Disciples. Now where you call us Capharnaites, remember the harlot that calleth an honest Matron, by that name that her selfe seareth to bee called by, is not forth-with made an honest woman. For your whoredom in this case lieth in your skirts, so that no man need to dig, or to seeke corners to discouer it. And all that haue sense and common reason, see that you are the Capharnites, which imagine a grosse and carnall feeding: and not wee. which to obtaine a spirituall food, seek it by a spirituall feeding, whereof let Pope Nicholas protestation which he would haue had Beringarius to haue protested, be witnesse.

Verse 63. It is the spirit that quickneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I haue spoken to you, be spirit and life.

RHEM. 13. [63. The flesh profiteth nothing.] If this speech were spoken in the sense of the Sacramentaries, it would take away Christs incarnation, manhood, and death, no lesse then his corporall presence in the Sacrament, for if his flesh were not profitable, all these things were vayne. Therfore Christ denieth not his own flesh to be profitable, but that their grosse & carnall conceiving of his words, of his flesh, and of the manner of eating the same, was unprofitable. Which is plaine by the sentence following, where he warneth them, that his words be spirit and life, of high mysticall meaning, and not vulgarly and grosly to be taken, as they took them. And it is the use of the Scripture to call mans naturall sense, reason, and carnall resisting, or not reaching supernaturall truths, flesh or bloud, as, Flesh and bloud reueled not this to thee. &c. Mat. 16,

The Capharnaits grosse understanding of Christs flesh to be giuen or eaten. And how his flesh doth profit and not profit. Aug. de doct. Christ. l. 3. cap. 13.

This carnality then of theirs, stood in two points specially: first, that they imagined that he would kill himselfe, & cut and mangle his flesh into parts, and so giue it them raw or rost to be eaten among them. Which could not be meant, saith S. Augustine: for that had conteined an heinous and barbarous fact, and therefore they might and should haue been assured, that he would command no such thing: but some other sweet sense to bee of his hard, mysticall, or figuratiue words, to be fulfilled in a Sacrament: mysterie, and a marvelous divine sort, otherwise then they could comprehend. Secondly, they did erre touching his flesh, in that they took it to bee the flesh of a meere man, and of a dead man also, when it should come to be eaten: of which kinde of flesh Christ here pronounceth, that it profiteth nothing. Whereupon S. Cyrill saith, This body is not of Peter or Paul, or any other like, but of Christ Iesus who is the life it selfe: and therefore this body giueth life, the very fulnesse of the Diuinity dwelling in it. And the holy counsell of Ephesus in the 11. Anathematisme expounded also by the said S. Cyril: the Eucharist is not the body of any common person, (for the flesh of a common man could not quicken) but of the Word it selfe But the Heretick Nestorius dissolved the vertue of this mistery, holding mans flesh only to be in the Eucharist. Thus there. And S. Ignatius cited of Theodoret, and many other Fathers haue the like. Whereby we may see that it commeth of the Divinity and Spirit (without which Christs flesh cannot be) that this Sacrament giueth life.

Christs flesh giueth life because it is the flesh of God and man.

Lib. 4. c. 23 in Ioh.

Ignat. apud. Theod. dial 3

CARTVV. 13. [63. The flesh profiteth nothing.] Hee sheweth that his flesh as they conceiued of it to bee eaten, profited nothing: For if the Virgin Mary which compassed our Sauiour Christs body and soule in her wombe, were not therefore happy to life euerlasting: neither the bodily receiving of him into the belly can make them blessed: neither esteemed they that hee would giue them his dead flesh when he had killed himselfe, as the Iesuites dreame, but they considered not, that this flesh, that is the humanity of our Saviour Christ his body and soule, were not personaly united unto his spirit, which is his Divinity and Consubstantiall Essence with his Father, from which spirit the flesh of our Saviour communicated unto us in the Preaching of the Gospell, and administration of the Sacraments commeth to haue the vertue of quickning all those which through faith, partaking of his flesh are made members of his body. And hauing told them what the meat of the world is, namely, himselfe both God and man, after he sheweth how and to what end it is to be eaten, The manner hee sheweth to bee by the Spirit giuen into our hearts, and namely by faith, which is the first fruit of the Spirit in the children of God; and therefore that his flesh was not carnally with mouth and teeth to bee eaten, but by such a way as was meete to partake vnto the Spirit of Christ, as well as vnto his flesh which could not be by mouth and teeth. And if it be a wicked imagination of the Capernaites that Christ should kill himselfe to giue his body to be eaten: The Popish Capernaisme is much more horrible, which imagineth that Christ ate his owne flesh, a thing more barbarous then to kill himselfe. And if it be a cruell thing to eate the flesh of Christ mangled, it is much more to swallow him vp whole at a morsell: the Scripture using to note out the Tyger-like cruelty of Church tyrants, by this metaphor of swallowing up, drawn from the likenesse of great Whales, or other great beasts which swallow up things at once. Last of all, if it appeare vnto them an vnworthy thing to imagine that Christs flesh should be eaten when it is dead, it is yet more brutish to imagine it to be eaten when it is aliue, it being another staire and degree of cruelty to deuoure men when they are yet aliue. And touching the end of eating this flesh, it was not as they imagined that they should alwaies liue here vpon earth: but that they should liue a life inded, that is life euerlasting in heauen. Thereby also teaching them that this meate was not to be eaten with the mouth, considering that that which entreth into the mouth goeth into the stomack. and from thence is cast into the priuy, whereas this meat endureth for euer. And this to be the simple and plaine meaning of the words of our Saviour Christ we doubt not but all indifferent iudgement will easily see.

Psal. 27. 2. Psal. 124. 3. Psal. 124. 3. Prou. 1. 12.

Verse, 64 But there be certaine of you | that beleeue not. For IESVS knew from the begining who they were that did not beleeue, and who he was that would betray him.

Iudas the chief of them that beleeue not the reall presence. * vers. 64.

RHEM. 14. [64. That beleeue not.] It is lacke of faith, you see heere, that causeth men to spurn against this high trueth of the Sacrament: as also it may be learned heere, that it is the great and mercifull gift of God that men do against their senses, and carnall reasons beleeue, and submit themselues to the humble acknowledging of this mystery: lastly, that it may well * by Christs insinuation of Iudas be gathered, that he specially spurned against our Masters speeches of the holy Sacrament.

CARTVV. 14. [64. That beleeue not.] The true Catholike faith, which is, to be perswaded of the good will of God in Christ, doth easily beleue that Christ is the onely meat of the world. But it cannot beleeue your grosse, or teeth-eating, or biting of Christ, unlesse it be set on tenter-hooks aboue the reach of the holy Scripture: And as for your humble submission of your senses & reason, it is nothing else, as Augustine noteth, but a miserable slauery, namely, when the fingers are taken for the things themselues.

De Doctrin. Christ. lib. 3. cap. 5.

Verse. 66. After this many of his Disciples | went back: and now they walked not with him.

Heretickes beleeue not the reall presence, because they see bread and wine, as the Iewes beleeued not his Godhead, because of the shape of a pore man. The disciples revolting at Christs words proue that he spake not metaphorically as at other times.

RHEM. 15. [66. Went back.] It can be no maruell to us now that so many reuolt from the Church by offence or scandall iniustly taken at Christs body and bloud in the Sacrament, seeing many of his Disciples that saw his wonderfull life, doctrine and miracles, forsooke Christ himselfe, upon the speech and promise of the same Sacrament, for the mysterie of it is so supernaturall and diuine in it selfe, and withall so low and base for our sakes, by the shew of the formes of these terrene elements under which it is, and wee eate it: that the unfaithfull and infirme do so stumble at Christ in the Sacrament, as the Iewes and Gentils did at Christ in his humanity. For, the causes of contradictions of the Incarnation & Transubstantiation be like. And it may be verily demed that whosoeuer now can not beleeue the Sacrament to be Christ, because it is vnder the forme of bread and wine, and is eaten and drunken, would not then haue beleeued that Christ had been God, because he was in shape of man, and crucified. To conclude, it was not a figure nor a mistery of bare bread and wine, nor any Metaphoricall or Allegoricall speech, that could make such a troupe of his Disciples reuolt at once. When he said he was a Doore, a Vine, a Way, a Pastour, and such like (unto which kinde of speeches the Protestants ridiculously resemble the words of the holy Sacrament) who was so mad to mistake him, or to forsake him for the same: For the Apostles at the least would haue plucked them by the sleeues, and sayd, Goe not away my masters, he speaketh parables. The cause therefore was their incredulity, and the height of the mistery, for that they neither knew the meanes how it might be present, nor would beleeue that he was able to giue his flesh to be eaten in many places. And euen such is the unbeleefe of the hereticks about the matter at this day.

CARTVV. 15. [66. Went back.] You say truth, that it is no mervaile though many fall away from you that haue neither Scripture nor reason to hold them by: when so many stept aside from our Saviour Christ whose speech is upholden by both. It will be also lesse maruaile unto you, if you consider that as the Lord in these dayes calleth men to come out of Babylon, so he suffereth not his calling to be in vaine, by drawing numbers of those whom he calleth. There is indeed in diuers points of our faith, Super-naturall and Super-phisicall Theology, as is the incarnation of the Sonne of God: but your divinity in the Supper is Anti-naturall and Anti-phisicall, that is not aboue nature, but contrary to nature. And it is foolishly compared with the mistery of the incarnation wherein the Diuinity did continually shew it selfe by such apparant effects, that the humble and base estate of the humanity was not able to hide it so, but that it appeared euen unto the blind: whereas the time is yet to come, that your Idoll could, either in defence of it selfe, or offence of others, doe any greater actes then a peece of bread. And therefore we may say unto him, as Gideons father said of Baal, if he bee a God let him be auenged of his enemies, let him saue himselfe. And if hee bee not able to saue himselfe from a mouse to whom you betray him, how shall he deliuer others from the mouth of the Lyon. And beside that the incarnation implieth no contradiction, as not being contrary to nature, although it be aboue it: When you shall shew those evidences for your Transubstantiation, as we can for the Incarnation, we will hold up our hands. To conclude (say you) it was no figure nor mystirie of bread and wine, nor no allegoricall speech, that could make such a number reuolt from Christ.

Hereby

Hereby your ignorance is shewed of your estate, and of all mens naturally, blinde in things pertaining to the kingdom of God. You forget also that the Apostles themselues stumbled at a like stone to this, and had fallen if they had not been stayed by a plaine exposition of our Saviour Christ. But I feare it bee your malicious wilfulnesse against the truth, rather then ignorance, that the example of the Samaritane woman, mentioned the last chapter saving one, commeth not to your minde, which was in the stocks that these men were, by taking the words of Christ rather according to their sound then their meaning: If the Apostles had taken them by the sleeue to stay them whom their Master Christ thought good to let go, they should haue done saucely. And to tell them that it was a Parable, which our Sauiour Christ had before told them, in that he declared that this eating was by faith, and that the words which hee spake were spirit and life, had been superfluous. And it is your grosse and palpable ignorance that you esteeme a pull by the sleeue, and a word of admonition sufficient to haue stayed them, whom so many good words of our Saviour did not stay from this revolt, nor any could stay without the working of the Spirit. The Dore, the Vine, and the Way, are well resembled to this speech heere, as those which haue the same meaning, namely, that Christ is the onely Saviour of the world: Whereat that none was offended, as at this, the cause is, that as this similitude was most effectuall to shew forth the mysticall unity and coniunction of Christ with his Church so it behoued it to come neerer unto the senses then the other did, whilst it representeth the doctrine not onely by metaphore taken from these, but from the grosser senses and actions of touching and tasting, of eating and swallowing down, which sensuall men perverted according to their sensuality.

RHEM. 16 [68. Peter answered.] Peter answereth for the Twelue, not knowing that Iudas in heart was already naught, & beleeued not Christs former words touching the B. Sacrament; but was to revolt afterward as well as the other. * Wherein Peter beareth the person of the Church and all Catholike men, that for no difficulty of his word, nor for any revolt (be it neuer so generall) of schismatiks heretickes, or apostates, either for this Sacrament or any Article, will euer forsake Christ. And when company draweth us to revolt, let us say thus: Lord, whither or to whom shall we go, when we haue forsaken thee? to Caluin, Luther, or such: and forsake thee and thy Church with the unfaithfull multitude? No, thou hast the words of life: and wee beleeue thee, and thy Church will not nor can not beguile us. thou hast (saith S Augustine) life everlasting in the ministration of thy body and blond. And a little after, thou art life everlasting it selfe, and thou giuest not in thy flesh and blond but that which thy self art.

As Iudas of all unbeleeuing heretickes, so Peter beareth the person of all beleeuing catholikes, namely in the B. Sacrament.

CARRVV. 16. [68. Peter answered.] If Iudas had beleeued stedfastly that Christ had been his Saviour, it had been easie for him to haue beleeued that Christ was his meate, and drink, his bread and wine to eternall life. But beleeuing not the former, the other was impossible to be beleeued, and the want of this beleefe our Saviour secretly casteth in his teeth; and not the want of the beleefe of Christ in the Sacrament: for it seemeth by his tarying with Christ that hee was no more troubled with that maner of speech of our Sauiour Christ then Peter or any of the rest of the Apostles: his disease was of another sort from the disease of the multitude. The sentences of Augustine are directly against you, whose whole drift, is to carry this whole chapter altogether from the Sacrament unto the setting forth of the Office of Christ, and our generall communication with him: Neither is there here any word of his which we may not willingly confesse with utter defiance of your carnall and grosse feeding in the Sacrament: yea Augustines words do utterly ouerthrow your Sacrament, and proue that the body and bloud which hee speaketh of, is not the Sacrament, which being receiued of the unworthy, killeth, where this he speaketh of, quickneth the receiuer. Wherupon Augustine before saith that the Sacrament of this thing is taken at the Lords table of some to life, of other some to death: but that the thing it selfe, whereof the Sacrament is, is receiued of euery one to life, and of none to death in those that are partaker of it.

That the Pope is that Antichriſt, he by his proud titles, and abhominable works doth openly manifeſt; and we by Gods word haue heretofore and ſhall hereafter plainly euince: and to giue him his due title, he is more plainly the Vicar of hell, then of Chriſt, being the firſt borne of Satan.

Act. 2. 14. Verſe. 39. And this he ſaid *of the ſpirit that they ſhould receiue which beleeued in him, for as yet the Spirit was not giuen: becauſe Ieſus was not yet glorified.

RHEM. 4. [39. For as yet the Spirit.] This was fulfilled on Whitſunday, Act. 2. and afterward alwayes by impoſition of hands in the Sacrament of Confirmation, viſibly in the Primitiue Church and inuiſibly to the end of the world.

CAR TVV. 4. [39. For as yet the ſpirit.] In your Sacrament it is giuen inuiſibly, that is to ſay ſo as the fruits and effects thereof are neuer ſeen nor heard of.

Ioh. 3. 2. Verſe. 50. Nicodemus ſaid to them, ‡he *that came to him by night, who was one of them.

RHEM. 5. [50. He that came to him.] Chriſt hath ſome good alwayes euen among the wicked which ſecretly ſerue him and by wiſe delayes auert the execution of vniuſt lawes againſt him and his people, as Nicodemus and Gamaliel.

CAR TVV. 5. [50. He that came to him.] As it is vndoubtedly true that Chriſt hath ſome that in the midſt of Popiſh Babell never bow the knee to Baal, nor receiue the marke of the beaſt, neither in their forehead nor hand: ſo hath Antichriſt ſome ſworne ſlaues to ſerue his turne in the vndermining of ſtates, and murdering of Princes, for the ſuppreſſing of the truth, and aduancing his proud Primacy and deteſtable Idolatrie, amongſt the true ſeruants and people of God.

CHAP. VIII.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe. 11. WHo ſaid, No man, Lord. And IESVS ſaid, ‡Neither will I condemne thee. Go now and ſin no more.

RHEM. 1. [11. Neither will I condemne.] S. Auguſtine by this example of our Maſter, proueth that Clergy men ſpecially ſhould be much giuen to mercy: and that they ought often, as the cauſe and time require, to get pardon of the ſecular Magiſtrate for offendors that be penitent. Epiſt. 54.

CAR TVV. 1. [11. Neither will I condemne.] Our Saviour Chriſt being no ciuill Iudge would not condemne any to ciuill puniſhment, but if ſhe had been condemned for her adultery, he would not haue acquited her. And the ſame Auguſtine ſaith, that it had been vniuſt for our Saviour Chriſt to haue ſaid that an Adulteſſe ſhould not be ſtoned. And therefore in ſuch caſes, where the law of God appointeth the puniſhment of death, no man may ſet himſelfe between the iudge and the guilty perſon, to deliuer from death: for he that doth ſo, muſt needs ſay‡, that a murderer or an adulterer, &c. eſpecially repentant, ought not to die. Neither ought the repentance of the guilty perſon in ſuch caſes deliver him from the hands of the ciuill Iuſtice, but Gods iuſtice alone: unleſſe the Commonwealth will both pull Gods wrath upon it which threatneth that he will never be reconciled with it, unleſſe due puniſhment be taken of the offender; and draw others to the like lewdneſſe by reaſon of the impunity of the offender. Yet deny we not, but that in the capitall and criminall puniſhment which men do in pollicy make, ſuch mitigation may be at the diſcretion of the iudge, as the circumſtances of repentance and other accidents ſhall require.

The ſame Epiſt. and on that place.

Verſe. 31. IESVS therefore ſaid to them that beleeued him, the Iewes: If ‡you abide in my word, you ſhall be my Diſciples indeed.

RHEM. 2. [31. Abide in my word.] Onely faith is not ſufficient without perſeuerance or abiding in the keeping of his commandements.

Ioh. 3. 16. CAR TVV. 2. [31. Abide in my word.] Perſeuerance can never bee ſeuered from true faith conſidering that who ſo beleeueth in the ſonne of God periſheth not, but hath life everlaſting: ſo that life once begun in him is never diſcontinued untill he come to be brim-full.

Verſe. 36. If therefore the Sonne make you free, you ſhall be ‡free indeed.

RHEM. 3. [36. Free indeed.] Man was never without free will: but having the grace of Chriſt, his will is truely made free (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) from ſeruitude of ſinne alſo. Tractat. 41. in Euang. Io.

CAR TVV. 3. [36. Free indeed.] Wherefore by Auguſtines own words, man, untill the Sonne of God free him can do nothing but ſinne: before which time hee ſinneth alſo, ſo far freely as hee doth the evill, which he worketh willingly and uncompelledly, not as having power to make choiſe of good and evill, no more then a man is at his choiſe, whether he will ſerue his Maſter whoſe bondſlaue he is. And thus the note is directly contrary to the text.

Verſ. 39. They anſwered, and ſaid to him. Our Father is Abraham. IESVS ſaith to them, if you be the children of Abraham, do the works of Abraham.

RHEM. 4. [39. Do the works of Abraham.] Not onely faith but good works alſo make men

the children of Abraham, according as S. Iames alſo ſpeaketh of Abrahams workes. ch. 2.

CARTVV. 4. [39 Do the workes of Abraham.] Workes make not the children of Abraham but witneſſe that they are ſo: as good fruites make not trees good, but approue them to bee good. And ſo our Sauiour uſeth it here, bidding them to proue themſelues the children of Abraham by their workes, according as they profeſſe themſelues to bee. Iames commeth to bee conſidered of in his place.

Verſ. 49 Ieſus anſwered, ‡I haue no Diuell: but I doe honour my Father, and you haue diſhonoured me.

RHEM. 4. [49 I haue no diuell.] He denieth not that he is a Samaritane, becauſe he is our keeper or protectour, as the word ſignifieth, and becauſe he is indeed that mercifull Samaritane in the parable of the wounded man. Luc. 10. 33. Aug. Tract. 43. in Io.

CARTVV. 4. [49. I haue no Diuell.] S.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſ. 34 Ieſus anſwered them, Amen, Amen, I ſay to you, that euery one which committeth ſinne, is the ſeruant of ſinne.

RHEM. 5. [34 Amen, amen.] What is it (ſaith S. Auguſtine vpon this place) when our Lord ſaith, Amen, Amen? He doth much commend and vrge the thing that he ſo vttereth, doubling it. It is a certeine oth of his, if a man may ſo ſay. for Amen in Hebrew ſignifieth, Verum, a trueth. Yet is it not tranſlated, whereas it might haue been ſaid, Verum verum dico vobis. but neither the* Greeke interpreter durſt do it, nor the Latine. The Hebrew word hath remained ſtill, that ſo it might be the more eſteemed. Tract. 41. in Ioan. By which words and the like * recorded in other places of the New Teſtament, the Reader may ſee great reaſon, why we alſo ſay, Amen, Amen, and durſt not tranſlate it, and ſuch like words into our Engliſh tongue.

Why Amen, amen is not tranſlated.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verſe 4 I muſt worke the workes of him that ſent me, whiles it is day. The night commeth ‡when no man can work.

RHEM. 1. [4 When no man.] The time of working, and meriting, is in this life: and after death we can deſerue no more by our deedes, but muſt onely receiue good or ill, according to the difference of works here.

CARTVV. 1. [4. When no man.] Whereby Popiſh Purgatory is razed from the foundation.

Verſe 7 And ſaid to him, Goe, waſh in the poole of Siloe, which is interpreted Sent. He went therefore, and waſhed: and he came ſeeing.

RHEM. 2. [7. Waſh.] This was a figure of Baptiſme, to which all men born in ſin and blindneſs are ſent for health and ſtrength. Ambr. lib. 3. c. 2. de ſacramentis.

CVRTVV. 2. [7. Waſh.] Baptiſme it ſelfe is a figure, whereof to inſtitute another figure, and that in the time of the Goſpell, when figures are faded away, hath no great colour of truth, vnleſſe vnder the name of a figure be vnderſtood a compariſon. Looke before, vpon Iohn. 5. 8.

Verſ. 24 They therefore againe called the man that had been blind, and ſaid to him, ‡Giue glory to God: we know that this man is a ſinner.

RHEM. 3. [24 Giue glory.] So ſay the Heretickes when they derogate from miracles done by Saincts or their Reliques, phariſaically pretending the glory of God, As though it were not Gods glory, when his Saincts do it by his power and vertue; yea his greater glory, that doth ſuch things by his ſeruants, and by the meaneſt things belonging to them, as Peters ſhadow Acts 5. and Pauls napkin, Act. 9.

CARTVV. 3. [24. Giue glory.] You do but threap kindneſſe of the Hereticks, as as you call them: for they acknowledge no ſuch miracles to be done by your reliques.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 6 When he had ſaid theſe things, he ſpit on the ground, and I made clay of the ſpettle, and ſpred the clay vpon his eyes.

RHEM. 4. [6 Made clay.] Chriſt that could haue cured this man by his onely will or word, yet vſed certaine creatures as his inſtruments in working, and diuers circumſtances and ceremonies, clay, water, anointing, waſhing, &c. No maruell then that he and his Church vſe ſuch diuerſities of Sacraments and ceremonies externall in curing our ſoules.

Externall ceremonies.

CARTVV. 4. [6 Made clay.] No maruell indeed, ſeeing your Church, as a maſterleſſe hound, runneth before it hath heard any commandement of Chriſt. And yet in this thankleſſe following, how is it that you making your vnſauoury and oftentimes ſtinking ſpittle equall with Chriſts, in mounting it vnto the holy ſacrament, haue omitted the earth or duſt which our Sauiour Chriſt vſed, your ſtrength in theſe gue-gawes is the imitation of Chriſt, and yet you follow at pleaſure.

Verſe 22 Theſe things his parents ſaid, becauſe they feared the Iewes: for the Iewes had now conſpired, that if any man ſhould confeſſe him to be Chriſt, he ſhould be I put out of the Synagogue.

RHEM.

Hereticall Tranſlation.

RHEM. 5. [22 Put out of the Synagogues.] The Hereticks vntruely tranſlate here (& v. 35.) Excommunicate: to make the ſimple conceiue the Churches Excommunication to be no other, or no better, or no more rightly vſed againſt them, then this caſting out of the Synagogue of ſuch as confeſſed our Sauiour. They might as well haue tranſlated for Synagogue, Church: for the Old Teſtament, the new: for Law, grace: for fleſh, ſpirit: for Moyſes, Chriſt. For no leſſe difference is there between caſting out of the Synagogue, and Excommunication. Beſides that, not euery one which was not of the Iewes Synagogue, was therefore out of the communion of the Faithfull, many true beleeuers being in other partes of the world not ſubiect to the Iewes Synagogue, Law, nor Sacraments. And therefore it was not all one to be out of the Synagogue, and to be excommunicated, as now whoſoeuer is out of the Churches communion, either by his own will, or for his iuſt deſerts thruſt out of it by the ſpirituall Magiſtrate, he is quite abandoned out of all the ſocietie of Saincts in heauen and earth, ſo long as he ſo continueth.

Caſting out of the Synagogue.

The Churches excommunication. See in the Annot. Mat. 18. 17.

As for the cauſe of thruſting this poore man and ſuch other out of the Synagogue, & excommunicating Hereticks, there is as great oddes as betwixt heauen & hel, he being vſed ſo for following Chriſt & his Church: theſe for forſaking Chriſt & his Church. Some more agreement there is between that corrupt ſentence of the Iewes againſt the followers of Chriſt, and the pretended excommunication executed againſt Catholike men by our Hereticks, although in truth there is no great reſemblance. For the Iewes, though they abuſed their power ſometimes, yet had they authoritie indeed by Gods Law ſo to puniſh contemners of their Law, and therefore it was feared and reſpected euen of good men, But the excommunication vſed by Heretickes againſt Catholikes or any offenders is not to be reſpected at all, being no more but a ridiculous vſurpation of the Churches right and faſhion of the ſame. for, out of their Synagogues all faithfull men ought to flee, and not tary to be thruſt out according to the warning giuen againſt Core and Dathan. Be yee ſeparated from their tabernacles, leſt you be wrapped in their ſinnes.

The hereticks ridiculous excommunication.

CARTVV. 5. [22. Put out of the Synagogue.] If our eares would haue borne it, it might haue been turned unſynagogued, as we ſay unknighted, that being hard, the word of excommunicating ioyned with the Synagogue, which is to put one out from the communion and ſocietie of the Synagogue, was very apt to ſet forth the minde of the Euangeliſt. Neither is there any ſuch religion in the word which you turne Church, as you pretend, as that it ſhould agree onely to the faithfull under the Goſpell, conſidering that it is applied unto the Synagogue of the Iewes, which is often called by that Hebrew word, which the Septuaginta turne by that word that both you and we tranſlate Church. In which reſpect that which is here called excommunicating from the Synagogue, is in the old Teſtament called a ſeparation from the Church, which is nothing elſe but an excommunication. And ſeeing the Gentiles were adioyned to the Iewes, unleſſe the Iewes were before the Church of God, the Gentiles by their addition could get no ſuch title. Yea Luke vſeth the word that is commonly turned Church, to note out ciuill meetings, and that of them that were ſtrangers from the common wealth of God. And let the indifferent reader iudge who is gone further from the law of tranſlating, we which haue put excommunicate in ſmall letters, declaring that it is not word for word in the Greeke; or they, which haue in text letters, ſet in, Put out, as though it were preciſely ſo in the Greeke, which is not. We hold you as none of the Church, and therefore you need not the knife of excommunication to cut you from the tree of the Church, which were neuer branches thereof. As for your excommunication, we take it for no Church cenſure, but for a cauſeleſſe malediction, which can finde no lighting place, unleſſe it returne upon your own head.

CHAP. X.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 1 AMen, amen, I ſay to you He that entreth not by the doore into the fold of the ſheepe, but climeth up another way, he is a theefe and a robber.

Arch-hereticks ſpecially, are the theeues that clime in another way, not by the dore.

RHEM. 1. [1 Climeth an other way.] Whoſoeuer taketh vpon him to preach without lawfull ſending, to miniſter Sacraments, and is not Canonically of a true Catholike Biſhop, to bee a Curate of ſoules, Perſon, Biſhop, or what other ſpirituall Paſtor ſoeuer and commeth not in by lawfull election and holy Churches ordinance to that dignitie, but breaketh in againſt order by force or fauour of men, and by humane lawes, he is a theefe and a murderer. So came in Arius, Caluin, Luther, and all Heretickes: and all that ſucceed them in roome and doctrine. And generally euery one that deſcendeth not by Lawfull ſucceſſion in the knowen ordinary life of Catholike Biſhops and Paſtors that haue been in all Countries ſince their conuerſion. And according to this rule S. Irenæus lib 3. cap. 3. trieth the true ſhepheards from the theeues and Heretickes. So do Tertul de Præſc nu. 11. S. Cyprian de unit. Eccl. nu. 7. S. Auguſtin. epiſt. 165, & contr. epiſt. Manich. cap. 4. and Lirinenſis.

CARTVV. 1. [1. Climeth another way.] The note here (as in diuers other places which the reader may eaſily ſee) doth not grow out of any ſtalke of the text from whence it is taken, but is directly contrary to it. For the miniſters whom our Sauiour Chriſt chargeth as theeues, and murderers, were of continuall ſucceſſion of Leui and Aaron eſpecially. And our Sauiour Chriſt which recommendeth himſelfe as the true Biſhop, came from no ſucceſſion of former Biſhops, nor was ordained by none of them, but ſent from his father alone. And therefore the Ieſuites by this note do what they can to make not onely the Prophets, Iohn Baptiſt, and the Apoſtles, but our Sauiour Chriſt, the Lord of the Prophets and Apoſtles, to hold up their hands at the barre as theeues and murderers, as thoſe which haue no calling by them which are in ordinary ſucceſſion. And Auguſtine expounding this place of those which teach false doctrine, and not of those which enter without calling, putteth the example of Arius, who entred by ordinary calling of the Church. As for the testimonies heere alledged, if they truely expounded these words of the Euangelist, yet are they of no value to helpe you, unlesse you shew, that as hee is a theefe which hath no lawfull ordination, so hee that hath a lawfull calling is forthwith a good shepe-heard. There grew other notes upon this Text to discerne a true Pastor from a false, as that they enter by Christ the dore which are lawfull shepheards, teaching him alone to bee the onely Saiiour and Mediator, and no other Saint or Angell, which we do, and you do not. Also that it is required in a true Pastor that the sheep, or Church of God, agree upon him, and chuse to heare him, which wee teach and you unteach; to whom the Holy Ghost, as the Dore keeper openeth, which is seene in our people, into whose hearts our ministery hath entrance, to the lightning of them with the knowledge of the Word, where your people remaine in a grosse ignorance thereof. Notwithstanding where it may bee conueniently had, wee hold it fit that the weakenesse of the Churches iudgement in the choise of their Minister, should bee supported and vnderset by the discrete knowledge and wisedome of other Ministers thereabout: which was also the practise of the primitiue and elder Churches. But where it cannot bee conueniently, as in places where both the Gospell is newly planted, and farre remoued from other Churches already established, there, that amongst other considerations, the course of the Gospell should not bee stayed untill ordination may be fetched from farre Countries: the Lord himselfe supplyeth the place of the Bishops and Ministers, and layeth on his hands in such euidence of giftes and graces proper for the Ministery, as not onely the Church doth willingly acknowledge, but the enemies of the Church will they nill they, are in their consciences conuinced to bee diuine and excellent. And if wee succeed to the doctrine of the Apostles and godly Bishops that liued in the elder Churches, wee doubt not but they will acknowledge us their lawfull successors, although wee passe not their hands which sitting in their seates stand not in the doctrine they stood in. And be it far from us that wee should do that iniury to the worthy ancient Bishops of Rome, as to make Boniface the third with all the suite and rabble of Bishops that followed him unto this day, their successours, who had no predecessor before him of the Antichristian authority that hee seased upon by meanes of Phocas that killed his own Maister. And therefore if in ordaining our Ministers it were necessary to haue recourse unto a Bishop which can conuey his discent or succession from the Apostles, we may not go to Rome for our ordination, where the Predecessors being Apostolicall and Christian, the successors are Apostaticall and Anti christian, As for the Fathers heere alledged, as they tooke aduantage of a godly succession of Bishops, where they might, to the greater discredite of their aduersaries; so they make it no certaine and proper marke wherby alwaies a lawfull Ministery is discerned from that which is unlawfull. But as there is no other way, in such a confusion as is in the world, to know the Church but onely by the Scriptures, to discerne of the lawfull Ministerie, which is a principall part of the Church, there is no sufficient light beside them. And so Augustine (once or twise alledged before) in the discretion of the true Church from the false, useth the succession of Bishops for a probable argument, affirming that the more certaine and sounder knowledge thereof is fetched from the Scriptures. Neither do these Fathers say that they confounded their aduersaries in that they were able to shew a succession of Bishops: but they confounded them by the truth and faith which came to their hands by Bishops that successiuely followed one another. But granting unto you that which is false, and which you can neuer proue, that we were ordained of heretickes, doth it therefore follow that our Ministery is unlawfull? And if our vocation bee voide, because we had the ordination thereof, which is but a part of the Ministery, from heretickes: the other part being conferred unto us by election of the Church, how is it that the holy Sacrament of Baptisme being ministred by an heretick is notwithstanding of force and effect to all purposes whereunto that Sacrament is ordained.

Chrysost. in Matth. homil. 49.

Verse. 11. I am the good Pastor. * The | good Pastor giueth his life for his sheep.

RHEM. 2. [11 Good Pastor.] The good Pastor, is he whose speciall care is not of his owne aduantage, but of the safetie of the flocke. The hireling, is he that respecteth not the profite and good of the flocke, but his own lucre. The woulfe, is the Heretick, or any persecutor of the Church, which is Christes flocke.

CARTVV. 2. [11 Good Pastor.] S. Onely let the Reader marke that these words which go before, I am the good shepheard, sometimes sacrilegiously carryed to the Pope, are (for very shame) suffered to bee free from such blasphemous wresting and violent handling them.

Verse. 22. And | the Dedication was in Ierusalem: and it was Winter.

RHEM. 4. [22 The Dedication.] This is the feast of Dedication instituted by Iudas Machabaeus, Mach. li. 1. cap. 4. Christ vouchsafed to honour and keepe that feast instituted by him: and our heretickes vouchsafe not to pray and sacrifice for the dead, * used and approued by him. The Dedication also of Christian Churches is warranted thereby, with the anuall memories thereof. And proueth that such things may be instituted without any expresse commandement in Scripture.

Iudas Machabeus. 2. Mach. 12 Dedication of Churches.

CARTVV. 4. [22 The Dedication.] That this Feast was unduely instituted and ungroundedly, it may appeare by conference of the Dedication of the first Temple under Salomon, and of the second after the captiuity returned from Babylon. In which Dedications, seeing there was no yeerely remembrance by solemnity of Feast, not so much as of one day, it is euident that the yearely celebration of this Feast, for eight daies was not compassed by that Spirit that Salomon and the captiuity were directed by: which Spirit when it dwelt more plentifully in Salomon, and in the Prophets that stood at the sterne of the captiuities Dedication, then it did in Iudas, it was in him so much the more presumptuous as hauing a shorter legge then they, he durst in that matter ouerstride them. And his rashnesse is so much the more aggrauated, as each of them for the building of the whole Temple with all the implements and furniture thereof made no feast to renue the annuall memory, where Iudas onely for the renewment of the Altar, and of certaine other decayed places of the Temple, instituted this great solemnity. Now where they would proue the lawfulnesse of this Feast by our Sauiour Christs presence at it, they may as well proue the lawfulnesse of the Iewes Pentecost, and such other Iewish Feasts, because Paul, for further spread of the Gospell, was not onely present, but laboured to be present at that time. The Iesuites therefore are to learne that it is one thing to tolerate and to beare with a custome or determination of the Church, and another to approue of it. The truncke therefore of this doctrine being cut downe, the boughes and the branches that the Iesuites will haue to grow forth of it, must needs fall to the ground: To let passe the unlikelyhood of the time of the Law and the Gospell in matters of ceremonies.

And therefore some Heretickes of our time wickedly accuse the Councell of Laterane for falsifying this place and applying it to the same purpose, which they lesse can abide, for that it is against Caluins Autotheismes, holding that Christ tooke his person of the Father, but not his substance. CARTVV. 5 (29. That which he gaue me) Why may not the Iesuits say, It is wholy that we will, which upon a few readings of certain Fathers, and that for the most part Latine, dare goe against the generall consent of all Greeke coppies, which haue it as we haue translated it. Beside that the translation which they haue followed, hath no sensible understanding, and containeth a manifest barbarisme. And if our Sauiour Christ had meant as they interpret it, he would haue said, That which my father hath giuen me, is greater then all. Likewise also, the other part of the sentence should rather haue been: And no man can pull it out of my fathers hand, and not as he saith, And no man can pull them out of my Fathers hand. Touching the slander against M. Caluin, looke the answer before, vpon Iohn 1. vers. 1.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verse 44 AND forthwith hee came forth that had been dead, bound feet and hands with winding bands, and his face was tied with a napkin. Iesus said to them, ✝ Loose him, and let him go.

RHEM 1. [44 Loose him.] S. Cyrill li. 7. c. vlt. in Io and S. Aug. Tract. 49. in Io. apply this to the Apostles and Priests authoritie of absoluing sinners: affirming Christ to reuiue none from sinne, but in the Church and by the Priests ministerie.

CAR. These words of Christ are evidently meant of bodily loosing, and not of spirituall: unto which by any they cannot be applied without being misapplied. Cyril is here falsified.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 51 And this he said not of himselfe: but being the high Priest of that yeare, he propheſied that Iesus should die for the nation.

The priuilege of the office and order, though in a wicked person.

RHEM. 2. [51 Being the high Priest.] Maruell not that Christ preserueth his truth in the Church as well by the vnworthy as the worthy Prelates thereof: the giftes of the Holy Ghost following their Order or office as wee see here in Caiphas, and not their merits or person. And if this man being many wayes wicked, and in part an vsurper, and the Law and Priesthood being to decline and to giue place to Christes new ordinance, had yet some assistance of God for vtterance of truth which himselfe meant not, nor kew not: how much more may we be assured, that Christ will not leaue Peters seate, *whose faith he promised should neuer faile, though the persons which occupie the same, where as ill as the blasphemous and malicious mouthes of Heretickes doe affirme?

Luk. 22. 31

CARTVV. 2. [51 Being the high Priest.] It is a token that the Pope is bankrupt in faith, that is drawne to such sureties for this truth as Caiphas is, with whom in this hee is fitly compared, that comming too late to persecute and condemne our Sauiour Christ, which is the head, hee would yet be sure to pursue and condemne the Church, which is his body, wee may also well affoord him this with Caiphas, that if he speake the truth at any time, he doth it unawares, his purpose and whole bent of his heart being to ouerthrow the truth. We will not sticke with him also to bee Caiphas successor in the contempt of his fellow ministers, assembled in Councell with him, whom he accounteth as beasts which know nothing, as if he had all knowledge in the scrinie of his breast: when as notwithstanding beside the Draconicall and bloudy sentence against our Sauiour Christ, hee said nothing but that his assistants had ministred unto him, who giuing their aduice of putting our Sauiour Christ to silence, onely doubted whether the same were best to be done by his death or otherwise. But that he is of Peters succession as Caiphas was of Aarons, that he is ruler ouer the Church under the Gospell, as Caiphas was ouer the Church under the Law, that the Lord honoreth him with any gift of propheſie, as he did the high Priest ordinarily, by Vrim and Thummim, and extraordinarily sometimes by other reuelation, that needeth proofe. And if it were proued, yet haue not the Iesuits found that they seeke

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 7 IEsus therefore said, Let her alone, that she may keepe it for the day of my ‡ buriall.

RHEM.1. [7.Buriall.] The deuout offices of balming and annointing the dead bodies of the faithfull, are here also allowed.

CARTVV.1. [7.Buriall.] In the Iewes buriall, to whom the knowledge of the resurrection, was not so cleare as now it is to vs through the resurrection of our Sauiour Christ, more cost was allowed then we may lawfully vse, vnlesse we meane to call our Sauiour Christ to his graue againe.

Verse 8 For the poore you haue alwayes with you: but ‡ me you shall not haue alwayes.

RHEM.2. [8 Me you shall.] Not in visible and mortall condition to receiue almes of you, or such like offices for supplie of my necessities. Real [or corporal presence

CARTVV. Looke the answer before, vpon Math.26.11.

Verse 20 And there were certaine Gentiles of them that ‡ came up to adore in the festiuall day.

RHEM.3. [20 Came up to.] We may see there is a great difference where a man pray or adore at home or in the Church and holy places: when the Gentiles also came of deuotion a pilgrimage to the Temple in Hierusalem.

CARTVV.3. [20. Came up to.] There is now no such difference, for the houre is come when not in Ierusalem, or the temple, but euery man from his owne place, shall worship the Lord, yea when the prayer is priuate, the chamber is now fitter then the Church, as that which is as holy as the Church, and more readier and lesse subiect to suspition of hypocrisie then it. Ioh. 4. 20. Sophon. 2. 11 Math. 6.

Verse 39 Therefore they ‡ could not beleeue, because Esay said againe.

RHEM.4. [39 Could not beleeue.] If any man aske (saith S. Augustine) why they could not beleeue I answer roundly, because they would not. Tract.33.in Io. See the meaning of this speach, Annot. Mat.13.15. Mar.4,12.

CARTVV. 4. [39. Could not beleeue.] Augustine in the 53. Tractate, (as you say in the 33.) of Iohn, answered truely, and assigned one cause of their infidelity, but he answereth not all the truth, nor specifieth not all the causes: for it followeth, that the iust iudgement of God, which they had called forth by their sinnes, blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts, that they could not see, nor vnderstand. And Augustine here ascribing it vnto their wills, doth not thereby leaue any freedom of choyce of that which is good, but sheweth before in the same tractate, that the freedome of will reacheth no further then to exempt them from the coaction and constraint, and not from the necessity of not beleeuing.

ANNOTATIONS.

Vers. 5 Why was not this oyntment sold for three hundred pence, and giuen to the poore?

RHEM.5. [5 Why was.] So wicked, couetous, and sacrilegious persons reprehend good men for bestowing their goods vpon Church ornaments &c. vnder pretence of better bestowing them on the poore, such prouide for the poore as Iudas did. Church ornaments.

CARTVV. Looke the answer before vpon Math,26.8.

Verse 6 And he said this, not because he cared for the poore: but because he was a ! thiefe, and hauing the purse, carried the things that were put in.

RHEM.6. [6 A theefe.] Iudas did not then first perish when he solde our Lord, for he was a theefe before: and being lost he yet followed Christ, not in heart, but in body onely, which our Master tolerated, to giue vs a lesson to tolerate the ill, rather then deuide the body. ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 5 AFter that, he put water into a bason, and ‡ began to wash the feet of the Disciples, and to wipe them with the towell wherewith he was girded. Purity required to the receiuing of the B. Sacrament.

RHEM.1. [5 Began to wash.] This lotion was not onely of curtesie, such as the Iewes vsed toward their guests, nor onely for example of humilitie: but for mystery and signification of the great purity purity that is required before we come to receiue the holy Sacrament which straight after this washing was to be instituted and giuen to the Apostles. Ambros. li. 3. de Sacram. c. 1. Bernard. de cœna Domni Serm 1.

CAARTVV. 1. (5. Began to wash.) The end hereof is noted, verse 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. expresly. But of that which you assigne, there is not a word in the Scripture: neither haue either Ambrose or Bernard any such iudgement of this washing, as that it noteth the purity that men should be of when they come to the supper of the Lord. And as for Ambrose, he is so farre from this exquisite pureneße to be had before the supper, rather then at other exercises of the Church, that he affirmeth him not to bee fit to receiue the bread of the Lord once a yeere, that is not fit to receiue it daily. The like sayings haue Chrysostom and Augustin also. This birth therefore appeareth to be the Iesuites, neuer liked by any learned antiquitie

Amb lib. 5. de sacrament. cap. 4. Chrys. hom. 3. in Ephes. Aug. ep. 118

Verse 10 Iesus saith to him, He that is washed, needeth not but to wash his feet, but is clean wholly. And you are cleane, but not all.

Veniall sinnes taken away by sacred ceremonies.

RHEM. 2. [10 To wash his feete.] The foulnesse of the feete, when all the rest is cleane, signifyeth the earthly affections and relikes of former sinnes remitted: which are to be cleansed by deuout actes of charitie and humility, as S. Ambrose li. 3. de Sacram. cap. 1. and S. Augustine epist. 108. & tract. 56. in Io. do note. And because this was onely a ceremonie, and yet had such force, both now and afterward vsed of the Apostles, that it purged smaller offences and filthinesse of the soule, as S. Ambrose & Bernard gather, it may not seeme strange that holy water and such ceremonies may remit veniall sins.

Amb. de sacrā. l. 3. c. 1

CARTVV. 2. (10. To wash his feet.) Our Sauiour here alludeth to the customable washing of the feet, which the Iewes vsed before supper, especially after trauell. And therefore our S. Christ offereth himselfe to doe this office vnto them. But as for Ambrose and Augustine, they are here manifestly falsified, which speak neuer a word of cleansing of sinnes by charitie and humility: and especially Ambrose is so much the more impudently alledged, as the Iesuits, together with Rome, refusing his iudgement of imitation of Christ in this action, do notwithstanding snatch at the collections and consequences that Ambrose draweth from the imitation thereof: as if a man should condemne the tree to be naught, & yet iustifie the fruit that is gathered of it to be good. After this, Ambrose is the third time in this one matter of washing falsified, whilst there is fathered of him a cleansing of the soule by this washing, which he (as also doth Augustin) referreth these words of our S. Christ (vnlesse I wash thee, thou hast no part with me) not to the present washing of the feet, but to our washing by Christ in Baptisme, or in our regeneration, which latter iudgement is most true, whether the same be before, in, or after Baptisme. Bernards sentence also is wrested out of the hinges thereof. For although he say, that this washing cleanseth sinne, yet hee affirmeth afterward, that this is proper to Christs owne washing, whereof before hee had said, that this was but a mystery or a signe. And so Augustine saith, that our euill affections are done away by the intercession of our Sauiour Christ, whilest we pray vnto him to forgiue us our sins. Now when the foundations are not only weake, but also imaginary in the Iesuits idle brain, the washing away of veniall sins by holy water, that is builded thereupon must needs lie in the duft of the Popish inuention: for if it should sacramentally purge, as Bernard followeth, yet that is, because of the institution of Christ, whereof seeing there is no step in your holy water, it can purge no sin sacramentally, much lesse can it purge by the very work of sprinkling, which you do affirme. Here we omit, that the Apostles are said to haue vsed this washing, which they neither bring, nor can bring any proof of the commandement of Christ, requiring this and such like effects of humility no further then euery one should haue need at the hands of his fellowes, of which need there is no likelihood in so great plentie of godly and faithfull households, which performed this duety vnto them.

Verse 14 If then I haue washed your feet, Lord and Master, you ought also to wash one anothers feet.

The Church defines which are sacramēts and which are not. &c.

RHEM. 3. [14 You also ought.] Our Master neuer spake plainer, nor seemed to command more precisely, either of Baptisme or the Eucharist or any other Sacrament: and yet by the Churches iudgement directed by the holy Ghost, we know this to be no Sacrament nor necessarie ceremonie, and the other to be. And why do they beleeue the Church in this, and do not credite her affirming the chalice not to be necessary for the communicants, CATVV. 3. [14. You also ought.] He spake indeed plainely in this point, to the purpose and end wherefore hee vsed it: but to the making of it a sacrament hee spake not a word, albeit that your Bernard saith that it is a sacrament. And hauing no sacramentall marke or point set into it by Christ, the Curches iudgement can neuer make it currant for a sacrament, to whom it pertaineth to receiue and dispense the sacraments which Christ instituted, and not as you blasphemously note in your margent, to define of the Sacraments. Now to your question we answer with Ambrose, that we willingly follow that Church of Rome which was in his time in all things. But where a thing is better kept then there, that we also duly obserue: wherin although we depart frō Rome, yet (as Ambrose saith) we follow Peter the Apostle, and cleane fast to his doctrine, not departing from Peter alwaies, when we depart from Rome, which if it were truely said of the Church of Rome in those golden dayes, how much more is it truely verified in these times, wherein her gold (as Esay saith of the Church of his time, is turned to drosse, and her wine not mingled, but cleane changed into water.

Verse 34 A new commandement I giue to you, That you loue one another: as I haue loued you, that you also loue one another.

RHEM. 4. [34 A new commandement.] The commandement of mutuall loue was giuen before but manifoldly misconstrued, and abridged by the Iewes to friends onely, to this life onely, for earthly respects onely: but Christ reneweth it and enlargeth it after the forme of his own loue toward vs, and giueth grace to fulfill it.

CARTVV. 4. [34. A new Commandement.] It is new in Christ, 1. Ioh. 2. especially because he hath fulfilled it for us, and then for that he giueth a new increase of his spirit aboue the measure of those those under the Law, whereby our selues aime and striue, so farre as the reliques of our corruption will suffer to keepe it.

MARGINAL NOTES

Vers. 2 In my Fathers house there be ‡ many mansions. If not, I would haue told you, because I go to prepare you a place.

RHEM. 1. [2 Many mansions] These mansions signifie differences of glory in heauen. Ierom. ib. 2. aduers. Iouin.

CARTVV. 1. [2. Many mansions.] He would then haue said, diuers and sundry, and not many; and the circumstance of the place doth shew that degrees of felicitie in heauen (which we accord) cannot be established of this place, where our Sauiour had enough to doe to perswade his disciples of a place of rest being cast downe with the mention of his departure, as though they should by his bodily absence from them, haue perished altogether: it had been therefore out of season to speake to them of the degrees of happinesse, when as through the storme that was at that time stirred vp, they wauered in their saluation. To this also maketh that our Sauiour Christ speaketh generally, that they should haue a place prepared, that they should be with him, giuing here no inckling of any difference of glory. And thus both Chrysostom and Theophilact, which knew best the difference of πολλαὶ and πολλαὶ, expound the place, referring it to the plentith of places, and not to the diuersitie and sorts of places.

Verse. 15. If you ‡ loue me, keepe my commandements.

RHEM. 2. [15 Loue mee, keepe my commandements.] It is then possible both to loue Christ and to keepe his commandements.

CARTVV. 2. [15 Loue me, keepe my commandements.] It is possible, in some measure to keep his commandements, euen according to the proporrion of loue, which because it is alwaies in this life unperfect and growing, it must needs follow that the keeping of the commandements is also unperfect. Eph. 4, 15. 1. Thes. 3. 12 13. & 4. 9. 10.

Verse. 16. And I will aske the Father, and he will giue you another ‡ Paraclete, that hee may abide with you for euer.

RHEM. 3. [16 Paraclete, that he may.] Paraclete by interpretation is either a comforter, or an aduocate: and therefore to translate it by any of them onely, is perhaps to abridge the sense of this place.

CARTVV. 3. [16 Peraclete, that hee may.] You were afraid to translate it Comforter, to the end you would not weaken your error in assigning more Aduocates unto God the Father for us, besides our Sauiour Christ.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse, 12. Amen amen, I say to you, hee that beleeueth in me, the workes that I do hee also shall do, and greater then these shall hee do.

RHEM. 4. [12 Greater then these.] S. Chrysostome in a whole booke against the Pagans proueth that this was fulfilled not onely in Peters shadow, and Pauls garments, which as we read in the Acts, healed infirmities: but also by the Relikes and monuments of Saincts, namely of S. Babylas, of whom he there treateth: thereby inferring that Christ is God, who could and did performe these wonderfull workes, by the very ashes of his seruants, The Protestants cleane contrary, as Patrones of the Pagans infidelitie, as though our Sauiour had promised these and the like miraculous workes in vaine, either not meaning or not able to fulfill them, so do they discredit all the approued histories of the Church concerning miracles wrought by Saincts, namely that S. Gregorie Thaumaturgus remoued a mountaine, the myracles of S. Paul the eremite, and S Hilarion written by S. Hierom, the miracles of S. Martin, written by Seuerus Sulpitius, the miracles testified by S. Aug. de ciuit. Dei, the miracles approued by S. Gregorie in his Dialogues, the miracles reported by S. Beda in his Ecclesiastical stories and liues of Saints: and all other miracles neuer so faithfully recorded in Ecclesiasticall writers. In all which things aboue their reach of reason & nature, they are as little perswaded, and haue no more faith then had the Pagans, against whom S. Chrysostom in the foresaid booke, and S. August de ciuit. Dei lib. 22. c. 8. and other Fathers heretofore haue written. No man therefore needeth to maruell that the very Image of our Lady, & the like do miracles, euen as S. Peters shadow did: nor wonder, if such things seem stranger and greater then those which Christ himselfe did: whereas our Sauiour to put vs out of doubt, saith expresly, that his Saincts shall do greater things them himselfe did.

*We may and must easily beleeue the miracles of Saints, and of their reliques, when Christ himselfe foretelleth they shall do such wonderfull things. lib. de Babyla mart. To. 5. * Act. 5. 15 19. 12. * See annot. Mat. 17. 20*

CARTVV. 4. (12 Greater then these.) Wee beleeue that the Apostles and Apostolicall men did the wonders here mentioned, and in them the Church and whole company of beleeuers together, and not euery one particularly (as the daily experience doth declare) wrought these workes. Wee know also that the Lord may and sometimes (extraordinarily) doth, worke such miracles in other times, especially by their hands whose publicke Ministery in the Church hee will seale and establish amongst men. But wee affirme also that diuers miracles haue beene esteemed to haue come from the mercy of God, which were either illusions of Satan, or wrought indeed according to their appearance, in a fearefull iudgement of God, that they might beleeue lies, which had not a loue of the truth. And such miracles, Stories both holy and Ecclesiasticall, shew to haue beene done amongst the Iewes and Gentiles by the deuils which haue foretold things to come, and spoken in the Images of the Gentiles Gods, with such like maruails, exceeding the reach of mans reason. As for your miracles we haue cause to praise the name of God that they haue no more efficacy to deceiue, as those 2. Thes. 2. 1 Sam. 28. 19. Euseb. de præpa. Euang.

which for the most part are ridiculous euen to children. At the least, wee are sure they are not in the number of those miracles which are done, that the Father may be glorified in his Sonne. Where yours are to robbe God of his glory, and to set up the Saints to bee worshipped and glorified with the glory which is proper unto him.

The Holy Ghost is promised to the Church for euer.

RHEM.5. (16 For euer.] If the holy Ghost had been promised onely to the Apostles, their successors and the Church after them could not haue chalenged it, but was promised them for euer. Whereby we may learne, both that the priuileges and promises made to the Apostles were not personall, but pertaining to their offices perpetually: And also that the Church and Pastors in all ages had and haue the same holy Ghost to gouerne them, that the Apostles and Primitiue Church had.

CARTVV.5. (16 For euer.) The opposition of our Sauiour Christ tarrying bodily for a time with them, and of the holy Ghost tarrying alwaies with them, declareth apparantly that these words are first and properly spoken unto the Apostles, considering that all the Church Ministers had neuer Christ tarrying with them bodily. Howbeit wee accord that this sentence is also true in the continuall succession of the Church, for the Spirit of God and Spirit of Truth, shall alwaies be with it to keep it from such Apostacy as that there should be no Church at all. But yet it is not giuen in that measure that it was unto the Apostles, whom it freed not onely from heresie, but from all manner of errour to the loweſt and least point of Religion with the latter whereof both the Church, and her best and sufficienteſt Ministers are intangled.

Verse.17. The ‖ spirit of truth whom the world cannot receiue, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but you know him: because hee shall abide with you, and shall bee in you.

The spirit of truth shall assist the Church alwaies.

RHEM.6. [17 The spirit of trueth.] They had many particular gifts and graces of the holy Ghost before, and many vertues by the same, as all holy men haue at all times: but the holy Ghost here promised to the Apostles and their successors for euer, is to this vse specially promised, to direct them in all trueth and veritie: and is contrary to the spirit of error, heresie and falshood. And therefore the Church cannot fall to Apostasie or Heresie, or to nothing, as the Aduersaries say.

CARTVV.6. Looke the note immediately before.

Verse.28. You haue heard that I said to you, I go and I come to you, If you loued mee, you would bee glad verily that I go to the Father: because the ‖ Father is greater then I.

RHEM.7. [28 Father greater then I.] There is no place of Scripture that seemeth any thing so much to make for the Sacramentaries, as this and other, in outward shew of words seemed to make for the Arians, who denied the equalitie of the Sonne with the Father. Which words yet indeed rightly vnderstood after the Churches sense, make nothing for their false sect, but onely signifie that Christ according to his Manhood was inferiour indeed, and that according to his Diuinitie he came of the Father, And if the Heresie or disease of this time were Arianisme, we should stand upon these places and the like against the Arians, as we now do vpon others against the Protestants, whose sect is the disease and bane of this time.

The Arrians alledge as plaine Scripture as the Protestants.

CARTVV.7. (28 Father greater then I.) It were then your great shame, which being astonied under the weight of our Arguments haue scarce a word of likely answer to the places which wee alledge for upholding of the faith which wee professe: Whereas the defence of the truth against the Arrians is cleere and plentifull.

CARTVV.3. [3 Word which I haue.] A drowsie note of our dreaming Iesuites, as if the Word and institution of Baptisme were not preached.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse.4. Abide in mee: and I in you. As the branch cannot beare fruit of it selfe, ‖ unlesse it abide in the Vine: so you neither, ‖ unlesse you abide in me.

RHEM.4. [4 Vnlesse you abide.] These conditionall speeches, If you remaine in the vine, If you keepe my my commandements, and such like, giue vs to wit that we be not sure to persist or persuere, nor to bee saued, but under conditions to be fulfilled by vs. August. de corrept, & gra. c. 13. Ioh.3. 15.

CARTVV.4. [4 Vnlesse you abide.] The same Word that teacheth the faithfull to walke warily, by propounding these conditions assureth them of constant perseuerance: And the faithfull not reiecting that assurance, are assured of their finall abode in Christ. 16.& 4.14 Phil.1.6. 1.Ioh.2.19

RHEM.5. [4 Vnlesse it abide.] Whosoeuer by heresie or Schisme or for any other cause is cut off or seperated from the Church, he can do no meritorious worke to Saluation. Psal.23. 6. Rom.8.35.

CARTVV.5. (4 Vnlesse it abide.) S.

*Verse.*10. If you keep my precepts, you shall abide in my loue: as I also haue kept my fathers precepts, and do abide in his loue.

RHEM.6. [10 Keepe my precepts.] This carefull and often admonition of keeping his commandements, proueth that a Christian mans life is not onely or principally in faith, but in good workes. Not onely faith.

CARTVV.6. (10 Keep my precepts.) The holy Ghost being carefull that the name of God should be glorified, must needs take care of keeping Christ his precepts, whereby that glory groweth. And our Sauiour Christ doth euen in this place assigne another end of keeping his precepts, then to be saued thereby, when as he noteth that so wee shall know that the loue of Christ abideth in us, according as the same is otherwhere, of Iohn explaned: Wee are not therefore saued by good works, but wee know by them that we stand in the state of saluation: They are no purchasers of our saluation, but they are as witnesses which underwrite our saluation, whereby wee hold it with greater assurance. Math.5. 1.Ioh. 2.3. & 5.13.

*Verse.*24. If I had not done among them works that no other man hath done, they should not haue sinne: but now both they haue seene, and they doe hate both mee and my Father.

RHEM.7. [24 If I had.] If the Iewes had not sinned by refusing Christ, in case he had not done greater miracles then any other: then were it a great folly of Catholiks to beleeue Luthers or Caluins new opinions without any miracles at all.

CARTVV.7. (24 If I had.) That you may proue your selues to be an adulterous generation, and Iewish people, which hauing had the doctrine that Luther and Caluin taught sealed up with so many miracles done by Christ and his Apostles: yet still aske after signes and wonders, as if the miracles which our Sauiour Christ did were in vaine, and not sufficient to draw beleefe vnto his doctrine: for which cause they are registred without a new supply of these times, or as if the infidel by the onely hearing of the word expounded in the Church, falleth not vpon his face and worshippeth God, professing that God indeed is amongst them which rightly expound the word. And who is so blind but the Iesuites, as not to know that this saying, that they should not else haue had sinne, is spoken by comparison, that they should not haue had so great sin, especially seeing beside the testimony of miracles hee had sufficient witnesser, the Father and Iohn Baptist. Math.16.4 1 Cor.1.22 Ioh.20.31. 1 Cor.14. 24. Iohn 5.

*Vers.*26. But when the Paraclete commeth, whom I * will send you from the Father, the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, hee shall giue testimony of mee:

RHEM.8. [26 Whom I will send.] The holy Ghost is sent by the Son, therefore hee proceedeth from him also, as from the Father: though the late Schismaticall Greekes think otherwise.

CARTVV.8. (26 Whom I will send.) S.

*Verse*27. And you shall giue testimony, because you are with mee from the beginning.

RHEM.9. [27 You shall giue.] He vouchsafeth to ioyne together the testimonie of the holy Ghost, and of the Apostles: that we may see the testimonie of truth ioyntly to consist in the holy Ghost and in the Prelats of the Church.

CARTVV.9. (27 You shall giue.) The Holy Ghost ioyneth not in testimony with the Church Gouernours, but onely when they speake the things which our Sauiour Christ taught before: although this sentence is proper to the Apostles, as appeareth by the words immediatly following, Because yee were with me from the beginning, he meaneth of his ministery here upon earth, unto the end thereof, which is required of an Apostle onely. Iohn 14.26 Acts 1. 21.

Verſ. 23 And in that day me you ſhall not aske any thing. Amen, Amen, I ſay to you, if you aske the Father any thing in my ‡ name, he will giue it you.

RHEM. 3. [23 In my name.] Vpon this the Church concludeth all her prayers, Per Chriſtum, Dominum noſtrum, euen thoſe alſo that be made to Saincts.

CARTVV. 3. [23. In my name.] Wherefore you make naughty meſlyn, and yoke not the Oxe and the Aſſe together, but the Aſſe and the Elephant; we mean things that for accouplement in the matter of mediation are moſt abſurd.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 12 I Yet many things I haue to ſay to you: but you cannot beare them now.

Chriſt left many things to be taught by the Church.

RHEM. 4. [12 Yet many things.] This place conuinceth that the Apoſtles and the faithfull be taught many things, which Chriſt omitted to teach them for their weakeneſſe: and that it was the prouidence of God that Chriſt in preſence ſhould not teach and order all things, that we might be no leſſe aſſured of the things that the Church teacheth by the holy Ghoſt, then of the things that himſelfe deliuered.

CARTVV. 4. [12. Yet many things] He ſaith not that he had many things to tell them, which he had not taught them before, but which they were not now ſo well capable of: for it appeareth that he taught them that which they underſtood not, and therefore needed to be further taught of them by the holy Ghoſt, which ſhould not teach them any new thing that Chriſt had not taught, but only make them underſtand that which they had been taught of our Sauiour Chriſt. In which reſpect he ſaith afterwards, that where his ſpeeches had been hitherto darke and parable-like, through the weakneſſe of their underſtanding, that by the comming of the Spirit all ſhould be cleare, lightſome, and eaſie to be underſtood of them. Wherefore alſo this teaching of the holy Ghoſt is before termed a bringing of the Apoſtles to remembrance of that which Chriſt had ſaid. And if the holy Ghoſt did teach them any thing which our Sauiour Chriſt had not before ſpoke unto them of, yet that helpeth not your patchment of inuentions, wherewith you peece and clout the Church, ſeeing that which the holy ſpirit taught them, he taught them out of the Scriptures, which are able to make any man or miniſter of God able and perfect to all the parts and poynts of his miniſtery to them to whom his ſeruice doth belong, as appeareth manifeſtly by their Sermons and writings, where the ground of all their doctrines and proofes are fetched from the cleare fountaine of the word of our Sauiour Chriſt, and of the Prophets. Howbeit if the holy Ghoſt ſhould haue taught the Apoſtles ſome things which neither Chriſt had told them of, nor the Scriptures had taught them, yet is that ſo farre from giuing any ſupport unto your forgeries, that as a touchſtone it doth utterly bewray your copper money, that you would haue currant. For that which the holy Ghoſt taught unto them, they undoubtedly left in record unto the Church, as being faithfull ſtewards, and with holding nothing of the diet of Gods houſhold committed unto them: ſo that to maintaine your cauſe, in ſtead of bringing this ſentence of our Sauiour Chriſt to his Apoſtles, you ſhould bring ſentences of the Apoſtles, wherein they affirme, that they had many things to tell the Churches, which they were not able then when they had receiued the holy Ghoſt in the greateſt meaſure that euer it was giuen, to beare away, which the holy Ghoſt as it were at another Whitſontide, ſhould teach them. Here alſo let the reader underſtand, that the Papiſts are found to haue the proper eare-markes of heretickes, whoſe practiſe as Auguſtine affirmeth, hath beene at all times to couer their dreames and phantaſies with this ſentence of our Sauiour Chriſt. Tertullian ſtanding for truth againſt hereſie, affirmeth that the heretickes were accuſtomed to alledge this place for couer and defence of their hereſies. The ſame Tertullian ſtanding for hereſie againſt truth, after he fell to Montaniſme, alledgeth this place for maintenance of that hereſie. Chryſoſtom alſo ſaith, that there were many which boaſting of the ſpirit, ſet forth their owne inuentions. And indeed herein the ſaying of Theraſius the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, may well be verified of the Papiſts, that the opinion of Macedonius, that maketh the holy Ghoſt ſeruant unto the Father and to the Son, is more tollerable then of ſuch men which make the holy Ghoſt their ſeruant to avow and to make good whatſoeuer their Pope hath dreamed of in the midnight of his groſſe and palpable ignorance. The ſaying alſo of Auguſtine is notable vpon this place, who asketh, what he is that can utter that which our Sauiour Chriſt hath concealed, and if he be ſo bold to ſpeake of it, he asketh further how he can proue it. Laſt of all, if it bee asked what were theſe grave and great myſteries which the Apoſtles could not for their rudeneſſe beare, they are forſooth Oyle and Spittle in Baptiſme, candles light at noone dayes (which was not in the ſhadowed and darker time of the Law) baptizing of bels, and ſuch like gue-gawes as the groſſeſt and carnalleſt men are fitteſt to receiue, and wherein a childleſſe underſtanding ſhould be euill beſtowed.

The ſpirit of truth.

RHEM. 5. [23 The ſpirit of trueth] Euer note that the holy Ghoſt in that he is promiſed to the Church, is called the Spirit of trueth, which holy Spirit for many other cauſes is giuen to diuers priuate men and to all good men, to ſanctification: but to teach all truth and preſerue in truth and from error, he is promiſed and performed onely to the Church and the chiefe Gouernour, and generall Councels thereof.

For if the Pope could ſucceed to the rights and priuiledges of Peter, yet he can make no further claime out of this place, then thoſe Biſhops which ſucceeded unto the other Apoſtles, conſidering that this promiſe is indifferently made to all the Apoſtles; and ſeeing alſo it was made not onely to all of them ioyntly aſſembled, but to euery one apart in the execution of his miniſtery: it ſerueth as well to proue that no one Biſhop can erre in his particular charge, as to proue that a Councell and aſſembly of Biſhops cannot erre.

MARGINAL NOTES.

Verſe 19. AND for them I do ‡ ſanctifie my ſelfe: that they alſo may bee ſanctified in truth.

RHEM. 1. [19 Sanctifie my ſelfe.] To ſanctifie himſelfe, is to ſacrifice himſelfe, by dedicating his holy body and bloud to his Father, both vpon the Croſſe, and in the holy Sacrament.

CARTVV. 1. [19 Sanctifie my ſelfe.] This is ſpoken eſpecially in regard of his Diuine Nature which could not bee crucified, for that as the ever-liuing God hee filled himſelfe with as great fulneſſe of the holy Spirit, as the eſtate of mediation was able to receiue: and that to the end that hee being a fit ſacrificer and ſacrifice to offer, and to bee offered unto God his holy Father, the holineſſe which was in him might runne plentifully upon the Apoſtles, and ſo upon the reſt of his members: For ſeeing the effect and the cauſe are of one kinde, the effect being underſtood of the Spirit of God, which was, and ſhould further bee giuen unto the Apoſtles: it followeth, that the ſanctification of our Sauiour Chriſt, which is the cauſe hereof, muſt needs bee referred unto the gifts of the Spirit, which hee as God tooke unto himſelfe being our Mediator, that is God and man. Beſide that, experience teacheth that any which beleeued by the Apoſtles, might erre, but not unto death, albeit for euery of them this prayer was made.

Verſe 3. And this is ‖ life euerlaſting, that they know thee, the onely true God, and whom thou haſt ſent IESVS CHRIST.

RHEM. 2 [3 Life euerlaſting.] Both the life of glorie in heauen, and of grace here in the Church, conſiſteth in the knowledge of God: that, in perfect viſion: this, in faith working by charitie. CARTVV. 3. [17 Sanctifie them.] Hee prayeth in this verſe for the Apoſtles onely, and not for the Church, as appeareth verſe 20. where hee noteth an apparant tranſition and paſſage from his prayer that hee made for his Apoſtles, to this prayer that he uttered for his Church that ſhould bee gathered by their miniſtery.

Vrſe 20. And not for them onely do I pray, but ‖ for them alſo that by their word ſhall beleeue in mee.

RHEM. 4. [20 But for them.] He expreſſeth (and it is a great comfort) that he praieth not onely for the Apoſtles, but for the whole Church after them, that is for all beleeuers. All tongues are ſanctified

RHEM. 1. [20 Hebrew in Greeke, and in Latin] Theſe three tongues being for other cauſes moſt famous before in all the word, are now alſo dedicated to God in the triumphant title of the Croſſe of Chriſt, and in them the holy Scriptures are more conueniently written, taught and preſerued.

CARTVV. 1. (20 Hebrew in Greek and in Latin.) Who but the Papiſts would haue thought that Pilate an Heathen man, and a wicked Iudge, ſhould be either ſo inſpired of God, as to know what tongues were moſt conuenient for the Church to haue the Scriptures in to the worlds end, or ſo honoured of the Church, that the counſell that hee tooke of reproaching our Sauiour Chriſt in theſe tongues, ſhould bee ratified of it for euermore. But of the other ſide, the wiſedome of the true Church is, that as Pilate by theſe three tongues, beſt underſtood of all that came to the feaſt of the Iewes Paſſe-ouer went about to defame our Sauiour Chriſt; ſo ſhe to glorifie him ſhould ſet forth the Scriptures in ſuch tongues as are beſt underſtood of the hearers and readers. The Sacraments iſſued out of Chriſts ſide, and thence haue their vertue.

The Curch builded of Chriſts ſide, as Eue of Adams.

RHEM. 6. [34 Bloud and water:] This pearſing of Chriſts ſide, though on the ſouldiers part it was done blindly and inſolently yet by Gods ordinance it conteined great myſteries, and was prefigured by Moyſes ſtriking the rocke with his rodde: as this ſtreame of bloud and water drawen miraculouſly out of his dead body, running in the Sacraments of the Church after the people of God, was ſignified by the water of the ſame rocke following the Iſraelites in the deſert. Out of this ſide (ſaith S. Auguſtine) iſſued the ſacraments. Hence (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome) the great myſteries haue their beginning, Who warneth vs, that when we come to drinke of the holy Chalice, we ſhould ſo approch, as though wee drew the bloud out of Chriſts ſide, and both blood and water apart did flow foorth, to ſhew vs the fountaine of two principall Sacraments, and their ſeuerall matters Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, ſpringing to life euerlaſting in the Church. The Fathers alſo ſay that the Church who is Chriſts ſpouſe and his coadiutrice in applying the bloud and water to the benefit of the Faithfull, was here formed, builded and taken out of this holy ſide of Chriſt ſleeping on the Croſſe, as * Eue was of Adams ſide, when he was caſt a ſleepe in Paradiſe.

CARTVV. 6. (34 Bloud and water.) It is a naturall thing in dead bodies, when they begin to be cold that the water which was before unſenſibly mingled with the bloud, ſeparateth it ſelfe viſibly from it. And therefore the Euangeliſt noteth this iſſue of bloud and water, thereby to note the truth of our Sauiour Chriſts death. It is therefore untrue, that this bloud and water was miraculouſly drawne out of Chriſts body. And as for Auguſtines ſaying (not in the ninth Tractate, but in the 120 tracte upon Iohn) that the Sacrament issued of his side, hee hath no such grosse meaning as you haue, which would haue the same bloud in the Chalice which was spilt upon the ground: for then the same water that issued out of his side, should be in the Sacramentall element of Baptisme. which you not dareing to affirme, ought not to take any aduantage of this speech of Augustines, who affirmeth that the same water washeth in Baptisme which issued out of our Sauiour Christ, where the meaning of Augustine is plaine, to shew that both the Sacraments ministred in their seuerall elements haue their effectual operation by the death of Christ, and by the bloud and water that came from him. For that out of Chrysostome it maketh against you: for he saith not that when we come to this cup we come to suck the bloud out of his side, but as it were to suck the bloud out of his side, which wee confesse frankly to be done in the Supper, as oft as wee drinking the wine in the Supper, with our faith lifted up to heauen, lay hold of Christs Passion. Beside that, it is known that the Fathers and especially Chrysostome, speak excessiuely and hyperbolically of the Sacraments, as when he saith, that Christ is slaine upon the Communion Table. and his bloud powred from his side. Now if by blind pearsing of the side of Christ, you meane to maintaine your fable of one Longus a blind knight which gaue his stroke, it is hard to say whether you or the Souldier that did this, are blinder: which not onely affirme him to haue been blind, that neither the Scripture doth affirme, nor the estate of a waged souldier will conueniently suffer; but also through your great ignorance of the Greek tongue, haue made it a proper name of one man, which is common to all speare-men.

MARGINALL NOTES.

Verse 11 BVt Marie stood at the monument without, weeping. Therefore as shee was weeping, she stooped downe, and looked into the monument.

RHEM. 1. [11 Monument without.] The Sepulchers of Martyrs (saith S. Hierom. ep. 17.) we do honour euery where, and putting their holy ashes to our eyes, if we may, we touch it also with our mouth: and there be some that thinke the monument wherein our Lord was laid, is to be neglected: where the Diuell and his Angels, as often as they are cast out of the possessed before the said monument, tremble and roare as if they stood before the iudgement seate of Christ.

CATVV. 1. [11. Monument without.] The example of Mary and other holy Matrons visiting the sepulcher, is flat against you, whose deuotion the Euangelists commending, yet make no mention of any such behauiours of kissing or kneeling before the sepulcher of our Sauiour Christ: and argueth that the faithfull and Christian Iewes, howsoeuer otherwise much addict unto corporall seruices, according to the dispensation of that time, were not for all that so grosse as to dote upon the dust or stones of Christs owne sepulcher. For further answer looke before, upon Mat. 14. 12. & 28. 1.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 19 Therefore when it was late, that day, the first of the Sabboths, and the doores were shut, where the Disciples were gathered together for feare of the Iewes, IESVS came and stood in the middes, and saith to them, Peace bee to you.

RHEM. 2. [19 The doores were shut.] Such Heretickes as deny Christs body to be, or that it can be in the B. Sacrament, for that it is in heauen, and can not be in two places at once, not without the naturall manner of the quantitie, space or place agreable to the condition of his humanitie, be inuincibly refuted by Christes entering into the Disciples, the doores shut: and by that that his true naturall body, whole and perfect in all his limmes, length, breadth, and thicknes, distinct and diuers from the substance and corpulence of the wood, was in the same proper place that the wood was in, and passed through the same: as he also came out of his mothers wombe, the clausure not spurred: and passed through the stone, out of his Sepulcher. By all which the heretikes being plainely reproued, and conuinced of infidelitie, they boldly deny the plaine Scriptures, or so fondly shift themselues from the euidence thereof, that their impudencie is specially to be marked in this point.

The being of Christs Body in the B. Sacrament without space of quantitie correspondent thereunto, is proued by other examples in Scripture. Heretical shifts to auoide plaine Scripture. Aug. ep. 57. Christ can dispose of his own body and others aboue nature. Math. 19. Aug. lib. 22. cap. 8. de Ciu. Dei.

Some say, that he came in at the window: some, that the doore opened of it selfe to let him in: some, that to come in, the doores being shut, signifieth no more, but that he came in late in the euening, at what time men vse to shut their doores: and such other slights to defend falshood, against expresse Scriptures, and against the Apostles testimony, who therefore tooke him to be a Spirit, because they saw him stand sodenly in the middes of them, all the house being close shut. And the Fathers all confesse that he went in, the doores being shut. See S. Ambrose li. 10. in Lucam c. 24. S. Augustine ep. 3. ad Volusian & li. 22. de ciuit. c. 8. and S. Cyrill in 10. li. 12. c. 53. and S. Hierom. lib. 1. cont. Iouinianum c. 21. We know it is the naturall course of Gods ordinance, that euery body should haue but one and his owne proper place fitted to the lineaments, quantitie termes and limites of the same; without which naturally the bodies were no where, and consequently not at all, as S. Augustine saith ad Dardanum. but that God supernaturally and miraculously cannot by his omnipotency dispose otherwise of his owne body then the naturall forme or quantitie or qualitie thereof require, that is great incredulitie, seeing we must beleeue that he can doe so with any other body of meere men or other creatures, the Scriptures being plaine that he can make a camell passe through a needles eye, continuing in his naturall figure & quantitie still: and S. Augustine telleth of a woman whose ring fell from her girdle, both being fast and whole: and Ruperius of a Religious man, whose girdle fast buckled fell down before him from his body. De off. Eccl. Therefore it is too much vnfaithfulnesse, by rules of place to embarre Christ of his will or wisdom to be in the Sacrament how himselfe list, and on as many altars or places as he liketh: we detest for all that, the wicked heresie of certaine Protestants, holding quite contrary to the Zuingilians, that Christ according to his humanitie is in euery place where the Diuinitie is: which is both against faith, and the common rules of nature and diuinitie.

CARTVV.2[19 The doores were shut.] That we are invincibly refuted, is a stronger speech then the weaknes and watrishnes of your argument can beare: wherein neither antecedent which goeth before is true, nor consequent which followeth, hath any suté with it, if it were accorded. And for the former, as there are words in the text, and in the Doctors alledged, to proue a diuine power to haue remained in Christ after his resurrection: so there is not a word in either of them that giueth any strength to this Popish phansie of passing through the doores without either opening, or otherwise causing the matter of them to giue place unto his body. The contrary doth rather appeare: for touching the text, first the word (shut) in the Greek tongue betokening not the present, but the time past, giueth to understand, that they had been shut, but were by his diuine power, opened at his entrance. Secondly, the scope and drift of our Sauiour Christ, which was to confirme the truth of his resurrection, and unseparable unity of his diuinity and humanitie together, doth vtterly ouerthrow this not miraculous, but monstrous entrance: for if our Sauiour Christ had entred without any circumscription of place, answerable to the measures of his body, the disciples had had great cause (as we say) and great occasion (as you cannot deny) to haue beleeued that he rose not againe in the same truth of body wherein by death he had fallen. For entring into the house as spirits or Angels doe, to whom it is all one whether the doores be shut or open, why should he not be holden for a spirit without a body? For to make a body without a place, is to make a body no body. Take (saith Augustine) the places away from the bodies, and the bodies shall be no where: because they shall be no where, they shall not bee at all: which he speaketh not onely generally of all bodies, but especially therein noteth the body of Christ; which staffe of S. Augustines, when the Iesuits saw they should be beaten, they thought it some pretty policy aforehand, to take the staffe by the end, but so without all skill of their weapon, by distinction of naturally and supernaturally, that the cudgell sticketh still to their ribs. For Augustine sheweth, that the body of Christ being remoued from his essenciall properties, is altogether, (and not onely touching the naturall being) destroyed. And when he saith, that God giuing immortality to the flesh of Christ, left it notwithstanding the nature still: what are you which by this phantasticall being of it without a place, take the nature from it, which the Lord hath left it? Neither doth euery supernaturall and miraculous being of the body of Christ, exclude the being of it in a certaine place, considering that both hee and Peter walking supernaturally and miraculously upon the waters, were not therefore without their seuerall places applied unto their naturall bodies; so that the supernaturall and miraculous being of the body of Christ, is not here well opposed unto the locall being thereof. Wherefore to returne, of this end and scope of our Sauiour Christs entrance, we conclude, that as hee had declared the truth of his Diuinity sufficiently in a miraculous opening of the doore, through the power of his God-head: so to declare the truth of his humanity, it was expedient in his entrance there should be a place for his body. And seeing that his diuinity is substantially proued without this phansie of yours, and his humanity cannot be but at the least obscured thereby; tell us (we pray you) what should moue our Sauiour Christ to make such kinde of entrance, as to vanish through the doore, seruing to the proofe of neither of his natures; for his diuinity being not thereby argued, seeing that spirits may so enter, much lesse can his humanity, whereunto that entry doth not naturally (as you confesse,) not at all (as the truth is) agree. Now where you would argue this shadowed entrance of the errour of the disciples, which supposed him a ghost, how is it that you cannot remember that they conceiued the same error before, where notwithstanding the body of Christ was fully possessed of a place, you may therefore learne, that in such weakenesse and rudenesse as they yet remained in, it was no maruell if suddenly and vnlooked for, they seeing one not of that house entred, and standing before them, without any knocking at the doore which they had made fast, such cogitations did rise in their hearts. Now concerning the Fathers which are alledged, Cyril excepted, there is none of them that useth any other manner of speeches to note his miraculous entry, then the Euangelist doth. And the speech of piercing the doore used by him, and of Hilary before him, doth not relieue you: for he that entreth by piercing, maketh his body a place by thrusting out before him the matter and substance of that thing which he pierceth, as may appeare in the use of a piercer, from whence this speech is taken, which cannot trauers or go through a peece of wood, unlesse it carry the wood before it. Beside that saying that the nature of things, meaning the doore or wall, being ouercomed, he declareth that the body of Christ remained to haue as much place as before. Ierom also who compareth this miracle of entring, the doores being shut, (as doth also Cyril) with Christs walking upon the sea, where his body according to all measures was placed, maketh flatly against you, and affirming that the miracle stood in that the creature gaue place to the Creator, he doth plainly shew that Christs body had the full place therof. Your reason of Christs comming forth of the virgins wombe, the clausure not stirred, is answered before vpon Matth. 1. 23. That of his passing through the stone of the sepulcher, is false, and hath no manner of assistance of scripture or reason, or any thing else. The contrary rather appeareth, in that the stone was rolled away by the Angell, and that before the womens comming, which were at the sepulcher very early, which must needs be either before his resurrection, or at the poynt and moment thereof, considering our Sauiour rose the third day. Here onely we adde, that the miracle which some of the Fathers speake of in this birth, standeth in that she remained still a virgin, and not in that the matrice was not opened. The reason of the Camel going through a needles eye, is likewise before shewed (upon Math. 19.26.) not to bee worth a gnat. As for the falling of the girdle buckled, and of the whole ring from the girdle being fast, if you had read Augustine of the Diuels cunning and knowledge in naturall things, wherewith hee is able by naturall causes to doe that which with our reason wee cannot reach: you would not thinke these so great miracles; for either the ring or girdle being broken, might by his sleight be made up before it can be perceiued of us, or else a mist might be cast before our eyes, whereby it should appeare whole that that was broken: for when the iuglers by a leger de main, or ſlight of hand, will thus deceiue men; how much more can that ſubtle and nimble ſpirit make ſuch apparances and ſhewes of things that are not. Neither ought you to meruaile that wee aſcribe theſe things to the deuils work, conſidering that wee neuer read in the Goſpell that the Lord or his Apoſtles wrought ſuch fruitleſſe and unprofitable miracles as theſe bee, of faſt and looſe ſeruing onely to amaze men. The miracle which was done of the veſtall heathniſh virgin, or idolatrous Nunne, which to purge her ſelfe of unchaſtity drew a ſhip to the hauen a ground with her girdle, hath more grauity and reaſon in it then theſe: And yet wee ſuppoſe you will acknowledge the deuill was Pilot of that ſhip. And albeit God ſhould miraculouſly worke theſe changes and alterations of the nature of things in baſer creatures, as Camels, Ring, Girdle, in making of the Camell ſo little that hee might enter into a Needles eye, and in ſundring and conioyning againe either girdle or ring in a moment, yet the body of Chriſt is a more pretious thing then hee will ſuffer to be turkeſſed and tranſformed after that ſort. And the unſeparable unity of the Diuinity with that naturall body which was borne of the Virgine Mary, will beare no ſuch bodileſſe bodies as you imagine. Here alſo you are to bee remembred that your lame Sacrament goeth upon the ſame ſtilts that doth the errour of the Manichees, which to proue a phantaſticall body of our Sauiour Chriſt, uſe this ſame place of the Euangeliſt which you do to proue your phantaſticall Tranſubſtantion in the Sacrament. And if ſome Proteſtants be hereticks, for holding the ubiquity and preſence of Chriſts Body in all places: howſoeuer in words you haue no part with them, yet in deed and in truth in this point yon differ nothing from them: For holding that the body of Chriſt, which is a creature, can bee in divers places at one time, it muſt follow that by the ſame power, it may bee at once in two places, it may bee alſo in all: for ſeeing no creature can be in two, much leſſe in infinite places at once as both by reaſon and induction it doth manifeſtly appeare (for that of Ambroſe body at once both in Millan and Towres wee ſuppoſe themſelues to bee aſhamed of) it followeth that it is onely the Diuine nature that can ſo bee, which Diuine nature when it cannot otherwiſe bee in diuers places without beeing in all, it is brought to paſſe that whoſoeuer aſcribeth to the body of Chriſt power to bee at once in divers places, the ſame draweth after him the preſence of it in all. Where you affirme that ſome of the Proteſtants do ſay, that Chriſt came in at the window; you ſhall hardly perſwade us (unleſſe you ſhew it) that there hath beene any of ſo ſmall iudgement as to ſuffer that to fall from his penne to a printed book. Now for the latter part of your argument, that it hath no ſute nor knot with the former it is cleare enough: For if it were granted that our Sauiour Chriſts body paſſed through the dore without place, yet being perfect in all his limbes, and hauing his length, breadth, and thickneſſe, it followeth not that hee is in the Sacrament both without place and without length and bredth and thickneſſe. But rather that he is in the Sacrament perfect in all his limbes with length, breadth and thickneſſe, which is contrary to your doctrine: Whereas notwithſtanding you may as well ſay, that hee is in the Sacrament without his place, and yet with meaſures and all the quantity of his body, as to ſay hee was ſo in the dores: For the quantity and proportion of his body being denied to be in the Sacrament for want of place, is fooliſhly and uaduiſedly admitted in the paſſage through the dores: where the ſame defect of place is aſſigned. Neither doth it follow that becauſe his body was in the dores without place at one time, that therefore it is in a thouſand places at once without place, neither that becauſe it came through the dores, leauing the place without the dores where it was before he entred: therefore he commeth from heauen and to the Altar leauing it ſelfe ſtill in the place from whence it came. And here the Popiſh Diuinity is ſmally beholden to the Ieſuites: for where it maketh two bodies of Chriſt, one locall, and with all the meaſures thereof, another without both place and meaſures: The Ieſuites haue corrected that diuiſion, and added a third body of Chriſt, which is without place, and yet notwithſtanning retaineth all the proportion and meaſures thereof.

Hier. in Pſal. 119.

Laſt of all, Epiphanius alledged Math. 14.26. as affirming that the body of Chriſt is within the compaſſe of a little bread, is not made to appeare. He indeed ſaith in the ſame booke, that the Sacrament is Chriſt, but yet neither equall, nor like unto the naturall body of Chriſt. And further affirmeth it to be unſenſible, which we ſuppoſe you will not grant your ſacrament to be. Albeit if he ſhould affirme the body of Chriſt to be in the compaſſe of a little bread, yet the anſwer is eaſie, His body is ſo ſacramentally and figuratiuely, according to the uſe of the Scripture, which communicateth the name of the thing ſignified and figured, to the ſigne and figure thereof.

Verſe 21 Hee ſaid therefore to them againe, Peace be to you. | As my Father hath ſent me, I alſo do ſend you.

Chriſt ſheweth his commiſſion, and ſo gineth the Apoſtles power to remit ſins.

RHEM. 3. [21 As my Father] As when he gaue them commiſſion to preach and baptize through the world, he made mention of his own power therein: ſo here before he inſtitute the Sacrament of penance, and giue them authority to remit ſinnes, leſt the wicked ſhould aske afterward, by what right they do ſuch great functions, he ſheweth his fathers commiſſion giuen to himſelfe, and then in plaine termes moſt amply imparteth the ſame to his Apoſtles: that whoſoeuer deny the Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors the Prieſts of Gods Church, to haue right to remit ſinnes, ſhould deny conſequently Chriſt as man to haue authority to doe the ſame.

The H. Ghoſt is here purpoſely giuen to the Apoſtles to remit ſins.

Verſe 22 When he had ſaid this, | he breathed upon them, and he ſaith to them, Receiue yee the holy Ghoſt.

RHEM. 4 [22. He breathed] He giueth the holy Ghoſt in, and by an externall ſigne, to his Apoſtles not viſibly and to all ſuch purpoſes as afterward at Whitſuntide, but for the grace of the Sacrament of Orders, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, and that none make doubt of the Prieſts right in remiſſion of ſinnes ſeeing the Holy Ghoſt is purpoſely giuen them to do this ſame. In which caſe if any be yet contentious, he muſt deny the Holy Ghoſt to be God, and not to haue power to remit ſinnes. It is not abſurd (ſaith S. Cyrill) that they forgiue ſinnes, which haue the Holy Ghoſt. For when they remit or retaine, the Holy Ghoſt remitteth remitteth or retaineth in them, and that they do two wayes, firſt in Baptiſme, and then in Penance. As S. Ambroſe alſo (li. 1. c. 7. de pœnitentia) refelling the Nouatian (a Sect of old Heretickes which pretending Gods glory as our new Sectaries do, denied that Prieſts could remit ſinnes in the Sacrament of Penance) asketh, why it ſhould be more diſhonour to God, or more impoſſible or inconuenient for men to forgiue ſinnes by Penance then by Baptiſme, ſeeing it is the holy Ghoſt that doth it, by the Prieſts office and miniſtery in both.

Cyril. lib. 12 c. 56 in Ioh.

CARTVV. 4. [22. He breathed.] We grant that by an externall ſigne he gaueth the holy Ghoſt, but deny it to be giuen in the ſigne: for the ſeat of the holy Ghoſt, being not in periſhable things, but in euerlaſting veſſels, it could not be in the breath of our Sauiour Chriſt, which paſſing from him, vaniſhed in the aire. Alſo, that our Sauiour Chriſt gaue the grace of the ſacrament of orders to his Apoſtles, three yeares almoſt after he had appointed them in the order of the Apoſtleſhip (which you call the ſacrament of orders) and after they had executed their miniſtery, to the forgiueneſſe of many ſins, is moſt abſurd, as if our Sauiour had ſent out any to preach and pronounce forgiueneſſe of ſins, without grace in ſome meaſure to execute the ſame. The grace therefore of the order of the Apoſtle, was not here the firſt fruits of that ſpirit, whereby they were fitted to the order of their miniſtery, but it was an increaſe of the former gifts. That which followeth of the Prieſts remitting of ſins often repeated, hath anſwer in places marked out in the former Annotation. The two wayes alſo of the miniſteriall remitting of ſins alledged by Cyril and Ambroſe, we do willingly admit with two cautions. The former, that the water of the baptiſme remitteth onely ſacramentally, that is to ſay, ſealeth and pledgeth the remiſſion of ſins that is giuen in the blood of Chriſt, and not that the worke of waſhing with elementall water, doth cleanſe from ſinne. The other is, that the remiſſion of ſinne in Baptiſme is not oppoſed unto the remiſſion of ſinnes which is giuen by Penance; conſidering that Baptiſme once miniſtred is a ſeale of all manner of remiſſion of ſinnes, committed aſwell after Baptiſme as before it, as Ambroſe in the ſame place doth manifeſtly declare, euen as it is the ſeale of all the graces which are beſtowed either before or after. And that it is not Cyrils meaning to giue either to the action of waſhing in Baptiſme, or to the Prieſt ſuch a priuilege, as that whomſoeuer the water in Baptiſme ſhall bee laid upon, or unto whomſoeuer, euery Prieſt ſhall ſay, that his ſinnes are forgiuen, his ſinnes are forthwith remitted, it appeareth in the ſame place, where he affirmeth, that the true God alone looſeth ſinne. And Ambroſe ſpeaking againſt the Nouatians, whom Cyprian calleth quellers or murderers of Repentance, maketh more againſt you, which with your impoſſible confeſſion contrition and ſatiſfaction, are butchers and not Phiſitions of ſicke ſoules, then againſt us, which prouoking them to repentance, aſſure them of forgiueneſſe in Chriſt through faith.

Act. 1. 5.

Verſe. 23. Whoſe ſinnes you ſhall forgiue, they are forgiuen them: And whoſe you ſhall retaine, they are retained.

RHEM. 5. [23 Whoſe ſinnes.] Power to offer ſacrifice, which is the principall function and act of Prieſthood, was giuen them at the inſtitution of the B. Sacrament: the ſecond and next ſpeciall faculty of Prieſthood, conſiſting in remitting ſinnes, is here beſtowed on them. And withall the holy Sacrament of Penance implying Contrition, Confeſſion, and Satisfaction in the Penitent, and abſolution on the Prieſts part, is inſtituted, for in that, that expreſſe power and commiſſion is giuen to the Prieſts to remit or reteine all ſinnes: and in that, that Chriſt promiſeth, whoſe ſinnes ſoeuer they forgiue, they be of God forgiuen alſo: and whoſe ſinnes they reteine, they be reteined before God: it followeth neceſſarily, that we be bound to ſubmit our ſelues to their iudgement for releaſe of our ſinnes, For, this wonderfull power were giuen them in vaine, if none were bound to ſeeke abſolution at their hands. Neither can any rightly ſeeke for abſolution of them, vnleſſe they confeſſe particularly at leaſt all their mortall offences, whether they be committed in minde, heart, will and *cogitation onely or in word, and worke, for Gods Prieſts being in this Sacrament of Penance conſtituted in Chriſts ſteede as iudges in cauſes of our conſcience, cannot rightly rule our caſes without full and exact cognition and knowledge of all our ſinnes, and the neceſſary circumſtances and *differences of the ſame. Which can not otherwiſe be had of them being mortall men. then by our ſimple, ſincere, and diſtinct vtterance to them of our ſinnes, with humble contrite heart, ready to take and to do penance according to their iniunction. For that authority to reteine ſinnes, conſiſteth ſpecially in enioyning ſatisfaction and penitentiall workes of praying, faſting, almes, and ſuch like. All which Gods ordinance whoſoeuer condemneth or contemneth, as Heretickes doe, or neglecteth, as ſome careleſſe Catholikes may perhaps do: let them be aſſured they can not be ſaued. Neither muſt any ſuch Chriſtian man pretend or looke to haue his ſinnes after Baptiſme, remitted by God onely, without this Sacrament: (which was the old Hereſie of the Nouatians Amb. li. 1. de penit. c. 2. Socrat. li. 7. Ec. hiſt. c. 25.) more then any may hope to be ſaued or haue his originall or other ſinnes before baptiſme, forgiuen by God without the ſame Sacrament. Let no man deceiue himſelfe, this is the ſecond table or borde after ſhipwracke, as S. Hierome calleth it. Whoſoeuer take not holde of it, ſhall periſh without all doubt, becauſe they contemne Gods counſell and order for their ſaluation. And therefore S. Auguſtine (ep. 180.) ioyning both together, ſaith it is a pittifull caſe, when by the abſence of of Gods Prieſts, men depart this life, aut non regenerati, aut ligati, that is, either not regenerated by Baptiſme, or faſt bound, and not abſolued by the Sacrament of Penance and reconciliation: becauſe they ſhalbe excluded from eternall life, and deſtruction followeth them. And S. Victor (li. 2. de perſecut. Vandalica) telleth the miſerable lamentation of the people, when their Prieſts were baniſhed by the Arian Heretikes: Who (ſay they) ſhall baptiſe theſe infants: Who ſhall miniſter Penance vnto vs, and looſe vs from the bands of ſins, &c. And therefore S. Cyprian very often (namely ep. 54.) calleth it a great crueltie, & ſuch as Prieſts ſhall anſwer for at the latter day, to ſuffer any man that is pœnitent of his ſins, to depart this life without this reconciliation & abſolution: becauſe (ſaith he) the Lawmaker himſelfe (Chriſt) hath graunted, that things bound in earth, ſhold alſo be bound in heauen, & that thoſe things might there be loſed which were looſed before here in the Church. And it is a world to ſee, how the Heretickes wraſtle with this ſo plaine a commiſſion of remitting ſins, referring referring it to preaching, to denouncing Gods threates vpon ſinners, and to wee cannot tell what els, though to our Engliſh Proteſtants this authoritie ſeemeth ſo cleere that in their order of viſiting the ſick, their Miniſter acknowledge and chalenge the ſame, vſing a formall abſolution according to the Churches order, after the ſpeciall confeſſion of the partie, But to conclude the matter, let euery one that liſt to ſee the true meaning of Chriſts wordes and the Prieſts great power and dignitie giuen them by the ſame words & other, mark well theſe words of S Chryſoſtom. For, ſaith he, they that dwell on the earth, and converſe in it, to them is commiſſion giuen to diſpenſe thoſe things that are in heauen, to them is it giuen to haue power which God would not to be giuen neither to Angels nor Archangels, for neither to them was it ſaid, What ſoeuer you ſhall bind in earth, ſhall be bound in heauen: and whatſoeuer you ſhall looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in heauen. The earthly Princes indeed haue alſo power to bindo, but the bodies onely: but that bond of Prieſts which I ſpeake of, toucheth the very ſoule it ſelfe and reacheth euen to the heauens? in ſo much that whatſoeuer the Prieſts ſhall do beneath, the ſelfeſame God doth ratifie aboue, and the ſentence of the ſeruants of the Lord doth confirme, for indeed what els is this, then that the power of all heauenly things is granted them of God? Whoſe ſinnes ſoeuer, ſaith he, you ſhall retcine, they are reteined. What power (I beſeech you) can be greater then this one? The Father gaue all power to the Sonne: but I ſee the ſame power altogether deliuered by the Sonne vnto them. And as this concerneth the Prieſts high authoritie to abſolue, ſo thereupon concerning confeſſion alſo to be made vnto them, the ancient Fathers ſpeake in this ſort. S. Cyprian de lapſis nu. 11. They (ſaith he) that haue greater faith and feare of God, though they did not fall in perſecution, yet becauſe they did onely thinke it in their minde, this very cogitation they confeſſe to Gods Prieſts ſorowfully and plainely, opening their conſcience, vttering and diſcharging the burden of their minde, and ſeeking holſome medicine for their wounds though but ſmall and little. And a little after. Let euery one (my brethren) I beſeech you, confeſſe his ſinne, whiles he is yet aliue, whiles his confeſſion may be admitted, whiles ſatisfaction and remiſſion made by Prieſts is acceptable before God. S. Cyrill (or as ſome thinke, Origen) li. 2. in Leuit. calleth it a great part of penance when a man is aſhamed, and yet openeth his ſinnes to our Lords Prieſt. See alſo Tertul. li. de pœnit. S. Hierom. in c. 10. Eccleſiaſte. S. Baſill in Regulis bre. quæſt. 229. who compare ſinners that refuſe to confeſſe, to them that haue ſome diſeaſe in their ſecret parts, and are aſhamed to ſhew it to the Phyſicion or Surgeon, that might cure it, where they muſt needes meane ſecret confeſſion to be made to them that may abſolue. And S. Leo, ep. 80. moſt plainely as before S. Cyril) expreſly nameth Prieſts. That confeſſion is ſufficient which is made firſt to God, then to the Prieſt alſo. And againe, It is ſufficient that the guiltineſſe of mens conſciences be vttered to the Prieſts onely by the ſecrecie of confeſſion. S, Hierom. in 16. Matth. ſaith, that Prieſts looſe or bind, audita peccatorum varietate, hauing heard the varietie and differences of ſins. S. Paulinus writeth of S. Ambroſe, that as often as any confeſſed his ſinnes vnto him for to receiue penance, he ſo wept for compaſſion, that thereby he cauſed the penitent to weepe alſo. He added moreouer, that this holy Doctor was ſo ſecret in this caſe, that no man knew the ſins confeſſed, but God and himſelfe. And S. Auguſtine hom. 49. de 50. homilijs To. 10. ſaith thus. Do penance ſuch as is done in the Church, Let no man ſay, I do it ſecretly. I doe it to God, in vaine then was it ſaid, Whatſoeuer you ſhall looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in heauen, See S. Ambroſe de pœnitentia through out. CARTVV 5. [23 Whoſe ſins.] If there were any merite of patience we ſhould purchaſe it in anſwering the fooleries and dotages of thoſe Ieſuites, who haue both miſerably and cauſeleſly mangled and hacked the office of the Apoſtleſhip which is one and without ſeame: For beſide, that by diuers ordinations at diuers times, for ſundry charges they make one function many: as if a ſteward for euery ſeuerall commandement of doing divers duties of the ſtewards office, ſhould be new authoriſed, they ſuppoſe our Sauiour Chriſt at his ordination of Apoſtles, Math. 10. to haue ſent them forth in Embaſſage without two of the moſt principall parts thereof, namely (as it pleaſeth them) without power to ſacrifice and to forgiue ſins, ſo that the royalleſt Miniſtery that euer was or ſhall be in the Church, is not onely ſet behind the Miniſtery of the Prieſts in the Law, which had power both to ſacrifice and to forgiue ſinnes, but behind the Miniſtery of euery ſimple ſir Iohn, who hath (in their opinion) power of both. And albeit in their creation, power, and authority being giuen to do any thing which might pertaine to the charge of an Apoſtle, the execution of all the parts and points of their minſtery followed not at once, but was reſerued vnto their proper times; yet the power to forgiue ſinnes was forthwith after their ordination put in practiſe: for they both baptizing with water, which ſignified the cleanſing of all ſins, and healing all manner diſeaſes of the body, which pledged the curing of all maladies of the ſoule, vnleſſe the Ieſuites will ſay that they had the bare ſignes, without the things ſignified, as it were empty boxes, without precious oyntment; it cannot be denied, but that they had then power to forgiue ſins. The commiſſion therefore here giuen, is not new, but renewed; beginneth not, but is continued, and for this reſpect eſpecially repeated, that the Apoſtles might be aſſured of the continuance of that honour and authority, which their deniall or forſaking of Chriſt might cauſe them to ſuſpect a diſcontinuance of. For the reſt in this annotation, firſt it is nothing but paper-blotting, vaine repetition, and that without colour or occaſion of any text here, whereof there is yet ſome ſhew in other places. Secondly, the allegation of the ancient Fathers is idle, and not of any thing in controuerſie between vs, which confeſſe that the Miniſters haue power to forgiue ſins, and power to abſolue ſinners, which teach and urge repentance without which the ſacrament of baptiſme receiued in infancie, cannot profit men of yeares and diſcretion, which require publicke confeſſion for publicke faults, and exhort men to priuate confeſſion, as oft as they ſhall either priuatly offend their brethren, or haue ſcruple or doubt of conſcience: whereof they haue need of the miniſters reſolution. But that the miniſter abſoluing the vnbeleeving or vnrepentant, looſeth them; or not abſoluing the repentant, bindeth them; or that penance (as you call it) is a ſacrament, or that a man is bound to diſcharge all his ſinnes that euer he committed whiſperingly and ſecretly into the eare of a Prieſt, all which the Ieſuits would beare us in hand to be affirmed of the doctors, there is not a word to be ſeen in them: the contrary of all which (their ſacrament of penance onely excepted, which is reſerued vnto the treatiſe of the number of the 7 Sacraments) hath been before confuted out of the Scriptures, and

Doctors

Doctors both. Their reason for an exact confession of all sins, becauſe the Priest cannot otherwiſe rightly rule the ſinners caſes, is naught. For firſt of all, no man is able to know all his ſinnes, much leſſe to confeſſe them all exactly. Secondly, as by preaching repentance the ſinner is conuinced of the miniſter, and iudged by him: ſo by preaching of the glad tidings of the Goſpell, the ſinner is abſolued and acquited of him. The writer alſo to the Hebrewes ſheweth, that the word of God is liuely and effectuall, ſharper then the two edged ſword, reaching to the diuiſion of the ſoule and the ſpirit, of the ioynts and of the marrow, having power to iudge of the thoughts and cogitations of the heart, whereby appeareth that the miniſter by the preaching of the word, may be a competent iudge of the ſinner, without his auricular confeſſion, and ſeuerall rehearſall of ſins. Wherefore when men, ſorry for their ſins, came to the Apoſtles to aske what they ſhould doe to haue life euerlaſting, the Apoſtles required no numbring of their ſins, but preached unto them the word of grace, and of the promiſes of God. And when the forme of their own abſolution is generall, without ſpecifying the ſeuerall forgiueneſſe of particular ſins, what need they any information of the particularities of debts for ſo generall and univerſall acquittance. And if it be enough for the Prieſt to ſay onely in his abſolution, I forgiue all thy ſins, why is it not enough in the Confeſſant, for his confeſſion to ſay onely, I confeſſe all my ſins? For as for ſatisfaction other then to God, by Chriſt alone, and unto men, according unto the qualitie of the fault which is committed, either publicke or priuate: neither the Scripture nor the ancient Churches know not of, as hath been before declared, upon Math.3.2. As for the ſatisfaction which the Prieſt maketh (as you alledge out of Cyprian) it is nothing elſe but the declaration of the ſinners repentance unto the Church, for ſome publicke offence, whereby the Church being ſatisfied, the penitent is receiued into the Church, as appeareth by remiſſion of ſins, which Cyprian annexeth with the ſatisfaction which the penitent had then pronounced unto him, when by the mouth of the miniſter he had ſatisfied the Church. And as touching Cyprians confeſſion of thoughts unto the Prieſt, it is of the horrible thoughts of Apoſtaſie, and falling away from God, which although they be but ſmall and lytle, in compariſon of the act of Apoſtaſie it ſelfe, yet a bare thought with conſent of the heart in that caſe, is more heynous then ſome other actuall offence againſt the ſecond Table. And therefore it is no maruell though Cyprian exhorteth to the confeſſion of them, to the end he might receiue comfort againſt the gnawing worme of his conſcience, which otherwiſe would ſting him to death. And this to bee Cyprians meaning, it appeareth manifeſtly both by words which go before and follow: For hee ſpeakketh of the confeſſion of ſuch faults for want of medicine whereof, men were through torment of their conſcience, driuen out of their wits. And for the grievouſneſſe whereof the iudgement of God ſtrooke ſo ſore upon them, as to poſſeſſe them with Diuels. Likewiſe, of ſuch as were a burden or weight of conſcience. In which caſe, and like unto it, the reſt of the Fathers ſayings, ſpeaking of confeſſions made to the miniſter, haue place, and therefore are here vainly, and to no purpoſe alledged. That out of Ieroм is manifeſtly underſtood of open and publicke ſins. And therefore hee compareth them with the Prieſts iudgement of the leproſie under the Law, which was not taken of the confeſſion of the Leper, but of the apparant and undoubted markes which the Prieſts eyes did behold. And Ieroм hath alſo, that the Prieſt hearing not the variety, but the varieties of ſinnes, giueth iudgement accordingly, meaning that as the old Prieſts gaue ſeuerall iudgements according to the diuers eſtates of the Leper, ſome to be ſhut up, ſome to be ſhut out: ſo the Prieſt in publicke and ſcandalous faults, according to their qualitie and diuerſitie gaue iudgement of them milder or ſofter as they appeared unto him: where alſo noting the abuſes of ſome Prieſts then, he doth ſo paint forth the Papiſts as if he had had them preſently before his face: ſaying, That the Biſhops and Prieſts not underſtanding that place, tooke upon them Phariſee like to condemne the guiltleſſe, and to abſolue the guilty, when as with God not the iudgement of the Prieſts, but the life of the ſinner is conſidered. Leo is as well againſt them as againſt the truth; for he declareth that the confeſſions which he would haue ſecret to the Prieſt alone, were ſome times publick, and by his iudgement to be altered, leaſt (forſooth) the penitents ſhould be aſhamed, and afraid to lay open their deeds to their enemies, that they might trouble them by Law. As if it were not required that ſinners ſhould be aſhamed of their ſinnes: or as if the openneſſe of their fact knowne unto many, doth not caſt them into danger of their enemies, without their confeſſion, or that our Sauiour Chriſt, which ordained open confeſſion in publike faults, did not with his Angels eye foreſee the inconuenience that Leo with his Iayes eye did eſpy. The reſt of the places alledged, haue no colour of contrarietie with any thing that we hold. And Chryſoſtom eſpecially is ſo much the more ſhamefully alledged for their kinde of confeſſion, as he maintaining the iudgement of his predeceſſor Nectarius, who tooke away priuate confeſſion, (that began to creepe in at that time) doth plainly ſpeake againſt it. The Miniſters alſo of England are here falſely charged to heare ſicke mens confeſſions, which requiring onely a generall confeſſion that he is a ſinner, and deſtitute of the glory and grace of God, pronounceth upon his profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, remiſſion of ſins, neither do we exclude a forme of abſolution in conceiued words ſo that the ſame be firſt made knowen by preaching and ſetting forth of the promiſes of God in Chriſt. But we condemne the Popiſh abſolution, who keeping a forme of words which they buzze into the eares of the people, haue left no key of knowledge whereby the ſinners hearts ſhould be opened to be partakers of it.

MARGINALL NOTE.

Verſe 7 THat his diſciple therefore whom IEVS loued, ſaith to Peter, it is our Lord. ‡ Simon Peter when he heard that it is our Lord, girded his coate unto him (for hee was naked) and caſt himſelfe into the ſea,

RHEM.

RHEM. 1. [7 Simon, Peter.] See in S. Augustine Tract. 122 in Io. the great mystery hereof concerning the Church, and in S. Gregory hom. 24. in Euang. and S. Bernard li. 2. c. 8. de consid. Peters Prymacy here mystically signified.

CARTVV. 1. [7 Simon Peter.] It is seene by this that it was not for naught that Antiquity esteemed swimming so much as to match it with liberall sciences, seeing Peter by once swimming gate more then by all his fishing. A man would thinke that Iohns first discerning and discrying of Christ to Peter and the rest, should lift him as high as Peters first comming unto him. And verily Peters primacy seemeth to haue beene but a base thing which hath so easie a purchase. And if alwaies to bee first in a good thing is so highly rewarded. why should not Iohn which was before Peter with Christ in his condemnation in the high Priests house, before Peter also at the Sepulchre, hauing as well the superiority ouer Peter as Peter ouer him. And whatsoeuer Gregory the Pope and Bernard the Abbot say, Chrysostome saith, Paul needed not Peter at all, but was of like honour unto him: but of this matter see before upon Matth. 16. 18. 19.

Verse. 25. But there * are many ‡ other things also which IESVS did: which if they were written in particular, neither the world it selfe I thinke were able to containe these books that should be written.

RHEM. 2. [25. Other things.] How few things are written of Christs acts and doctrine in comparison of that which he did and spake, and yet the Hereticks will needs haue all in Scripture, trusting not the Apostles own preaching, or report of any thing that our Master did or sayd, if it be not written.

CARTVV. 2. [25 Other things] If you had made your note where these words are first written by the Euangelist, you should haue had his own answer. That these are written that you might beleeue that Iesus is Christ the Son of God, and that beleeuing you should haue life in his name. Therefore these written being sufficient for our faith in Christ to saluation: As Augustine after the Euangelist witnesseth: and sufficient both for doctrine and manners as saith Cyril, you ought not to maruaile if we forbeare to credite your superfluous fables. But that we trust not the Apostles own Preaching, and report of them, it is your accustomable veyne of slanderous speaking, for in beleeuing the Scriptures we beleeue the summe of all which either the Apostles preached or reported.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse. 17. He saith to him the third time, Simon of Iohn, loueſt thou mee? Peter was stroken sad, because hee said to him the third time, Loueſt thou mee? And hee said to him, Lord, thou knowest all things: thou knowest that I loue thee. Hee saith to him, ‡ Feede my sheepe.

RHEM. 3. [17 Feede my sheepe.] As it was promised him Matth. 16. that the Church should be builded vpon him, and that the keyes of heauen should be giuen him, so here it is performed, and he is actually made the generall pastor and gouernour of all Christs sheepe. For though the other ten (as Matthias and Paul also afterward) were Apostles, Bishops, Priests, and had authority to binde and loose, to remit and reteine, to preach, baptize, and such like, aswell as he, Yet in these things and all other gouernment, Christ would haue him to be their head, and they to depend of him as head of their College, and consequently of the whole flocke of Christ: no Apostle nor no Prince in earth (if he acknowledge himselfe to be a sheepe of Christ) exempted from his charge. And that Christ maketh a difference betwixt Peter and the rest, and giueth him some greater preeminence and regiment then the rest, it is plaine by that he is asked whether he loue our Lord more then the other Apostles do: Where, for equall charge no difference of loue had been required. To Peter (saith S. Cyprian) our Lord after his Resurrection said, Feede my sheepe, and builded his Church vpon him alone, and to him he giueth the charge of feeding his sheepe. For although after his Resurrection he gaue his power alike to all, saying, As my Father sent me, so I send you, take the holy Ghost, if you remit to any their sinnes, they shalbe remitted, &c. Yet to manifest vnitie, he constituted one Chaire, and so disposed by his authority that vnitie should haue origine of one. The rest of the Apostles were that Peter was, in equall fellowship of honour and power, but the beginning commeth of vnity: the primacy is giuen to Peter, that the Church of Christ may be shewed to be one, and one Chaire. S. Chrysostome also (Lib. 2. de Sacerd.) saith thus: Why did our Lord shed his bloud? truly to redeeme those sheepe, the cure of which he committed both to Peter and also to his successors. And a little after, Christ would haue Peter indued with such authoritie, and to be far aboue all other his Apostles: for he saith: Peter, doest thou loue me more then all these do? Whereupon our Master might haue inferred, If thou loue me Peter, vse much fasting, sleepe on the hard floore, watch much, be patron to the oppressed, father to the orphans, and husband to the widdowes: but omitting all these things, he saith, Feede my sheepe. For, all the foresayd vertues certes may be done easily of many subiects, not only men but women: but when it commeth to the gouernment of the Church, and committing the charge of so many soules, as women kinde must needes wholy give place to the burthen and greatneste thereof and a great number of men also. So writeth he.

Peter is here made the generall Pastor, and the Church is builded vpon him.

The Protestants otherwise denying this preheminence of Peter yet to vphold their Archbishops, doe avouch it against the Puritans. Peters successors succeede him in vniuersall extent.

And because the Protestants would make the vnlearned thinke, that S. Gregory deemed the Popes supremacy to be wholly vnlawfull and Antichristian, for that he condemned Iohn of Constantinople for vsurping the name of vniuersall Bishop, resembling his insolencie therein to the pride of Antichrist: note well the words of this holy Father in the very same place and Epistle against the B. of Constantinople, by which you shall easely see that to deny him to be vniuersall Bishop, is not to deny Peter or the Pope to be head of the Church, or supreme gouernour of the same, as our aduersaries fraudulently pretend. It is plaine to all men, (saith he) that euer read the Gospell, that by our Lords mouth the charge of the whole Church was committed to S. Peter Prince of the Apostles for to him it was sayd, Feede my sheepe. for him was the prayer made that his faith should not faile: to him were the keyes of heauen giuen, and authority to binde and loose: to him the cure of the Church and principality was delinered: and yet he was not called the vniuersall Apostle. This title indeede was offered for the honour of S. Peter Prince of the Apostles, to the Pope of Rome by the Holy Councell of Chalcedone: but none of that See did euer vse it or consent to take it. Thus much S. Gregory.

S. Gregorie, though hee misliked the title of vniuersall bishop, yet is most plaine both in his writings and doings, for the Popes supremacy, as also S. Leo the great.

The tit'e of vniuerſall Biſhop refuſed, but vniuerſall iuriſdictional-wayes acknowledged & practiſed.

Ber. lib. 2. 6. 8. de conſider.

The Pope is Paſtour of all Paſtours.

* Who though hee both practiſed iuriſdiction throughout all Chriſtendome, as other of that See haue euer done, and alſo acknowledged the principality and ſoueraignety to bee in Peter and his ſucceſſours: yet would he not for ſuch cauſes vſe that title ſubiect to vanity and miſconſtruction. But both he and all the Popes ſince haue rather called themſelues. Seruos Seruorum Dei, the ſeruants of Gods ſeruants: though the word, Vniuerſall Biſhop, in that ſenſe wherein the holy Councell of Chalcedone offered it to the ſee of Rome, was true and lawfull. For that Councell would not haue giuen any Antichriſtian or vniuſt title to any man: Onely in the B. of Conſtantinople, which in no ſenſe had any right to it, and who vſurped it in a very falſe and tyrannicall meaning, it was inſolent, vniuſt, and antichriſtian. See alſo the Epiſtles of S. Leo the Great concerning his practiſe of vniuerſall iuriſdiction, though he refuſed the title of univerſall Biſhop. And S. Bernard (that you may better perceiue that the generall charge of Chriſts ſheepe was not onely giuen to Peters perſon, but alſo to his ſucceſſors the Popes of Rome, as S. Chryſoſtome alſo before alledged doth teſtifie) writeth thus to Eugenius. Thou art he to whom the keyes of heauen are deliuered, and to whom the ſheepe are committed, there be other Porters of heauen, and others Paſtours of flockes: but thou haſt inherited in more glorious and different ſort. For they haue euery one their particular flocke, but to thee all vniuerſally, as one flocke to one man, are credited: being not onely the Paſtour of the ſheepe, but the one Paſtour of all the Paſtours themſelues, but thou wilt aske me how I proue that? euen by our Lords word: for to whom of all, I ſay not onely Biſhops, but Apoſtles, were the ſheepe ſo abſolutely and without limitation committed? If thou loue me Peter, feede my ſheepe. Hee ſaith not, the people of this kingdome or that Citty, but, my ſheepe, without all diſtinction. So S. Bernard. And hereunto may be added that the ſecond feed, is in Greeke a word that ſignifieth withall to gouerne and rule, as Pſa. 2. Mich. 5. Matth. 2. Apoc. 2. and therefore it is ſpoken of Dauid alſo, and other temporall gouernours (as the Hebrew word anſwering thereunto) in the * Scriptures very often, and the Greek in profane writers alſo.

CARTVV. 5. [17 Feed my ſheep.] It hath beene ſhewed in the place heere alledged, that nothing was promiſed vnto Peter more then to the reſt of the Apoſtles; wherefore it followeth that nothing more is here performed vnto him then to the reſt of his fellowes, who hauing beene ſent before with the ſame authority from him that hee was from his Father, could no more bee inferiour to Peter then Peter could bee ſuperiour vnto himſelfe. And if Chriſt were ſent of his Father to feed his Fathers ſheep, it followeth alſo that the other Apoſtles were ſent to feed Chriſts ſheep as well as Peter, onely his commiſſion is in ſpeciall renued, and by the ſame power thrice repeated, leaſt the conſcience of his thrice denials ſhould make him wauer and ſtagger in his calling of Apoſtleſhip, whereof it ſtood both him and the Church vpon, that hee ſhould bee well aſſured, leaſt alſo hee ſhould faint in his ſufferings for the truth, forthwith fore-told him. And that hee meant not to make heere any new Primacy over all the Apoſtles, it may well bee gathered by the circumſtance of the time, which was after dinner after they had eaten: whereas both the weight of the honour here giuen, and reuerent handling of the Miniſteries of the Church by our Sauiour Chriſt, required rather that it ſhould haue beene done faſting, if not for our Sauiour Chriſts ſake, that needed no ſuch helpes, and could not at this time afflict him by want of food, yet for examples ſake, and for Peters ſake, which was better able to conceiue of this ſuppoſed ordination, faſting then full. Secondly, in that hauing drawn out the confeſſion of Peters loue towards him, hee requireth the feeding of his ſheep as a worke and operation of Peters loue vnto him, and giueth not (as you would haue it) a reward of his loue, he commandeth an effect of Peters charity, and promiſeth not an adiunct of honour and ſuperiority: For what reaſon or coherence is in this ſpeech? If thou loue mee more then theſe, declare it in taking ſupreme honour aboue all the reſt of thy fellowes, for as much as they need ſmal loue in taking of honour aboue the reſt. But in this ſpeech there is a good ſenſible meaning: If thou loue mee more then theſe feed my ſheepe, and feed them, and thrice feed, that is, moſt diligently and painefully feed them. Neither hindereth it that which the Ieſuites alledge, that in requiring a greater loue of Peter then of the reſt of the Apoſtles, it muſt follow that hee gaue him an higher charge then to the reſt. For firſt of all wee may (as wee eſteeme) deny that the compariſon here is made between the loue of Peter, and the loue of all the reſt of the Apoſtles, but between the loue which hee bare vnto Chriſt aboue that which hee had to his ſhip, to his nets, and to his friends that were there preſent, in ſuch ſort as our Sauiour Chriſt might commodiouſly point vnto them. The reaſon is firſt; for that our Sauiour Chriſt renuing Peters calling, and not (as hath beene ſhewed) ordaining him to a new, calleth him againe to the condition of his firſt calling, which was not to loue Chriſt more then the reſt of the Apoſtles did loue him, but onely that hee ſhould forſake all and follow him, louing him better then hee did his ſhip, nets, and other things, which to follow Chriſt hee muſt forſake. Secondly, for that if our Sauiour Chriſt had asked Peter whether hee loued him more then any other of the Apoſtles did loue him, hee ſhould haue asked that which Peter could not anſwer, for as much as no man knoweth the depth of an others loue, but his own ſpirit that is within him. Thirdly, if our Sauiour Chriſt had demanded this queſtion in the preſence of the reſt of the Apoſtles, who were (as wee haue heard) prone to diſdaine and enuy one another, hee ſhould appeare thereby to haue ſowen the ſeed of a hote contention amongſt them, which alwaies carefully auoiding, it muſt likewiſe appeare that hee moued no ſuch queſtion of compariſon between Peters and the reſt of his fellowes loue towards him. Howbeit granting that hee asked him (as you ſay) yet it followeth not that Peters loue being greater then the loue of the reſt, therefore he ſhould haue a preheminence of Miniſtery before the reſt: for it was requiſite to proue himſelfe a dutifull Chriſtian, that hauing more forgiuen him then the other, hee ſhould loue more then they, ſeeing otherwiſe hee ſhould haue beene worſe then any of his fellowes: ſo that the loving of Chriſt more then others ſhould haue deliuered him from being inferiour vnto any of them, and not to make him a ſtirrup to ride on horſe backe when they ſhould goe a foote. It was therefore enough after ſo ſhamefull a fall, and abiuring of our Sauiour Chriſt, that he was reſtored vnto the ſame place that hee occupied amongſt his fellowes, without being mounted to a further further ſtep of Prince hood then they were. Laſt of all, if he had any ſuch authority and preheminence giuen vnto him, the ſame (whatſoeuer) he communicateth to euery Biſhop or Paſtour of the Church of Chriſt, ſo farre as a Biſhops office was able to pertake of that authority. So that the Biſhop of Rome not being written and inrouled heire to this whole authority, but fellow heire with the reſt of the Biſhops, is found to be an vſurper and vnworthy of the leaſt part therein. 1. Pet. 5. 12

Touching Cyprian it appeareth, that the ſiege againſt the Biſhop of Romes ſupremacy is very hote, and the famine amongſt the Popiſh Souldiers very great, when they are faine to feed themſelues with ſuch ſentences as this is, which giuing them at the firſt entrance into their mouth ſome hope of reliefe, choketh them or euer they can ſwallow it all down. For the latter part of this ſentence, That the reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame that Peter in equall fellowſhip of honour and power (which ſentence Cyprian repeateth in another booke) is the verie bane of Peters ſupremacie. For if they haue like honour and power or authoritie with him how is either he higher, or they lower, he greater or they leſſe then hee? Now for that he ſaith that he buildeth his Church vpon Peter aloue he declareth his owne meaning when ſheweth that albeit all had like power or authoritie, yet he rather called Peter the rocke or a foundation then all them, to the end that in ſo doing he might declare that the Church is but one which hath but one foundation. So then the meaning of Cyprian was that vnder the name of Peter, were vnderſtood all the Apoſtles, which had by Peters mouth giuen vp their anſwer, and that in this foundation, which is but one, euerie Apoſtle had as good a part as Peter, without the which they could not haue had like honour and fellow-like power or authoritie with him. This is alſo confirmed by a like ſpeech of Cyprians where he affirmeth that there is one Biſhoprike whereof euerie Biſhop is fullie poſſeſſed in part. Likewiſe his meaning is in committing the ſheepe to Peter being one to declare an vnitie, he committed them to all his Apoſtles, as appeareth by commiſſion giuen to the reſt, as well as to Peter, that they ſhould preach through all the world, who alſo was ſo far from making Peter the ruler of the Apoſtles, that he affirmeth preciſely of him that he tooke not vpon him arrogantlie ſo far as to ſay that he held the primacie, and that others as nouices and afterlinges ſhould be obedient vnto him. And as he plainely denieth the preheminence of Peter aboue the reſt of the Apoſtles ſo doth he yet more plainely reſiſt the ſuperioritie of the Biſhop of Rome aboue other biſhops: for he affirmeth the authoritie of the Biſhop of Afrique to be as good as the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome. And ſo was houlden of all but of a few deſperate men and caſt awaies. Chryſoſtome ſaith that Peter was indued with authoritie, wherewith that the other Apoſtles were indued, the Ieſuites themſelues cannot denie. But the kind of authoritie whether it were ſuperiour or inferiour, or equal, with the authority of the reſt of the Apoſtles, that is not mentioned. And therefore the Ieſuites which haue thruſt in ſuch, thereby to note a ſoueraignety of authority in Peter haue dealt vnfaithfully, which vnfaithfulneſſe they continue in the next words, in leauing out the word (alſo) or (likewiſe) which is a note that the excellency of Peter aboue the other Apoſtles, ſtandeth not in the authority hee ſpake of before, but in ſome other thing, as in boldneſſe of ſpeech, or zeale to the truth, or ſuch like. Wherefore (as hath beene alledged) he affirmeth that Peter did all by common conſent of the Apoſtles, nothing by authority, nothing by commandement. And if Chryſoſtome ſhould in the words alledged by the Ieſuites, ſet on a head of authority upon Peter, yet it is well known that hee cut it off againe: for where Paul profeſſeth himſelfe nothing inferiour vnto Peter, Chryſoſtome is bold to preferre Paul to all the reſt of the Apoſtles, and therefore to Peter himſelfe, whilſt hee calleth him the chiefe of all: yet otherwhere hee ſaith, that hee and the Apoſtles differed not. that they had all like dignity. The principality thereof, and excellency that hee giueth, either to Paul or Peter, is not any preheminence of authority, which alwaies draweth with it a degree of dignity aboue the reſt; but a preferment onely in order, or gifts, and ſuch like.

Gregory how bitter an enemy he was (at leaſt in ſhew) to the Antichriſtian authority, which is now chalenged and exerciſed, hath been before ſhewed, whereunto that which is here ſpoken of Peter, is ſo farre from aduancing the Popes head, that it maketh not Peter himſelfe an inch higher then his fellowes; for here was nothing ſaid to him, which was not both in effect ſpoken directly to them, and indirectly (that is to ſay to Peter repreſenting them) in the ſame words wherein they were ſpoken to Peter, the treple feeding onely excepted, which was particularly ſpoken to Peter, for the cauſe before alledged. Although Cyprian (as hath beene ſhewed) inclineth to this iudgement, that the ſame alſo was (in Peters perſon) ſpoken to them all. And Chryſoſtome ſtretcheth it yet further to all that haue any charge ouer others, be the flocke neuer ſo ſmall. The ſame is done by the Clergy of Rome, of Ambroſe and Auguſtine, who apply this to all Paſtors and Teachers of the Church. But where Pope Gregory ſaith, That for the honour of Peter the Councell of Chaledon offered the title of univerſall Biſhop vnto the Biſhop of Rome: Therein if we might truſt him as Gregory, yet wee may not truſt him as Pope. And it is without all controuerſie, that it is better truſting the Councell it ſelfe, then them both: who not onely maketh no mention of any ſuch thing, but hath manifeſt words againſt it: For firſt, whereas it is ſaid, that this offer was made for the honour of S. Peter, the Councell affirmeth that the Primacy that the Biſhop of Rome had, was for that Rome was the Emperiall City; that is, for that the Emperour held his Court and made his reſidence there. And where it is that the title of univerſall Biſhop was offered vnto him, the Councell decreed cleane contrary, ſaying; Let Egypt hold this, that the Biſhop of Alexandria haue power of all there, becauſe the Biſhop of Rome hath the ſame cuſtome, and ſo likewiſe let the B. of Antioch. Againe, the B. of Antioch, & thoſe in other prouinces, let them haue the primacies of the larger or nobler Cities. Further, it appeareth in the ſame Councel, that the Emperours, Theodoſius and Valentinian gaue authoritie and primacie ouer his Iuriſdiction, to Dioſcorus, B. of Alexandria, whereby appeareth that euery of theſe three Patriarches had iuriſdiction ouer their ſeuerall charges, and none of them rule and commandement ouer other. Beſide that, in the ſame Councell, the See of Conſtantinople was iudged to haue equall priuiledges with Rome. And the truth is, that Gregory doth the Councell great iniury, to charge it with offering that title vnto the Biſhop of Rome, which he doth ſo deeply condemne. For as for the ſhift of the Ieſuites that the title in that ſenſe the Councell offered it to the Biſhop of Rome, was lawfull, it is too ſottiſh, conſidering that Gregory teſtifieth that the ſame title which John Biſhop of Conſtantinople

Constantinople sued for, and Gregory condemned was offered to the Bishop of Rome. As for that, That Gregory, and other Bishops of that See before him did alwaies practise iurisdiction through Christendome, it is barely said, without any proofe, and is most untrue. For first, Gregory a centricall, or middle man, of all the Bishops of Rome, worse then all those that went before, and better then all those that followed after him, refuseth utterly to take upon him the commanding of other Bishops. And Eneas Silvius that for his good deserts of the Church of Rome, was made Pope thereof, affirmeth, that before the Nicen Councell there was small regard had to the Church of Rome, at what time the Bishop was equall onely to the three other Patriarchs: Neither was the title of universall Bishop euer more proud and arrogant, then is now the title of being called the seruant of seruants hypocriticall, and a very open mockery of the Church of God, to make it beleeue that hee is a seruant to all, that treadeth upon the neckes of all, euen of the Emperour himselfe. What ctedite Leo and Bernard deserue in this case, it hath beene before obserued.

The note of my sheepe is too sheepish, considering that both Churches are Christs sheep as well as the whole. And that the rest of the Apostles aswell as Peter had their charge to feed all the world by preaching vnto it: The reason also drawen from the Greek word to Peter peerles rule and authoritie ouer all is as simple as the other, for Peter applying the same word unto euery Pastour should (by their reason) giue euery Pastor the same peerles authoritie in his charge and consequently shut foorth himselfe from hauing any rule ouer them. Againe it is vnskilfully reasoned, that for so much as this word is giuen to Kinges with rule commandinglie, that therefore it signifieth a commanding rule or authoritie, when it is known that Kings and princes haue diuers titles which set forth their diuers either effects or properties which belong vnto them; And therefore as certain words do signifie their commanding power and authoritie, so there be some other that set forth carefull and louing prouision which they make for their subiects in the number whereof this word of feeding is.

Verse 18 Amen, Amen, I say to thee, when thou wast yonger, thou didst gird thy selfe, and didst walke where thou wouldest: but when thou shalt bee old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and ¶ another shalll gird thee, and leade thee whither thou wilt not.

RHEM. 4. [18 Another shall gird thee.] He propheseth of Peters martyrdome, and of the kind of death which he should suffer that was crucifying, which the heretikes fearing that it were a step to proue he was martyred in Rome, deny: whereas the Fathers & ancient writers are as plain in this, as that he was at Rome, Origen apud Euseb. lib. 3. c. 1. Euseb. li. 2. c. 24. Hist. Ec. Tertul. de prescript. nn. 14. Aug. Tract 123. in Ioan. Chrysost. Beda in hunc locum.

CARTVV. 4. [18 Another shall gird thee.] If it were true that Peter were at Rome, and was martyred there, it hurteth not but helpeth vs as hath been shewed upon Math. 16. 18. And if hee were, yet this text doeth no more proue it, then that he was martyred in Ierusalem, which is that onely that M. Beza saith in this place. Neither is there any of these Authorities alledged, that with these words either doe or can frame Peters crosse at Rome. And therefore they are idely opposed to M. Bezas iudgement, against whom, how greadily they cauill in this point, it may easily appeare, in that he is willing to pleasure these poore men with the graunt of both their demands, that both Peter was at Rome and there martyred.

THE

THE Goſpell hauing ſhewed, how the Iewes moſt impiouſly reiected Chriſt (as alſo Moyſes and the Prophets had foretolde them:) and therefore deſerued to be reiected themſelues alſo of him: now followeth this booke of The Actes of the Apoſtles (writ-Hier. in Catal. ten by S. Luke in Rome the fourth yeere of Nero, Ann. Dom. 61.) and ſheweth, how notwithſtanding their deſerts, Chriſt of his mercy (as the Prophets alſo had foretolde of him) offered himſelfe vnto that vnworthy people, yea after that they had crucified him, ſending vnto them his twelue Apoſtles to moue them to penance and ſo by baptiſme to make them of his Church: and whiles all the Twelue were ſo occupied about the Iewes: how of a perſecuting Iew he made him an extraordinary Apoſtle (who was S. Paul) and to auoyd the ſcandall of the Iewes (to whom onely himſelfe likewiſe for the ſame cauſe had preached) ſent him, and not any of his Twelue by and by, who were his knowen Apoſtles, vnto the Gentiles, who neuer afore had heard of Chriſt, and were worſhippers of many Gods, to moue them alſo (for, that likewiſe the Prophets had foretolde) to faith and penance, and by baptiſme to Act. 13.46. 18.6. 19.9 28.28. make them of his Church: and how the incredulous Iewes euery where reſiſted the ſame Apoſtle and his preaching to the Gentiles, perſecuting him & ſeeking his death, and neuer ceaſing vntill he fell into the hands of the Gentiles: that ſo (as not onely he euery were, but alſo the Prophets afore him, and Mat. 21.23 Eſay 2. Luke 13.33. Chriſt had foretolde) the Goſpell might be taken away from them, and giuen to the Gentiles: euen from Hieruſalem (whoſe reprobation alſo by name had been often foretolde) the head city of the Iewes, where it began, tranſlated to Rome the head city of the Gentiles. All this will be euident by the parts of the booke, which may be theſe ſixe.

Firſt, how Chriſt aſcending in the ſight of his Diſciples, promiſed vnto them the holy Ghoſt, foretelling that of him they ſhould receiue ſtrength, and ſo begin his Church in Hieruſalem: and from thence dilate it into all that country that is into all Iury: yea and into Samaria alſo, yea into all nations of the Gentiles, be they neuer ſo far of. You ſhall receiue (ſaith he) the vertue of the holy Ghoſt comming vpon you: and you ſhall be witneſſes vnto me in Hieruſalem, and in all Iury, and Samaria, and euen to the vttermoſt of the earth. Chap. 1.

Thirdly, the propagation of it conſequently into all Iury, and alſo to Samaria. Chap. 8.

Fourthly, the propagation of it to the Gentiles alſo. Chap. 10.

Fifthly: the taking of it away from the obſtinate Iewes, and giuing of it to the Gentiles, by the miniſtery of S. Paul and S. Barnabee Chap. 13.

Acts 25. 11 Luke 23. 1. Sixthly, of taking it away from Hieruſalem it ſelfe, the head Citty of the Iewes, and ſending it (as it were) to Rome the head city of the Gentiles, and that, in their perſecuting of Paul ſo farre, *that he appealed to Cæſar, and ſo deliuering him after a ſort vnto the Romanes: as they had *before deliuered to them alſo Chriſt himſelfe, whereas S. Peters firſt comming thither, was vpon another occaſion, as ſhall be ſaid anon: Of which Romans and Gentiles therefore, the ſame S. Paul being
Act. 28.28. now come to Rome (the laſt chapter of the Actes) foretelleth the obſtinate Iewes there, ſaying, Et ipſi audient. You will not heare, but they will heare, that ſo the prediction of Chriſt aboue rehearſed might be fulfilled: And euen vnto the vttermoſt of the earth. And there doth S. Luke end the booke, not caring to tell ſo much as the fulfilling of that which our Lord had foretolde (Act. 27.24.) to S. Paul, Thou muſt appeare before Cæſar, becauſe his purpoſe was no more but to ſhew the new Hieruſalem of the Chriſtians, where Chriſt would place the chiefe ſeat of his Church as alſo in deed the Fathers and all other Catholikes haue in all ages looked thither, when they were in any great doubt: no leſſe then the Iewes to Hieruſalem, as they were appointed in the olde Teſtament, Deut. 17 8.

And ſo this booke doth ſhewe the true Church, as plainely, as the Goſpell doth ſhewe the true Chriſt vnto all that do not wilfully ſhut their own eyes, to wit, this to be the true Church, which beginning viſibly at Hieruſalem, was taken from the Iewes, and tranſlated to the Gentiles (and namely to Rome) continuing viſibly, and viſibly to continue hereafter alſo, vn-
Rom. 11.25 Mat. 24.14 till the fulneſſe of the Gentiles ſhall be come in: that then alſo all Iſrael may be ſaued, and then is come the end of the world. For ſo did Chriſt moſt plainely foretell vs: This Goſpell of the Kingdome ſhall be preached in the whole world, for a teſtimonie to all nations, and then ſhall come the conſummation. For the conuerſion of which nations and accompliſhing of the fulneſſe of all Gentiles, the foreſayd Church Catholike, being mindfull of her office, to be Chriſts witneſſe euen to the vttermoſt of the earth, doth at this preſent) as alwayes) ſend preachers to conuert and make them alſo Chriſtians: whereas the Proteſtants and all Tertul. de præſ. other heretickes do nothing els but ſubuert ſuch as before were Chriſtians.

And this being the ſumme and ſcope of this book, thus to giue vs hiſtorically a iuſt ſight of the fulfilling of the Prophets and Chriſts prediction about the Church: it is not to be maruelled at, why it telleth not of S. Peters comming to Rome, conſidering that his firſt comming thither, was not, as S. Pauls was, by the Iewes deliuery of him, working ſo to their own reprobation, but vpon another occaſion, to wit, to confound Simon Magus. Euſ. hiſt. l. 2. c. 12. 13. For who alſo ſeeth not, that it makes no mention of preaching to any Gentiles at all, thoſe few only Act. 10. excepted, who were the firſt, and therefore fore (least the Gentiles seeme lesse cared for of God, then the Iewes) Peter being the head of all, was elected of God, to incorporate them into the Church, as before he had done the Iewes. God (saith he) among us chose that by my mouth the Gentiles should heare the words of the Gospell, and beleeue, and S. Iames thereupon: Simon hath told how God first visited to take of the Gentiles a people to his name. But otherwise (I say) here is no mention of Peters preaching to any Gentiles: no nor of the other eleuen Apostles, will any man therefore inferre, that neither Peter, nor the other eleuen preached to any nation or city of the Gentiles; No, the meaning of the holy Ghost was not to write all the Actes of all the Apostles, no nor the preaching of Peter and his, to the Gentiles, but onely to the Iewes: thereby to set out vnto the world the great mercy of Christ toward those vnworthy Iewes, and consequently their most worthy reprobation for contemning such grace and mercy, as also on the other side to shew, how readily the Gentils in so many nations, were conuerted by one Apostle onely, who from Hierusalem euen to Illiricum replenished the Gospell of Christ. And this parting of the worke so made by S. Peter with the rest, doth S. Paul himselfe touch: That we vnto the Gentiles, and they vnto the Circumcision. Neuertheless before his comming to Rome, not onely was the Church come to Rome (as it is euident Acts the last chapter) there planted by S. Peter and others (as likewise by S. Peter it was planted in the first Gentils, before that S. Paul began the taking of it away from the multitude of the Iewes, and the translating of it to the multitude of the Gentiles) but also so notable was the same Church of Rome, that S. Paul writing his Epistle to the Romanes, before he came thither, saith: Your faith is renowmed in the whole world, and therefore they with the rest of the Gentiles, be that Nation whereof Christ told the Iewes, saying: The kingdom of God shal be taken away from you, and shall be giuen to a Nation yeelding the fruits thereof.

Mat. 21. 43

CAP. V. That Baptisme maketh not men of the Church, but sealeth their incorporation into it, hath be en before declared, vpon Math. 3. 11. The tale of the head Citie of Rome, whereunto the Church was translated, from the head Citie Ierusalem, is headlesse. And first it is foolish, that they affirme the Gospell, to haue beene first translated from the Iewes vnto the Gentiles, and after that to haue bene translated from Ierusalem to Rome; as if it could be taken away from the Iewes, as long as it was at Ierusalem, where numbers of the Iewes abode. Secondly, because S. Paul, by persecution at Ierusalem came vnto Rome, therefore the Church was translated from Ierusalem to Rome, hath no more sauour in it then the white of an egge eaten without salt. As if Paul had beene the Church of God Iewish at Ierusalem, and Christian at Rome: or as if Paul had bene persecuted of the Church of Ierusalem, and not rather of certaine Iewes comming out of Asia, to the feast holden there: or as if Pauls entertainement were better at Rome, where he was slaine, then at Ierusalem where he had bene like to haue beene slaine: or that the many thousand beleeuers among the Iewes, had beene in so small a while, as was betweene his apprehension and conveyance to Rome worne out, and come to nothing: where as Eusebius testifieth, that there was a Church of Christ in Ierusalem, euen when it was to be besieged of Titus and Vespasian: which Church, by Diuine warning, was translated to Pella. And this being some yeares after both Peters and Pauls death at Rome, with what face can the Iesuites say, that the Church was (with Pauls transport to Rome) translated thither. Thirdly, because Luke ends his story after hee had brought Paul to Rome, therefore it was his purpose to shew, that Rome was the new Ierusalem of the Christians, requireth that you should first haue giuen your Reader warning to hold his laughter, or euer you had set this reason before him. For Luke made an end, albeit hee had not set forth all the Actes of Paul, as the Euangelists made an end of their story of Christs Actes: namely, for that they had couched in writing so much as serued for the edifying of the Church; although they had not laid down euerie particular miracle or sermon of his. Againe the scope of Luke is, in setting forth the actes of the Apostles; to shew how the Gospell (according both to the promise and charge, which was giuen vnto them) by their trumpettes was sounded out, from Ierusalem into all Iurie; afterwards into Samaria, and last of all vnto the vtmost of the earth: and not as you (without all manner of ground) say, that he might shew Rome to be the chiefe seat of the Church, or to be the new Ierusalem of the Christians directly contrary to the Apostle; which calleth the multitude of beleeuers the new Ierusalem, for the beleeuers vnder the Gospel; from the first preaching thereof, are called the new Ierusalem, & not from the time that the Church was planted at Rome, & all in all places of the world, which beleeued the Gospell, are the new Ierusalem: and not onely those of the Church of Rome. And therefore he compareth this new Ierusalem, to the mother of vs all, by a familiar speach of the Prophets, who as they liken particuler Churches to the daughters so they compare the whole Church, with the mother. That the fathers and other catholickes, haue in all ages looked to Rome, as some times the Iewes did to Ierusalem, for resolution of their doubts it is vtterly false, for first the Iewes did it by constreint, and commandement from God; where they can shew no such commandement of the word, for repairing to Rome in doutfull cases, nor yet decree of the Church, as long as it remayned in any tollerable soundnesse, for beside that the discussion that was sought for there at Rome was alwaies arbitrarie and at the choise of those that sought thether: it is to be shewed out of Cyprian, and the Aphricane Councell, that certain Churches were forbidden to seek thither. And it may further bee shewed, that although Rome being the Emperiall citie, was for that cause alone, likest to be sought vnto, in matters of great weight: yet for all that, there were times, when other cities through the light of knowledge, and godlines, or both, that shined in their bishops and Ministers, were for such causes more respected, then Rome. Hereupon there was so great seeking to Alexandria, and Cesarea in Origens time: that he is called the master or Teacher of the Churches. Likewise in Athanasius time, who was called the chiefest of the Bishops. Againe in Dydimus time, to whom Ierome an Elder of Rome for his doubts resorted, not to Rome but to Alexandria. To Carthage in Cyprians time, who was called the mightiest, and most respected Bishop, who is said to haue ruled, not onely ouer the Church of Carthage, and Aphrick, but ouer all the West, and in a manner ouer all the East, likewise ouer the North and South. To Antioch and Constantinople, in Chrysostomes time, who is in that regard called the Doctor of the world. Againe to Cæsarea in Basils times, who was called the eye of all the

And where you would proue, that Peter was head of the whole Church, becauſe hee incorporated Cornelius houſe, which (you ſay) were the firſt of the Gentiles, into the Church, as hee had done the Iewes before: you haue neither truth in your antecedent, or propoſition that goeth before, nor neceſſary ſute in the conſequent or propoſition that followeth after: for firſt, it is falſe that Peter did firſt incorporate both the Iewes and the Gentiles, into the Church under the Goſpell, when as it may be ſhewed, that he did neither. For touching the Iewes, it appeareth that at Mathias election, Act. 1. 15. there were about 120 which had beene incorporate into the Church under the Goſpell. And therefore Luke ſaith, that the three thouſand which were gained on the day of Pentecoſt by the Apoſtle Act. 2. 42. Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles, were added unto the other: which word of addition, hee could not haue uſed, unleſſe there had beene a Church of the ſame ſort before. And for the incorporation of the firſt Gentils, it is manifeſt that hee was preuented of Paul, who being called to that Apoſtleſhip, Act. 9. Gal. 1. 16. 17. before Peter was ſent for to Cornelius, went out without all delay, and Preached the Goſpell in Arabia, where (no doubt) hee incorporated many both Iewes and Gentiles, into the body or Church of Chriſt. That the conſequence alſo is naught, appeareth in that Iohn Baptiſt Preaching the Goſpell, Mat. 21. 32 and that with great power and effect of gathering many thereby; yet notwithſtanding had not therefore an excellency, or preheminence of Miniſtery aboue Chriſt and his Apoſtles: And Paul ſheweth, Gal. 2. 6. that comming after Peter in the function of the Apoſtleſhip, and being a perſecutor, when Peter was a feeder: yet was he not therefore inferiour unto him. Neither is it denyed, but that Peters chiefe charge being towards the Iewes, hee might alſo incorporate ſometimes the Gentiles: euen as Paul, whoſe cheife commiſſion being towards the Gentiles, might ſometimes incorporate the Iewes. But that Lukes ſcope, being to ſet forth the Actes of the Apoſtles, and amongſt them Peters, ſhould leaue out (in a manner) all his Preachings and doings towards the Gentiles, and eſpecially towards Rome, where hee was (by the Ieſuites) to worke (as it were) the Maſter-peece of his whole Apoſtleſhip, it were a blanke, which wee are well aſſured, Lukes penne could not leaue unfilled: conſidering that in the Gentiles willing embracing of Peters doctrine, more then the Iewes, the ſame ſcope of Luke, which they imagine to bee the cauſe of leauing out his doings towards the Gentiles, ſhould haue beene better performed by his writing of them, then by his ſilence in them.

Againe, where you ſpeake of Peters firſt comming to Rome, whereby your ſpeech implyeth three commings thither at the leaſt, it had beene meet, that you had ſet down when hee came; but you durſt not: For you know that whatſoeuer you ſhould haue ſet down, could not haue been void of diuers contradictions of Writers, in this point: for if (as ſome ſay) hee ſuffered at Rome 38 yeares after Chriſts Paſſion, tarrying at Rome by the ſpace of 25 yeares? what ſhall become of the diuers yeares that hee remained at Ieruſalem, as both Luke and Paul teſtifie. Where are the ſeuen yeares, which they gaue him to ſit in at Antioche? What reckoning will they make of the time wherein hee preached in Pontus, in Bythinia, in Galatia, Cappadocia, and Aſia: which long abode there, is further confuted by your own Damaſus, who affirmeth that hee came thither in Neros raigne, conſidering that Nero raigned but foureteene yeares in all, under whom hee is ſuppoſed to haue been martyred, by which aecompt, Nero ſlew him long after hee was dead. Againe, his reſidence at Rome being of ſo long continuance, his firſt arriuall there, muſt needs haue beene about the third yeare of Claudius raigne: where as it is manifeſt that the Synode holden at Ieruſalem (whereat Peter was preſent) was after that time, about the ſixth yeare of Claudius raigne. But if you (for ſhift) ſay, that going to Rome before, he came backagaine to Ieruſalem to the Synode; Beſide that, you can ſhew nothing to warrant your anſwer, the contrary appeareth, in that he is reported to haue taken his iourney to Rome towards the end of his life. Finally, as the beginning of the twenty fiue yeares, is taken from the third of Claudius raigne, ſo the end of them, muſt needs be defined by the fourteenth yeare of Neros raigne: contrary to Epiphanius who affirmeth him to haue beene ſlaine the twelfth yeare of his raigne. And if euer he were at Rome, yet it will nothing auaile you, to proue that he founded the Church of Rome, if your own Clement be of any credite, who declareth by a long circumſtance, that Barnabas founded that Church firſt of all. And Irenæus affirming that Peter and Paul founded the Church at Rome, ſetteth them in this regard in equall degree of builders. If therefore the primacy of the whole Church, follow the founding and planting of the Church of Rome; it is euident, that Paul did equally diuide this Empire, rather then Apoſtleſhip of the Church with Peter, and held the Supremacy in common with him. Of all which the indifferent Reader, may eaſily ſee, how miſerable the Popiſh Religion is, the chiefe pillar and foundation whereof, hath ſo uncertaine, or rather no ground at all, to ſtand upon.

Laſtly, for your conuerting of Nations, whereof you boaſt, it is rather a deſtroying then a converting; witneſſe thoſe populous Kingdomes and Countries of thoſe harmeleſſe Indians wholy diſ-peopled: ſuch aboundant charity and zeale you haue to conuert men. And what are thoſe by you converted but Popiſh Proſelites, tranſlated out of the ſtate of Heatheniſh, to Anti-chriſtian idolatries and ſuperſtitions: and therefore except the righteouſneſſe of your converts exceed the righteouſneſſe of you Phariſiacall Ieſuites and Papiſts, they ſhall not enter into the kingdome of heauen. True converſion is not turning from one ſinne and euill to another, but from ſinne to God in Chriſt, which this Ieſuiticall converſion is not: And ſo your converts are falſe witneſſes of Chriſt to the uttermoſt of the earth.

RHEM. AS before we noted the Goſpels, as they are read both at Mattens and Maſſe throughout the yeare, in their conuenient time and place, ſo the bookes following (as alſo the bookes of the old Teſtament) are read in the ſaid Seruice of the Church, for Epiſtles and Leſſons, in their time and place, as hereafter ſhall be noted in euery of them. See the very ſame order and cuſtome of the Primitiue Church, in S. Ambroſe ep. 33. S. Auguſtine Ser. de Tempore 139. 140. 141. 144. *S. Leo Ser. 2. & 4 de Quadrag. & Ser. 13. & 19. de Paſſ. Domin. CARTVV. Touching the note of their Epiſtles, look the anſwer before, upon Ioh. chap 18. Beſide that Ambroſe ſpeaking of the Book of Iob read in his Church, doth declare that he made no ſuch mammockes of the Scriptures as the Papiſts do.
